Mass Bows To UConn, 76-65 As Freeze Kills Late Surge

by AL BERMAN '62

"There's a hoop up there somewhere, but we can't find it."

That was the story of the Redmen last night as they were outshot by the UConn huskies, 76-65 at the Cage.

For the first five minutes and the last five minutes of the game UMass kept up with the Connmen, but during the intervening thirty minutes they lost the game.

The Huskies opened up their first big lead as they pulled out in front 28-20 at 6:30. They never relinquished the lead after that, although the Redmen at times made dents in it. The closest Matt Zunic's squad was able to come was within two points late in the first half; but UConn fought them off and had regained a substantial lead (42-36) by halftime.

More Of The Same

The Huskies were never in danger in the second half. They kept the breach from six to eight points wide for the first six mniutes, then opened it even further. By 10:00 they were ahead, 58-43.

Then sub guard Danny Laakso started hitting and narrowed the gap to ten points. But at 5:16 he Huskies started a freeze that lasted until 3:32, which just about put the game on ice for them.

Greer Worries

UConn coach Hugh Greer put in two second stringers about that time, but when Roger Twitchell sunk a foul shot at 2:30 Greer was worried that his nine point lead wouldn't hold up, so he recalled his starters from the shower room.

Even though Pete Bernard sunk three long bombs in the closing seconds and menaced the Huskies' defensive efforts, the tiring Redmen couldn't keep pace and fell further behind.

The final buzzer clinched what had seemed inevitable all through the half.

Dribbling Around

Too much fouling and a prolonged cold spell were a fatal combination for the Redmen. UConn scored 28 points on foul shots to only 11 for UMass. The middle ten minutes of the second half were a nightmare for UM fans as the Redmen repeatedly stole the ball then missed the consequent shots . . . Pete Bernard again showed a lot of spunk as he battled right down to the final buzzer, even though the UMass situation looked hopeless. He gave a laugh to the glum Cage fans as he played piggyback with 6'7" UConn forward Bob Haines.

The Huskies had a large and vociferous cheering section that at times outyelled the UMass fans and undoubtedly added a lot to the UConn attack. . . . The hot shooting of the small UConn guard Len Carlson made us remember the first UM-UConn game last year in Storrs when he came off the bench to rob the Redmen of what had looked like a sure victory.

Still Dribbling

All inhabitants of the press box last night were impressed with the showing of Danny Laakso. The '64" soph scored 10 ponts while playing only a few minutes. Many think that he might have stolen the starting berth away from Charlie La-Pier . . . Many were also asking why Coach Zunic took so long in replacing Don Black, who obviously wasn't up to snuff last night.

Surprise starter Franz Bradsky continues to improve, and as he does so he reflects the wisdom and determination of Coach Zunic, who said to this reporter last year "I never give up on a big man."

The Redmen travel to Springfield tomorrow to meet A.I.C.

We are wondering if as many UM fans will make the 22 mile jaunt to Springfield as there were UConn fans who travelled from Storrs to Curry Hicks last night . . . The next home game is Saturday night versus undefeated Brandeis.

Frosh Quintet Downs UConn Rookies, 81-72

by AL COHEN '63

A brilliant team effort by Coach Jack Leaman's frosh basketball team gave them an 81-72 overtime win over the University of Connecticut Pups in last night's Cage prelim.

Five Braves: Hill, O'Rourke, Knight, Bonds, and Kingston provided the heroics before an enthused crowd of seat-squirmers.

Steve Bonds of the Little Redmen outjumped UConn's 6'7" Kimball for the opening tap but the Pups tallied first. Clarence Hill tied the score on a drive. The lead sea-sawed throughout the half until Gerry Knight put the Braves on top to say by 24-22 on a beautiful drive. Charlie O'Rourke's three-pointer gave UMass a 31-26 half-time lead.

In the second canto John Hoss of the Braves acquired his fourth foul early and was replaced by Jim Retos. UConn's Kimball with three first half fouls stayed out of trouble. On the strength of O'Rourke's rebounding and shooing the home forces kept the lead for the first 10 minutes. Then a Kimball tap gave the Pups the lead at 48-46. A pretty play by Hill knotted the count.

The lead switched hands until the Pups went ahead 63-59 after O'Rourke fouled out. Up until this time the scoring duel between Hill and Kimball had marked the game. Enter Gerry Knight. Gerry canned six straight markers for a 65-63 UMass edge. Zullo of the Pups converted two foul toss made it 66-64. Gerry's second foul try failed. Bonds got the rebound but UConn's Whitcomb took it from him and Whitney took advantage of a defensive lapse by the Braves to score all alone and send the game into a five minute overtime with the score knotted at 66-66.

Hill hit from down-town to open the extra period. UConn tallied. Then successive baskets by Charley Kingston, Hlil and Bonds made it 74-68, UMass. UConn tallied. A tap by Bonds and a drive by Knight put the game on ice with UMass ahead by eight points. UConn added two more and Knight hit on a three-pointer to make it 81-72, the final score.

Charlie O'Rourke was magnificent in batting away layup attempts by the Pups. Clarence Hill topped all scorers with 29 hard-won points, and O'Rourke had 14 markers. Charlie Kingston's steady floor game impressed all, while Steve Bonds' rebounds and tip-ins kept the Braves in the game. Gerry Knight was good in the late going with his timely marksmanship.

Subs Jim Retos and Jim Neary won't be warming the bench long, due to their fine play.

The Braves are now 2-0. They travel to A.I.C. Thursday to meet the Ace frosh.

(a) South should pass as he is not strong enough for an opening bid in his position.
(b) This is for take-out based upon North's opening hand and support for all unbid suits.
(c) Penalty Pass! South has a near opening hand and his best suit is clubs.

The reason this hand was selected is that it illustrates the effectiveness of the penalty pass and the type of hand that it should be used with.

North leads a low heart. It is taken by South with the king and the heart ace is cashed followed by the eight which is trumped by the declarer. Declarer leads a spade which goes to North's ace. North leads his jack of hearts which goes to a low trump of the declarer's as South discards the six of diamonds. Declarer enters the dummy with the spade king and leads a club to North's ace. North returns a spade which declarer trumps. Declarer plays the ace and then the queen of diamonds which South is forced to trump. South returns a trump to declarer's king and claims the rest of the tricks.

This puts declarer down one doubled. Most North-South pairs played this hand at one no trump for a lower score.

The results of Thursday's game were as follows:

N-S
1, 2 Higginbotham-Weber 64½
1, 2 Sing-Hunter 64½
3 Masur-Smart 61½

E-W
1 Pemple-Crawford 68
2 Simon-Rotay 57
3, 4 Golder-Littlefield 56½
3, 4 Dubis-Fitzgerald 56½

It is interesting to note that of the 59 people who have played so far this semester in the duplicate game, 49 have returned to play more than once. This is a fair indication of the popularity of the game with those who have tried it. The weekly session takes place in Barnstable room on Thursday from 7-10 p.m. This game is open to all students, members of the faculty, and people who live in the area.

Holiday Greetings

from

Pres. And Mrs. Lederle Extend Cordial Wishes For Holiday

To the Students:

As you get ready to depart for this most festive vacation in the school year, Mrs. Lederle and I wish to extend our most cordial wishes to you for a very happy holiday season.

In thus wishing you the best that the season can afford you, I am moved to a little reflection on the way in which the Christmas celebration has changed in the time since I was a boy. I am not embarking on a personal reminiscence here. I merely want to provide a measure by which to gauge the way that traditions can change as the world changes.

In my youth the Christmas season, while not so much Dickensian in spirit, was much more a tradition in which one personally participated—and in a very active way.

Today, it seems to me that we have become not so much participants as passive viewers of the holiday scene. I think, for instance, we derive too much of the holiday spirit from magazines, television, radio and the movies. We are more ready to absorb the spirit through these means than we are to enter into the spirit ourselves. I do not wish to disparage these media. They obviously serve a great purpose in the public interest. What I am saying is that we should ourselves do more.

The season is a time of song. Let us sing. The season is a time of friendship and goodwill. Let us get together and actively manifest friendship and goodwill. The season is a time to celebrate great religious festivals. Let us do so with understanding and full hearts.

It seems to me that the greatest values of the season reside in this sense of participation in what one writer has called "the holiness of the heart's affection." For all of us, this can indeed be a high purpose and an appropriate way to confirm our desire for peace on earth, good will among men.

John W. Lederle, President

Our Chaplains Of Three Faiths Offer Blessings For Holidays

It hath been told thee, O man, what is good,
And what the Lord doth require of thee:
Only to do justly, and to love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God. MICAH 6:8

Chanukah, perhaps more than any other holiday in the Jewish calendar, emphasizes the ideal of religious freedom. Originating in the successful defense of Judaism against the onslaught of Syrio-Greek paganism, the observance of Chanukah through the ages has been the occasion for a yearly affirmation of Jewish devotion to freedom of religion, not only for ourselves as Jews, but for all men.

This year we again make that affirmation. As we look forward with our Christian friends, towards the observance of our respective holidays. may the freedom in which we do so continue to flourish, that we may be enabled to enrich our lives with the religion of our choice, in devotion of God and in service to our fellow men.

Rabbi Louis Ruchames

CHRISTMAS—1961

Each year we relive at this time the greatest event in the Christian world. Each year it is always refreshingly new. The birth of the Son of God brings to our hearts the warmth that only He can give—a warmth for Him but also a warm love for each other.

What a pity if we were to limit this to a single season of the year. Surely we would fail to learn the lesson the Infant King wanted to impart—a lesson that could transform the face of the earth. The language and lesson of love as it was taught by the Master provides us with the equipment which cannot but produce the Peace at home and abroad we all so ardently desire—Peace within ourselves, with our neighbors and among nations.

Within our campus community we have the opportunity of showing our appreciation of the meaning of this holy season. Coming from a variety of traditions, we must live each day with the respect, admiration and love for each other that He had for all. We must be leaders in bringing to others the message of that first Christmas. In this way His Divine Will can be fulfilled in such a meaningful way.

As we leave to spend these days with our dear ones, be mindful of our University family and unite in a true spirit of prayer, one for the other, that the blessings of Christmas will abide with us throughout the year. This will be our assurance of the Happy Christmas we repeatedly express with such joy.

To all of our students and staff I offer my heartfelt wishes for a Blessed Christmas. May the Christ Child watch over you and your families and fulfill your every need and desire.

Father Power

"THE CHRIST OF CHRISTMAS"

Just what is all this Christmas fuss about? Is it just a big ball? Is it the time to wear fancy clothes and to sing sentimental tunes? Is it the time for elaborate decorations and for exchanging gadgets wrapped in silly bows and Santa Claus paper? These are questions which you may be asking yourself now and during the next few weeks. And perhaps they will arouse in you a sense of the great gulf that separates the Christian faith and the affluent American way of life—a way which is being copied by so many other nations which don't pretend to be Christian at all—this is Christmas, a ball, fancy clothes, bellowing sentimental carols, buying gadgets, and telling fairy stories.

But the Christian faith has something different to proclaim at this time. It says that God has placed in every man the possibility of living a life which is creative and true—just as He placed his son in the womb of Mary. And He will nurture and fulfill this possibility in us if we are faithful and responsible to Him.

This proclamation can hardly be heard at Christmas because the noise of the world drowns it out. But it may be heard after Christmas when His faithful servants tear away at the sham idolatory and injustice of our world, when they sweat and groan to build a world where no one will be crippled by poverty or exalted by riches, where white, black, red and yellow will embrace each other, where the creative potential of everyone will bear fruit, nourished by the love of Christ which flows from all.

So Engrossed

by GEORGE MASSELAM

Christmas is coming and I'm glad. There is something about the Christmas season which generates a warmth, friendliness, interest, and concern. This air is filled with giving, receiving, smiles, handshakes, gatherings, and reunions. Certainly there is an unique aura during the Christmas season, an aura of brotherhood and companionship. Although Christmas did initiate with the birth of a child in a meager stable in an insignificant area during the reign of Augustus Caesar some two thousand years ago, it has developed into a universal communicative experience which all men can partake of. Thus Christmas has become a feeling which appeals to something in all men; something humane, something understanding, something warm and something friendly and something concerned: in the Christian, the Jew, the Buddhist, the Hindu, the Mohammedan and even in the Russian and Chinese Communists, for they are human too.

Christmas is the spirit which can make some German and American soldiers in 1944 stop fighting and shake hands. It is the involvement which can make Scrooges become aware of the needs of others. It is the time of the year when peace and joy can attempt to peak their heads out from under the blankets of hate, war, non-concern and sadness.

How can we add to the enjoyment of these people during the Christmas season? Shall we tell them that while they are spending millions and millions of dollars on liquors during this holiday season, that while they are spending billions of dollars on gifts, that while people exploit Christmas with unlimited commercialization, that while America tries to buy material joy for itself, one half of the world will continue to starve to death, thousands of crying children will die of malnutrition on Christmas Day, Negroes within the borders of the U.S. are struggling for the very brotherhood that this Christmas season connotes, that the world may never experience another Christmas due to the insanity, fear and irrationality of two nation states!

Is what Christmas could be being lost in what Christmas is? Has the vicious commercialization of Christmas by big business completely submerged the ideals of brotherhood and original meaning of "peace and joy spread throughout the world"? Have we become so engrossed in petty materialism that we can't think beyond our true feelings and needs of ourselves and others—the feeling which cry for peace and joy within ourselves—the peace and joy which comes to men only through harmonious living with their environment and those around him? Yes, America, ponder anew what you can do and realize that the potential for the brotherhood of Christmas lies in every man, at any time of year; at any place throughout the world.

Merry Christmas...

Our best wishes for a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year go out to our President John Lederle, Deans Field, Hopkins and Curtis, RSO's Ed Buck, the pro ROTC and anti-ROTC populace, the Boston Press, Vic Fusia and J. P. Mather and Colonel Weaver.

And under their Christmas trees we leave: for President Lederle 500 votes in favor of his new budget: for Dean Field, a giant size bottle of asperin and two wads of cotton to use in his new position where he sees and hears more problems and headaches than Bufferin ever dreamed of; for Dean Hopkins our congratulations in easing during the past semester the furor of the Administration vs. fraternity battle which had waged for so long in the past; for Dean Curtis we leave 3000 keys for those women who are now clamoring for keys beneath their trees; for RSO's Ed Buck our thanks for the timeless efforts expended in helping every campus organization; for the ROTC pros and cons we have left another Mili Ball; for the Boston press we leave wrist watches to show that their coverage was "about time"; for Vic Fusia and his staff we leave our thanks for staying longer than his predecessor; and for J. P. Mather and Colonel J. R. Weaver we leave their next year's rent ... just as long as they will stay where they are now. To our Collegian readers we leave our best wishes and thanks for the kind and unkind comments—they are well taken on all sides. Now let us all take a well deserved vacation.

The Tenet Was Love

Human: Holy And Sacred

Jesus Christ's only tenet was Love and each act was bred of this Love, living to the letter the word He spoke. Tolerance and respect comprise the greatest part of this Love. On this birthday we should celebrate a respect for principles; the thwarting and condemning should give way to Love, or at least to a moment of consideration (if this is as close as we can come), for there is nothing as sacred to a person as what he truly believes and there is nothing as holy as human dignity.

—Paul Theroux

And A 'Happy' New Year

by MIKE PALTER

Ah, the infinite optimism which pervades the holiday season! For one brief moment, we are asked to love our brothers. For a fleeting instant, we are emotionally suited to grasp the meaning of "Peace on Earth, Good Will to Men." But just between you and me, we know that this is poppycock! To hell with this idealistic bunk! Don't talk to me about the goodness of Man! Look at those damn Russians!

Just as I thought; Here come those voices. Hear them? . . .

"Commercialization of Christmas . . . Shame, Shame . . . Repent!"

Same old trash. Go peddle your idealism elsewhere!

"Send your mother-in-law a fallout shelter, $139.95, hot and cold running Geritol."

"Well, that takes care of her. What about the kids? Hmm, here's something:

"War game. 60 authentic soldiers. Watch legs fall off as cannon-balls strike! Great for the kiddies. Develops leadership. Only $7.98. Bayonets optional."

"Well, dear, that takes care of them. Now how about us?"

"Honey, after all, you did promise . . ."

"All right, all right! But don't you think a roulette wheel will look a little funny in the shelter?"

'No, honey. After all, the Jones have a pinball machine in theirs. Oh, by the way, did you buy that shot-gun?"

"Yes, dear. And I bought 3 boxes of shells. I bet the Smiths will think twice before they try to get in!"

Luckily, in the midst of this idealistic holiday season, there remains a gallant group of men who guard our minds from the clutching hand of subversion: the House Un-American Activities Committee.

"Have you ever been or do you intend to be a proponent of the doctrine of Peace on Earth, Good-Will to Men, and if so how do you justify this obviously subversive doctrine?"

"I invoke my constituional rights."

"Now look fella, we've got a witness who says he saw you at an organization meeting. Do you deny that?"

"Who's the witness, Sir?"

"His name's Pilate. Know him?"

Yet, in the midst of this holiday confusion there is much excitement, even in the Armed Forces. Listen . . .

"Colonel, something terrible . . ."

"Quiet boy, quiet. Let me play out this hand."

"But Colonel, there's been . . ."

"Quiet boy, and that's an order. Ha, ha, grand-slam! Guess that's another hundred, lieutenant! All right boy, what's the trouble?"

"Well, Sir, there's been a terrible accident!"

"Huh?"

"Sir, I could have sworn they were I.C.B.M.'s! I could have sworn it!"

"That's terrible, boy, terrible. Well, you might as well sit in the next hand. I'll deal."

Thus America and Mankind stride confidently into the holiday season. Our minds well conditioned, our shelters well stocked, we face the future unafraid!

Oh yes, before I forget. Make this holiday season the best yet. After all, there might not be another. Amen.

WMUA's Lloyd Teran Resigns Station Post

In a surprise move Wednesday evening Lloyd Teran, WMUA station manager, submitted his resignation for that post following "internal strife" as stated by Teran in his resignation. Following are Teran's statement of resignation and the official statement of WMUA, as submitted by Ken Brophy, Public Relations officer.

"During the past few months, I have strived to elevate WMUA to a position which would make all of us who are a part of the station proud of "the voice of the University of Massachusetts". I have given much of my time and energy which could have been used for studying, working, etc. Running a radio station is the job of many people. This has not existed however, and the result has been to trying to hold our own, and at the expense of internal strife. Perhaps we bit off much more than we could chew (and I believe we did), by creating new programming which would make us a good educational station, by establishing a sports network, which could greatly benefit the University, and by trying to eliminate the age old converter problem. To do all in one semester, as we have, has proven impossible. We should have taken into consideration the fact that every fall we are plagued by the problem of losing members for graduation and academic reasons. This in itself creates the necessity of having to work hard to hold our own. WMUA is at the present an every man for himself proposition. I do not feel that it is my responsibility to take on the duties of my other officers, and I have not knowingly tried to overstep my authority. However, on many occasions recently, I have been forced to take over their duties, out of the necessity of doing so or shutting down. The task has become so great that I have become quite irritated, and the result is at present that I am raher disgusted. Perhaps the solution is for me to resign from my position as station manager, pending your decision."

Lloyd Teran

WMUA Statement

"Last Wednesday night Lloyd Teran submitted his resignation as station manager of WMUA to the policy board of the station. The resignation was accepted by the board.

"Dr. Wyman, advisor to the station, has accepted the officers' request that he serve as moderator of all policy board meetings until such time as the station shall choose a new station manager.

"Until this time WMUA shall be under the combined direction of Eric Sandel, Program Director; Ken Brophy, Public Relations Director; Dave Mainwaring, Technical Director; and M-J Fowlen, Business Manager.

"No changes in operation procedure or programming are anticipated at this time."

Hopkins Talk, Film Highlight IFC Frosh Rushing Convo

by OLEH PAWLUK '63

The annual Freshman Rushing Convocation, sponsored by the Interfraternity Council, was held Wednesday evening at 7 p.m. in the S.U. Ballroom.

The program got under way with an introduction of the IFC Executive Staff, Dean of Men Robert S. Hopkins, came to the platform to speak on the role of the fraternity system at UMass. Dean Hopkins began his talk by giving a resume of his own fraternity life from the day he was pledged thirty years ago. He went on to mention some of the advantages of fraternity membership.

"The fraternity serves a need which you as an individual have," commented Hopkins, "A need to talk freely and frankly with people of your own age."

Further on the agenda came a movie entitled "The Fraternity Idea" which gave the viewer an insight into the procedure of selecting and jointing a fraternity. The film also illustrated the activities and obligations of the fraternity student.

The remainder of the convocation was devoted to an informal conversation between IFC members and freshman students, during which refreshments were served. A point brought out in the discussion is the fact that at UMass the average fraternity member has a higher grade mean than the average independent student.

Fraternity round robins will be held Feb. 3 and 4, and closed smokers Feb. 5-9. The rushing program will end at 7 p.m. on Feb. 27.

Nash Cites "Unconscious Humor" In Lecture To Capacity Audience

by STEVE LEVINE '65

"We need to appreciate unconscious humor," said satiric poet Ogden Nash in his Bowker Auditorium lecture Thursday evening, "for this makes us more reconciled to things. Unconscious humor is replacing the conscious variety, and we often fail to recognize it," Nash added.

Nash then gave examples of the humor of everyday life that is frequently ignored by the unobservant: the brief pause introduced by television announcers which is long enough to include "30 seconds of a beautiful lady shaving her legs, 45 seconds more of a lady losing her lover due to food particles in her teeth, and advertisements for two Westerns and a Private Eye show appearing later on the same station."

He then told anecdotes about his career as a writer of light verse, recalling that his first success was a poem satirizing a newspaper article. His next was a leisure time production which was accepted by a then new magazine, The New Yorker. "They sent me a check," said Nash, "and they asked me if I could write more of the same. To my joy I found that I could." Thus he described the start of his career as one of America's foremost humorists.

During much of the program Nash gave readings of his own light verse. The poems were primarily mild and humorous discussions of common human weaknesses and foolishness. Nash was the first of a series of speakers to be presented under the University's Distinguished Visitors' Program.

THE HIGHWAYMEN

The Highwaymen, recorders of the best-selling hit, "Michael", will be the featured artists of the Winter Carnival Jazz Festival, to be held on Sunday, Feb. 18.

The boys sing American and foreign folk songs in four different languages: English, French, Hebrew, and Spanish. Although they all play guitars, their talents range beyond these instruments to others including a five-string banjo, a recorder, an auto harp, maracas, a ten-string South American charango made from an armadillo shell, and a Nigerian talking drum.

As individuals, the boys represent a wide variety of interests and hobbies.

Bob Burnett, 21, is the pole-vault champion of Wesleyan and vice-president of the student government.

Steve Trott, also 21, is president of the boys fraternity, shoots golf in the low 70's, and speaks French and Spanish fluently.

21-year-old Chan Daniels is president of Wesleyan's International Relations Club.

Stephen Butts, 20, has been chief engineer of the campus radio station and announcer of their home football games.

David Fisher, 21, is the musical arranger for the group and the only one of the five who is seriously interested in music. He intends to study for a Ph.D. in Musicology.

In spite of the great success of the Highwaymen, the group insists that their singing will not go beyond a hobby. Unwilling to halt their schooling even temporarily, last semester they proved their point when they refused an offer from Mort Sahl to go on tour with him.

The latest recording by the singers is a two-sided hit playing "Gypsy Rover" and "Cotton Fields".

UMass Sets Record 621 Pints Blood

According to figures released by the Red Cross, UMass set a record for total blood contributions in the Hampshire County Chapter of the American Red Cross during the Blood Donor Days, Nov. 14, 15, and 16.

Actual figures show a total of 621 pints collected under the auspices of the Campus Religious Council and the Faculty Women. A breakdown of figures shows that 426 students gave blood, while 195 faculty members and others contributed.

"The Campus Religious Council would like to thank the campus as a whole for the excellent cooperation that it gave during the blood drive. Typical of the spirit was the help we received from Zeta Nu—the newest fraternity not only gave blood, but provided a man to aid the Red Cross on each of the three days. They were typical but not alone.

We would like to list the many recruiters in the dorms, fraternities and sororities. We could list the girls who were hostesses at the blood bank, the faculty women, some 100 of them, who put in over 450 hours of work. We would thank the girls of Arnold House who not only allowed us to use their facilities but also helped out during the donor days. And last we would thank the some 1000 students and faculty who volunteered to give blood."

J. D.'s CORNER

The Word for today is Pacifist . . . or Peacenik, as one peace demonstrator tells me they prefer to be called. The range of peace activities these days seems to be endless; their committees use such gentle phrases in their names as "non-violent action," "sane nuclear policy," and "disarmament." Most of these groups are only too happy to send pamphlets, posters, stickers, etc. to any interested party. For example, the New England Committee for Non-Violent Action is publishing a page of ironically satirical cartoons, entitled "Famous Last Words." Copies are available upon request from Jerome Grossman, 115 Dorset Rd., Waban 68, Mass.

Meanwhile, New York City is a very active center for peace groups (most of which are spearheaded by college students), for they find the United Nations and various foreign embassies very convenient and approriate spots for demonstrations and protests. Aside from SANE, one of the major groups in the city is The Greater New York Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to the Human Animal (150 Nassau St., N.Y.C., 38, N.Y.); they will send all sorts of fascinating and informative material upon inquiry, and for any nominal contribution they will send you a supply of "inflammatory stickers" which read "HELP STAMP OUT HUMAN BEINGS! Contribute to the war effort thu your local tax collector."

But by far the biggest step has been taken by a group with the jaw-breaking tag of the New York Committee for the General Strike for Peace, part, apparently, of a world-wide movement. They are projecting a worldwide general strike for the week from Mon., January 29, through Sun., Feb. 4, 1962. Their pamphlet explains that the general strike is "a form of protest in keeping with the principles of non-violence." Students all over the world are supporting the general strike as an excuse to cut classes for a week; workers are attempting to get employer-support and permission to leave during strike week; most of the world's people know nothing about this "mass" protest.

Let me be the first to wish you all a Cheery Christmas and a Frantic First. And let me be the last to wish you a Happy Chanukkah!

THE BELL TELEPHONE COMPANIES SALUTE: STEVE BANKS

Because of Steve Banks, who just two years ago was an undergraduate engineering student, the Bell Telephone System is closer to wiping out the noise (or "static") that sometimes interferes with telephone conversations.

On one of his first assignments, Steve examined the noise levels that had "leaked" into telephone circuits in Colorado. His findings shed new light on the source of noise, and on the important methods of measuring it.

Steve Banks of Mountain States Telephone & Telegraph Company, and the other young engineers like him in Bell Telephone Companies throughout the country, help make your communications service the finest in the world.

Dogs Went To Polls In '48 Election Says Former JFK Political Analyst

by MARCIA ANN VOIKOS '63

"The 1948 Truman-Dewey upset wasn't a question of the polls going to the dogs, but of the dogs going to the polls," claimed Lou Harris, political opinion analyst for President Kennedy in the 1960 presidential election, in a lecture given to faculty and students of the UMass. Govt. dept. last Tuesday at Machmer Hall.

Harris has polled more people in the U.S. than any other political analyst in American history, and his findings influenced many of John F. Kennedy's decisions.

"Public opinion polls are the eyes and ears of the candidate—our problem is to distinguish the voter from the non-voter—many say they've voted even if they hadn't," Harris said.

Harris felt that political polling is a good experience for both the interviewer and the person interviewed and added: "It's a lonely society—people talk right past each other and just don't listen—that's why they're so flattered when the interviewer listens to them and writes it down."

Harris went on to say that most people interviewed talk about war and peace, bombs and health epidemics; but what actually shapes elections are immediate problems affecting the voter and relevant to what the government can do about it.

"A poll can't make a man what he isn't," said Harris in discussing the impact of T.V. on the voter, and added: "The candidate can't fool the public—I've rarely seen people wrong on men—people can sense the mood and character of a man—the degree to which he means what he says."

Regarding the Negro vote, Harris said that Kennedy had polled the Negro community and taken a firm civil rights stand, whereas Nixon had never made up his mind one way or the other.

"Barry Goldwater may also be put to this test—but I doubt if he'll be successful, Harris continued, adding: "Nixon failed because he stood pat and rested on Ike's laurels of the 50's rather than moving ahead for the 60's."

Lederle Tells Group Of Planned UM Rise

A constant increase in quality of students will accompany large enrollment jumps at UMass during the next few years, University President John W. Lederle told a three-day extension service conference on campus Wednesday.

Expand Honor Program

Speaking on the topic "The university today and tomorrow," President Lederle said in a joking reference to neighboring Amherst College the university's growth presently is equal "to just about one Amherst College every year."

At the same time, the administrator said, the university will challenge the abler student through an expanded honors program.

Lederle indicated the university's future plans include eventual institution of medical, dental, law and public health schools as part of a program of professional studies.

Also projected are new dormitories and a land-acquisition program, the president said.

Lederle cautioned, however, that, "if the university is going to be a great institution worthy of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, the Legislature must life the heavy hand of external control."

He described the university as "the educational institution of the future in our state."

Centennial Prospects Told

Prof. Maxwell H. Goldberg, Commonwealth Professor at the university, described plans for the university's centennial celebration.

Goldberg said two of the high lights of the year-long celebration will be April 29, 1963, centennial day of the chartering of the university as a land-grant institution, and a precommencement celebration in June of the same year to bring together all alumni celebrations into a major centennial occasion.

WEEKEND SPORTS

The UMass basketball and Hockey teams will see action this weeknd; the basketball team will host Brandeis at 8:15, and A.I.C. will meet the Puck squad at Orr Rink Saturday at 2:00.

Mass. Swimming Team Downed by Wesleyan

The University of Massachusetts swimming team lost its second meet in two starts Wednesday afternoon as it was easily defeated by Wesleyan University, 64-30 at the Women's Physical Education Pool.

Coach Roger's mermen were once again faced with a serious lack of depth. Only nine varsity swimmers were present to represent the Maroon and White. Out of eleven events, the Massachusetts squad was able to muster only two first places, five seconds, and three thirds.

Good performances were turned in by Brendon O'Niel, who won the individual medley with a time of 2:30, and John Grybko, one of the team's hardest workers, who won the 200 yard breaststroke in 2:43.

Other point gainers were: Mike Rothschild who took a second place in both the 440 yard freestyle and the 220 yard freestyle; Don Grant placing second in the individual medley and third in the 200 yard breastoke event and Mat Rutkowski earning second place in the 100 yard freestyle and third in the 220 yard freestyle. Also, Jim Coffey placed second in the 200 yard backstroke, and thirds were taken by Chiras and Desjardins who swam in the 50 yard freestyle and 200 yard backstroke consecutively.

The freshman squad lost its second meet also, losing 65-29 to the Wesleyan freshmen.

The top scorer for Massachusetts was Dan Omara, who managed to take second places in both the individual medley and 100 yard breastroke.

It was an unhappy day, especially for both Charlie Monnier and Dick Rineer of Wesleyan. After swimming what Monnier thought to be a new pool record for the 100 yd breastoke (1:10.8), he learned that he had been disqualified. Rinner was also rather disappointed as he bowed down to his old team mate Ed Odell in the 100 yard backstroke. Up until Wednesday afternoon Odell had never even come close to catching Rineer in the backstroke events.

oCach Rogers' squad will meet Worcester Polytechnical Institute at the Women's Physical Education Pool on January 5.

by DAVE PODBROS '65

The University of Massachusetts varsity wrestling team suffered its second defeat of the season Monday at the Cage. The squad was beaten handily by Amherst College 31-3.

The sole points for UMass were scored by Gerry Burnham in the first match of the meet. In a gallantly fought battle he defeated Ralph Hanna of Amherst by a 3-1 point decision. Bill Batt then lost his match by decision to the Amherst co-captain.

Proceedings went from bad to worse as both Al Israel and Tom Best were pinned by their successive opponents. Craig de Wallace lost his match by decision, and Les Bowkar and Ed O'Connor, although both trying desperately to revive the spirit of the squad, also lost their matches. Both were pinned. Bill Rice than defaulted, and the final score stood at 31-3.

The next match will be against Williams at Williams on February 6. The team will be looking for its first win.

A Note On The Collegian Christmas Edition — 1961

The Collegian is proud to present this our second annual multi-colored Christmas Edition. Of course many man-hours of staff time went into the production—the last of 1961—and we know it will be favorably received by our readers.

It may be of interest to our readers to know what goes into a special paper such as this issue. With out being too technical, the procedure is roughly this:

Each color represents a single run, that is, each page is run through the presses once for the red, once for the green, and once more for the actual printed material. Thus for the entire paper, 12 press runs were required.

The drawings appearing on today's pages were prepared by our Make-up Editor, Miss Beth Petersen, and were completed by a professional artist employed by the Collegian printer, Hamilton I. Newell of Amherst.

The special photographic spreads were prepared by the paper's photography department under the direction of the Photography Editor, Larry Popple. (The photography staff was forced to dig into the morgue files when it became certain that Ol' Man Weather wasn't about to cooperate with even a little snowfall.)

Our campus chaplains, along with President Lederle, were called upon to augment the Collegian staff as they, in effect, "wrote up" the front page.

Perhaps it's now apparent that many persons, too many to name here, have happily contributed to our small effort to add to your Holiday joy. And so from the Collegian staff, a sincere "Thank You" for the privilege of serving you our readers this year and of course, next year.

Finalists Selected For Carni Queen

by AUDREY RAYNER '63

Barry Weiner, Chairman of the Winter Carnival Publicity Committee, has announced the names of the five finalists for Winter Carni Queen.

The five girls, elected from a field of thirty-nine candidates, are: Lee Porter '64, Glenda Stockwell '64, Pam O'Donnell '63, Carol Madison '63, and Dolores Grinuk '64. They will be the most photographed and most widely publicized queens in campus history, with coverage through television, the Associated Press Wirephoto, and national magazines.

The girls will appear on the Barbara Bernard show, WHYN-TV, on Febuary 7.

Lee Porter, a home economics major from Needham, is a member of Sigma Kappa sorority, C.A., and is secretary of the Concert Band.

Glenda Stockwell, from Marblehead, is an English major, and belongs to Kappa Kappa Gamma sorority and C.A.

Another English major, Pam O'Donnell, comes from Pittsfield and is a member of Pi Beta Phi sorority. Her activities include the Junior Executive Council, Newman Club, and the Winter Carni Fashion Show, of which she is co-chairman.

Dolores Grinuk is a psychology major from Chicopee.

A Spanish major, Carol Madison belongs to Chi Omega sorority, the Junior Executive Council, Revelers, and is also co-chairman of the Fashion Show, and a counselor in Knowlton. She comes from Pittsfield.

The queen of the Winter Carnival Weekend will be crowned during the intermission of the ball on Friday night by University President, John W. Lederle.

Guitarist Montoya Will Create Flamenco Music Here Tuesday

Carlos Montoya, one of the world's foremost Flamenco guitarists, will give a recital in the S.U. Ballroom on Tuesday, Jan. 9, at 8 p.m.

The performance, sponsored by the University's Concert Association, is open to the public. Tickets may be obtained in advance or at the door.

Montoya is the first guitarist ever to give a recital of Flamenco music without support from singers and dancers. The son of Spanish gypsies, he took his first lessons on the guitar from his mother when he was eight years old. By the time he was 14 he was accompanying the top Flamenco dancers and singers in Spain. In 1945 he gave his first solo performance, and has gone on to achieve international fame with his one man shows.

Flamenco music is not written. Montoya creates as he goes along. All his arrangements and compositions are original, based on the Spanish gypsy tradition.

Montoya believes that Flamenco is more difficult to create than modern jazz since "there is more elaborate harmony and counterpoint."

In playing his guitar, Montoya uses his strong, slender fingers only. He says, "The pick is an awful thing. Using it, anyone can make a lot of noise with only a couple of lessons. But that's not playing."

The Montoya recital is the third in a series of six presentations of the Concert Association this academic year.

Computer To Replace Student Registration

by NEAL ANDELMAN '63

A new computer system may replace student scheduling of hour plans by the next spring semester. If so, then UMass students have filled out their own hour plans for the last time.

According to H. Hills Skillings of the scheduling office, students would attend pre-registration and select their courses just as they do under the present system. The courses would then be listed on a special card along with the hours that a student could not attend classes because of a job or other reason.

When this information is fed into the computer, the student's schedule would be electronically planned and recorded in three-quarters of a second.

To test the system a trial run was recently held at the IBM Research Center at MIT. Using the same courses that students are currently taking, the computor wrote out 900 schedules in one hour. An improved machine, now available, can increase this output to 5000 schedules an hour.

The computor produces a schedule that is well balanced. Classes which require daily preparation and recitation (math, language, etc.) are not lumped together on the same days, nor are all lab periods grouped together. The computor automatically balances out the number of students in each section so that no classroom will be overcrowded.

If a conflict occurs in a student's schedule because of confiicting class hours or hours student can not attend classes, then the computor automatically reschedules the student. If a change must be made after pre-registration, such a change could be made manually.

Since the computor would be needed only for a brief time twice each year, time on such a machine could be rented from some industrial concern (as yet unnamed). The cost of such an operation has been estimated at ten cents per student.

"I hope we will use this system next summer; it is used successfully at Purdue," said Skillings UMass has been planning this program for over three years, and when it is adopted Massachusetts will become the second in the nation to use this system.

Schwartz's Music Played By Professional Symphony

An original composition by a member of the University faculty was performed recently by the Florida West Coast Symphony orchestra.

"Pastorale," by composer-teacher Elliott Schwartz, played at the Bennington Composers Conference in Bennington, Vt. last summer, was performed again by the Florida West Coast Symphony, under the direction of Paul Wolfe, during the orchestra's December concert.

The 26-year-old Schwartz, who expects to receive his doctorate from Columbia University next June, teaches piano, music theory and composition at UMass. In charge of departmental recitals and student chamber music groups, he performs in concerts both as piano soloist and accompanist.

Other works of his which have been performed are the "Symphony in Two Movements," by the American University Symposium of Contemporary Music in Washington, D.C., "String Quartet," at the Festival of Contemporary Music in San Jose, California, and "Inaugural Fanfare," for the inauguration of Pres. John W. Lederle.

ELLIOTT SCHWARTZ

In the spring Schwartz's ballet score will be performed at Smith College and again during a tour of the Mid-West. Next summer his composition for voice and orchestra based on the poetry of Joseph Langland, associate professor of English at the University, will be performed at Bennington, Vt.

While continuing to compose, Schwartz maintains a full teaching schedule.

—NOTICE—

It will be of great service to the dormitory situation at the University if all those students who are not planning to return the second semester would arrange to vacate the dormitories in which they have been residents by no later than 5:00 on the afternoon of the 31st of January, 1962. There is a rather large number of students returning and entering at the beginning of the second semester and the rooms are desperately needed. The cooperation of all concerned in this matter will be most appreciated.

Used Books To Be Sold During Feb.

by DICK HAYNES '64

A used book exchange will be held in the Barnstable Room from Feb. 1 through Feb. 12. Purpose of the exchange, stated by Jack Kooyoomjian, chairman of the exchange, is: "To provide students of the University with the opportunity to buy and sell used books and, by setting their own prices, gain higher selling and lower buying prices than otherwise offered in the area."

"Alpha Phi Omega (sponsor of the exchange) will act only as a broker and will not realize any profit from the operation," he continued.

Students wishing to sell used books may bring their books to the exchange from Feb. 1 through Feb. 7.

The serial numbers of sold books will be posted at the exchange. To claim payment for a sold book, the student must present his Seller's Reciept and UMass I.D. Payment will be made in the RSO Office through Feb. 22. To reclaim an unsold book, the seller must present his reciept and UMass I.D.

Hours of the exchange are: Thursday, Feb. 1 through Friday, Feb. 9—10 a.m. to 4 p.m. and 6 p.m. to 8 p.m.; Saturday, Feb. 10—10 a.m. to noon; Monday, Feb. 12—10 a.m. to 5 p.m.

"We hope that all students who wish to sell and/or buy used books will take advantage of this service," Kooyoomjian said.

"This will be the only place on campus where a student can name his own selling price on a book and let someone else do the work of selling it," he concluded.

Nuclear Bomb Shelters: A Tragic Hoax

Lst week, a committee of the American Association for the Advancement of Science said (in as many words) that the only realistic shelter program would be one in which American Society would be able to adapt itself to interment for a sustained period of time. Taking this into consideration, the shelter program of the Kennedy administration can be taken only as a tragic hoax upon the American people.

While not even the most vehement anti-shelterite would claim that a nuclear attack would result in complete physical annhilation of the United States, it has become quite clear that a substantial attack would destroy a great portion of the country. While it can not be argued that survival in fringe areas is impossible, it is obvious that city dwellers and those living in suburban communities would be utterly doomed.

Unfortunately, with the development of super-bombs fringe areas are no longer calculable. In addition, as more knowledge of fire storm damage and psychological consequences becomes available, one wonders if indeed it would be advisable to live in a fringe area!

As Consumer Reports points out, (January 1962) there exist incalculable variables and uncertainties in determining the effect of a nuclear attack. Consumer says:

"The proponents of shelters . . . seem to be arguing that one can assume any assumptions he wants to; still," they add, "at some point the reach of the immediate hazards of a nuclear attack comes to an end for some of us. If the inhabitants of the cities are killed at once, there are still the suburbanites; if they are killed, there are still rural dwellers; if the rural dwellers of a few stats a killed, there are still the more remote rural dwellers of another state."

Thus, the article continues, if everything builds shelters, some will survive (if they are lucky!).

"This approach is often presented as the "insurance" approach . . . But a family shelter is not a kind of insurance . . . The family shelter . . . is purely and simply a bet, exactly like a bet on a horse race."

The article sums up:

"It is the government which must elect to build or not to build and to undertake the basic reordering of values which must go along with any serious shelter program. The government would have to deal with the same uncertainties that would confront a family, since shelters, like nuclear war, pose no more rational questions to a nation than to an individual. And the government will not improve the odds, since the bombs may be expected to get bigger as the shelters do."

The last sentence of this report is extremely significant in that it implies exactly what many anti-shelterites have argued, namely that the building of shelters constitutes a further provocation and stimulation to the building of even bigger bombs. And let it be said that bigger bombs are theoretically feasible!

'Certainly unusual perspicacity is not needed to see that a mass program of shelter building would require a serious re-organization of American Society and pose perhaps more serious questions of a psychological nature.

It is our opinion that a vast system of shelters will foster just what it seeks to prevent, namely paranoiac fear and moral degradation of our society.

As Dr. Harrison Brown, professor of Geochemistry at the California Institute of Technology, has said (as reported in the Times of Dec. 30)—:

If the arms race continues, an all out nuclear war is inevitable.

But are we not heading in this direction? And if we are, is the solution to burrow underground? Presuming that the Soviet Union realizes just as the United States does, that nuclear war would mean mutual destruction, does it not seem reasonable once again to resume purposeful and sincere negotiations? All too frequently, those who speak against shelters and the massive build-up of armaments are characterized as Pacifists. Even this paper has made the mistake in characterizing Synthesis as "a pacifist organization." For those who refuse to take a stand, this is an easy way out. Most of those who are opposed to shelters and armament buildup are hard headed realists who can see where we are heading.

One recalls the story of the two small children in a room. Each has a loaded bean-blower. One of them finally takes hold a cardboard shield with which to protect himself. Unfortunately, in the meantime, the other has gotten hold of a machine gun. This situation can not last indefinitely.

Perhaps men (who often act like children) have different ideologies. This can not be used as an excuse for mutual destruction. There can be no excuse for cataclysm . . . except tragic stupidity.

The Last Bridge

(German)

A brilliant performance by Maria Schell, one of Europe's most distinguished actresses, winner of the Victories du Cinema Francais for her playing in GERVAISE, marks this important post-war Austrian film which stands comparison with the realistic Italian post-war productions. THE LAST BRIDGE presents Maria Schell as a young German doctor captured by Yugoslav partisans and compelled to care for the wounded. She follows them at first reluctantly but finally voluntarily and dies on "The last bridge" from both German and Yugoslav gunfire. The tact and humanity of the story have been signalized in the international prizes awarded to the film.

Strontium 90: A Need For Concern

by BOB SIMMONS '63

The following was originally submitted as a letter to the Editor. Because of its importance and it's relevance to our main editorial, we have decided to print it as a feature editorial.

Our school has been represented at the White House picket line over both the Thanksgiving and Christmas vacations in behalf of non-resumption of atmospheric nuclear testing. It is surprising to me that more has not been done and said openly on a campus of our size. Professor Steinberg delivered an excellent lecture earlier this year and a small group circulated a petition, but aside from this the movement has not been carried to the student body.

An article of note on the subject of after effects of atmospheric nuclear testing appeared in my local paper over the holidays. It dealt with a Christmas "gifts" from the Department of Agriculture. It was a machine developed to remove Strontium 90 from milk. The pilot model equipment was disappointing as it cost ten-cents a quart instead of the planned five-cents a quart. An even more discouraging fact is that the government is actually trying to discourage any dairy from installing the new equipment, even for the processing of children's milk.

The government's big concern, as one government chemist put it, is "that some hot shot promoters might rush out and install the new equipment before this spring when the radioactive rains come from the recent Russian tests and create a panic by advertising 'Strontium-Free Milk'." This would at least be understandable considering that some dairies have already suffered heavy losses in sales as a result of the scare-headlines in the past proclaiming that milk in some areas has been contaminated with Strontium 90 several times in excess of the "permissible limits."

This negative policy of the government is understandable in that some company may breach advertising ethics by proclaiming its products to be less harmful than its competitors. And the claim could not be disputed because the Federal Radiation Council has already established the policy that any radiation, no matter how little, is potentially harmful and that the population should not be exposed to any radiation without due consideration for the benefits to be gained.

The government's position is awkward as it must be prepared for milk company advertising a "clean" product, yet it permits cigarette companies to suggest in their advertising that healthy young people have nothing to fear from cigarette smoking, despite the fact that the Public Health Service of the United States government issues repeated warning concerning the harm caused by smoking.

There is a cartoon which shows two children talking, with two adults casually having a drink in the background. The small boy says, "Wait until the Strontium gets into their Scotch. Then maybe we'll get some action." I ask, can we afford to wait that long?

On Establishing A Tradition

To the Editor:

In an era of University history when there are frequent complaints of the loss and demise of Campus tradition it is encouraging to note the revival of the playing of the Old Chapel bells in the evening thanks to the dedicated efforts of two of our co-eds—Val DuBois and Louise Aceti.

Though we may mourne the demise of such lighthearted expression of spirit as Spring Day and the rope pull across the pond, there is nothing to prevent us from encouraging the growth of new traditions. The final Collegian issue of the spring semester (May 19, 1961) carried a letter entitled "A Dedicated Teacher," which suggested a tradition which I feel would be fitting and appropriate in a University community such as ours. May I suggest that this letter be reprinted and that all of us as students keep in mind that we are (or can be) tradition builders and not tradition-mourners only.

George Murphy

Editor's note: The letter to which Mr. Murphy refers spoke of an incident last semester when, at the close of the last lecture of the year by Professor Tinder, an entire class got up and applauded. "One could clearly see that he (Tinder) was touched by this open show of appreciation . . . by students who . . . were expressing gratitude to a man whose every presentation was made interesting . . ." The letter goes on to suggest that such a custom be adopted regularly at the University. We recall an incident earlier this semester when an English class applauded a lecture given by Mr. Marc Ratner.

A Ballad Of The Displeased

To the Editor:

It was with great pleasure that I perused the stirring cry for freedom from compulsory military training which appeared in your paper on 11 December (Monday). To honor the supreme courage they displayed in impartially defending the picketers of the Military Ball (whose leaders they were), I have taken it upon myself to compose for them a

BALLADE DES HOMMES MECONTENTS

Come to me, all you fine young men,
I have a thing to say
About some youths who once again
Declared a judgment day,
Deciding that all men must pay
Their debt to me and you.
The tax was levied yesterday
By Palter and Theroux.

The ball was going gaily when
The macaw and the jay
Decided balls for fighting men
Must end without delay.
"They have no right to feel so gay
Who kill tried men and true.
"We'll picket them this very day!"
By Palter and Theroux.

They marched upon the soldiers' den
And held them there at bay.
The police came rushing on them then
And dragged Theroux way.
Where hope and glory could not stay,
Their hearts gave birth to new—
A plan was made to save the day
By Palter and Theroux.

O Dean, the police have given way
Before the charging few,
The victors' laurels won today
By Palter and Theroux.

Infirmary Visiting Hours, Regulations Listed By Gage

Robert W. Gage, M.D., has announced that effective at once, visiting hours for students confined to the Infirmary will be:

"Student visitors (and other visitors who are not members of the patient's immediate family or members of the faculty) may visit patients at the Infirmary between 7 p.m. and 8 p.m. daily.

"Members of the patient's family, heads of residence, and other members of the faculty may visit at any time between 8 a.m. and 9 p.m., provided that such visiting does not interfere with care of patients or their obtaining sufficient rest.

"Each visitor must be at least 14 years of age.

"Patients who are under treatment for a communicable disease may not be visited at any time.

"There should be no more than two visitors to a patient at any time.

"Visitors should remember that the Infirmary is a hospital, its facilities devoted to the care of those who are ill. Conduct of patients, visitors and staff are expected to reflect a mature respect for the rights and comforts of others.

"Regulations and standards of personal conduct which are expected to be observed elsewhere on the campus will be observed with equal care in the Infirmary. The staff of the Health Services is in no manner desirous of becoming a disciplinary body. All indiscretions of conduct will be reported to the appropriate Dean for evaluation.

"Cooperation with these guides will doubtless lead to an extension of the visiting privilege in the near future."

Globe Report Says Education Bd. Inadequate For Mass. Education

Last in a series of articles condensed by Mo Wronski '63 from "The Mess in Bay State Education," which appeared in the Boston Globe daily from Sept. 17-24 by Ian Menzies and Ian Forman, Boston Globe Science and Education writers.

The Massachusetts Department of Education, headed by Dr. Owen B. Kiernan and governed by an unpaid board of nine citizens appointed by the governor, has been inadequate in its efforts for improved Bay State education, according to the Globe report.

Fails To Demand Public Support

Although it has been hamstrung for funds through lack of legislative interest, it has failed to demand public support. It has failed to actively seek revision of the obsolete formula for distributing state money for education, based on 1945 property values, the report revealed.

Lack of an overall plan for public education in Massachusetts has resulted in lack of interest in education, lack of funds, and lack of progress. A special study commission, to give this state public educational goals for the years ahead, is urgently needed.

Many Bay State communities are failing to benefit from new educational programs and teaching techniques. In Massachusetts, where it's a case of every community for itself, only the well-heeled, progressive school systems have been capable of utilizing such improvements as language laboratories, gifted child programs, teaching machines, specially adapted science programs, and early introduction to foreign language with television instruction.

Dept. Of Ed. Has Few Statistics

The Department of Education, which should be in a position to act as central clearing house for all curriculum and educational data, has few available statistics as to the extent of new programs or teaching techniques through state school systems.

Dr. Kiernan, head of the Department, in his dealings with the Legislature has felt the need to have the impetus for improvements in education come from outside groups so that he cannot be accused of having "a vested interest". In Section 1, Chapter 69 of the General Laws, the duties of the Commissioner of Public Education are to "collect and distribute information as to the condition and efficiency and other means of popular education, and the best methods of instruction, and suggest improvements in present systems of public schools to the General Court." If, under this mandate, the commissioner feels that he may be challenged as "a vested interest" when he goes to bat in the interests of 925,000 school children, then something is wrong.

In the eyes of professional educators at private universities in the state, our Department of Education is one of the weakest in the nation.

Perhaps the biggest gap in the Bay State picture today is the lack of an allout major drive to raise drastically the state school aid formula.

A long-range Master Plan for public higher education, as well as education at the elementary and secondary levels, is sorely needed. The impetus for such a plan must come from the governor and/or the legislature because there is little likelihood of action from our un-coordinated boards of education.

At present in Massachusetts there are four individual administrators and governing boards:

1. The University of Massachusetts with its president and board of trustees.
2. Lowell Technological Institute with its president and board of trustees.
3. Four regional, two-year Community Colleges with one overall board.
4. The Commissioner of Education and Board of Education encompassing all public schools, the ten state colleges, the planned Southeastern Massachusetts Institute of Technology, and the Massachusetts Maritime Academy.

Commuter Colleges Suggested

Perhaps the best solution would be to put the entire higher education complex under a reconstituted University of Massachusetts board, with a membership of educators and laymen representative of the various segments of higher education now existing.

The focal point would be the University of Massachusetts, where an undergraduate body would remain but a much larger graduate program would be worked up. As the ten state colleges are now being encouraged to give four-year liberal arts degrees, they could form a surrounding commuter-college network tied to UMass. (For instance, the present state college at Bridgewater could be named the University of Massachusetts at Bridgewater).

Elementary and secondary education, plus the need for an expanded series of vocational regional high schools, would then come under the Commissioner of Education with a reconstituted board to back him up.

If Massachusetts is not to be left behind, something must be done—and soon. The 945,000 students in our state-supported schools are our state's greatest natural resource.

Forecast Is For Good Mass. Indoor Track Season

by ABE SHEINKER '62

Coach Bill Footrick's varsity indoor track team is working hard in anticipation of a Winter schedule that includes meets with Brown, New England outdoor champion last spring; Northeastern, Greater Boston indoor titlist last winter; and Connecticut, runner-up in the 1961 Yankee Conference meet. Only New Hampshire and Tufts offer little competition this year.

The big point winners on last year's squad were a quartet of sophomores, therefore the nucleus of this year's team will be these juniors: Dick Ward, Loren Flagg, Dave Balch and Ken O'Brien. In fact, this is the first time in many years that there are more juniors than sophomores on the team. Several proven seniors and outstanding sophomores balance a team that is strong in all but three of the thirteen indoor events.

The team shapes up as follows: Dash: Last year Loren Flagg broke or tied every school sprint record, won the N.E.A.A.U. 50-yard indoor title and the YanCon 100-yard title, never lost an indoor dash or an outdoor 100, and lost only one of four 220 yard dashes. His football injuries should be well healed in time to extend this fabulous record. If Fred Lewis is able to run, he may give Flagg competition, otherwise Jim Reilly and Craig Erichson will back him up.

600 yards: The Redmen have considerable depth in this event. Ken O'Brien set the UMass 600 record last season and could lower it. He could also be surpassed by sophomore Phil Danforth, who set a freshman quarter mile record last Spring, and senior Ron Young, best UMass 440 runners in 1961. Jack Harrington, Bob Carpenter, and Bruce Thompson will be backing them up.

1000 yards: O'Brien, who doubles in this event, also set a school record in it last year. Co-captain Joe LaMarre was only a few seconds behind him and along with Gene Colburn, Dick Monteiro, Dave St. Cyr, Ron Thompson, and Ken Johnson, will make this one of the team's strongest events this season.

Mile: Coach Footrick doesn't know what to do with all the fine distance runners he trained in Cross Country. Dave Balch holds the UMass outdoor mile mark of 4:24. Bob Brouillet, the great sophomore cross country man, used to be a plodder but recently ran a two-minute half mile and could displace Balch as top man in this event. Jim Wrynn, the team's best miler in 1958, and Charlie Proctor and Tom Leavitt will round out a crew of fine milers.

Two Mile: This event will also be a battle beween Balch and Brouillet, but the sohomore's unfailing endurance may win it. Dick Blomstrom is another good two miler who was a consistent scorer last year when the Redmen yielded but few points in this long race. Wrynn, Proctor, and Leavitt will probably compete in this event also.

High and Low Hurdles: These events are weak points for the Redmen because of the loss of two fine hurdlers. Al Lucey, high scorer in these races last winter, underwent a back operation that ended his career. Charlie LaPier picked it up last Spring and set a school record in the highs while placing in the YanCon meet, but he works for Matt Zunic now. Footrick will have to depend on sophomores John Harrington, George Lake and Jim Lumley, who were good as freshmen.

Shotput: Last year George Giddings and freshman Paul Pisinski were only inches apart in their throws, both surpassing 43 feet. Giddings has improved a few feet and could blossom into a champion if he gets his tremendous power behind the 16 pound ball. Pisinski holds the frosh record and will give his teammate stiff competition. Co-captain Ernie Marshick and junior Dick Ward are also good for places in the shotput.

35 pound weight throw: Ward improved little last year after setting a freshman mark of 47 feet. He did throw 50 feet, but has improved to 55 this year with the coaching of local Olympian Al Hall. He'll be hard to beat, even with good competition coming up in this event. Karshick also broke 50 last year and appears to be a consistent scorer this year.

High Jump: Ward rarely practices this event but is adept at it because of his powerful legs developed through weight training. He lost only one dual meet this year, won the YanCon meet, and set a school record of 6'4" in Miami. He'll be backed up by Joe Cassidy, Al Garsys, and Possibly Lewis.

Broad Jump: Al Garsys improved rapidly in this event last year, finishing with a place in the YanCon meet and a 22 foot jump to his credit. He'll be in good condition after a season of soccer and will be joined in this event by Reilly, also a 22-footer, Flagg, and sophomore Dick Guzowski. Lewis is another "if" here, and a big one since his frosh mark is 22'9".

Pole Vault: This event is one of the team's weaknesses mainly because the pole vaulters must go to the Amherst cage to practice. Sophomore Jim Lumley could strengthen it since he has done 11'6". Others hoping to improve their vaulting are seniors Kim Pruyne and Lee Munson, and sophomores Dave Williams and Maynard Kitchen.

PIONEERING

Somewhere out there, beyond the realm of man's present understanding, lies an idea. A concept. A truth.

Gradually, as it comes under the concentration of disciplined minds, it will become clear, refined, mastered. This is the lonely art of pioneering.

In the Bell System, pioneering often results in major breakthroughs. Planning the use of satellites as vehicles for world-wide communications is one. Another is the Optical Gas Maser, an invention which may allow a controlled beam of light to carry vast numbers of telephone calls, TV shows, and data messages.

Breakthroughs like these will one day bring exciting new telephone and communications service to you. The responsibility of providing these services will be in the hands of the people who work for your local telephone company. Among them are the engineering, administrative and operations personnel who make your telephone service the finest in the world.

Army Beats Gym Squad

by JEFF DAVIDOW '65

The UMass gym team, which meets Cortland College in the Cage tomorrow at 2:00, will be trying to get back into the winning column after being overcome by a mighty Army team Dec. 16 at West Point. The men from the mili academy are ranked as one of the top gymnastics teams in the country and the Redmen were simply overmatched.

The defeat was not an inglorious one, however, as the notable competitors for UMass were Captain Charlie Paydos and juniors Dave Yates, Dexter Brown and Bruce McCracken. Paydos put in his usual fine performance on both the parallel bars and still rings but Charlie's best was only good enough to take third place in both events.

Dave Yates put in his first appearance of the season, not having been able to compete in the first meet with Ithaca because of a sprained ankle. Dave was excellent in the Free Exercise event and captured one of two second places taken by the Redmen. The other second place berth was captured by Brown on the long horse. Dexter is considered by Coach Bob James as a contender for first place in any meet.

Another outstanding performer was Bruce McCracken. Bruce, who along with Charlie Paydos competed in three events, was at his best on the high bar where he went through his routine with skill and perfect coordination. On the whole, the team's performance was good, but not good enough to stem the powerful Army tide.

Redmen Basketball Squad Dumps Northeastern 72-61

by AL BERMAN '62

The UMass basketball squad scored its second straight victory and its third of the season Wednesday night as it defeated the Northeastern Huskies, 72-61, at the Cage.

The Redmen had little to be proud of, however, as the game for the most part was shoddily played. Despite careless ballhandling, the Redmen still had little trouble defeating the Huskies because: (1) Northeastern was just as careless, (2) When the Redmen managed to keep the ball long enough to shoot, they clicked with astounding frequency (30 hits for 49 attempts from the floor, as compared to Northeastern's 26-70 tab), and (3) Charlie Fohlin and Roger Twitchell controlled the boards.

Looked Like High Score

At the start the score looked as though it was going to be high. Scoring was fast, and the lead changed hands several times until the Redmen pulled away. Before the midway point of the first half, they had already piled up a 25-15 lead.

Northeastern rallied slightly to close the gap to six points, but then the Redmen put on the gas again and walked off the floor with a 36-23 half time lead.

More Of The Same

In the second half the Redmen had little trouble holding on to a substantial lead through the first nine minutes. Then, in a sudden surge, Northeastern scored 10 straight points and narrowed the gap to 5 points at the 7:00 mark.

Just as UMass fans were starting to panic, Charlie Fohlin hit for two points that ended the UMass famine and the Northeastern feast. Led by the sharp-shooting of Kirk Leslie a big lead was again built up that was never threatened.

Dribbling Around

The Redmen's shooting percentage from the floor is a new record for them, as they hit 61% of their shots . . . It's hard to signle out any one player in this one; it was one of those "team" efforts. Kirk Leslie dipped 24 points, while Twitchell and Fohlin were busy playing great offensive and defensive games (Twitchell, 15 rebounds, 13 points; Fohlin, 11 rebounds, 8 points). Dick Conlin and Pete Bernard were scoring themselves and setting up many other plays as well.

Still Dribbling

Over the vacation the Redmen notched a 68-60 victory over Colby College. Twitchell was the high scorer with 28 points, and Conlin had 19 . . . UMass now stands at 3-4, facing a UNH encounter tomorrow night in Durham . . . The YanCon race was tightened up this week as UConn, which defeated the Redmen, was itself defeated by supposedly weak Maine . . . A real test will come Monday night when the Providence College squad invades the Cage. One of the largest crowds ever to witness a UMass basketball game is expected at the Cage for this big one. The Friars, highly-tauted but rather disappointing so far this season, might find themselves surprised. The frosh prelim starts at 6:15.

TWITCHELL SAYS SAFE

The Redmen's ROGER TWITCHELL seems to be registering the safe sign as his teammate DICK CONLIN finally latches on to the ball after scrambling for it with opposing Northeastern players.

KIRK LESLIE strikes a classic pose as he goes up for a rebound.

NOTICE

The seating capacity of the Cage for basketball games is limited and far short of our total student enrollment. Students are reminded of this fact because we are expecting a full house for our game with Providence College on January 18th. Admission must be cut off when the capacity figure is reached.

Brown Puck Tourney Hard On UM Team

by STEVE HEWEY '63

Mid-season tournaments, where the competition is often stiffer than the regular season schedule, can be record spoilers, as the Redmen varsity hockey squad found out. Going into the Brown Invitational Hockel Tournament, Dec. 18-20, UMass had an even 2 and 2 record. After finishing the tournament seventh in a field of eight teams, the Redmen now have a record of 3 wins against 4 losses.

In the tourney opener Colgate dumped in 8 goals to the Redmen's 3. Senior co-captain Jim Ellingwood scored a pair for the Redmen and Dick Philips added the third. Assists on the three goals went to Charlie Donovan, Jerry Clinton, Tommy Taylor and Bobby Glew. The following evening UNH went on a scoring spree as they found the Redmen nets good for 14 goals and an impressive 14 to 2 victory. Taylor and Bobby Glew lit the lamp for the two UMass goals, assists coming from Bob Chisholm, Donovan, and Clinton.

Against A.I.C. in their final tournament appearance, Steve Kosakowski's squad managed to salvage a 6 to 5 win to lighten the load of their previous two losses. Scoring honors in the closing game went to Charlie Donovan who hit for 2 goals and was joined in the goal output by Ellingwood, Clinton, Taylor and Jack Karchenes. Assists went to Karchenes (2), Ellingwood (2), Taylor (2), Donovan, Battis, and Chisholm.

A.I.C. seems to be a soft touch for left winger Donovan. In a previous encounter with A.I.C. earlier this year, he scored 4 goals in a 6 to 1 Redmen victory. Of the 7 goals he has scored this season 6 have come against A.I.C. Donovan is currently leading his team in the scoring department with a total of 12 points on 7 goals and 5 assists. Tommy Taylor is second with 4 goals and 7 assists for 11 points while Jim Ellingwood has 5 and 5 for 10 points.

This Friday evening the Redmen entertain visiting Bowdoin College of Brunswick, Maine, the Brown Tournament champs, at the Orr Rink at Amherst College. Face-off is at 7 P.M.

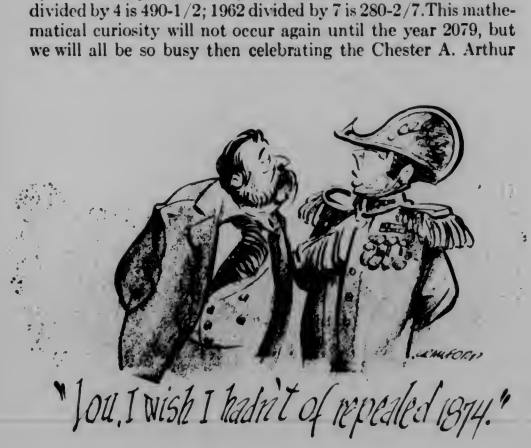
RING IN THE NEW

Are you still writing "1961" on your papers and letters? I'll bet you are, you scamps! But I am not one to be harsh with those who forget we are in a new year, for I myself have long been guilty of the same lapse. In fact, in my senior year at college, I wrote 1873 on my papers until nearly November of 1874! (It turned out, incidentally, not to be such a serious error because, as we all know, 1874 was later repealed by President Chester A. Arthur in a fit of pique over the Black Tom Explosion. And, as we all know, Mr. Arthur later came to regret his hasty action. Who does not recall that famous meeting between Mr. Arthur and Louis Napoleon when Mr. Arthur said, "Lou, I wish I hadn't of repealed 1874." Whereupon the French emperor made his immortal rejoinder, "Tipi que nous et tyler tu." Well sir, they had many a good laugh about that, as you can imagine.)

But I digress. How can we remember to write 1962 on our papers and letters? Well sir, the best way is to find something memorable about 1962, something unique to fix it firmly in your mind. Happily, this is very simple because, as we all know, 1962 is the first year in history that is divisible by 2, by 4, and by 7. Take a pencil and try it: 1962 divided by 2 is 981; 1962 divided by 4 is 490-1/2; 1962 divided by 7 is 280-2/7.This mathematical curiosity will not occur again until the year 2079, but we will all be so busy then celebrating the Chester A. Arthur bi-centenary that we will scarcely have time to be writing papers and letters and like that.



Another clever little trick to fix the year 1962 in your mind is to remember that 1962 spelled backwards is 2691. "Year" spelled backwards is "raey." "Marlboro" spelled backwards is "oroblram." Marlboro smoked backwards is no fun at all. Kindly do not light the filter. What you do is put the filter end in your lips, then light the tobacco end, then draw, and then find out what pleasure, what joy, what rapture serene it is to smoke the filter cigarette with the unfiltered taste. In 1962, as in once and future years, you'll get a lot to like in a Marlboro — available in soft pack and flip-top box in all 50 states and Duluth.

But I digress. We were speaking of the memorable aspects of 1962 and high among them, of course, is the fact that in 1962 the entire House of Representatives stands for election. There will, no doubt, be many lively and interesting contests, but none, I'll wager, quite so lively and interesting as the one in my own district where the leading candidate is none other than Chester A. Arthur!

Mr. Arthur, incidentally, is not the first ex-president to come out of retirement and run for the House of Representatives. John Quincy Adams was the first. Mr. Adams also holds another distinction: he was the first son of a president ever to serve as president. It is true that Martin Van Buren's son, Walter "Blinky" Van Buren, was at one time offered the nomination for the presidency, but he, alas, had already accepted a bid to become Mad Ludwig of Bavaria. James K. Polk's son, on the other hand, became Salmon P. Chase. Millard Fillmore's son went into air conditioning. This later was known as the Missouri Compromise.

Thatcher And Butterfield Hold Mixers

An unusual interdormitory social relationship has sprung up within the last month among the residents of Thatcher and Butterfield Houses.

The arrangement began when the social committee of Thatcher extended an invitation to the men of Butterfield to attend a semi-formal Christmas dance, "Yester Yule," at the women's dorm on Saturday, Dec. 16. The dance was prefixed by a decoration party on the previous weekend, where residents of both dorms had a chance to get acquainted.

The dance, which featured music by the Dynamics, was very successful.

On Monday evening, Dec. 18, the last night before vacation, a troup of about 40 Buttergeld residents marched down to Thatcher and serenaded the dorm with Christmas carols. After the caroling, the girls were invited up to Butterfield where an informal mixer and dance was held. The sponaneous event was so favorably accepted by all persons involved that tentative arrangements are already being made for future get-togethers between the two dorms.

Assistant Dean of Men William Burkhardt and assistant Dean of Women Mrs. Isabelle Gonon are very enthusiastic about the relationship that the dorms have set up, and they expressed hope that other dormitories would follow the example.

UMass Is Picked For Jobs In Africa

UMass will administer a two million dollar educational project in Africa at the request of the U.S. government, it was announced today by President John W. Lederle.

The Administration for International Development of the U.S. Department of State has approved recommendations of the University's School of Education for building a girls' boarding school in Tororo, Uganda, Africa.

The recommendations for constructing, organizing and staffing the school were made following a month's trip to Uganda by a University team made up of Dean Albert W. Purvis of the University School of Education, Elwyn Doubleday, principal of East Longmeadow high school and Dean Mary. Whyard of Northfield School for Girls. Dean Purvis is general supervisor of the entire project.

The University will soon be recruiting qualified personnel — in such secondary school fields as guidance, business, home economics and library—who would be interested in working two years or more at the school in East Africa.

Open House Planned For New Infirmary

Open house at the University's new infirmary will be held for students on Wednesday, Jan. 17, from 3 to 5 p.m., said Dr. Robert W. Gage, Director of the University Health Service.

Since no classes are scheduled on that day, Dr. Gage believes a large number of students will have the time to take tours of the million dollar medical facility.

Inspection Tours Scheduled

Student visitors will inspect modern equipment installed in the spacious kitchen, the well-lighted emergency operating room and the X-ray room. In addition, staff members will take visitors through patients' rooms and demonstrate the nurse-patient intercom system as well as private AM-FM receivers.

The out-patient ward of the building, now serving close to 1,000 students a week, will also be included in the tour. Other facilities open to the student visitors will be the physiotherapy room, laboratory, and medical reference library.

A second open-house will be conducted on Wednesday, Jan. 31, from 3 to 9 p.m., for parents, faculty, and the public. It is felt that this is an ideal day for parents to see the Infirmary, since many of them will be bringing sons and daughters back to the University.

Koenig Announced As New Lutheran Minister Here

Reverend Richard Koenig, the new Lutheran minister in Amherst, will be chaplain to Lutheran students on campus. Although not a member, he will be working in cooperation with the Protestant Chaplain's Staff and will be available to students on Wednesday from 2 to 4, in room 12 of Old Chapel.

Said Rev. Koenig in a recent interview, "In am convinced that the religious dimension of a student's life is a crucial factor in his education, and I hope to be able to be instrumental in makign students aware of this fact also."

Born in St. Louis, Missouri, Koenig prepped at St. Paul's in Concordia, Missouri and received his B.D. from Concordia Theological Seminary in 1952. He did graduate work at The General Theological Seminary, New York City, in New Testament theology and literature, receiving his S.T.M. from General in 1961.

Rev. Koenig served parishes in Florida and New York before coming to Amherst. He was an instructor in religion on the college level at Concordia Collegiate Institute, Bronxville, New York.

Stated Rev. Koenig about his work thus far, "My association so far with UMass students and faculty has proved to be even more exciting and stimulating than I had anticipated. I am looking forward to becoming better acquainted with the operation of the university and its students. I hope that, in a small way, we shall be able to contribute to the life and vitality of this great school."

Earle Clements Urges Greater UMass Development, Autonomy

by ANN MILLER '64

Camera catches Senator Earle Clements in coat room conference.

Senator Earle Clements finished his stay here yesterday as Distinguished Professor of Public Affairs for the Government Dept. In an interview shortly before leaving he made several statements about his affiliations here.

Hopes For Greater Autonomy

Said Clements, "I have high hopes that under the leadership of the university administration, you will find greater autonomy and that better understanding will arise between those in government and those in education. I believe and would express hope that financial needs of the University may receive thoughful and appropriate consideration by those in government.

Students Here Interested, Informed

"Both the faculty and the students that it has been my good fortune to meet . . . particularly a number of international students that I've gotten to know . . . have been interesting and stimulating.

"If I had any concern about this country being led by the people of this younger generation, this visit here would have eased my mind. I've found a tremendous interest among the students here in their own government—both in theory and in practical application of that theory—and I've found a real awareness and considerable understanding of the importance of our relations with other nations of the world . . . I think it's a great credit that there is that awareness of the importance of an understanding between the peoples of our country and other countries if we are to continue our position of world leadership.

"My work here has been an experience. If it were saleable, money couldn't buy it.

UMass Has Great Potential

"I'm convinced that there's no school east of the Mississippi that has greater prospects of development if its many facets are brought together.

This school is one of the few state universities to have land available for expansion . . . it could be triple its present size. You could enroll double the amount of students if the school's potential were used."

When asked about his own future plans, Clements said, "I plan to retire to the job of what some would call a lobbyist and some a Washington consultant. I anticipate being on duty with my old boss, the American Merchant Marine Institute."

Final Plans Arranged For Book Exchange

Jack Kooyoomjian, chairman of the Alpha Phi Omega Book Exchange Committee, has announced the final hours and the operating procedures of the Exchange to be held from Thursday, Feb. 1 through Monday, Feb. 12, in the Barnstable Room of the SU.

The hours of the Book Exchange will be: weekdays, 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. and 6 p.m. to 8 p.m.; Saturdays, 10 a.m. to 4 p.m.; Monday, Feb. 12, 10 a.m. to 4 p.m.

Operating Procedure Explained

To sell a book a student brings it to the exchange and fills out a Master Card upon which the seller names the price at which his book is to be sold. The seller is given a receipt for his book which he must produce with his UMass ID to claim payment when the book is sold. When the student gives a book to the exchange, he must pay a five cent service charge. "This charge," explained Kooyoomjian, "will be used to defray the cost of operating the Exchange. When a student receives payment for a sold book an additional five cent charge will be levied. This charge will be deducted from the price paid to the seller upon completion of the sales transaction."

To purchase a book, a buyer must state the title, author and edition. He will be shown a selection of those books from which he is free to chose the book best suited to his needs. All sales will be final.

Unsold books not reclaimed before Feb. 12 will become the property of Alpha Phi Omega and will be donated to the Library or to a charity.

The serial numbers of sold books will be posted outside the Barnstable Room. To claim payment for a sold book, a student must present his Seller's Receipt and UMass ID. Payments will be made during and after the exchange until 22 Feb. in the RSO Office.

"It is expected," Kooyoomjian began, "that sellers will price their books between 50 and 75% of their original cost."

"This", he pointed out, is more than the buying prices of book dealers in the area."

"However, our operation is a non-profit, non-commercial one and therefore there will be no resulting markups before resale of the book," whereas commercial book dealers usually price their books for resale at about 75% or more of their original cost," he continued.

"Therefore," he concluded," the student utilizing the Book Exchange will be able to sell his book for more and buy other books for less than otherwise offered in the area."

Libe Smoking Room Opens On 4th Level

The University Librarian, Hugh Montgomery, announces the opening of room 419 adjacent to the 4th level Reserve Desk and reading rooms in the Library as a smoking room.

This room will be available during all regular Library hours but will be closed at 11:30 p.m. on the evenings when the midnight study hall is in operation.

The opening of this room makes smoking in the entrance lobbies no longer acceptable. Students are asked to restrict smoking to this room which will remain open as long as conduct is acceptable and any noise from the room is not disturbing to the rest of the Library patrons.

A TIME TO ACT

"R.O.T.C. is an attempt to thwart the intellectual growth of the student. Rather than education, R.O.T.C. constitutes nothing more than indoctrination. This indoctrination is brought about quite unjustifiably by its attachment to the educational processes of the University of Massachusetts.

"It is harmful morally and psychologically because it deludes the student into passive acceptance of militaristic codes and standards.

"The compulsory clause makes it difficult for the sincere student ... alienates the instructor ... and frustrates the student who cannot sympathize with it."

With these words, the Committee to Abolish Compulsory R.O.T.C. has stepped into the controversial foray. The Committee has served notice that it will not rest until the compulsory program is dropped at the University.

For the past few years, sporadic movements have broken out against R.O.T.C. Unfortunately, these movements deteriorated into petty conflicts between personalities. At this time, personal quarrels served to hinder intelligent discussion of the central question.

The Committee has done well to center its objections upon both economic and philosophical grounds. While on the one hand, they argue that the program is a waste of time and money, they have also asserted that the program is contrary to the principles of a "liberal education." Clearly the latter argument is of greater significance.

Although one is hard pressed to define exactly this phrase "liberal education," it is not difficult to determine certain fundamental characteristics. Allan Brick of Dartmouth College has written in his "The Campus Protest Against R.O.T.C.," true education "as opposed to the many forms of indoctrination by which outward 'truths' are imposed upon the self, sets free a dynamic skepticism. The educator, like Socrates, leads the student to the insight that no outward 'good,' no fixed standard of truth, may command ultimate subservience, and that all outwardly existent standards are but relative to the integrity of the mind."

In conflict with this is the program at the University which must of necessity reflect the characteristics of a military establishment. What are these characteristics?

"The first is its system of command, in which an individual must subordinate his own thoughts and impulses to those of a superior officer, not because he has evaluated those of the officer and found them truly "superior" (as of course they may chance to be) but simply because they are imposed by a man ranked "above" him. In this system, his way of life is unquestioned obedience to authority, which is as antithetical to the way of life in an academic classroom as it is necessary for the maintenance of an efficient army.

"The second necessary method of the military establishment, related to the first, is indoctrination for positive thinking—which method eases the student's natural reaction against enforced subservience. The student learns to acknowledge as the ultimate "good" what he is told to acknowledge as such ..."

Yet, perhaps we need not consider the petty frustrations or the abstract (but quite obvious) considerations.

Quite simply, when one marches, one does not think. This is what marching is for. This is so utterly simple. Consider it.

The University exists to further intellectual pursuit. Are freshmen and sophomores to be forced into intermittent repression of this pursuit? There is no need for President Lederle to ask the Department of the Army whether R.O.T.C. need be compulsory. All he need consider is the place of the university in a free society. Then, he must act.

Two Collegian Executives Resign

Two Collegian Editors have resigned from their positions, effective immediately. James Trelease, Editorial Editor, and Beth Peterson, News Make-up Editor, have resigned due to insufficient staff help and lack of incentive.

In his letter of resignation, Trelease states: ". . . my decision comes as a result of no personal conflict within the Collegian staff, but rather as a result of personal and Collegian structural matters, as well as an overloaded activity schedule."

He goes on to say that due to an acute staff shortage and due to his expanded chores as sports announcer on WMUA, he found his extra-curricular activity week "amounting to 30-40 hours per week —in other words, a full time job. The pressures of this 40-hour week had taken all the gratification out of Collegian work."

He suggests in his letter that the Collegian try to impress "upon the mind of the Administration the need for some kind of remuneration or incentive for Collegian work." Another suggestion is that "because of disinterest on the part of the student body and the lack of Collegian man-power, you cut down to two issues a week."

Trelease will remain with the paper as an editorial columnist and feature writer.

Also resigning is Beth Peterson, News Make-up Editor, who leaves her position to become an associate on the editorial page.

Patricia Barclay '63, presently a page one make-up editor, will take over as News Make-up Editor immediately following vacation. The appointment was announced by Mr. Marc Ratner, Collegian Technical Advisor, and by Allan Berman, Editor-in-Chief.

No one has been appointed to the Editorial Editor's position as yet.

The Road To Heaven

A unique and charming peasant allegory on the meaning of life, with God, King Solomon, Satan, Elijah and the Blind Man as visible and audible characters in the life of a peasant boy and his sweetheart in some vague past Sweden. It is the tale of the boy who suffers harm from witchcraft and sets out in search of the Heavenly Father to seek justice. It was adapted by the Swedish author Rune Lindstrom from his own famous play produced annually in Dalarna, Sweden.

Controversey Outlined

Just before Christmas vacation the perennial controversy over compulsory R.O.T.C. was once again in the forefront of the University news. Because I believe that the R.O.T.C. problem is extremely important, I would like to revive the controversy by refuting the arguments in favor of compulsory R.O.T.C. and restating the reasons for placing R.O.T.C. on a voluntary basis.

I was genuinely surprised to find that only two public statements were made in support of compulsory R.O.T.C. and neither of these reflected much thought. The first of these statements was made by Major Huff of the Army R.O.T.C. and was broadcast on WMUA on December 12, 1961. Major Huff said, "Since I went through here as a cadet in R.O.T.C. and it was compulsory then, I feel it should be maintained that way."

Although I understand the position Major Huff is in, I do not believe that this is a valid reason for maintaining compulsory R.O.T.C. Furthermore, I seriously doubt that this is the type of logic used by the University in deciding whether or not to offer a course.

The second statement, published in the Collegian on December 13, 1961, was made by two students who favor compulsory R.O.T.C. Although I respect their opinion, I do not believe that they have made any valuable contributions to the controversy. Their only reasonable argument was that compulsory R.O.T.C. is necessary because ". . . many highly educated students would not take the time to explore the possibilities of serving in the armed forces in a leadership capacity." How many students after studying these "possibilities" do go "advanced?" I believe that the students who would not "explore the possibilities" of R.O.T.C. but do go "advanced" after being forced into the basic course are a very small minority. Is it right to sacrifice the majority for the sake of such a minority?

How does a student benefit from the basic course if he does not take the advanced course? Does two years of memorizing names of missiles, learning how to march or how to take apart an M-1 produce a better citizen? Furthermore, these "skills" which the military considers so vital could be taught in two months in the service instead of the two years required at the University.

Although R.O.T.C. is only a one credit course it does require four hours of class and drill time plus several hours of "study and shoeshine" time. It also represents a form of training for a profession in which many students are not interested. If a student is interested in science or engineering rather than the military "profession," isn't the time he spends in R.O.T.C. wasted? Doesn't this time help to overload an already heavy schedule? Isn't our shortage of scientists and engineers more critical than our military shortage?

The rest of the arguments forwarded by Messrs. Handel and Hyde is a hastily prepared mudslinging campaign which is unnecessary on the part of any serious student who is sincerely concerned with the R.O.T.C. problem.

Now I would like to enumerate the advantages of voluntary R.O.T.C.

1. It would improve the efficiency of the department because of the greater number of interested students enrolled in the course.
2. The course could be made more challenging and valuable material could be added because it would no longer cater to the apathetic student.
3. It would save the government the expense of supporting uninterested students.
4. It would increase the study time available to the serious student who is not interested in a military career.
5. It would restore the right of free choice cherished by so many students.

Norman L. Lafleur '64

Wasted Time

To the Editor:

Why should I as a student at the University of Massachusetts be forced to take R.O.T.C.? Is it because this is a land-grant school? If this is the answer why did the University of Connecticut recently stop its compulsory R.O.T.C.?

As a Pre-Med student I find that I am burdened with R.O.T.C. There is a possibility of spending five hours a week including class, drill, and homework for R.O.T.C. That could be spent for something useful.

How can Mr. Handel and Mr. Hyde label Paul Theroux a subversive or Communist, when he like any other average American wants peace. This action is that of ex-Senator McCarthy, and presently the John Birch Society's master, Robert Welch. President Kennedy and ex-President Eisenhower recently said that these right wing extremists are hindering the country more than they are helping it.

Chaples Gets Gov't. Dept. Assistantship

Ernest A. Chaples, Jr. of Monson, one of four teachers forced to resign at North Middlesex Regional High School last November, has received an assistantship at the University, it was announced last week.

Chaples said the post, to allow him to complete course work towards a master's degree, is a joint arrangement with the Department of Government and the School of Education at the University.

He said he will be working on a thesis for his advanced degree and helping in research projects. He is a graduate of UMass.

Chaples, who will be writing his thesis on political science, said he expected to write on the subject, "The Speaker of the Massachusetts House of Representatives As an Institution." He said he will begin his duties at Amherst Feb. 1.

Meanwhile, he said he would appear at a meeting of the regional school board Monday night to present his case regarding the forced resignation. The meeting date was set in December.

(c) East knows that his side has most of the points and that game is improbable.

This hand was selected because it shows what should be done with a hand like West's opposite a one-notrump opening bid. The opening lead is the heart king. East then shifts to a low spade which goes to declarer's ace. A heart is led by the declarer to East's queen and East leads another trump to declarer's king on which West sluffs a diamond. The declarer continues five discards his three clubs and a diamond, dummy throws away five clubs, and West sluffs two diamonds and three clubs. Declarer then leads the ace and eight of diamonds. West takes the eight with his king and wins the last two tricks with the heart jack and club king for a one trick set.

'Lost' Alumni To Be Sought By Tracers

There are more than 1,000,000 "missing" alumni of colleges and universities throughout the United States. Some 30% of those former students were recipients of loans ranging from $300 to $1,500 and never got around to repaying their debts.

A nation-wide campaign will soon get under way in the search for over 15,000 of those "lost" alumni. This huge task has been assigned to Tracers Co. of America which, since 1924, has made a specialty of locating all sorts of "missing" people.

Ed Goldfader, General Manager of Tracers Co., is heading up this search and he estimates that about 85% of those being sought will be found. The result will be that about $7 million worth of unrepaid student loans will be cleared up. In addition, once the addresses of those "lost" alumni are correctly recorded, voluntary contributions and scholarship funds will come into the various schools at an unprecedented rate.

Operating out of New York City, Tracers Co. has already resolved the "missing" alumni problems of some 21 major colleges and universities and the endowment positions of those institu-

UM Purchases 370 Acres Of Farmland To Be Added To College Of Agriculture

The University is the new owner of approximately 370 acres of South Deerfield farmland, President John W. Lederle has announced.

The president said that the off-campus acquisitions will be turned over to the College of Agriculture as replacement for campus farmlands currently being used in the University's building program.

The South Deerfield properties, consisting of five parcels of land, will be developed as a research and teaching facility in agronomy, soil chemistry, dairy and animal science, vegetable crops, and other areas.

The parcels were bought from Arthur W. Hubbard (19.9 acres), the American Sumatra Tobacco Co. (103.8 acres), Roger J. Sadoski (16.4 acres), Joseph Grybko (26.1 acres), and Paranka Rewa (202 acres).

Adjacent To Mt. Sugarloaf

The new University land is adjacent on the west to the state-owned Mount Sugarloaf Reservation. It is bounded on the east by the Connecticut River, on the south by Route 116 and the Sunderland Bridge, and on the north by the terminal line of the Paranka Rewa land beyond the junction of Hillside and River Roads.

In announcing the purchase, President Lederle said that "besides being an important research and teaching resource in agriculture, the new development should add greatly to the interest and attractiveness of the Mount Sugarloaf Reservation."

The president also said that the proximity of the Connecticut River will make it possible for University researchers to undertake studies in water resources and allied investigations.

Dr. Arless A. Spielman, Dean of the College of Agriculture, expressed satisfaction with the new properties and said that a committee has been appointed to develop plans for prompt utilization of the South Deerfield land.

To Have Two Main Purposes

The dean said that the area will serve two major uses: as a headquarters for the University's large-animal farm and as an area for development of research plots.

Animals to be maintained at the South Deerfield farm will include dairy cattle, horses, sheep, swine, and beef cattle—all needed for the research and instructional program in the Department of Dairy and Animal Science. The research plots will be used in connection with federal and state supported programs of study in agronomy, soil chemistry, vegetable crops, and small fruits. At present, large acreages are rented in order to keep the programs going.

As to when the new facility would be eady for operation, Dean Spielman said, "We plan to get things going as soon as possible. We are particularly happy that the land is a self-contained area where we can carry on an integrated program of agricultural research and teaching. We expect that our work in this new development will have major benefits for the agricultural industry both in the immediate area and throughout the state, and we want to get started as soon as we can."

Appraisals and right-of-way studies connected with the University purchase were handled by Gordon E. Ainsworth and Associates of South Deerfield and by William Finn of Greenfield. Atty. Samuel Blassberg of Greenfield was appointed by the state's Attorney General to take care of legal details.

Photographers Form Campus Association

Flash bulbs were not popping on New England campuses one day last December. The reason—photographers were gathered at the University of New Hampshire to inaugurate a new professional association, the University Photographers Association.

Formed to "further and develop the potentialities of the photographic arts in improving instruction and communication" at universities and colleges, the association is the first known organization of this type to be formed in the United States.

Membership is open to all college or university personnel engaged in professional photography. While it is expected that the association will eventually become a national organization, the charter members are from UMass, Amherst College, Dartmouth College, University of New Hampshire, University of Rhode Island, Brown University, and the University of Connecticut.

Richard D. Merritt of the University of New Hampshire was elected president of the photo group and Nathan S. Tilley of UMass secretary. Other area members attending the founding meeting were Everett Kosarick of the University of Massachusetts, and Rollin H. Barrett of Amherst College.

Several other colleges have expressed an interest in joining the association. The next meeting will be held at Dartmouth College in the spring.

ALMA Picks UMass Prof

ALMA, an association of the editors of several literary magazines throughout America, was founded at a meeting at Carleton College in Minnesota to help relieve the economic plight of most small literary magazines by joining together in common distribution, advertising and circularization for mutual benefit.

Local Poets To Read At Jones Library

On Thurs. evening Jan. 11 at 7:30 p.m. in the Jones (town) Library, Prof. David R. Clark of the UMass Department of English will read from his own poetry. Reading on the same program will be Mrs. Charles Morgan, wife of the Chairman of the Fine Arts Department at Amherst College. Rev. Arnold Kenseth, pastor of the South Congregational Church of Amherst and teacher of English at the University, will introduce the poets.

This is one of a series of monthly poetry readings offered by local poets and sponsored by the Amherst Arts Center. The public is cordially invited; members of the audience will receive a printed copy of a poem by each poet; and at the close of the reading, refreshments will be served.

Clark has published his poems in the Massachusetts Review, Kenyon Review, Poetry, Voices, the Transatlantic Review, and several other magazines. He has also held the Eugene Saxton Memorial Fellowship in poetry, has lectured at the William Butler Yeats International Summer School in Ireland, and was, during 1960-61, Fullbright lecturer in Reykjavik, Iceland, at the University of Iceland.

Mrs. Morgan's poems have been published in two privately printed volumes, in "Amherst Poets, 1959" and in a number of nationally circulated newspapers and magazines.

UMass Studies Bird Cancer

Research on cancer in birds and other featured animals will begin soon at UMass under a $12,000 a year grant from the Public Health Service of the U.S. Department of Health, Education and Welfare.

The grant was made through the College of Agriculture's Agricultural Experiment Station to Dr. Martin Sevoian of the veterinary science department. He will study the cause or causes, course, transmission and genetic factors involved in diseases of the avian leukosis complex. These diseases are similar to leukemia in humans. In addition, Dr. Sevoian will investigate several possible methods of control, including drugs, vaccines and hormones.

Research in these areas will require the full five years of the grant and quite possibly more, according to Dr. Sevoian's present estimate. Assisting him in his work will be Dr. Deane Chamberlain and Fred Counter.

Diseases of the avian leukosis group are of tremendous economic importance in the United States — far greater than any other poultry disease, according to Dr. Sevoian. He feels his research may also have a bearing on human health.

Peace Corps Sends Grad To Philippines

Beth Sorenson '61, a graduate of UMass., is one of three hundred Peace Corps volunteers going to the Philippines this year as part of a project designed to help upgrade the teaching of science and English in the rural public schools. Her formal job will be that of a teacher's assistant, but she is also expected to participate actively in the life of the local community by working in such activities as scouting, 4-H work, adult education, and community development.

The Peace Corps sends its volunteers to distant parts of the world to fill the vital manpower shortages experienced by developing nations. But the volunteers are also involved in a vital learning process designed to help them and their fellow citizens understand peoples whose way of life is so vastly different from that of the typical American. Volunteers to the Philippines are already deeply immersed in this learning process.

One of the characteristics that has most impressed the Peace Corps volunteers is the Filipino's concern for the feelings of others. Filipinos are masters at avoiding embarrassing situations and will go to great lengths to enable another person to maintain a sense of personal dignity and worth. Most volunteers feel that this is a lesson Americans could very profitably learn from the Filipino.

Equally impressive has been the overwhelming Filipino hospitality. Staying overnight on a field trip, a volunteer was surprised to learn that his host, a school teacher, had stayed up all the previous night repainting the inside of his home in his honor. He also was dismayed to find that he was to sleep on the only bed in the house while the rest of the family slept on the floor.

At times the hospitality has been exhausting. For the first two weeks the Volunteers found little time for study or sleep. They would discover that one of the nearby villages had invited the local Congressman, repainted the school, and slaughtered half the chickens in the area for a reception in honor of the Peace Corps. Rather than embarrass the village by the non-appearance of its honored guests, volunteers would drop their books and hurry off to the reception.

In addition to their impressions of Filipino culture, many volunteers have noticed that many elements of American culture have been introduced into the Philippines. Among these are American rock n' roll, flashy American automobiles in the big cities, and an overwhelming preference for American products, bad or good.

The Peace Corps volunteers by their actions hope to show Filipinos some other aspects of America's heritage—the idealism, the pioneering spirit, the respect for differences among people.

Providence Five Outclasses Redmen For 79-45 Victory

by AL BERMAN '62

The Redmen found out why Providence College is one of the top-rated basketball squads in the nation Monday night, as they got dumped by the Friars 79-45 before a packed crowd in the Cage.

Even though Coach Zunie's crew gave it all they had and fought like this reporter has never seen them fight, they were not able to stem the Blue and White. The UMass hustle kept Providence to only 28 points for the first half, but then superior ability and depth finally showed itself.

Early Famine

The Redmen, although scoring the first point of the game on a foul shot, couldn't find the range for a field goal until 12:45. Then, sparked by the hot hand of Roger Twitchell, they fought back to within four points of Providence. The half ended with the Friars ahead, 28-24, and it looked as though the Redmen were going to give highly-touted Providence a rough time of it.

Roof Falls In

But then the dam broke. The Friars came back in the second half to score 15 straight points and go out in front 43-24. From then on it was no contest, as Providence just kept pulling away a little further as time passed.

It didn't take long for either coach to realize the situation, and the last 10 minutes of the game saw the Providence second team battle it out with the UMass alternates.

Dribbling Around

Roger Twitchell and Pete Bernard played an outstanding game for the Redmen, scoring 13 and 12 points respectively and looking sharp on defense. Twitchell pulled down 11 rebounds from the big hands of Providence's 6'10" John Thompson and Jim Hadnot . . . While Thompson and Hadnot are the usual high scorers for Providence, it was Carl Spencer who took the honors Monday, scoring 19 points. His previous average was 5 points per game . . .

Franz Von Bradsky and Danny Laakso were in the game for a short time and handled themselves well, dunking pretty shots ... Saturday night the Redmen edged New Hampshire 67-65 in overtime as sub guard Pete Larkin scored the winning hoop on a wierd corner shot with 5 seconds left ... The Redmen are now 1-1 in Conference play and 4-5 on the season. They are playing Holy Cross in Worcester tonight and will tackle Vermont at the Cage on Saturday.

BLOCKED

This photo shows a good part of the P.C.-UMass story Monday night as the superior height of the Providence team's Hadnot and Thompson proved to be very effective on the defensive side of the card. Leslie's shot is being blocked. The Redmen outdid the Friars on the rebound angle however.

Frosh Quintet Snaps Friar Streak, 79-61

by AL COHEN '63

Coach Jack Leaman's frosh hoopsters unleashed a balanced scoring attack to outclass the Providence College Yearlings, 79-61, in the battle of the undefeateds in Monday night's Cage prelim.

The UMass attack, spearheaded by the scoring and rebounding of 6'3" Steve Bonds, was never headed by the Friars. In fact, the Braves led from the opening tap off.

The Bonds-controlled opening tap went to Charles O'Rourke of the Braves who passed to Clarence Hill for a quick layup and a 2-0 UMass lead. After Bonds added a basket, Bob Kovalski, the 6'7" Friar center from Hatfield, broke the ice for P.C. with a foul shot. This was to be only the first of 10 foul attempts made by Bob in the first half. The former Smith Academy ace made 8 of them to keep the Friars in the game for a period. However, this wasn't enough as Bonds with 16 markers and Hill with 12, paced the Braves to a 40-29 half time lead.

Coach Leaman was forced to alternate Bonds and O'Rourke in guarding Kovalski to protect against their fouling out. They held the good-shooting big man to 2-8-12 in the decisive half.

In the second canto Bonds again outjumped Kovalski for the tap but this time it was Jack Kingston who drove in all alone for 42-29. The Friars were unable to muster a threat after coming within 8 points at 44-36. From then on the Braves led by at least 10 markers until P.C. began a full court press with the score 65-53. Then successive baskets by Jim Retos, Hill, Gerry Knight and a sensational shot by Bonds ran the margin to 72-53 Leaman unloaded his bench for the remainder of the game.

A near capacity crowd was on hand for the start of the game, helping to contribute to the spirited play of the Braves, who are now 5-0 on the season. For the Friars it was the first loss in seven starts. Coach Leaman and Company travel to Worcester tonight. The young Crusaders recently walloped a Connecticut quintet that had forced UMass into overtime.

Hockey Team Edges Bowdoin Crew 2-1

The Redmen hockey team, playing at its best, pulled a come-from-behind upset win over visiting Bowdoin College at Orr Rink in Amherst last Friday evening. The score was a close 2-1.

Bowdoin, 6 and 3 for the season before their trip to Amherst, took an early 1-0 in the first period on a goal by wingman Mike Tarbell. But this slim lead was short-lived, however, as UMass co-captain and left winger Bobby Glew skated in alone to slip in the tying goal past Bowdoin goalie Bob Chaffee early in the second frame. Just before the second period ended, Jim Ellingwood notched the winning goal with defenseman Jerry Clinton picking up the assist.

Cesario Outstanding

UMass goaltender Frank Cesario had a busy night in the nets stopping 46 Bowdoin attempts and playing a tremendous 60 minutes in the fold. Bowdoin goalie Bob Chaffee made 28 saves.

Redmen 4-4

Their spirited win over Bowdoin gives the Redmen an even 4 and 4 slate. Bowdoin's loss puts their record at 6 and 4 for the year. Today the Redmen will be after win number 5 when they face-off against the Cadets of Army at West Point. Colgate College will be in Amherst for a game on Saturday, Jan. 13, the last Redmen hockey match until after finals.

The lineups:

UMASS (2)		BOWDOIN (1)
Cesario	g	Chaffee
Clinton	rd	Jelly
Chisholm	ld	Adams
C. Glew	c	Bissette
Ellingwood	rw	Framigilleetti

P.C. Shooters Edge Redmen

The UMass Redmen and the Providence College Friars locked horns Saturday in what will probably be the closest match of the season. A mere three points separated the two teams as P.C.'s 1379 edged out a 1376 which was posted by UMass.

The UMass handicap, the deficit of two of its top shooters, was almost singlehandedly compensated for by Harold Butterworth. Hal's 289, the highest score of the match, was the highest total posted by any varsity shooter in postal and shoulder-to-shoulder matches for the past few years.

Scoring for UMass:

Harold Butterworth	289
Doug Wells	281
Ed Moses	273
Mark Nataupsky	271
Richard Levine	262

NEW MAP DISPLAY WILL SHOW PILOT WHERE IN THE WORLD HE IS

No matter what the weather, speed or altitude, an IBM navigational display being developed will let pilots find their positions on a moving map. With this new computer display for planes, a pilot will actually be able to see his position though the earth might be totally obscured by a cloud cover.

In developing this display, IBM engineers and scientists solved a unique combination of optical and photographic problems. They were able to produce map images with good resolution on the inside surface of a glass hemisphere. A beam of light illuminates a small section of this hemisphere and projects it onto a screen in front of the pilot. In flight, the computer controls rotation of the hemisphere, correlating it with the plane's supersonic progress and the rotating earth. This approach to a computer-controlled map display suggests further application in a space navigation system, where a star map might be used instead of a map of the earth.

People with backgrounds in the sciences, engineering and liberal arts all contribute to the success of projects like this. At IBM, ideas which create new products and systems can come from anywhere—from research, programming, manufacturing, and systems engineering. If you would like to work where your ideas can be as important as the ability to apply them to vital and exciting areas of development, you should consider the many opportunities at IBM.

The IBM representative will be glad to discuss with you the many areas in which IBM is making important advances. All qualified applicants will receive consideration without regard to race, creed, color or national origin. Your placement office can give you further information and arrange for an appointment. Or you may write, outlining your background and interests, to: Manager of Technical Employment, IBM Corporation, Dept. 908, 590 Madison Avenue, New York 22, N. Y.

You naturally have a better chance to grow with a dynamic growth company. IBM IBM will interview Feb. 8, 9.

WAA Holds Local Clinic

On Sat. Jan. 6, 1962 the WAA held a high school clinic for some of the local schools. The girls from Amherst, Williamsburg, and Belchertown were given instruction in Gymnastics, Modern Dance, and Synchronized Swimming by members of these clubs. At the conclusion of the instruction a brief demonstration was given by each group to show how the basic skills could be put into a routine.

The WPE Building was the site of an exciting Basketball Game on Mon. Jan. 8 between the WAA Teams of UMass and Mt. Holyoke. UMass came out the victor by a score of 14-11. The strong defensive unit included Sharon Stillman, Peg Bagdon, Ellis Harrington, Marty Graves, and Connie Akerly. Members of the offensive unit included Marilyn Cairns, Nancy MacDuffy, Karen Nolan, Marcia Bertozzi, Jean Ozon, and Bev Demarco.

Van Meter 1 Bombs Baker

Van Meter 1, captained by Norm Tate and Steve Priest, completely dominated play over Baker C in winning its first game of the Intramural Basketball Season.

Sparked by high scoring Dick Murphy (16 pts) and Ron Spinney (9 pts) Van Meter 1 took off for an early lead with a half-time score of 24 to 5 and kept going strong through the second half winning the contest 58-9.

The men from the top of the hill looked like strong contenders for the Intramural title.

They were without the services of Phil DeRose and Leo Biron, two backfield men from the Freshmen Football Team, who may prove to be as valuable on the basketball court as they were on the gridiron.

Will Jones, Minneapolis Tribune columnist, has written a new cookbook which is making quite a stir in literary circles these days. It's entitled "Wild in the Kitchen," although the publisher referred to it as "The Gastronaut" and at times he had trouble talking the author out of calling it "How to Make Love with a Spoon." There were some other uncomfortable days when it looked as though the publisher had settled upon "The Rise and the Fall of the Third Soufflé." The book has been known by some other titles from time to time: "The Kook Book," "Of Mousse and Men," "The Jus and the Au Jus," "By Meat Possessed," "The Content of Our Winter Dish," and "The Lucrezia Borgia Cook Book."

Some of the 200 recipes include: Chinese spaghetti, aromatic cherry chicken, aphrodisiac pot roast, the care and serving of cheap caviar, and Anna Russell's Stew for Unexpected Guests.

Lost Alumni . . .

tions have, in every case, been considerably improved.

Goldfader relates the following story as an example of what can happen as a result of a search of this kind: In searching for a 1929 graduate, it was learned that he had spent about 25 years in England and returned to America a rich man. When located and informed of his impending class reunion, he presented a $25,000. Gift to his Alma Mater.

Universities are becoming aware that they can reap a harvest of unexpected dollars by bringing out-of-touch alumni back into the fold. These funds are realized both through the return of unpaid student loans and—even more substantially — through donations by the rediscovered alumni.

According to a survey conducted in 1961 by the Wall Street Journal, alumni account for 29% of the voluntary contributions to their colleges—making them the largest group of donors.

Girl Watcher's Guide

Girl watchers are honorable men

LESSON 6- Who may watch

Any male is eligible to become a girl watcher. There is no age limit, although most girl watchers are over ten and under one hundred and four. There are no height or weight requirements, although taller men enjoy an obvious advantage at crowded parties. The only strict requirement is one of character. The girl watcher is a man of honor. Since he can't possibly take notes, as the bird watcher does, we must rely on his word. Therefore, when an experienced girl watcher tells you he saw nine beautiful girls while on his way to class, he saw nine beautiful girls. And when he tells you his Pall Mall is the cigarette of the century, believe him. It is.

Judd To Address Republican Clubs

Dr. Walter Judd, Republican Congressman from Minnesota, will be the guest of the Four College Young Republican Clubs on Saturday, February 3, at 8 p.m. in the S.U. Ballroom. He will speak on "The Republican Position on International Affairs". The talk is open to the public.

WALTER JUDD

Dr. Judd was born in Rising City, Nebraska. He worked his way through the University of Nebraska and Medical School. He enlisted as a private in the United States Army during World War I and was discharged a Lieutenant in the Field Artillery.

In 1925, under the Foreign Mission Board of the Congregational Church, Judd went as a medical missionary to South China, where repeated malaria attacks during the six years he was there nearly killed him, and eventually forced his return to the United States.

Upon his return, he spent several months lecturing on the menace of Communism and Japanese militarism, which were both expanding in China. He received a fellowship in surgery in 1932 at the Mayo Clinic at Rochester, Minnesota; then in 1934 returned to North China, where for four years he superintendent a 125 bed hospital. He and his staff brought the hospital through a Communist revolution and the Japanese invasion, and at the same time improved its work from 33 to 83 percent self-supporting.

When Japan's armies moved into his area he was under their control for five months and decided it was imperative that the United States stop building up the Japanese war machine. He came home in 1938 to carry that message to more than 1400 audiences in 46 states in two years. After Pearl Harbor, many individuals and groups representing all segments of the community urged Dr. Judd to become a candidate for Congress from Min-

Peace Demonstrators Will Rally At Capital

On February 16 and 17, thousands of students will converge upon the nation's capital to take part in a mass demonstration for peace. The demonstration will include picketing, conferences with legislators and embassy officials, and a rally at which such men as Dr. Leo Szilard will speak.

This demonstration is sponsored by the Turn Toward Peace movement. Turn Toward Peace is a united effort by labor, church, and other groups in a nation-wide coordinated search for alternatives to our present foreign policy. Many affiliated groups will cooperate such as The National Student Committee for a Sane Nuclear Policy, the National Student Peace Union, Students for a Democratic Society, a committee of Boston area groups, and the Fellowship Of Reconciliation's youth section.

The coordinating organization for this area will be the Synthesis organization.

The initiatives of the demonstration are as follows:

1. We urge the government of the United States to announce that it will not resume atmospheric testing of nuclear weapons, and that it will invite the U.N. to establish within our territory a test-monitoring system to prove to the world our good faith and as a precedent toward a universal, controlled, and inspected test ban agreement. Then, having taken this step, the United States should call upon the Soviet Union, Great Britain, and France to follow our example and to permit the U.N. to set up such test monitoring systems within their national borders.

2. We urge the government not to provide nuclear weapons to those powers not presently in possession of them and to seek United Nations inspection of nuclear reactors in those nations which do not yet have nuclear weapons, to insure that such

by JOE BRADLEY '64

A legislative study commission on UMass fiscal autonomy headed by Senator Maurice A. Donahue (D) of Holyoke has urged that greater freedom be allowed for UMass to manage its own fiscal affairs, according to the Christian Science Monitor of Wednesday, Jan. 24.

Calls For Control

The commission called for increased control by the trustees over hiring, salary, and tenure of professional employees and authority to fill temporary positions in the non-professional field without prior approval as long as the trustees remain within the established quotas and titles of the appropriations act.

The trustees would also be permitted to transfer funds from one account to another as long as the transfers were reported to the control agencies in the Commission on Administration and Finance.

The Monitor described the latter move as "a key proposal" since the trustees have stated that present restrictions on fund transfer hamper University operations. However, there would be periodic audits by either the state auditor or certified public accountants.

The commission also said that the legislature would continue to set policies for the University.

Lederle Praises Commission

President John W. Lederle praised the commission and the report saying: "The results reported Tuesday (Jan. 23) have far-reaching significance for the progress of undergraduate and graduate education at the university, for the growth of outstanding scientific and scholarly research, and for the expansion of the general services along a broad front to all the people of Massachusetts."

In a lead editorial titled "Unfetter the University" The Boston Globe boosted UMass attempts to gain fiscal autonomy when the Boston paper cited the recommendations by the legislative study commission which has been working on the fiscal autonomy question.

The Globe said: "The American tradition in business and military affairs is to give wide latitude on the spot. That arangement has been found to work best with state universities elsewhere."

The Globe pointed out that the University must fill the gap left by the private colleges in the state which are taking fewer Massachusetts residents as students. ". . . only a fifth of Harvard's (students) are now from Massachusetts, for example, compared with more than a third eight years ago.", the Globe said.

The Globe noted that "Most other state universities in New England have fiscal autonomy, all more than the University of Massachusetts."

A full report, including profiles of the commission members and excerpts from the commission's study will be reported in Monday's Collegian.

Carni Establishes Scholarship Fund

by AUDREY RAYNER '63

The 1962 Winter Carnival, "With a Continental Flair," will be dedicated to the foreign students at UMass. The goal of the weekend, in addition to enjoyment, will be to establish a scholarship fund for a needy foreign student.

The fund will be set up by the sale of Winter Carnival souvenirs in the form of scenic posters during the entire weekend.

The exchange students on campus will build a Scholarship Wishing Well snow sculpture to raise additional money for the fund.

The International Fashion Show will feature styles from many nations as well as models from different countries.

Ticket Announcements

Tickets for all Winter Carni events will be on sale at the Student Union Ticket Window weekdays from 9-12 mornings and 1-5 afternoons, starting on Monday, February 5.

The Winter Carni Ball on Friday, the sixteenth, featuring Richard Maltby and his orchestra, will cost $4.00 per couple; the International Fashion Show, on Saturday, $.50 per person; and the Concert, with the Highwaymen, on Sunday, February 18, $1.50 per person.

Scholarship Applications Ready Now

David P. Lawrence, Assistant Director of Placement and Financial Aid, has announced that the Upperclass Scholarship Applications are now available for scholarship aid for 1962-63.

The scholarship awards are given on the basis of "need" and "scholarship". The present scholastic requirement for all students applying is a 2.5 cumulative average.

All applications must be completed and filed with the Placement and Financial Service in Machmer by March 15. Successful appliants will be notified around May 1.

Lawrence pointed out that many students lose opportunities for scholarship aid by failure to fill out the forms and return them by the deadline.

Students interested in the scholarship program are encouraged to visit the Placement and Financial Service office for further information.

Beyond The Call Of Duty

The operation of most of the more important campus organizations is somewhat taken for granted. Students expect the Collegian to publish, WMUA to broadcast, and the senate to convene regularly and efficiently throughout the year according to schedule. When one of these organizations fails to live up to expectations, most students are quick to complain, and the "Letters" box in the Collegian office swells up. But when any of these groups performs an outstanding service for the University, the service seems to be overlooked and recognition is hard to find.

Such a service was recently performed by the staff of WMUA, the University's student-operated radio station, in the form of 24-hour-a-day continuous broadcasting of classical music during the final exam period. Here is a time when the Collegian does not publish, the Senate does not convene, and WMUA is not expected to broadcast. Yet, despite the fact that operation of the station would certainly hinder their own efforts to study, the personnel of WMUA chose not only to go on with their regular chores, but to operate continuously from the beginning to the end of the exam period.

This effort to sacrifice their own time for the benefit of the rest of the campus is undoubtedly service "above and beyond the call of duty." The staff of WMUA deserves the manifest thanks of the entire campus.

A Thought As Rushing Begins

(Reprinted from the Univ. of Cincinnati NEWS RECORD)

Though the Greek world on campus preaches brotherhood to the skies, some fraternities and sororities practice overt discrimination in restricting their membership according to race or creed. No one can have quarrel with an independent group that would want to restrict its membership on whatever criteria it sees fit. However, when sanctioned by an institution such as this University, that is supposed to represent the best interests of the public, a group should no longer be permitted to practice prejudicial discrimination.

It is a blight to the University community that students should be denied admission to an officially recognized group because of their race or religion. This is contrary to all standards the University supposedly stands for.

Action against such restrictive practices have been taken on other campuses not only by college administrations, but also by the Greeks themselves. The latter is the more desirable method for it indicates that fraternities and sororities have taken their own initiative to terminate these antiquated practices.

This does not mean that every organization should take into its membership anyone that should happen to walk in the door! It does mean, though, that membership should be based on individual characteristics rather than race or creed.

In this land of freedom and opportunity, everyone is supposed to be guaranteed the right to be judged and heard before a sentence is passed. Restrictive clauses pass a negative judgment before the individual is seen or even born. Now when are the Greeks going to realize that it is no longer fashionable and never was right to practice this sort of restriction? It cannot go on forever, for if these organizations do not take the initiative there will be pressure on legislative fronts, as in Minnesota, or pressure directly from the administration, as at Michigan State and many other schools.

It has been said that the Greeks pay homage to tradition much more than most other groups. There comes a time, however, when tradition must be scrapped and in this instance it is essential to consider moral and ethical principles over tradition.

So far the Greeks have hidden behind their walls while the rumblings of freedom and individual rights are building up outside. But if they do not wake up before it is too late and tear down that wall themselves, then someone else will do it for them.

The Washington Demonstration

The Washington demonstration of the TURN TOWARD PEACE movement should be supported by students and faculty alike. We hasten to add that this support need not entail complete agreement with the initiatives of the movement. Indeed, local organizations throughout the country have drafted their own statements of initiatives.

POSSIBLE OBJECTIONS

Perhaps it would be best to discuss the possible disagreements which might develop over the statement of purpose. Initiative one, dealing with atmopheric nuclear testing is at the same time the most important and the most controversial of the statements. Many say that the Soviets have benefitted grealy from the past tests and that the United States must resume atmospheric testing to maintain a "balance of power."

If the concensus of prevailing scientific opinion is correct, this argument is not valid. It is openly admitted that the United States has a stockpile large enough to completely obliterate the Soviet Union. Thus, it would seem foolish to further improve this capability since this would constitude the situation of "overkill." Suffice it to say that one bullet through the heart is quite as effective as two!

Furthermore, it has been publically stated that the United States continues to hold superiority in nuclear weapons development and that further tests could only stimulate the Soviets themselves to resume long range series of atmospheric tests in order to maintain a rough equilibrium.

Of course there are always those who state that we must maintain a superiority of nuclear power. This is a highly dangerous position to espouse because it leads to a situation wherein a power equilibrium is discarded to the short range course of a nuclear weapons spiral and the possible long range course of nuclear conflict. It could of course be argued that the Soviets desire to establish a superiority in nuclear development, as manifested in their latest series of atmospheric tests. To the careful observer, however, this does not appear to be the case. The Soviet atmospheric tests should be seen as an attempt to catch up rather than to surpass. If we accept this interpretation, we can understand the political motives behind Soviet testing.

CONCERN OVER WEST BERLIN

Initiative two should be the least controversial of the statements. However, from the Soviet point of view it carries primary importance. The principle concern here is that West Gemany may obtain nuclear capability through the North Atlantic Treaty Organization. Indeed, if West Germany should obtain nuclear capability, the Soviet Union would probably never disarm.

THE PART OF THE U.N.

The chance that countries such as Israel or China will develop a nuclear force within the next four or five years is remote. Although there are at least 20 nuclear reactors in China now, the impasse to nuclear weapons development is economic, and not scientific. The secret of the bomb is no secret. It's a case of dollars and cents.

The last section of initiative two poses a problem:

How can the United Nations inspect a reactor in aa country which doesn't exist, nmely China? Furthermore, does the U.N. have the right to demand inspection, even within member nations?

A broad interpretation of the United Nations charter would validate this intervention (inspection) by the organization. If this were not acceptable, an amendment to the charter could be considered.

Initiative three is clear cut and logical. The Turkish and Italian bases are of an offensive nature. Of course some would argue that the best defence is a good offence. In the context of nuclear conflict, however, this does not seem to be plausible. Furthermore it adds fuel to the fire of the preventive war theorists.

Initiative four has been proposed by many and is generally conceded to be the key to a lasting peace in Europe.

THE AID PLAN

Initiative five poses many dfficult problems. It would probably be difficult to get both the Soviet Union and the United States to establish a carte blache aid program to the United Nations. However, increased channeling of aid through the United Nations by the U.S.S.R. and the U.S. can only decrease Cold War tensions throughout the world. It would be unwise to be unduly sceptical of this latter proposal. It should not be compared with experiences in the Congo (where the U.S.S.R. withdrew its financial backing). The operation in the Congo was basically political and had no direct connection with poverty, hunger, or disease.

DOES NOT MEAN SURRENDER

It should be noticed that unilateral initiative is stressed in this movement. Neither political or military surrender is involved. It is rather a case of sending out intelligent and meaningful feelers. Neither the Soviet Union nor the West has any reason for desiring nuclear conflict. The impasse at Geneva was probably not pontical, but rather psychological. The primary ingredient in the present impasse is mutual fear and distrust.

Those who will be in Washington on the 16th and 17th will be acting to relieve this fear by pressing for a positive approach to the overall problem of the Cold War. It is unfortunate that the demonstration conflicts with the Winter Carnival. Thus, each student will have to make a decision as to the relative importance of the Carnival and the demonstration. Second thoughts do not seem to be necessary.

A Case Of Simian Justice

by PAUL THEROUX '63

There exists on this campus a unique fraternity with a semi-anthropoid mentality, an arsenal of guns, and (it would seem) license to harass every student on the campus. This fraternity is, of course, the Campus Police Force complete with truncheons, badges, monosyllabic vocabulary, maces, oxygen masks, and about five trite snide remarks which they use for all occasions. Their favorite is uttered with a half-witted headshake, a nasality peculiar to all policemen, and the studied insouciance of a Micky Spillane hero. We all know the phrase, don't we: "Look, buddy, I don't make the laws aroun' here—I jus' enforce them . . . Now, sharrup with all that cheap lip an' lessee yer ID card." Familiar, no?

After a little patient research on my own I find that, outside of the Civil Service exam, these protectors of life, liberty, freedom and fortune need no other credentials than two thumbs, a reasonably erect posture, and relative freedom from myopia. With the pent-up antagonisms which they were not able to unleash on their wives, their children, their druggist, their masseur, or their general factotem these now assume the role of maintaining peace and submission in a University where "peace" means apathy and vegetative lassitude and "submission" can only mean that academic foetal position which the non-thinking student takes to guard him against the pressure of higher education. So, taken in this context, the Police Force in any university is an organization which is not only completely valueless, but also serves as a severe detriment to any sort of constructive thinking, or exercise of basic academic freedoms. But let us assume that the police are necessary to some degree—say, in collaring rabid dogs and directing traffic at deer crossings, and other equally as important jobs. How are they serving their function at the University of Massachusetts?

It's a Known Fact

It's a known fact that many parking tickets are given out and few speeding tickets ever get out of the policeman's back pocket. What could possibly cause a situation such as this, I ask myself. Simple. The person speeding could easily be a faculty member (a voice which is sometime heard in the hierarchy of the University administration) and a parked car displays openly whether it is a faculty or a student vehicle. The student becomes victim merely because his voice is hard to hear and the speeder remains speeding and endangering lives while the Campus Policeman walks about his domain of authority, ticket in hand, pension in mind, and simian expression on face.

Students Beaten With Clichés

Also, the policemen on this campus have a long history of interrupting students who have to undergo a cross-examination, an ID check, and a mea culpa session merely to take a walk after 11 o'clock on the Campus. Students are repeatedly stopped and questioned and must submit to this intrusion if they want the solace they desired in the first place. If they refuse to show an ID they are hauled off and beaten to death with clichés and incomprehensible explanations which are more insufferable than a clean, straightforward pistol-whipping.

Antagonism, That's the Word

Is it necessary to search rooms, to practice rudeness with a complete lack of respect for student rights? Antagonism, that's the word. They are antagonised out of the fear that the student is actually trying to antagonise them. They always act as if you had just touched them on an open sore, or as if you mean to touch them on an open sore. They look for the sarcasm in your tone and then are never apologetic when wrong. The simple fact is that the student has rights which he should be able to exercise; the policeman is a fixture not a flagellator; his job is to endure—not dispell—public demonstrations and inconvenience of an academic nature. If the policemen on this campus want to make a bigtime harassment (like on television), let them look into their own failings, their own injustices, their own egregious misdemeanors.

World Council Of Churchs Discussed At C.A. Meeting

At a special meeting of the Christian Association in Skinner Auditorium last night, Dr. Roger Hazelton, Dean of the Oberlin School of Theology and a member of the delegation of the United Church of Christ spoke on the topic "The World Council of Churches at New Delhi: An Inside View."

Concerning Hazelton's topic, Kyle Haselden has said the World Council of Churches is an organization vaster in its geographical, ethnical and racial variety than the government of any nation. As a world organization it is second only to the United Nations and, perhaps, the Vatican in the number of nations and the multiplicity of peoples from which it draws its delegates."

Significance of Assembly

The third General Assembly was especially significant because:

1. it was the first meeting in Asia; in a non-Christian culture,

2. it received 28 new member churches from Africa, Asia, the Pacific, and South America; the biggest group of which was the Russian Orthodox Church,

3. there were five official observers from the Roman Catholic Church,

4. for the first time the Eastern Orthodox Churches, including representatives from the Russian Church, participated in discussion and decisions at every level without issuing seperate statements of their positions besides those adopted by the World Council of Churches.

Asia Takes Lead

Mr. J. Erwin Miller, a layman who is president of the National Council of Churches in the United States, noted that the testing of the church may be moved west from America and east from Europe to Asia. "The leadership of the church might very well come from Asia rather than Europe and America. They have a tremendous preoccupation with Christian Unity means to the Twentieth century and we may wind up adopting it."

Dean Hazelton has been active in the movement for many years and was formerly Abbot Professor of Theology at Andover Newton Theological School. He is the author of several books, among them Proving the Existence of God, and the latest, Accents on Contemporary Theology.

Insurance Men Say Women Better Drivers Than Men

Nobody knows whether men are better drivers than women or vice versa.

But insurance underwriters do know that women drivers are better automobile insurance risks than men.

If this sounds like a paradox, here's the reason.

During 1960, for example, 41,000 men and 6,000 women drivers were involved in fatal accidents; and 15,000,000 men and 3,500,000 women drivers were involved in all kinds of automobile accidents —fatal, non-fatal and property damage, acording to the National Safety Council.

In that year, studies show, there were 61,000,000 registered men drivers and 26,000,000 registered women drivers. On the basis of these figures here's how the sexes shape up with respect to accident involvment; 67 of every 100,000 male drivers were involved in fatal accidents, as against 23 of every 100,000 female drivers; and 246 of every 1,000 male drivers were involved in accidents of all kinds, as against only 135 out of every 1,000 women drivers.

These figures indicate that a woman is much less likely to be involved in an accident than a male driver and, therefore, women drivers are regarded as better automobile insurance risks than men drivers.

But are women really better drivers than men?

The National Bureau of Casualty Underwriters points out that a considerable part of the differences in accident involvment between the sexes is undoubtedly due to the fact that men drivers average more miles than women drivers. The Bureau further points out that almost all commercial vehicles are driven by men and that even the family passenger car is more frequently driven on long trips by men than women.

Sargent Shriver, Director of the Peace Corps, announced plans for projects in eight new countries and invited qualified volunteers to apply for their choice of projects.

Requests for volunteers had been received from the Ivory Coast, Ethiopia, Somali, Togo, Tunisia, Honduras, Jamaica and North Borneo.

"There are many men and women who would like to serve in a particular area or fill a specific project need," Shriver said.

"These eight new countries will enable them to volunteer for the kind of job they know they can do. More new projects providing many more opportunities for service will be announced soon.

"We are now in a position to begin recruiting for participlar skills. Candidates will be able to apply for the project of their choice."

Career Cues:

"Whatever your major, make sure to include a course in 'people'!"

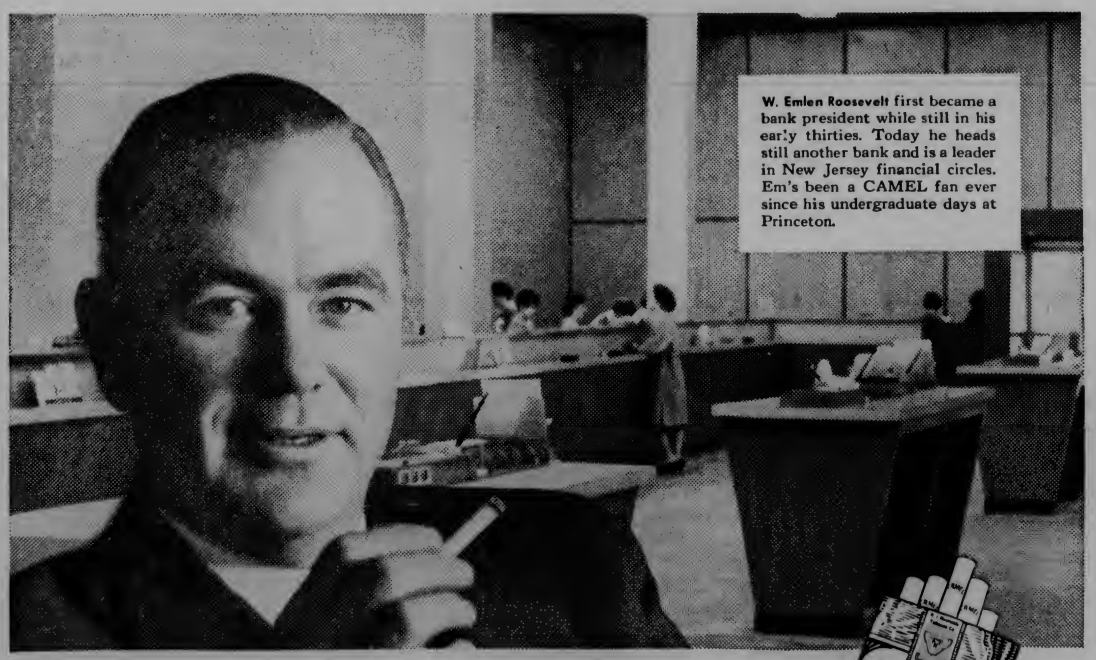
W. Emlen Roosevelt, President
National State Bank, Elizabeth, N.J.

"If my college adviser had prophesied that studying psychology would some day help promote my career in banking, I'd have scoffed. Yet that is exactly what has happened. And when I think about it now the reason seems obvious. The facts and figures of banking, or of any other field, are mechanical devices. They take on real meaning only when related to people.

"Good psychology is also the basis of all teamwork. And, since most of today's business and scientific problems are too complicated for 'one man' solutions, teamwork is essential. If you want to be a valuable team player, and a likely candidate for captain, be the person who understands people. Learn what it takes for people to work together in harmony. Learn how to win trust and confidence. Learn basic human psychology.

"Bear this in mind, too. World tension, community tension, business tension, even family tension are the facts of everyday life. The more you know of human behavior, the better prepared you will be to deal with these problems.

"So, if you have the chance, take a course devoted to 'people.' Your class adviser can probably help you fit a psychology elective into your schedule. I don't think you'll regret it... I know I didn't."



W. Emlen Roosevelt first became a bank president while still in his early thirties. Today he heads still another bank and is a leader in New Jersey financial circles. Em's been a CAMEL fan ever since his undergraduate days at Princeton.

"WHERE EVERYONE MEETS UNDER THE CLOCK"

Redmen Upset St. Peter's, 94-75 In Madison Debut

Mike Mole returned to the Redmen basketball scene last night and his presence enabled the UMass hoopsters to pull off an impressive 94-75 upset victory over St. Peter's of New Jersey.

Mike made the team's debut at Madison Square Garden a proud one, as he scored 15 points and helped the squad to overcome one of the greatest of its nemeses—the full court press. Up until last night the press had always proven to be the downfall of the Redmen, but Mole showed the team how to get around it, and while the Peacocks were vainly trying to overcome Coach Zunic's Chinese defense the Redmen pulled ahead at the beginning, never to be threatened seriously during the entire game.

Although St. Peter's closed the gap to nine points early in the second half, that was the best they could do. UMass at one time sported a 32 point lead (86-54), but saw the margin diminish somewhat when Zunic swept the bench.

It was one of the few games this year in which everyone had a chance to play, and it was the only contest thus far in which the starting five all scored in double figures.

Roger Twitchell led the Redmen with 20 points, with Mole, Kirk Leslie and Don Black hitting for 15 and Pete Bernard right behind with 14. The entire team played excellent defensive as well as offensive ball. Don Black picked a good time to come up with one of his finest performances of the season, as his height and shooting paved the way for the Redmen's early lead.

The UMass crew has a tough stint ahead, with 5 straight conference games in the next 10 days, beginning with defending champion Rhode Island at the Cage tomorrow night. This series will tell the story about Massachusetts' chances in the Conference this year.

The Colorado School of Mines rifle team defeated the Stockbridge squad over the three-position course in a match fired by the postal route. Although Loren Valley and Brad Allen posted scores in the 270's for Stockbridge, the men from Golden, Colorado took the match by eight points.

13 Lettermen Lead Runners

Coach Bill Footrick is looking to 13 lettermen plus some outstanding sophomores to provide the University of Massachusetts indoor track team with a successful season.

The Redmen, strong in all but three of the 13 indoor events, open their season February 14 at Connecticut.

The nucleus of this year's team will come from four juniors, Dick Ward, Loren Flagg, Dave Balch and Ken O'Brien. Ward is strong in the shot and hammer events, while Flagg broke or tied every school spring record last year. Balch holds the UMass outdoor mile mark and is also strong in the two-mile event.

Other key performers will be sprinters Bob Avery, John Harrington, Jim Reilly, and Ron Young; milers Dick Blomstrom and co-captain Joe LaMarre; high jumpers Joe Cassidy and Al Garsys; and weightman and co-captain Ernie Karshick.

COACH AND CAPTAIN
Coach Matt Zunic and Captain Kirk Leslie will be ready to lead the UMass basketball squad into action against Rhode Island.

UMass Fencing Club Foils Jeff Troop 8-6

Fencing in competition for the first time just before the recent vacation, the members of the UMass Fencing Club, coached by Steve Metz, a former member of the Cornell fencing team and a graduate student at the University, defeated the Amherst fencers 8 bouts to 6 in an informal competition at the Amherst Gymnasium.

Representing the University were Gene Murano, the club's president, Bob Prescott, Dick Koss, Tom Tyrer, Barbara Oliver, Evelyn Aliferie and members of the University faculty, Austin Platt and Joseph Hsu.

The club was newly formed at the beginning of this year, and the vast majority of the members have had no previous experience with fencing.

The competition was restricted to the weapon of foil since neither Amherst nor the University has had experience with the other two weapons of fencing, the sabre and epée. Especially outstanding were lefthander Bob Prescott and Joseph Hsu, each of whom won both of their bouts. Evelyn Aliferis, fencing under the handicap of men's rules, handily won her second bout 2-5, the lowest number of touches determining the victor.

The University Fencing club hopes to develop the sport on campus and progress toward intercollegiate competition.

UM Gridder Is Awarded Assistantship

Roger Benvenuti, a top student athlete at the University of Massachusetts for the past three years has been awarded a two year research assistantship in wood technology at North Carolina State University starting this semester.

One of the Redmen leading ground gainers and scorers on the football squad for two years, Benvenuti was a three sport standout at Adams High School and as a senior was selected to the All American High School Team in football.

A wood technology major in forestry while at the University, Roger completed his requirements for his bachelor of science degree in January.

Redmen Face League Leading Rams Saturday

League-leading Rhode Island comes to Amherst Saturday night to open a crucial Conference series with the Redmen. On Tuesday UMass will travel to Kingston for the return match. These two games will have an important bearing on the eventual Conference champion. Rhode Island stands at 4-0 in league play, while UMass is second with a 2-1 mark. The Little Redmen will meet the Western Mass. Bus Lines club in Saturday's prelim.

The undermanned Redmen were handed a 77-47 defeat at Toledo University last Saturday and now sport an overall record of 5-7. Leading 16-15 with nine minutes remaining in the first half, UMass fell victim to a tough, full-court Toledo press. However, Coach Matt Zunic hopes his backcourt will regain stability with the return of veteran Mike Mole and sophomore Bob Johnson. Both are quick, good ball handlers.

Mole scored 292 points as a soph, and added 330 last year. Johnson was the second leading frosh scorer last winter. Mole will move into the starting lineup, replacing 6'3" soph Dick Conlin who dropped out of school due to academic ineligibility. Conlin, a starter throughout the first half of the season, scored 83 points throughout the first half of the season, scored 83 points in the nine games and led the team in assists. The rest of the starting lineup will probably contain soph Rodger Twitchell, and captain Kirk Leslie at forwards. Don Black will man the center spot, while Pete Bernard and Mike Mole fill in the backcourt.

Rhody's Lee Tops YanCon Scoring Race

Charlie Lee, 6'3" junior from the University of Rhode Island, is the pacesetter in the Yankee Conference scoring race with an average of 21 points per game. Benny Becton of Vermont has scored the most points with 111 points in six games while Lee has 84 in four games of the undefeated defending champions.

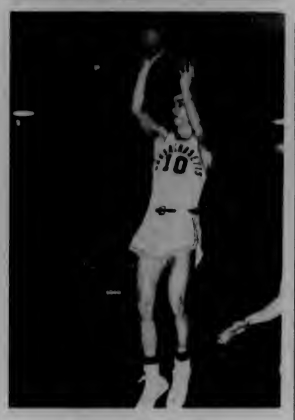
Tom "Skip" Chappelle of Maine, who has been handicapped by a severe ankle injury, is the runner-up to Lee in the scoring averages with 18.5 points per game. Chappelle has scored 59 points in three contests, including 23 for 23 from the foul line. Last year, Chappelle, one of the leading foul shooters in the country, had 85 for 92 from the free throw stripe and, combined with his perfect shooting this year, has a fantastic .939 percentage for two years.

Lee will be looking to up his percentage when the Rams travel to meet the Redmen at the Cage on Saturday night.

SPORTSENSE

by BEN GORDON '62, Sports Editor

The ancient perennial problem of losing athletes through bad grades and various etcetera has hit the UMass campus with quite a bang this winter, many of the squads having been hurt in key positions. Coach Vic Fusia's varsity football team has lost the services of speedster Fred Lewis,



MOLE IS BACK

Sam Slick, Roger Deminico and Don Hagberg. Hagberg may be back in action by next fall, however. All of the little Redmen are still with us.

Hockey mentor Steve Kosakowski will be feeling the loss of Tom Taylor, the hustling center, and a couple of other men. Taylor, it seems, had to leave the team for a campus job.

Starter Dick Conlin and the tall center, Franz von Brodsky, were lost to Matt Zunic's hoop team, while Steve Bonds, the frosh sensation who has sparked the rookies throughout their winning season, didn't make it back.

Coach Zunic has regained the services of Mike Mole and Bob Johnson, however, and both men will help the team greatly. Mole, a top scorer and ball handler last year, should perform well with little Pete Bernard in his guard slot. Both are good outside shooters, and will be murder when hot. Bob Johnson was the second highest scorer for last year's freshman team.

Volatile Coach Zunic ran into a bit of a problem last week when he took ten men down to Toledo for a game. Mole and Johnson were among the crew and the pre-game news that they were both ineligible to play before this week was rather upsetting. Left with eight men, three of them centers, the Redmen lost by thirty points.

Senior letterman Bob Avery, a member of Coach Bill Footrick's Varsity track team had quite a workout during the past vacation. Bob, who will be running in the 440 and 880 indoor events this winter for UMass, placed fifth in the third annual 20 mile run held in New York. (Rumor has it that certain people at the Cage are thinking of introducing 20 mile runs into the track program!)

The sinister whirr of a movie projector in a dark room of the Cage caught my attention yesterday, and the barely visible forms of three men in silent scrutiny led me to think that the latest "Untouchables" film had been released. Much to my pleasure, however, it turned out that Coach Vic Fusia, Ted Schmidt and Fred Glatz were viewing films of high school grid contests. These movies are all work and no play for the coaches, and are only one facet of their extensive recruiting process. The remarks made during the films are indicative of the various matters the coaches are concerned with.

"How are his grades?" seemed to be a predominant question. High school marks, college board results and I.Q.'s are all-important matters to the UMass recruiters. Interviews with high school principals, coaches, and families of the athletes are all a part of the process of screening some 600 grid prospects. It appears to me, as it does to Coach Fusia and his staff, that this new look in UMass football will produce results in competition with recruiting coaches from such schools as Syracuse, Colgate and Holy Cross. A coach's job is to keep good athletes once he's got them believes Coach Fusia, and the forward-looking program in UMass athletics is geared to acquiring and holding superior men.

Saturday night at 8:15 will see the UMass varsity hoop team perform in a vital Yankee Conference contest against Rhode Island in the Cage. Look for a new twist in the play with Conlin gone and Mole back.

Town Board Votes On Campus Areas

The Amherst Planning Board held its "February" meeting Wednesday night in the town manager's office. The next meeting will be March 7.

Theodore S. Bacon, Jr., chairman, presided, and the board reviewed the public hearing held on Jan. 17 regarding a campus area and locations for light industry.

The board voted not to include the five houses on North Pleasant St. north of the UMass campus in the proposed campus zone. It was voted to endorse an article for action at the town meeting to be held on March 5 asking a zoning bylaw setting aside a campus área. The boundaries of that area would be west of Lincoln Ave., the north side of Fearing St., including the QTV fraternity, and the Mt. Pleasant Inn. The area on the east side of North Pleasant St. would be from the Wesley Methodist Church to Butterfield Ter. It was voted to endorse a zoning bylaw asking that sororities and frafraternities be taken out of the general residence area.

The committee voted to include in one article for the town meeting, two light industrial areas, one of 30 acres owned by W. D. Cowles, Inc., on Meadow St. and the other a tract of 50 acres owned by Albert Jacque on the south side of the East Hadley Rd.

Articles for action in the town meeting must be given to selectmen by this afternoon.

3. We urge the government to withdraw its missile bases in areas such as Turkey and Italy where their vulnerability to attack makes them useless except for the purpose of a first strike against the Soviet Union. Such initiative on our part should be followed by a request that the Soviet Union make similar withdrawals.

4. We urge the government to seek disengagement in Central Europe, both as a genuine resolution of the Berlin crisis, and as a basis for further negotiations towards disarmament.

5. We urge the government to commit itself fully to the struggle against poverty, hunger and disease throughout the world. This massive economic aid should be channeled through the United Nations both in order to take economic aid out of the context of the Cold War and also to strengthen the United Nations. Having taken this initiative we should then call upon the Soviet Union to join us in channeling its economic aid through the United Nations.

On the University of Massachusetts campus, planning is now in the advanced stages. Within the next few days, a rally will be held at which time students and faculty will be urged to attend the demonstration. Interested students should contact Elizabeth Schneck (Abigail Adams), Paul Theroux, or Michael Palter (Phi Sigma Delta or Collegian office.)

Carni Features 'Fun' Ski Contest

The UMass Ski Club will sponsor its second annual "Fun" race, featured by the Winter Carnival, on Saturday, February 17. The event, which is being repeated because of its success during last year's Carni, is open to the entire UMass Community.

The race will be held at the new Thunder Mountain Ski Area in Charlemont from 1 to 4 p.m.

The competitors will classify themselves into one of two categories, according to their judgment of their own skill. "Less than expert" skiers will ski on a course of intermediate terrain; a second, more challenging course will be offered to the "experts".

Drastic Senate Action Sets Up Arts Council

For the first time in its history, the Student Senate has abdicated its right of itemized control over $30,000 of student tax money.

At its last meeting on Wednesday, Jan. 10, 1962, the Student Senate enacted the Fine Arts Council Constitution. Before the constitution could even be considered, the Senate had to muster a two-thirds vote to rescind part of S35 of last year's Senate. S35 was the original act that called for the establishment of the Council.

The constitution that was presented to the Senate conflicted with statement three of S35; namely that "the Student Senate shall have the authority to allocate the total sum each year to be used by the Fine Arts Council and shall have the right at any time to prohibit the use of funds for any reasons." Since the Senate can not consider a motion on the floor that conflicts with an act already passed by the Senate, the constitution could not be brought on the Senate floor without annulment of at least part of statement three of S35. Senator Gamma, Chairman of Activities Committee, proposed to rescind the latter part of the statement. Upon a two-thirds vote, Senator Gamma's motion was passed and statement three of S35 was amended.

The constitution conflicts with the original statement of S35 in that it allows the Council to override the Senate in any particular area of disagreement. According to the constitution, if the Senate protests some action passed by the Council, the Senate by a majority vote can notify the Council to continue its action, it must reconsider the same motions and pass it by a two-thirds vote. Thus the Council can override the Senate, and this was never meant to be according to the original S35.

By rescinding part of statement three of S35, the Senate established a Council that is much more powerful than originally proposed. As Senator Andy D'Avanzo stated, "That is not the same Fine Arts Council that was proposed by last year's Senate. It is something much better. If we want a Council that will do a good job, we must be able to place our faith and confidence in the members of the Council and give them the authority to be responsible to themselves. Although the Senate is losing the right of itemized control over tax money, it is not abdicating its right of allocation. The Senate will now safeguard the student money on a yearly basis instead of an itemized basis."

The Student Senate does not intend this action to be construed as any forfeiting of its final responsibility to represent the student's interest and zealously to safeguard the use of the student funds.

Donahue Foresees Opposition For UMass Fiscal Autonomy

by JOE BRADLEY '64

The head of the special legislative commission studying UMass autonomy, Senator Maurice A. Donahue (D) of Holyoke, told the Collegian in a telephone interview yesterday that he expected the commission's recommendations would meet with "strenuous opposition" in the legislature.

Opposition Predicted

Although the commission was unanimously in favor of the recommendations, Donahue said: "I would think that there would be lengthy debate and strenuous opposition to the recommendations." Donahue added, "The bulk of the opposition will come from the Ways and Means Committee."

The commission called for the control of funds by the University Board of Trustees which would allow transfer of funds from one department to another to meet unexpected requirements, thus bypassing special legislative action.

The recommendations, which were supported by newspapers throughout the Commonwealth, also included trustee control over University personnel, salary, and temporary appointments.

Dean of Students, William F. Field, expressed the feelings of the administration in one word: "Overjoyed! Let's face it. It looks to us like a vote of confidence for us to work effectively with the students," Field said.

More Time For Students

Field noted that the recommendations would allow the administration to spend more time with students on campus by allowing the administration to cope with immediate campus problems as they arise.

Field gave us an example—a case where funds might be moved from one department to another to meet the demands of an unexpected number of students registering in a department.

Under the present system such an unforeseen situation could only be handled with difficulty since the University budget is approved a year in advance by the legislature.

"It is wonderful that the committee of legislators could agree on one opinion when, obviously, there were many opinions," Field said in praise of the commission members.

Student Senate President Arthur "Tex" Tacelli stated:

"The Commission's message is worthy of the widest attention of the Legislature and the citizens of the Commonwealth. I admire their foresight and acute awareness of our needs. Their recommendations are sure to be met with the unmixed and unanimous approbation of the State Legislators.

"As President of the Student Senate I personally feel our University has the earmarks of national prominence and greatness. The successful passage of the autonomy bill will be of immense assistance to our future and increasingly rapid progress of excellence in education.

"The report is a splendid augury of the University's future and of the future of education for students of Massachusetts."

APO Book Sale Proves Success

by DICK HAYNES '64

Jack Kooyoomjian, chairman of the Alpha Phi Omega Book Exchange Committee, has labeled the Book Exchange "a success". Statistics for the first three days of operation indicate that about 650 books have been received and about 300 books sold for approximately $800.

The exchange is open now through Monday, Feb. 12, in the Barnstable Room of the SU. Hours of the exchange are: weekdays, 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. and 6 p.m. to 8 p.m.; Saturday, 10 a.m. to 4 p.m.; and Monday, Feb. 12, 10 a.m. to 4 p.m.

Operating Procedure Explained

To sell a book, a student brings it to the exchange and fills out a Master Card upon which the seller names his own price for which the book is to be sold.

The serial numbers of sold books are posted outside the exchange. To claim payment for a sold book, a student must present his Seller's Receipt and UMass ID. Payments are made in the RSO Office from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m. on weekdays.

The exchange is a non-profit service project of Kappa Omicron Chapter of Alpha Phi Omega.

Who's Who Announcement

Their Report — A Call For Greatness At UM

On January 24, a special recess commission headed by Senator Maurice A. Donahue of Holyoke recommended that the University be given greater flexibility in the management of its fiscal operations. If the recommendations become law, the University's trustees will have certain powers and responsibilities now given to agencies in the State House. The Donahue Commission, in backing the University's request for greater authority over its own affairs, pointed out that the University would still be fully accountable to the taxpayers and their elected representatives, but would have the necessary freedom to recruit faculty effectively, to transfer funds between accounts whenever this is necessary, and to have greater control over purchasing so as to prevent delay and inefficiency in carrying out the instructional and research program.

The Collegian, in this issue, wishes to pay tribute to the distinguished members of the Commission whose work has resulted in what President Lederle has called "a great and historic step forward for public higher education in Massachusetts."

Editorial Comments On Donahue Report

"The American tradition in business and military affairs is to give wide latitude to the command on the spot. That arrangement has been found to work best with state universities elsewhere . . . That the people of this commonwealth want college opportunity for their youngsters the lawmakers already know. That the problem is especially difficult here is becoming increasingly evident. This is the year to free UMass—give it a chance to catch up. Massachusetts can afford nothing but the best." Boston Globe

"The university must be free to prosper and expand if it is to meet the higher education needs of more and more thousands of Massachusetts high school graduates . . . A recess commission which has studied the problem has unanimously reported to the General Court that the University trustees should be trusted with fiscal autonomy. Whatever the particulars of the legislation needed to effect this reform, the goal itself should be recognized as timely, necessary . and desirable."

—Springfield Daily News

"The commission would allow the university trustees full autonomy in spending the over-all appropriation granted the university with the approval of the governor and the legislature . . . The legislature would give up none of its basic prerogatives. It would still vote on the university's total budget. The trustees would still be answerable to the people; but they wouldn't have to run to Boston every time the university needed to buy a microscope or hire a professor . . . (The Commission's) proposal should become law."

—Worcester Telegram

"Senator Maurice A. Donahue and his special legislative commission deserve the heartfelt gratitude of the commonwealth for their report recommending fiscal autonomy for the University of Massachusetts. In turn they will receive the satisfaction in knowing that their action has given the University an opportunity to become among the best in the nation, thus providing our youth with the outstanding educational opportunities they deserve." —Holyoke Transcript

"The special recess commission headed by Senate Majority Leader Maurice A. Donahue, D-Holyoke, has done an excellent job in its study and recommendations for greater autonomy for the trustees of the University of Massachusetts. The recommendations should be adopted for the good of the university and of the youth of the state for whose service the universiy exists."

Mass. Puck Team Wins Fifth By Defeating A.I.C. Squad, 7-6

by STEVE HEWEY '63

The University of Massachusetts hockey team, thanks to the four-goal performance of left-winger Charlie Glew, edged AIC's ice sextet, 7-6, at the AIC Coliseum last Thursday evening. But their fifth win of the season was no easy thing to come by.

EARLY REDMEN LEAD

The Redmen pulled out in front at 1:47 of the opening period with a lamplighter off the stick of Charlie Donovan with Ed Forbush getting credit for the assist. Charlie Glew's first goal of the evening put the Steve Kosakowski-coached Redmen out in front, 2-0, the assists going to Bob Glew and co-captain Jim Ellingwood. A few seconds before the first period ended, Jim Cooley notched AIC's first score of the game.

Charlie Glew tallied his second goal at 1:46 of the second period to propel Massachusetts to a 3-1 command, the assists again going to Bob Glew and Ellingwood. AIC's Bateman cut the lead to 3-2 with a score at 7:41 but defenseman Jerry Clinton increased the UMass margin to make it 4-2. The stubborn Aces, indicating they were far from through, made it 4-3 on an Egan goal at 14:37. Thanks to another Charlie Glew score, the Redmen began the third period with a 5-3 edge.

HECTIC FINALE

The action-packed third period, marked by a conglomeration of fighting, roughing, misconduct, and tripping penalties, told the whole story of the game. UMass Senior defenseman Ed Forbush greeted the AIC goalie with goal number six for the Redmen and their 6-3 lead looked quite comfortable—but only for a few seconds.

A goal by Gerry Driscoll at 2:59 of the third began the AIC rally. Bob Bateman and Leon Tarsa added more fuel to the fire by grabbing 2 more quick goals to tie the contest at 6 all at 8:57.

For a while it appeared as if the game would end in a deadlock but Charlie Glew had ideas to the contrary. The game-winning play unfolded when Bobby Glew came in on the AIC goal tender only to have his shot kicked out. Brother Charlie grabbed the rebound and slapped another shot at the net but AIC's Pickering also blocked this one. Charlie got his own rebound and shot again, this time right past the fallen goalie to provide the margin of victory for Massachusetts.

SKATING AROUND

The big defensive star for the Redmen was goalie Frank Cesario who made 37 stops against the Aces . . . AIC outshot the UMass sextet in every period . . . The Redmen have a 5-7 record for the season and have a chance to improve upon it next Wednesday evening when they take on the Huskies of UConn in a home contest at the Orr Hockey Rink in Amherst. Face-off is at 7 p.m.

Trackmen Perform Well In Boston Indoor Meet

by ABE SHEINKER '62

A small crew of UMass trackmen performed well in the annual Boston Athletic Association indoor track meet at the Boston Garden Saturday night.

The varsity two-mile relay team of Bob Brouillet, Bob Avery, Dave Balch, and Ken O'Brien won their event, defeating Providence, Rensselaer, and Springfield. They set a school record of 8:06.2, beating the old mark of 8:08.8 set in 1956.

What surprised Coach Bill Footrick was that Avery, a replacement for injured Joe LaMarre, was the only runner in good condition, as the others did not have facilities for training during the vacation. But in the Knights of Columbus meet on January 13, when all had been training regularly, their time was a slower 8:09.6.

Ken O'Brien also ran in the individual collegiate half-mile, placing fourth while breaking the school record by 3 seconds in 1:57.0. In afternoon field events, Dick Ward just missed the varsity record in the 35-lb. weight throw with a toss of 51' 4½", which is his best throw in competition.

The track squad, which had great potential just a month ago, has been severely handicapped by the loss of some of its best men. Scholastic losses include top 190-foot javelin thrower Jim Ballou, ace quarter-miler Phil Danforth, who did 50.5 seconds as a freshman, and a 10-second sprinter Fred Lewis, who also had a 22' 9" broad jump to his credit.

Additional trackmen lost are Jim Wrynn, who decided to leave school. He had run a 1:59.9 half mile and a 4:28 mile in practice, distance runner Charlie Proctor left to manage the family's large dairy farm after the passing of his father.

On the positive side of the ledger are the high scholastic averages of the hard working distance men. The "brains" of the team are forestry major Tom Leavitt, 4.0; physical education major Ken O'Brien, 3.8; math major Ken Johnson, 3.6; sociology major Bob Pendleton, 3.0; and marketing major Bob Avery, 3.0.

VARSITY RIFLES

The UMass Varsity Rifle Team, sparked by team captain Ed Moses, was doubly successful in defeating Boston College and Holy Cross, but lacked the necessary support to defeat Northeastern. With this performance, UMass boosted its record in the New England Rifle League to three wins and five losses.

Draper, posting a 291, led Northeastern to their first place with a team total of 1406. Ed Moses led the Redmen to their second place total of 1365 by shooting a 280. He was followed by Jim Vermeiren (273), Frank Fluet (273), Mark Nataupsky (270), and Doug Wells (268).

VARSITY BASEBALL

A meeting for varsity baseball candidates will be held on Tuesday, February 6 at 6:00 p.m. in Room 10 of the Men's Physical Education Building.

...To Kingston

The UMass-URI game on Tuesday night is an all-important one, and for those who would rather see it than listen to the WMUA broadcast by Jimmy Trelease and Barry Brooks, here are directions to Kingston:

From Amherst, take Route 9 to Belchertown and then hit 181 to Palmer. At Palmer, get on Route 20 as far as Southbridge, where you'll pick up Route 131. From 131 take Route 44 to Route 102, and follow 102 for a few minutes until you hit Route 3 which will take you within striking distance of Kingston. Follow the signs after that.

It's about 120 miles, and in this weather, a three-hour drive.

MEN'S CHEERING

Tryouts for the men's cheering section will be held in the Men's cage on Tuesday, February 6 at 5:00 p.m. Freshmen and sophomores will be welcome.

Brilliant Redmen Hoop Effort Downs Rams, 77-69

UM Squad Now In Striking Range Of Conference Lead

by AL BERMAN '62

A charged up Redmen basketball squad out-hustled defending champion Rhode Island and swept to a 77-69 victory before a packed crowd at the Cage Saturday night.

The win puts UMass in good shape to grab the league lead from the Rams tomorrow night when the two teams tangle again at Kingston.

CLOSE ALL THE WAY

Except for the last few minutes of the game it was a see-saw battle, with each team alternately jumping ahead. The Redmen were up, 31-29, at half-time, but their pleasure didn't last long.

The Rams came back strong at the beginning of the second half to pull into a five-point lead and held it for several minutes.

Then Mole, Bernard and Twitchell took over. With the two guards engineering the plays Twitch dunked 16 points in the second frame—most of them during the crucial middle third of the period when the Redmen caught up to and passed the Rams, never to be caught again.

UMass opened the widest gap in the score thus far in the game when two successive hoops by Twitchell put them ahead, 52-46, at 10:40.

WHO'S GOT IT?

Redman ROGER TWITCHELL, who was perhaps the big Man for the UMass squad in the encounter with league-leading Rhode Island, scrambles for the ball in the crucial second half. This encounter ended in a jump ball.

MOLE, BERNARD EXCEL

Then the two little powerhouses, Mike Mole and Pete Bernard, took over to protect that lead. With dazzling ball-handling and deadly accuracy at the foul stripe the two brought the UMass victory safely home. Bernard shot 6-6 from the foul line, while Mole hit 7-7 in the second half and a sizzling 12-12 for the game.

Towards the end of the contest tempers began to flare as Rhody's Charlie Lee started near brawls with three different Redmen, but the game ended without serious incident.

Mike Mole's return seems to have transfused the team. Sparked by his never-ending hustle, the whole squad has responded with a new vigor and fight that carried them to upset victories over St. Peters and URI . . . Pete Bernard and Roger Twitchell came through with some vital clutch baskets in the second half that helped to turn the tide . . . The Redmen were foul-shooting during the second half as they never have before, hitting at an amazing .866 clip from the free stripe during that period. . . . That foul shooting proved to be an important factor in the victory since Rhody was fouling profusely at the beginning of the half, and the Redmen were able to take advantage of many one-and-one bonus shots.

Fouling was truly the Rams' downfall. Rhode Island sunk more field goals than UMass, but the Redmen compensated by snagging 31 points from the foul line to the Rams' 17. Thirty personals were called against them, and four of their five starters had four fouls charged to them before the second stanza was half over. URI Coach Ernie Caverly was forced to take out two of his key men, Dave Ricereto and Charlie Lee, during the time UMass was pulling ahead.

The UMass victory puts an even greater emphasis upon tomorrow night's return match at Kingston. With UMass now 3-1 in the Conference and Rhody at 4-1, the battle looms as the most important encounter of this basketball year . . . . But UMass' troubles won't be over after tomorrow. This weekend Maine comes in for a double-header Friday and Saturday, followed by a Redmen trip to Connecticut on Tuesday . . . . All in all it is certain that this week is the week in the Conference.

Frosh Edge Opponents In Final Second

Hustling basketball by the UMass freshman and a last second two-pointer by Charlie Kingston kave the rookies a 60-59 win over the Western Mass. Bus Club squad, a semi-pro team including ex-Redmen Doug Grutchfield and Don Tremblay.

With 2:48 remaining in the first half, two quick baskets by Jim Neary and a free throw by Kingston brought the score to 29-28, Western Mass., but two hoops by ex-Redman great Doug Grutchfield sandwiching a Neary layup made it 33-30 at the buzzer.

A hard-fought second half saw tense and steady playing on both sides, and the suspense mounted to a peak when, with seconds left, the semi-pros led by a single point. The roof fell in for the visitors when Kingston swished from about 20 feet out to give the Redmen the win.

After having been Director of Student Activities at UConn, he joined the staff at NYU. Through the Association of College Unions he set up the Professional Development Commission on M.A. curriculum for Union management, and the Howard Case Study Seminary.

He will be with Dr. William F. Field in a panel discussion on "Student Leadership on a College Campus." Dr. Field, as Dean of Students at UMass, has worked closely with student leaders, and seen them develop from the Freshman Orientation Program which he developed here.

At 7 p.m. Thursday evening, there will be a movie, "The Tender Trap" with Frank Sinatra and Debbie Reynolds. This is sponsored by the S.U. Movie Committee.

On Friday, Feb. 9, from 9-11 p.m., in S.U. Ballroom, the S.U. Dance Committee will direct the Student Union Birthday Cake Cutting Ceremony and an After-the-Game Birthday Twist Dance, with honored guests from the UMass and the University of Maine Basketball Teams and Coaches.

36 Seniors Named To "Who's Who"

Thirty-six UMass seniors have been elected to places in Who's Who Among Students in American Colleges and Universities, it was announced recently by Dean of Men Robert Hopkins. The distinction, one of the few national honors available to UMass students, is awarded on the bases of leadership, service, scholarship, and the responsibility with which the students carried out their extra-curricular duties.

Faculty Symposium Set To Discuss Arms Race

On Wednesday night, February 9 there will be a faculty symposium related to the general problem of the arms race and the February 16 and 17 demonstrations in Washington, D.C. The symposium will be held in Bowker Auditorium at 8 p.m. Among the speakers will be Professor Arnold Silver of the English Dept. at the University of Massachusetts and Professor Henry T. Yost of Amherst College.

The general purpose of this symposium will be to discuss pressing issues of disarmament and the cold war. Following short talks by each of the Professors, there will be a panel discussion at which time questions from the floor will be entertained.

The Washington drive has already received substantial backing from students at Amherst and Smith. Elizabeth Schneck, secretary of Synthesis, has stated that over twenty people have already contacted her for bus accommodations.

Following the symposium, students who are interested in attending the demonstration in the nation's capital will be asked to contact either a faculty member or a member of Synthesis. Michael Palter, chairman of the four colege group, has stressed the fact that membership in Synthesis is not necessary to take part in the demonstration.

Faculty Symposium To Discuss Nuclear Testing Issues Tonight

by ELIZABETH SCHNECK '62

While the Presidential decision on the resumption of atmospheric nuclear testing is still impending, the issues and effects created by nuclear testing will be debated tonight at a faculty symposium. A panel of five Amherst College and UMass professors will be moderated by I. Moyer Hunsberger, Dean of the UMass College of Arts and Sciences. The Faculty Symposium on a Turn Toward Peace will be held at 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium.

The main issues to be discussed by the panel are the advisability of resuming nuclear tests and the United States approach to disarmament. Also, the moral implications will be treated. The program is being sponsored by the UMass members of Synthesis, a four-college political organization which as a part of its purpose is promoting a policy toward nuclear disarmament.

Principle speakers on the panel include: Professor Henry T. Yost, from the biology department at Amherst College; and Professor John Fenton, Commonwealth Professor of Government at UMass.

Also speaking will be: John H. Foster, Asst. Professor of Agricultural Economics; Adam Parry, Amherst College Professor of Classics; and Arnold Silver, Professor of English.

Each member of the panel will speak for approximately ten minutes; discussion will follow with an opportunity for questions from the audience.

Professor Yost, who has fascinated the audiences of the area with his combination of wit and fact, is a distinguished geneticist and an expert on radioactivity. He will discuss the effects of radioactivity coming from the recent nuclear tests of the Soviet Union and what the implications would be on health should the U.S. also resume atmospheric testing. Professor Parry, who is currently working on a book on cities, will comment on the moral implications of testing and fallout shelters.

Professor Fenton will point out the relationships between public opinion and the Administration's policies, representing a political point of view on the issue. A discussion of prevalent slogans obstructing thought on these main issues will be the major concern of Professor Silver. The subject of the ecological effects of fallout is expected to be Professor Foster's topic.

The faculty symposium is part of a program being organized by Synthesis to stimulate concern for the issues of nuclear disarmament and related issues created by the atmosphere of the "cold war."

It is hoped that all persons interested in the problem of the

The University Chorale will perform Haydn's "Creation" on its concert tour this spring, announced Mr. Gerry Grady, advisor of the Chorale. During its tour of April 8, 9, and 10 the Chorale will present its program in a major concert hall in Boston as well as in high schools throughout eastern Massachusetts.

This past fall the FM Educational Radio Network broadcast an hour concert program by the University Chorale from Washington, D.C. to Maine. The Chorale's fall concert was also performed on campus and at Amherst Regional High School.

First semester, fifty-five students sang in the University Chorale, and will receive one credit for participation through the academic year. Chorale meets every Tuesday evening from 6:30 to 9:00.

As plans are in the making for the spring concert tour, those who would like to take part should see Dr. John King in Old Chapel as soon as possible. There is room available in all sections, especially in the tenor and bass sections.

Symposium At Smith To Be Held Feb. 16-18

Six international statesmen will speak at Smith College the weekend of February 16-18. The lectures and discussions will focus on "Independence in an Interdependent World," the theme of the Smith College Symposium on International Affairs.

The student-organized symposium has been financed by an anonymous private grant and will climax the year's student government Challenge program.

His Excellency, Mr. Jonathan Brewster Bingham, United States Minister to the United Nations and President of the Trusteeship Council, will deliver the keynote speech Friday evening in John M. Greene Hall, where all speeches will be given.

The Ambassador from Brazil to the United Nations, His Excellency, Mr. Alfonso Arino de Melo Franco, will speak Saturday morning on "Intervention for Independence," an issue upon which Brazil has opposed the United States.

His Excellency, Mr. Alex Quaison-Sackey, Ambassador from Ghana to the United Nations, will discuss "Economic Dependence and Political Independence" Saturday morning. This question is pertinent to the many emerging countries that have recently become independent and that are especially concerned with internal growth.

The topic "Does Neutralism Permit Greater Independence than Alignment?" will be discussed Saturday evening by a representative of Yugoslavia. Although formerly aligned, Yugoslavia is presently a neutralist leader.

His Excellency, Mr. Hohdan Lewandowski, Ambassador to the United Nations from Poland, the only Warsaw Pact country to receive United States aid, will speak Saturday evening on the topic "A Communist Country's Views of the Conditions for Independence."

His Excellency, M. Louis Dauge, Counselor of the French Embassy to the United Nations, will discuss "The United Nations —A Limitation Upon Independ-

Collegian Editorial Policy Statement

The Collegian, as the student newspaper of the University, has followed, and will continue to follow, a liberal editorial policy regarding material presented on the Collegian editorial page. That is, all material presented by staff writers, and all letters by faculty members and students will be printed in the Collegian at the discretion of the Editorial Editor.

The only determinants will be timeliness and space available at the time that copy is received. Obviously, copy presented for consideration must be in good taste; it must not be libelous, blasphemous, or obscene.

Those articles which do appear in the Collegian, and which are not necessarily the opinion of the members of the paper's Executive Board, will appear with the full name or initials of the author, including staff-written articles and letters. Only unsigned editorials may be construed as the opinion of the Collegian, in which case at least five of the seven members of the Executive Board have voted approval of the opinion manifested in the unsigned editorial.

This editorial policy has been adopted "To express student and faculty opinion about the news on the editorial page . . . . to clarify goals and values of the community," as stated in the Collegian Constitution from which the quote has been taken. The editors believe that this is the only way that the student newspaper can best serve the students as an outlet for student opinion.

Only in this way can the Collegian be, in fact, the voice of the University, and the purveyor of student and faculty opinion on issues of importance and relevance.

Synthesis Symposium

Tonight's Synthesis Faculty Symposium should be attended by all who are concerned with problems of the nuclear age. The Symposium will deal with the immediate problem of resumption of nuclear testing in the atmosphere and related considerations.

The Synthesis group has sponsored a number of lectures dealing with problems of the Cold War. This Symposium is important, we think, because of the current international situation. Indeed, the break in Geneva and the implications of a final and long range break in disarmament negotiations makes attendance at this meeting important.

There seems to be a growing realization by certain sections of the American people, notably University professors, that we must not isolate ourselves from the problems of the nuclear age.

This has been manifested in different ways:

On the one hand, a controversy revolves around and efficiency and desirability of fall-out shelters. The famous M.I.T. letter is an example of this.

On the other hand, a mass movement of peace is taking place among the college campuses of America, Europe, and The Soviet Union. The experience of the Peace Marchers in Leningrad points up student feeling within the Soviet Union.

Peace, however, is a familiar catch-word around which people gather for different reasons. However, it should be pointed out that the first step toward an intelligent approach to the problem is education. Peace is not merely something to be declared and then forgotten about. It is rather something for which one must strive while striving for an understanding of international realities.

To say that you desire peace is not enough. The greatest scoundrel in the world probably will say that he desires peace. The end perhaps is common, (or so they say) but the means are different. This is where education comes in.

However, one can never know the whole story. There comes a time when one must commit himself to a certain course of action. The students who will participate in the Washington Demonstration can not be said to possess complete knowledge of the implications of the present arms race and the intricacies of U.S. foreign policy. This is not to say, however, that they have not the right to express their opinions according to the degree of knowledge which they possess at present.

The Synthesis Symposium will be helpful in the crystalization of opinion and the formulation of an intelligent outlook.

by RAY WILSON '64

Today is February 7, 1962. Tomorrow is the anniversary of last year's controversial "2.0" motion. On February 8, 1961, Gail Osbaldeston read the "infamous thing" on the Senate floor. This was the motion that established the requirement of a minimum accumulative average of 2.0 for eligibility for office in any recognized student organization.

High marks are a good thing. The "2.0" motion is "for" high marks. Therefore, the "2.0" motion is a good thing.

This "sound" bit of logic was the main argument of the supporters of the bill . . . And in the end, it won out. Members of the opposition were denounced as narrow individuals who were looking out for there own selfish interests.

And what kind of "narrow" arguments did the opponents of the bill offer? First, they agreed with the proponents that the main goal of a student should be academic success . . . But they pointed out that the bill was not designed to keep students out of positions that might prevent their achieving academic success. It simply stated that students with less than a 2.0 accum could not hold office in an organization. A student with less than a 2.0 can not be president of the German Club, but he can spend forty hours a week working as a peon for the Collegian or Roister-Doisters.

Secondly, the opponents pointed out that many students had low marks, not because of a lack of ability, nor overindulgence in activities, but because of social or economic problems at home. In many of these cases, a responsible office in an organization provided an outlet for tensions arising from these problems. The "2.0" Bill would destroy this outlet.

Thirdly, having established the fact that the "2.0" Bill would not help individuals, they went on to prove that the bill was just as much of an asset to organizations as the NAACP is to the Ku Klux Klan. They insisted that the supporters of the bill face the fact that exclusion of students with less than a 2.0 would seriously restrict the source of leaders sorely needed by the organizations. No evidence was ever submitted to show that students with a high accum are necessarily more qualified for office than anyone else. They went on to point out that what is important in a candidate for office is his ability to perform the duties of that office. Certainly, only the organizations themselves would know just who is most qualified to perform those duties. However, under the "2.0" Bill, the organizations have no choice if one candidate, fully qualified, has a 1.9 and another who knows nothing about the office has a 2.0.

The opponents of the bill won a couple of battles, but in the end the supporters won the war. In the final battle, Senate President Dennis Twohig stepped down onto the Senate floor. Twohig was easily the most persuasive speaker in the Senate at the time and if this wasn't enough, he had the power of the President's chair behind him. He tore apart the irrelevant parts of the opponents' arguments, ignored the relevant, and then re-emphasized the qualities of the bill.

High marks are a good thing. The "2.0" motion is "for" high marks. Therefore, the "2.0" motion is a good thing.

One more thing might be worth mentioning. During this final battle, the meeting was chaired by Gail Obaldeston—one of the bill's creators. . . .Two hig was the last speaker.

Well, Dennis, you've had your way and now we've got a Senate full of students with 2.0's or better. But I have one question . . . . . WHERE IS IT?????

As you know, all bills presented to the Senate are assigned "S" numbers in the order in which they are introduced. That is, the first bill of the year is titled S1; the second, S2; the third, S3; and so on.

When the "2.0" Bill appeared before last year's Senate, it was given the number S25, being the 25th motion to appear before the Senate. That was on February 8, 1961.

Today is February 7, 1962. Tonight the first bill to be considered has a number too. . . . . S6.

It appears that your 2.0 Senate hasn't discussed one fourth of the bills that last year's Senate (the one with all those 1.8's and 1.9's) did.

Happy Birthday 2.0. May you never have another.

Letters : Anti-Synthesis

To the Editor:

The Washington demonstrations scheduled for Feb. 16 and 17 are a discredit to the University and a discourtesy to the National government. The primary objectives of the participating groups are neither workable or sensible, under present world conditions.

Nuclear disarmament is impractical and inadvisable in an age of disproportionate numerical strengths in manpower, uncertainty, and instability resulting from political upheavals in every corner of the globe, belligerent nationalisms with aggressive design, and a corrupt and mad ideology searching-out all possible means to remove our republican form of government from this earth.

The Washington demonstrators fear that the acquisition of nuclear weapons by the Federal government of West Germany would imperil any chances of nuclear disarmament. This fear is of little validiy. West Germany, as a member of NATO will share the responsibility over the control and use of nuclear weapons . . . . .

The Washington demonstrators should step down from their world of dreams, illusions, and unrealities. The goals which they seek to reach are neither obtainable nor desirable.

But isn't it too bad that Theroux Palter, and Schneck have not as yet learned the ABC's of the real world? Isn't it too bad.

David R. Halevy '62

To the Editor:

Would you join an organization if you disagreed with two of five major objectives of that organization? Would you join if you disagreed with only one of the five major objectives? Association under these conditions would then mean that you were between twenty to forty per cent in disagreement with the goals of the organization, certainly a large percentage.

For instance, one of the objectives is to ". . . urge the government to withdraw its missile bases in areas such as Turkey and Italy where their vulnerability to attack makes them useless except for the purpose of a first strike against the Soviet Union . . ." There is no doubt in my mind this is a premature gesture.

Another possible disagreement may be with the fourth objective; "We urge the government to seek disengagement in Central Europe . . ." What exactly does disengagement mean: economic, social, or military.

We must keep our minds clear. Peace and progress for all mankind is something all Americans should stand for, but we must not let our guard down to an enemy in an irrational attempt to gain desired ends. . . . .

Anon

To the Editor:

Fellow students: Sunday 4 February 1962 I attended the Synthesis meeting, where I told them they were fools and their ideas were foolishness. Now I am stating to you this was Communism in action, in these Conscientious Objectors.

Their leader has attacked our R.O.T.C. Program with articles in this paper and by picketing their Military Ball. He has blasted the Campus Police we need some law enforcement in our campus community. . . . .

Next they have attacked our National Defense by saying we should remove all our troops from Berlin so Communism may destroy the free people of Berlin. They further stated we should close our guided missile bases in our ally nations so the plague of Communism can infect them and the rest of the free world.

I ask you not to sit back and shrug your shoulders but seek out this group of people and black ball them from our campus activities. And most important of all do not let them print their propoganda in our college paper or use its office as a headquarters.

Home Economists To Speak In New Course Introduction

Outstanding home economists in business will speak at UMass in a series of three professional talks and discussions sponsored by the School of Home Economics during February.

Meetings are part of a program to introduce to students and other interested persons the two new major curicula in the School—Fashion Retailing and Foods and Nutrition in Business. According to Dr. Marion Niederpruem, Dean of the School of Home Economics, there is an increasing demand for qualified home economics graduates in fashion retailing and the foods and equipment industries.

Important aspects of these careers will be covered in the talks scheduled for Feb. 7, 14, and 27 in Skinner Auditorium at 8 p.m. Meetings are open to all home economics students, faculty and those interested.

Mrs. Elizabeth Calhoon, Educational Director, Pellon Corp., New York, will begin the series on Feb. 7 with a talk on "Problems of the First Year on the Job." On Feb. 14, Miss Virginia White, nutritionist from the American Institute of Baking in Chicago will speak on "Being Professional—The Home Economist on the Job." The final session on Feb. 27 will feature a talk by Miss Ann Dries, public relations home economist for Wearever Aluminum, Inc. in Pittsburg. Miss Dries' subject is "The Role of a Home Economist in Business." The audience will have a chance to discuss careers with the guest speakers at each session.

As a part of this program, student home economists will take a field trip to New York March 7-9 to visit companies where members of their profession are employed. Among the industries to be visited are: a manufacturer, retail store, textile market, advertising agencies, public relations agencies, magazines, textile and equipment testing laboratories, pattern companies, and food industries.

On Campus with Max Shulman

IS STUDYING NECESSARY?

Once there were three roommates and their names were Walter Pellucid, Casimir Fing, and LeRoy Holocaust and they were all taking English lit. and they were all happy, friendly, outgoing types and they all smoked Marlboro Cigarettes as you would expect from such a gregarious trio, for Marlboro is the very essence of sociability, the very spirit of amity, and very soul of concord, with its tobacco so mild and flavorful, its pack so king-size and flip-top, its filter so pure and white, and you will find when you smoke Marlboros that the world is filled with the song of birds and no man's hand is raised against you.

Each night after dinner Walter and Casimir and LeRoy went to their room and studied English lit. For three hours they sat in sombre silence and pored over their books and then, squinty and spent, they toppled onto their pallets and sobbed themselves to sleep.

This joyless situation obtained all through the first semester. Then one night they were all simultaneously struck by a marvelous idea. "We are all studying the same thing," they cried. "Why, then, should each of us study for three hours? Why not each study for one hour? It is true we will only learn one-third as much that way, but it does not matter because there are three of us and next June before the exams, we can get together and pool our knowledge!"

Oh, what rapture then fell on Walter and Casimir and LeRoy!

The wax in their ears got melted

They flung their beanies into the air and danced a gavotte and lit thirty or forty Marlboros and ran out to pursue the pleasure which had so long, so bitterly, been missing from their lives.

Alas, they found instead a series of grisly misfortunes. Walter, alas, went searching for love and was soon going steady with a coed named Invicta Breadstuff, a handsome lass, but, alas, hopelessly addicted to bowling. Each night she bowled five hundred lines, some nights a thousand. Poor Walter's thumb was a shambles and his purse was empty, but Invicta just kept on bowling and in the end, alas, she left Walter for a pin-setter, which was a terrible thing to do to Walter, especially in this case, because the pin-setter was automatic.

Walter, of course, was far too distraught to study his English lit, but he took some comfort from the fact that his roommates were studying and they would help him before the exams. But Walter, alas, was wrong. His roommates, Casimir and LeRoy, were nature lovers and they used their free time to go for long tramps in the woods and one night, alas, they were treed by two bears, Casimir by a brown bear and LeRoy by a kodiak, and they were kept in the trees until spring set in and the bears went to Yellowstone for the tourist season.

So when the three roommates met before exams to pool their knowledge, they found they had none to pool! Well sir, they had a good long laugh about that and then rushed to the kitchen and stuck their heads in the oven. It was, however, an electric oven and the effects were, on the whole, beneficial. The wax in their ears got melted and they acquired a healthy tan and today they are married to a lovely young heiress named Gang-lia Bran and live in the Canal Zone, where there are many nice boats to wave at.

UMass Quintet Erupts In 73-62 Victory Over Rams

Kingston Win Gives Redmen Sole Claim To YanCon Lead

Matt Zunic and the Redmen are now sitting on top of the Yankee Conference. The Redmen, behind steady ball playing and outstanding offensive and defensive play, shoved the University of Rhode Island Rams, defending YanCon champs, from the top of the heap in last night's 73-62 victory at Kingston.

Playing before a partisan crowd of only half-capacity, the Mass. quintet battled their way to the win after getting off to a slow start. Only the opening tap went right for the Redmen in the opening minute of the all-important game, as the Rams jumped off to a 9-1 lead with two minutes gone.

But then the Zunic contingent got going under full steam. In two short minutes the score stood at 10-9, in favor of the Redmen, the Mass squad holding the hosts scoreless while they went ahead; they then boosted their lead to three on a set by Mike Mole.

Mole and Rhody's Dave Ricereto then traded a good part of the scoring efforts as both were red-hot in the first half. The score seesawed for the greater part of the first stanza, neither team gaining any more than a two-point edge until late in the frame when a set by Mole and a three pointer by Twitchell gave the Redmen a four point lead, their largest of the game.

A foul shot by Charlie Fohlin, offset by two consecutive Ram baskets by Ricereto and Logan, and three straight baskets by Mole, Pete Bernard and Twitchell accounted for the rest of the scoring in the first half, the buzzer sounding as the Redmen held onto a seven-point lead, 36-2.

Rhode Island was far from being a discouraged team when the second half opened, and they began a surging scoring drive which saw them take a one-point lead with minutes gone, 42-41. This was the last Ram edge, however, as the defensive and offensive efforts of the Redmen shifted into overdrive.

Two jump shots by the Little Rabbit, Pete Bernard, and Donny Black opened the UMass gap, and the visiting squad was not to be stopped. Rhody's Gary Koenig fouled out to up the Redmen chances, and the Rams' Ricereto was ice-cold, scoring only six points in the final frame.

The shooting of Twitchell, Black, Mole and Bernard was near-faultless as the Redmen maintained their lead, and the UMass crew held a 69-60 lead with one minute left in the game. A Rhody basket, followed by successive hoops by Bernard and Black accounted for the final points, and the Redmen had taken control of the Yankee Conference reins with a 4-1 Conference record.

DRIBBLING AROUND

Fouls were coming fast and furious all during the game, as, in the first half alone, the Redmen had totalled 17 personals to Rhode Island's 11. Things began to look dim for Redmen hopes early in the game as UMass' towering center, Don Black, quickly amassed two personals. Charlie Fohlin came off the bench to replace Donny and soon had three fouls called against him. Charlie fouled out about midway through the second half after playing what may have been the best defensive game of his UMass career. The game ended with four markers against Donny . . . Three men of the Ram squad couldn't finish, as Lee and Ricereto, both of whom had to be replaced in the Saturday night UMass victory, toted their towels on the bench again. Logan also fouled out for Rhody, but this came with onl seconds left to play . . . Tempers were as hot as the scoring, near-scuffles occuring on the floor, and downright melees taking place on the sidelines . . . Coach Matt Zunic handled the angry Rhode Island crowd to perfection, however, as he kept pointing with devilish glee to the scoreboard whenever a rude remark was heard from the Rhody stands.

STILL DRIBBLING

The Redmen had four men in double figures, Pete Bernard, making up for his size with sheer effort, scoring nineteen points for the high point mark. Mike Mole and Don Black notched 16 and 11, while Roger Twitchell, playing his finest game of the season, hit for eighteen . . . Twitchell led in the rebound department with thirteen . . . Charlie Lee, who had been the high-scorer in the Yanke Conference prior to Saturday's game in which he was held at 12 points, could get no more than nine markers to his credit, as he had to be yanked by his coach for a good part of the clash due to fouls called against him . . . The Redmen hadn't won a game in Kingston for the past three years . . . Not even the tying of shoelaces could give the Rams enough time and rest to come up with a win against UMass.

The Redmen had an outstanding shooting percentage during the game as they hit 27-54 from the floor for a .500 mark. Their foul shooting average wasn't equal to the record-breaking .866 of the last Rhody contest, however, as they hit 19-30 for a .633 charity percentage this time.

The Redmen can't rest on their laurels now that they've reached the top; they've got Maine to contend with in a big double-header this coming Friday and Saturday. It's do-or-die for Mass. conference hopes as the Black Bears sharpen their claws.

"Ooops — I Didn't Mean It"

An interesting incident of backfire-itis took place during the UM-URI game last night. During the final minutes of the game the Redmen were attemping to freeze the ball to protect their lead. Who should get the assignment of icing the ball but Mike Mole. As he literally dribbled circles around ensuing Rams, a cry wen up from the URI bench—"Foul somebody—quickly."

At that point Rhody guard George Weiss fouled Mole. Then a groan was heard from the Blue bench—"Not him, you —. He hit 12 for 12 last game." As the tirade against Weiss continued, Mole stepped up to the foul line and surprisingly missed his free toss; whereupon the bench goading suddenly ceased and Weiss' face assumed a victorious look.

Women's Ski Team Places

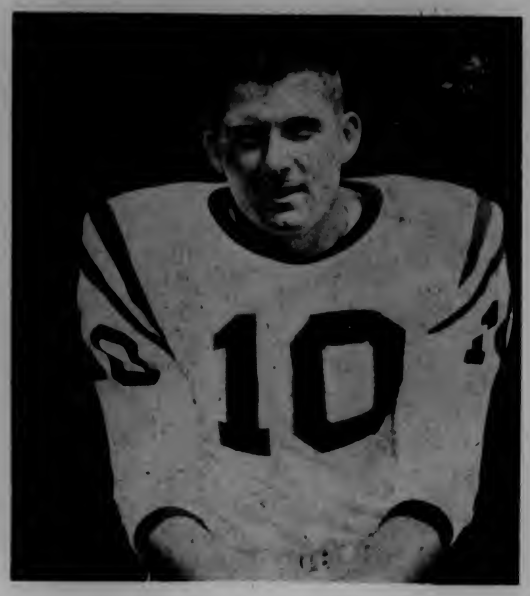
The W.A.A. ski team took second place in a slalom race held at Pleasant Mountain, Bridgton, Maine on Saturday, February 3. The race was sponsored by the Prospector's Ski Club, with member teams of the Women's Intercollegiate Ski Conference competing.

Individuals placing in the race were Jean Craigin, '65, sixth; Judy Williams, '62, tenth; and Ruth Henderson, '62, eleventh. Boston University's team was first, Northeastern, third, and Mt. Holyoke, fourth.

The team practices weekly at Mt. Tom under coaching of Dr. Vendein of the Women's Physical Education Department. The next race will be a giant Slalom sponsored by Boston University at Bridgton, on Sunday, February 11.

The men's ski team wil start off their season in the B.U. sponsored race, their first race being cancelled because of snow conditions.

Massachusetts Helmsman John McCormick Signed By Vikings



The Minnesota Vikings have signed John McCormick, a 6-1, 207 pound quarterback from the University of Massachusetts, General Manager Bert Rose announced recently.

McCormick, whose offensive playing has sparked the UMass club to two consecutive winning seasons had been scouted by many teams during the past season.

John is one of six free agents to be signed, Rose added. Others are: Edmond Francoise, offensive end from Tennessee A and T; Don Krebs, flanker form Marquette, Mick Tingelhoff, linebacker from Nebraska, Don Benbow, offensive guard from Nutler, and Ben Gallagher, offensive guard from North Carolina.

McCormick completed 134 passes during his career at UMass, which saw him win all-Yankee Conference and all-east honors in 1960 and be selected as his team's Most Valuable Player in 1961.

Ellingwood To Lead Skaters Against Conn.

Coach Steve Kosakowski and the University of Massachusetts varsity hockey team hope that history keeps repeating itself when the Redmen host the University of Connecticut Wednesday night at 7 p.m. at Orr Rink.

The Redmen, who sport a 5-7 record, have had their previous victories come in pairs. Last week, UMass stopped American International, 7-6, and therefore hope to once again string a pair of wins together.

Connecticut and Massachusetts battled to a 3-3 tie last winter and Coach Kosakowski hopes the Redmen can skate off the ice with a clean-cut victory this year. The recent offensive work of sophomore wing Charlie Glew, who scored four times in the AIC game, has been encouraging.

Co-Capt. Jim Ellingwood has taken over the team's scoring leadership with six goals and 12 assists for 18 points. Forward Charlie Donovan leads with 11 goals and is second with 17 points. Senior goalie Frank Cesario has been outstanding in the nets for the Redmen and is averaging 34 saves per game. He kicked out 38 shots as the Redmen squeaked out a hard-fought victory last week at AIC.

MEANDERING MIKE

I'm not a glory-seeker, but after working 24 hours a day for 8 days and getting no reward, I really felt sorry for myself. Thanks to Al Berman, and his praise-worthy editorial, however, I am once again the happy-go-lucky loud-mouthed microphone I was before finals, and now I am free to blab all I know about WMUA, Radio 21 at the University of Massachusetts.

In the running of the station, the officers are of primary importance (they think so anyway): Production manager, Eric Sandel; station manager, Niel Felton (she just got married!); business manager, Jim O'Hearn, technical director, Dave Mainwaring; and last, but certainly not least, public relations director, Ken Brophy. Obviously, WMUA is run entirely by students who are fervently dedicated to the station.

Right now big things are doing in our offices. The "elite" of the staff is in the process of working out a completely new program schedule and enlarging the various and sundry committees to make room for those students, similarly dedicated, who have offered their many talents to the station. One of our main projects is a continuous broadcast of campus news and special events of interest.

An important fact I seem to have overlooked in my wanderings, is that all the equipment at WMUA is professional. It belongs to the National Association of Broadcasters and the Pioneer Broadcasting System. The news and weather come into the station via UPI teletype which runs 24 hours a day.

The station itself is located in the engineering building and consists of an observation room, 3 studios, an oce, a repair shop, and, needless to say, a record libarry of over 1500 records. Collectively, the staff is the proud possessor of 1 piano, 1 organ, 2 banjos, 3 recorders, 1 set of bongo drums, 1 clarinet, 7 or 8 guitars, and 1 gold-plated harmonica.

Whoops . . . here comes that Eric Sandel, and I can see that he's going to hook me up so I'd better sign off. Tune in same time, same station, next week for more about the happenings and people at WMUA, Radio 21 at the University of Massachusetts.

Policy Formulated In Faculty Senate

by NEAL ANDELMAN '63

This article is the first of a series dealing with the UMass Faculty Senate, which plays an important role in decisions concerning the student body directly or indirectly. As the functions of this Senate are little known on campus, we present this series in an effort to bring realization and understanding of their duties to the entire campus.

Should University police be allowed to carry side arms? Should we have classes on Columbus Day? What should be the minimum quality point average for freshmen? Questions of this nature are the concern of a body on campus known as the Faculty Senate.

Few students know of the Faculty Senate's existence, yet this organization plays a major role in deciding University policy in general, and academic policy in particular. President Lederle, who is also the Senate President, stated that "the Faculty Senate is of great importance as an agency for the faculty to determine its attitude on University policy."

All Important Matters

Areas for consideration by the faculty include "all important matters of the University . . . its research, instruction, and welfare and discipline of the students." The wide scope of subject matter allows the Senate a great deal of freedom to deal with any subject pertaining to the University.

What does all this have to do with UMass students? The Faculty Senate provides a possible method for an individual or group of students to present, indirectly, his views on policy change. Major student issues could be brought to the attention of the Senate by a recommendation from the Student Senate, a referendum (such as the R.O.T.C. issue), or by finding a sympathetic Faculty Senator who would introduce the new idea. In all cases, however, the issue must be presented by a Faculty Senator, as the meetings are closed to the public.

University Business Only

Provost Woodside points out that a student who wants to present a measure to a Faculty Senator should include only matters of University business.

The Senate is comprised of 20 ex officio members including the President, Provost, Deans of the Schools and Colleges within the University, Secretary, Treasurer, Librarian, Deans of Men, Wom-

UMass Faculty Seek Pay Hike Monday, Before Education Comm.

Dr. Schafer Williams, Associate Professor of History, and Dr. John Fenton, Professor of Government, will appear before the Committee on Education of the Massachusetts legislature at 10:30 a.m. Monday (Feb. 12) in support of a faculty bill to increase salaries for teachers at UMass.

The bill (No. 1504) is being jointly sponsored by two faculty groups at the university — the American Association of University Professors and the American Federation of Teachers. Dr. Fenton is president of the AAUP, and Dr. Williams is president of the AFT.

The bill calls for salary increases for faculty members of all ranks, ranging from instructors to department heads. Instructors would go from a minimum annual salary of $5070 to a minimum of $6474. Full professors would go from a present minimum of $8125 to a minimum of $10,387.

"According to national AAUP ratings, which provide for five categories, the salaries for professors at the university rank in the lowest category in the country," Dr. Fenton said. "Only the instructor rank is above the middle of the five categories.

"With this proposed bill, the university would rank in the middle category for full professors and slightly above the middle for Associate and assistant professors.

"Although UMass has been making important strides in meeting the needs of the Commonwealth, faculty salary increases will be of basic importance to its continued progress."

Dr. Williams made the following statement:

"The proposed increases would bring the university's salaries into line with the minimum scale of American state universities. Although the proposed salaries will still leave the university below those paid by other state universities, such as the University of Vermont, they will at least permit reasonable competition for the best teaching talent.

"Unless salaries are increased, the university will not only be unable to hire the best teachers for its expanding student body, but will lose some of the outstanding teachers it now has. A competitive salary scale is fundamental to achieving the excellence announced as a goal by President John Lederle—and the youth of this state deserve the best in public education."

Representative James Nolen of Ware introduced the salary increase bill sponsored by the two faculty groups.

The AAUP is a national organization of college teachers. The AFT is affiliated with the Massachusetts State Labor Council and the Massachusetts Federation of Teachers.

STUDENT SENATE

Senate Passes S-6 For Voluntary ROTC

by TOM FRATAR

At last Wednesday night's session, the Student Senate considered and passed S-6, endorsing voluntary ROTC.

The motion, the first this year to be introduced by a new senator, reads as follows: "Resolved that the Student Senate endorse voluntary ROTC, and that the resolution be presented to the Faculty Senate."

(This action is significant in that it is the first commitment that the Senate has made on this issue since its introduction two years ago.)

The Senate Ad Hoc Committee on voluntary ROTC first introduced the issue to the student body in a referendum two years ago, the results of which indicated student opinion against compulsory ROTC.

Sponsor of the bill, Senator Maskell, moved to bring S-6 from the table. His principal arguments were that: voluntary ROTC improves the spirit of the corps by eliminating "undesirable elements", that it would enable students to further broaden their education by devoting time spent in ROTC to academic subjects, that voluntary ROTC would "free the student from taking an almost useless two years course" which grants no graduation credit, that compulsory ROTC is "contrary to the principles of a liberal education at a free university", and that such a program is an extravagant waste of government money.

At this point a move to amend the original motion was introduced by Senator Mahoney, with the intended purpose of asking the Faculty Senate to reconsider their stand taken last November. At that time, a six month study resulted in a two year moratorium. Senator Mahoney said that reopening the issue would give students and faculty further opportunity to study the question without the two year delay.

Principal support for the amendment came from Senator Buck who referred to the original motion as "double talk" on the grounds that the Faculty Senate has already considered the question of voluntary ROTC and that the amended motion requesting them to reconsider it made more sense than merely passing on to them the resolution endorsing voluntary ROTC.

Opposition to the amendment was led primarily by Senator D'Avanzo who pointed out that the Faculty Senate had good reason for postponing the issue for two years. He noted that Army and Air Force officials are currently considering methods of revamping their ROTC programs.

In a verbal vote, the amendment was defeated by a large majority.

Support for the bill came from Senator Donahue: ". . . the goals of a college education are incompatible with a military education . . . an individual comes to college to learn to think, not to be trained in the military."

In a roll call vote, the motion was passed 20-8.

Eng. Head Explains Department Dilemma

Since registration last Thursday, there have been lines of students waiting outside the English Dept. office to reschedule and rearrange courses to fit hour plans and to change into or out of courses they do not want or have room for. Some students have already missed four English classes because the section they were assigned to didn't fit their schedule.

Vernon P. Helming, Acting Head of the English Department issued an explanatory statement yesterday as follows:

"On December first, teachers of English 1 and 25 were asked to remind their students to register for English 2 and 26 in sections of the same numbers as their present section. This instruction was not conveyed to all students or was disregarded by many, who registered for new sections . . . Mr. Madeira, Scheduling Officer for the Department felt obliged to return freshmen and sophomores to their original sections. He and a secretary in the Department made the necessary changes on the eve of registration—too late for adequate notification of the students affected. Some of these had legitimate conflicts with courses which, for a variety of reasons, they could not reschedule or postpone. Students of these two groups made up most of the slow-moving lines in the fourth-floor corridor of Bartlett Hall.

"Another cause of difficulty was the re-instatement of sections cancelled in expectation of the usual drop-out rate. An unusually large

Juniors, Sophs, Frosh Plan Snow Works

This year's Winter Carnival Sculptures, built around the theme, "With a Continental Flair", will feature snow sculptures of different countries.

Class projects include a "Matterhorn" Sno Slide by the Class of 1964, a French cafe by 1965, and the symbol of the weekend's theme by 1963. All of the projects will be seen in the vicinity of the S.U.

Three judges will review the sculptures on Saturday, Feb. 17th from 10-12 a.m. Three places, with no ties, will be awarded to fraternities, sororities, and dormitories. Awards will be made after the announcement of the winners, at the ice show on College Pond Saturday afternoon.

If there is no snow by next Wednesday at 6 p.m., the sculptures will be cancelled.

Rules for sculptures:

1. Paint may be used to color the exterior.
2. Any type of lighting may be used.
3. No visible props, excepting wires for suspended figures, are allowed.
4. Moving parts and sound effects may be used.
5. Manufactured ice is not permissible.
6. Sculptures must be completed by 6 p.m. on Friday, February 16th.
7. All sculptures must have the name of the organization and title of the sculpture nearby.
8. All sculpturing must be done by members of the organization represented.

Second clue to Winter Carnival Snowman Contest:

"If all the students on campus were wise, they'd know I have light complexion and bright blue eyes."

In Support Of Voluntary ROTC

Once again the Faculty Senate and the Board of Trustees have been asked to consider the establishment of a voluntary ROTC program at the University of Massachusetts by a strong 28-8 Student Senate vote Wednesday evening.

Since the student body has overwhelmingly asked for a voluntary ROTC program by the due process of referendum, and since the Student Senate has reiterated the request of the student body through legislative process, it is apparent that there is no doubt in the minds of most students that a voluntary ROTC program will best benefit the student.

The student would no longer be required to take two years of courses which have no academic credit value toward graduation. The number of hours now spent in ROTC classes could be used for courses in the Arts and Sciences which would be good for graduation credits, as well as the student's academic background.

Benefits of a voluntary program will not be entirely for the students. The military programs will also benefit since the "undesirable element" who do not understand, or have no desire to understand the purpose of ROTC will not join the program and will be prevented from detracting from the prestige of the program.

The money saved in a voluntary program (although this would be a federal problem) could possibly be used in a high school ROTC orientation program for male college preparatory students.

Undoubtedly, the number of students enrolled in a voluntary ROTC program would be fewer than the number of students presently enrolled. Yet the military departments could feel certain that their instructors were teaching future officers, not simply a mass of bodies putting in required time for unwanted courses.

Books And Prices

Protest against the high price of text books at Columbia University has taken the form of a book-ordering agency operated by two graduate students, according to Wednesday's New York Times. The students offer 10 to 20 percent discounts on texts and paper backs, but they can not offer immediate delivery. All books must be obtained from suppliers.

The Columbia University Press, which supplies the campus store and other local outlets, has refused to deal with the newcomers, since it is felt that their no-inventory policy is unfair to the other stores.

Cornell students are better off than those at Columbia; with their dividend slips they can realize most of the benefits of a 10 per cent discount. But the Columbia protest-experiment nevertheless has possibilities for application here. Local bookstores would be wise to offer an additional discount of five or ten percent to students who ordered their books two months or so before the beginning of each term. With such orders, the book stores could plan their stocks with less factor of uncertainty, and they could arrange to have the books delivered or called for before the rush when classes begin.

A plan such as this would reduce the amount of buying at the very beginning of each term, even though most students (and some professors) would not be able to submit full book lists two months before the courses begin. It would relieve congestion at the bookstores and, most important, it could save everyone a little money.

Weathermen And Society

by MEL SHULTZ '65

Social scientists who have nothing better to do often search for clues to changing social patterns. Among the most recent topics for discussion have been the twist, the pacifist kick, and rising divorce rate. Unfortunately, in order to preserve teeth and reputation, interested people balk at presenting their views on these subjects. In their search for wider acclaim, sociologists have had to come up with a safe discussion topic, the T.V. weatherman.

THE OLD CODGER

When television was still young, the most popular type of weatherman was a fossilized old codger whose barren gums uttered such words as humididty and timriture. Now an extinct species, the cracker barrel codger tells us much about the social patterns of his day. Just as the dodo was a carry-over from pre-historic times, the wrinkled weatherman served as a remnant of the times when his surroundings were more suited to his way of life. He represents the pre-war isolationist tendency once characteristic of our society. The old codger went the way of isolationism and the dodo, stamped out by more powerful forces.

THE SCIENTIST

The scientific boom created a new type of weatherman. His job was more than that of forecasting weather. He had to reassure a panicky society that it was not falling behind Russia in the research and development race. The scientific weatherman will continue to exist as long as the public needs a little reassurance.

THE SMILING PROPAGANDIST

Television networks soon realized that despite his quintillion gimmicks, the scientific weatherman was not living up to expectations. The public needed to be convinced that one could still be happy in our society. The result was a new breed of skillful propagandist.

Morning viewers are greeted by a personable young man with a mouth full of teeth. One wonders how anybody can be so happy, so lively, so corny. The propagandist is not so much concerned with the weather as with showing us snapshots of his wife, ten kids, and big fuzzy dog. He shows us how to live, by smiling when the weather is bad, by taking pride in ones family. Every so often, a smiling propagandist goes berserk, stabs his wife, and commits suicide.

PUPPET SHOWS AND SLIT SKIRTS

What was really needed was a weatherman who could present to us a totally unreal world. Society had begun to resent constant reminders of how to be alive and still be happy. The networks thought they had the answer in the puppet show. An amoeboid monster dangling from a string would present the weather, tell a few nauseating jokes, and disappear in a puff of smoke.

Russia's first satellite sent a chill down our spines. The public began to shake itself out of its tizzy, and puppet shows went back to the kiddies. This sobering-up period lasted until our own satellites began to orbit; adult cartoon shows became a craze. Weatherwise, a new device appeared: the slit-skirt siren. Men need more than puppets to get their minds off their troubles. The result is a dark-haired 36-24-36 who gestures as if she wants you to jump into the television screen and take her into your arms. One thing should be added . . . . . don't try it; she packs a gun.

— LETTERS —

Mr. Paul Theroux:

I must express my surprise that it has taken you this long to produce your unwanted, un-needed, and unjustified attack on our campus police. One would expect the article to have been in the first issue of the Collegian after the Military Ball, that you might mourn one of the poor unfortunates "beaten to death with cliches" after he was picked up. I understand you know him well.

Contrary to your implications, the "campus cops" are normal, well adjusted humans. I hope that you can say as much. They are to be admired for taking a job which rewards them with only abuse from our "intellectuals". Paul, your mistake was that you met the police under the wrong circumstances. Try meeting them socially next time, not professionally.

You make the claim that the police are unnecessary. Even one with a "semi-anthropoid mentality" would recognize this statement as silly. If there is no need for police on the campus, why did the Collegian report the theft of over twelve thousand dollars worth of material from the Student Union? And those ID checks—Did it ever occur to you the police might have justified suspicion of those who walk at night? Did it ever occur to you that these prowlers might not be around just to observe the scenery. And also, who else could be on call 24 hours a day that a gravely ill person might be brought to the Infirmary or hospital.

Face the facts, Paul. Amherst cannot provide the protection that a large University of this size needs, that those who live here expect, including yourself. Whether you like it or not, the "campus cops" are here to stay.

Elwin C. McNamara

To the Editor:

I was a bit dismayed while reading the Collegian article about Senate action on the Fine Arts Council Constitution. The article fails to give a true picture of the nature of the Senate action in approving the Council Constitution.

In the first place, the Council is composed of as many student members as faculty members. Therefore, if any issue of great controversy were to come before the Council, the student voice would be as powerful as that of the faculty.

Secondly, the faculty members of the Fine Arts Council are as interested in improving the status of the University as are the students. This fact, and the realization of their experience in the field of Fine Arts make the faculty members a vital part of the Council. Indeed, without their aid and experience, the Council could not operate effectively.

Third, more than two thirds of the money proposed for the Fine Arts Council would be allocated to the University Bands and Concert Association. The budgets of these two organizations are brought to the Council by the Budgets Committee and after Council recommendations are voted upon by the Budgets Committee and brought to the Senate for their vote. While it is true that the Fine Arts Council has the right to administer its appropriation in any way it sees fit, it nonetheless has an obligation to every organization with which it deals. Since the Senate appropriations to the Council would be based upon specific requests for Student Tax Fund Money by these organizations, and since each organization would be aware of the exact amounts given the Council by Senate appropriation, any undesired shifting of funds by the Council would arouse the ire of the organization which would stand to lose by the action.

We see, therefore, that the Fine Arts Council, while given sufficent freedom in the field of operation, is limited in issues of controversy by its student votes, by the Senate Budgets Committee, and by the organizations with which it works. These factors were decisive issues when the Senate passed the Fine Arts Council Constitution a few weeks ago.

CNVA Demonstration Halted By Ordinance

Washington, D.C., Feb. 5—Nine pacifists were arrested Monday while picketing peacefully in front of the White House in protest to nuclear testing.

Other members of the group, sponsored by the Committee for Nonviolent Action (CNVA), announced they would return to the White House Tuesday in an effort to present an appeal to halt bomb testing directly to President Kennedy.

The pacifists, including several men and women who recently walked 6,000 miles from San Francisco to Moscow to demonstrate for peace in Red Square, were arrested shortly after 1 P.M.—four hours after today's demonstration began.

They were charged with violating an ordinance prohibiting demonstrations within 500 feet of visiting foreign officials. Premier Cyrille Adoula of The Congo was visiting the Presidential mansion. The group told police they would move across the street if necessary but declined to demonstrate out of view of the White House.

The CNVA has requested that Kennedy meet with the Moscow walkers so they could "communicate their deep moral concern that the U.S. not duplicate the crime of the Soviet Union in resuming atmospheric nuclear weapons testing."

The demonstration will be joined Tuesday by past-participants in civil disobedience actions sponsored by the CNVA, including crew members of the "Golden Rule" who attempted to sail into the Eniwetok nuclear testing area in the Pacific to protest bomb testing in 1958, and demonstrators against Polaris submarines. Others will conduct a supporting demonstration.

On Wednesday, the appeal walk will be joined by well-known representatives of peace organizations and persons prominent in the peace movement.

If no appointment is obtained with President Kennedy by Thursday, the CNVA said "consideration will be given to other nonviolent means by which the Moscow peace walkers and other selected persons can carry our concern to the President." If Kennedy is not at the White House on Thursday, the group said, the demonstration will climax on the first business day he is present.

Agron. Dept. To Control Sand - Drift

Immediate control of drifting sand that threatens to obliterate sections of Route 6 in the Provincetown-Truro area has top priority under a three-phase research grant to the agronomy department at UMass.

Surface wind erosion is moving the sand toward the highway so that it is necessary to remove over 10,000 yards of sand annually from the shoulder of the highway to keep it open. The trouble area in depth extends from Route 6 northeasterly to the outer coastline of Cape Cod.

The first step in solving the sand-drift problem will be to stimulate existing vegetation by fertilization, according to John M. Zak, assistant professor of agronomy, project leader for the study. Next, beach grass will be planted on critical areas to stop the movement of sand over the highway. Evangel Bredakis, agronomy instructor, will devote full time to the Agricultural Experiment Station project.

The over-all five-year, $75,000 roadside development project is a joint effort of UMass and the Massachusetts Department of Public Works. The Bureau of Public Roads, U.S. Department of Commerce is technically cooperating.

Phase two of the research calls for the development and recommendation of grass seed mixtures and other ground cover most practical not only for the Cape, but other locations in the state as well. The object: stabilization of soils to provide maximum ease of maintenance at minimum costs.

Phase three is the recommendation of suitable chemicals and their practical and safe application to: accelerate ground cover growth through use of fertilizers and hormones, control poison ivy and other undesirable weed and brush growth, and to inhibit grass growth in special areas through soil sterilization.

en and Students, Registrar and Alumni Secretary. There are 58 elected members who represent the various departments on campus. These members serve three year terms, with one-third of the membership expiring each year.

The Senate takes its actions in the form of recommendations to the President of the University and the Board of Trustees. President Lederle stated he is "a great believer in faculty participation of policy determination," so that any recommendations made, particularly in the area of academic resolutions, are generally accepted.

Almost every academic rule that students "live by" has been decided in the Senate Chambers. The recent changes in minimum quality point average and the number of consecutive semesters a student may attend the University are examples of the Senate's work that is of direct concern to the students.

(Future articles in this series will deal more explicitly with important issues acted upon by the Faculty Senate that are of vital interest to every student).

Programs Offered For Visiting Israel

The Student Zionist Organization is offering a number of programs for college students in Israel.

Included in these programs are: The Israel Summer Institute. This program consists of seven weeks in Israel plus a brief stop-over in Europe. The student lives in Jerusalem, participates in extensive tours throughout the country and meets with leaders in the government and Hebrew University. Ten days are spent working on a kibbutz and there is a period in which the student pursues his area of specific interest. The cost for this program is $850 complete.

The Student Zionist Organization is sponsoring a Summer in Kibbutz program. The student spends ten weeks in Israel, most of it on a kibbutz in which he works half a day and studies Hebrew part of the day. There is a number of tours to various parts of the country. Cost for this program is $600 complete.

The American Work Study Program in Israel consists of working and studying on a kibbutz for six months. The student spends a number of weeks in Jerusalem as well as tour the country. Prior to his going to kibbutz, there is a two week orientation period in Jerusalem. At the conclusion of the six months, the student may continue working and studying on kibbutz, stay in Israel, work in the country (the Jewish Agency in Jerusalem will help him find a job), or return home. Cost for this program is $795 complete.

The Institute for Youth Leaders from Abroad includes members of youth movements from all over the world. The student studies in Jerusalem for six months, works on kibbutz for three months, and spends two months working on independent projects. The cost of this program is $550 complete.

The College Ulpan is the only program of its type in the United States. Students from many universities spend seven weeks studying Hebrew four hours per day in addition to learning Hebrew songs and dances and having a course on Modern Jewish history. The Ulpan is conducted at the South Branch Hotel in South Branch, New Jersey. There are swimming and athletic facilities on the premises. Cost for this program is $295 complete and there are partial scholarships available from the Youth Department of the American Zionist Council.

For further information on any of these projects, contact Arnold Gelfman, or the UMass SZO chapter at 308 Brooks.

Deli Supper To Feature Peter Rose

Dr. Peter I. Rose, assistant professor of sociology at Smith College, will speak on the "Small Town Jew in America" at a Hillel Delicatessen Supper, Sunday, February 11 at 5:30 p.m. in the Commonwealth Room.

Dr. Rose received his PhD in 1959 from Cornell, where from 1954 to 1958 he was a teaching assistant and resident assistant. From 1958 to 1960 he was an instructor at Goucher College and is presently the director of the Social Science Research Center at Smith.

In addition to making a study about small town Jews and their neighbors, he has also worked as a consultant in a study sponsored by the Anti-Defamation League about the Swastika Epidemic of 1960. The first report of this study will be published this spring in the Jewish Journal of Sociology of Great Britain.

Admission to the supper is 50¢ for members and $1.00 for non-members. All are invited to attend.

UMass Establishes Research Institute

A new Polymer Research Institute, the first of its kind in New England, has been established at the University of Massachusetts, it was announced recently by Pres. John W. Lederle.

The University's trustees recently approved founding of the institute for advanced studies in the field of plastics.

Staffed by an international team of scientists, the new facility is under the direction of Dr. Richard S. Stein, Commonwealth Professor of Chemistry and a leading anuthority on high polymers (plastics and rubbers).

Major interest shown by industrial and governmental groups in the University's work in plastics spurred establishment of the institute. A total of about $300,000 has been awarded by various organizations during the past ten years for support of research and graduate training programs in polymer science.

Work by Dr. Stein's group has resulted in the publication of more than 50 articles in leading scientific journals. Papers have also been presented at more than 30 national scientific conferences and at four international meetings.

Purpose of the University program is development of methods for studying the properties of plastic films, fibers and rubbers. Studies have been undertaken on brittleness, elasticity, strength, flexibiilty and opacity of various plastic materials.

Several of the applications of these methods, all of which have major industrial importance, originated with the polymer research group. Their development has also served in building an extensive graduate program in polymer chemistry under Dr. Stein's direction. Since beginning the general program a decade ago, the University has awarded nine doctorate degrees and five master's degrees in this field. Also, four students have undertaken post-doctorial work in polymers.

The research intitute is housed in the new Goessmann Chemistry Laboratory addition which provides excellent facilities for an expanded program in polymer science.

An important part of the program is the scheduling of regular discussion meetings during the academic year. Outstanding industrial researchers and scientists from many countries are invited to present papers. Foeign speakers in this year's program include Prof. Rolf Hosemann of Berlin, Germany; Prof. A. Keller of the University of Bristol, England; and Dr. M. Kurata of Kyoto University, Japan.

Researchers working on projects in the institute include American, Australian, West German, Japanese, and Indian scientists. Dr. Stein, leader of the group, is internationally known for his work in high polymers.

Aid To Be Offered By Ford Foundation

The Ford Foundation today announced a five-year, $8 million program of forgivable loans and other aid to doctoral engineering students preparing to be engineering teachers.

The program aims to help meet a growing shortage of qualified engineering teachers by bringing approximately 1,000 graduate students into the engineering-teaching profession and supporting their training through completion of the doctorate. This number is equal to about one-third of the present total of engineering teachers with the doctorate.

The program will be conducted in two stages:

—First, immediate grants totaling about $2.8 million are being made to forty-two schools and departments of engineering for forgivable loans over the next two years.

The loans are designed to bring into teaching graduates who, usually because of family responsibility, require more support in advanced training than conventional fellowships or their personal resources can provide. The forgivability feature is intended to reinforce the graduates' own motivation toward a teaching career.

Qualified students who commit themselves to teaching careers will be eligible for loans of up to a total of $10,000 each over a three-year period. After students complete their doctorates, the loans will be forgiven at a fixed rate—$1,000 or 20% of the total owed at the termination of graduate study, whichever is greater —for every year of service on an American or Canadian engineering faculty.

The loan recipients will be selected entirely by the engineering institutions. No student over forty years of age will be eligible.

"The new program has a double objective—to increase the nation's corps of engineering teachers in order to accommodate growing enrollments, and to raise the level of training of those entering the profession."

"Statistics can be used to support anything—including statisticians."

UMass Gym Team To Meet Temple And Springfield

by JEFF DAVIDOW '62

During the next few days the Redmen Gym team will face two of its roughest opponents of the year, Temple University and Springfield College.

The first of the two meets is scheduled for tomorrow, February 10, when the UMass Gymnasts travel to the Temple campus in Philadelphia to oppose a strong squad competing on its own court. This will be the second away meet for the Jamesmen, the first being with Army on December 16, and proves to be one of the more exciting of the season.

Captain CHARLIE PAYDOS

DEXTER BROWN vaulting the long horse.

The Temple team, coached by Carl Patterson, takes a 2-3 record against Massachusetts. Temple has defeated Southern Connecticut State College and Springfield and has lost to Navy, Penn State and the University of Pittsburgh.

Temple's key performers are captain Shelly Mittman and senior Dave Perilstein. Mittman's best event is the still rings and he also competes on the parallel bars. UMass captain Charlie Paydos performs in these two events in addition to the floor exercise event in which he backs up junior Dave Yates. Mittman finished first in both his events against the U. of Pittsburgh last Saturday, and certainly will provide keen competition for Paydos. Yates' chief foe will be the aforementioned Temple star Dave Perilstein whose best event is floor exercise.

The squad has been working furiously since it returned from the inter-semester vacation, and with the guidance of Coach Bob James many of the men have improved their routines. Mr. James is not only a hard worker but also a great sportsman who takes personal interest in his men and has won the respect of all those that work with him. He has been successful in developing some excellent all around competitors out of men who have had no previous gymnastic experience.

In addition to its regular members, the squad has added to its ranks a new man, Dave Williams. Dave is a first semester sophomore who was not able to compete in varsity meets last semester, and he will undoubtedly be of assistance in the upcoming matches. Dave brings added depth to a team already rich in talent. With competitors like Paydos, Yates, Williams, Brown, McCracken, Adam and the other fine men on the team UMass need not worry about depth.

The second and perhaps the more important match will take place at 7:00 P.M. Tuesday evening at the Cage when the UMass Varsity Gymnastics Team takes on its perennial foes Springfield College in the Redmen's last home meet of the 1962 season.

The team is expecting both Temple and Springfield to be rough opponents but after many weeks of constant and tireless training the squad is up, as never before, for the matches.

Considering the meets with Temple and Springfield event by event, we find UMass stacking up as follows:

1. Long Horse—a new event for UMass and a strong one. Dexter Brown '64 is the star performer and he has an excellent chance of taking first place in this event and Eastern Collegiate Honors at West Point in March. Brown has outstanding handspring and stoop vaults, and he will get good team support from Dave Amundsen, Dave Yates, Felix Mosakewicz, and Tom Astaldi.

Captain PAYDOS exhibits his skill not only on the parallel bars but also in the still ring and floor exercise events.

2. Side Horse—a weak event for the Jamesites. Bruce McCracken and Jim Adam have improved greatly, but will have to give their best to bring home the honors in this event. McCracken performs with a nifty mount and a half twist into a double leg circle on the neck.

3. Parallel Bars—Paydos, McCracken, and Williams are our strong men. This event could make the difference in the meets. Paydos does a difficult triple rear mount and a straight arm straight leg press into a handstand. McCracken does a high flowing back somi in his routine.

4. Floor Exercise—Yates is a strong choice for first place. He has excellent tumbling routines and other good floor moves. Has ideal form for Floor X. Eddie Frado '64 has improved greatly and will be a big help against Springfield.

5. High Bar — Dave Yates, Bruce McCracken, and Bob Coffin are all veterans and all perform well. Yates has been experimenting with a reverse giant swing into a front somi dismount and should have it ready for Springfield. Yates is UMass' best bet in this event.

6. Still Rings—Paydos and Williams loom as our big hopes. Both have smooth flowing and graceful routines that attract attention and get good scores from the judges.

BRUCE McCRACKEN on the side horse.

The meet will be conducted according to Eastern Collegiate rules.

Of course, few of us from the University can make it down to Philadelphia this weekend, but there is no reason why as many of us as possible cannot be at the Cage Tuesday night for the Springfield meet to give encouragement to a great squad.

Senior JIM ADAM goes through his graceful and powerful motions on the side horse. Jim has performed well in the preceding meets of this season and is expected to even better his performance in the upcoming meets.

Face The Future: A Half - Billion Whiskers

Tired of facing up to the mirror everyday to remove that stubble—or fuzz—from the beard?

Let's face it. The average guy will probably spend the equivalent of two full months of his life mowing almost a billion whiskers from his face.

Whoever can cut the man-hours involved in this job and make it easier and more convenient, stands to earn the gratitude of a generation of men (to say nothing of getting a substantial share of a half-billion dollars a year that Americans spend on shaving). Some day there may be a shaver that produces a ray to disintegrate beards. But even now, the technique of shaving has come a long way since primitive man first trimmed his beard with a sharpened clam shell.

It wasn't too long ago that a straight razor was the main shaving implement. But today, only old-timers remember using a straight razor and strop. Many, of course, still use blades, but there are millions of us who started right out shaving with electric shavers and never even got used to a blade razor.

This percentage grows steadily. Every year 4½ to 5 million more electric shavers are sold in the United States and the percentage of men using these most modern of shaving implements keeps growing.

At exactly what point the old blade razor will become as extinct as the straight razor is anybody's guess. The 1961 American College Panel survey reported 64.6 per cent of college men used electric shavers. Only eight years ago the percentage figure had just crossed the half-way mark.

The trend to electric shaving gained greater impetus this year with the publication of medical studies on the health aspects of the subject. With the public having been made conscious of the need to avoid excessive, repeated irritation anywhere on the body, there was intense interest in the findings that electric shavers cause no cuts and few nicks.

The Dermatologists' Report, based upon a clinical study completed in 1959 and published in a leading medical journal in March 1961, found that electric shaving gives greater protection because it removes 75 to 93 per cent fewer skin cells than does blade shaving.

Furthermore, the Dermatologists agreed electric shavers with adjustable roller combs, an exclusive feature of Remington shavers, offer the best combination of a safe close shave with the least irritation. Adjustable roller comb shavers were also found the most satisfactory instrument to use in the presence of some skin diseases (particularly acne aggravated by shaving.)

In the steady march toward the day when nothing will have to touch the face to remove whiskers, the most advanced instrument at the moment is the self-powered Remington Lektronic, that shaves without a cord.

Power is provided by rechargeable energy cells built to last the lifetime of the shaver and to give up to two weeks of cord-free shaves on a single, full charge.

Shaving has certainly come a long way from the days of the clam shell, the straight razor or any kind of blade shaving. Today's man prefers shaving electrically. Who knows what the most modern techniques will be 10 or 50 years from now?

Redmen Will Face Maine Bears In 2 Crucial Games

League-leading University of Massachusetts faces the University of Maine in an important Yankee Conference series Friday and Saturday nights at Curry Hicks Gymnasium at 8:15 p.m.

The Redmen, 4-1 in the conference, can further entrench themselves in the loop's top rung with a sweep of the two games. However, Maine owns a 3-2 conference record that includes an upset victory over Connecticut at Storrs. In other Conference action Maine split with New Hampshire and Vermont. Overall, the Black Bears stand 8-8. Massachusetts is now 8-7, winning four of their last five games.

Playing their best basketball of the season the Redmen swept a crucial pair of games from Rhode Island to take over the conference leadership. The return of stellar guard Mike Mole has played a prominent role in the team's recent success.

His presence has taken pressure off sophomore guard Pete Bernard, who has responded with two excellent defensive efforts against Rhody's high-scoring Charlie Lee. Sporting a 21-point average, Lee only totaled that much in two games and sank 7 of 30 attempts as he was continually harassed by the 5'8" Bernard. Meanwhile Pete scored 38 points in the two contests.

Up front, top scorer Rodger Twitchell, 6'8" center Don Black and Captain Kirk Leslie have rebounded and scored well to give the Redmen a well-balanced attack. In their four recent wins UMass has had five starters in double-figures three times and Tuesday night all but Leslie hit the double-figure mark.

Maine won't be taken lightly by Coach Matt Zunic, who saw his conference hopes squashed last year when the Redmen were whipped 78-75 and then obliterated 103-65 at Orono. Returning with the Maine quintet is captain Tom Chappelle, Maine's first 1000-plus scorer. The 6' senior needs just 20 more points to become the state of Maine's all-time scorer.

Rounding out the Black Bears' starting lineup will probably be 6'2" Don Harnum, or 6'4" Art Warren, 5'11" Laddie Deemer and 6'1" Ted Leadbetter. Harnum and Deemer each scored 23 points Tuesday night in a Conference win over New Hampshire.

CHARLIE FOHLIN

DON BLACK

The Redmen's two big centers, Charlie Fohlin and Don Black should see a lot of action this weekend. Both saw extensive play against Rhody, and both played fine ball.

Mass. Hockey Squad Defeats UConn, 9-2

by STEVE HEWEY '63

The University of Massachusetts hockey team, after spotting the visiting six a cheap goal shortly after the opening face-off, proceeded to annihilate the visiting Huskies of UConn, 9-2, at the Orr Rink in Amherst, Wednesday evening. The win for the Redmen boosts their overall record to 6 wins and 7 losses.

UConn left-winger Doug Nezon, skating around the Redmen end with the puck, gazed at the open UMass net and let fly with the puck which sailed in untouched to give the Huskies a short-lived 1-0 lead at the 53 second mark of the opening period.

In the second frame the UMass attack was temporarily subdued by UConn defenses. Only Ed Forbush could crack the front line for a goal. But as the UConn defenses were good in this period, so were those of the Redmen as they held the visitors scoreless.

The third period saw the UMass sextet add three more goals in a row to increase their lead, 9-1. Doug Nezon scored the final goal of the game after Frank Cesario was taken out of the nets after a staunch evening of defense.

The two UMass co-captains, Charlie Glew and Jim Ellingwood, dominated the play, Wednesday. Charlie found the UConn nets friendly for 4 goals and Jim cashed in for 3 more. Bob Glew and Ed Forbush each scored one.

ICE CHIPS

After 13 games played thus far this year, Jim Ellingwood is high team scorer for Steve Kosakowski's Redmen. Jim has 23 points on 9 goals and 14 assists. Charlie Donovan with 11 goals and 6 assists and 17 points shares the runner-up spot with Charlie Glew who also has 17 points on 13 goals and 4 assists. Third high Redmen scorer is Bob Glew who has tallied 14 points by way of 6 goals and 8 assists.

Coach Kosakowski will be aiming at record-evening win number 7 and the team members will be out to fatten their point totals tomorrow afternoon against a strong Norwich University crew at Norwich. Game time is at 2 p.m.

FRESHMAN CORNER

by IMA FROSH

Well, it's happened at last! The Freshmen finally have their own grubby little hole-in-the-wall, I mean corner. But size doesn't matter, our class is out to do BIG things.

Thursday morning at 11 o'clock in the Student Union Ballroom, Dean Field will speak on the ominous subject—the cume. This, however, is only one phase of our "really big shew". We poor uneducated, uncoordinated freshmen will be given a chance to sign up for typing and slide rule courses; in addition, we will learn all about how our officers are spending our money, what lies ahead in the way of class activities, and all about the Winter Carni snow sculpture.

We can look forward to having a class constitution and also a magazine of the class, by the class, for the class, and about the class. So don't forget the Freshman Class Meeting. It's not very often that we have an opportunity to be together as a class, and this meeting concerns each and every one of us.

Chubby Checker To Appear In Springfield February 24

Chubby Checker, who is credited with popularizing the 'Twist' nationally will perform for a dance being held at the Springfield Municipal Auditorium on Saturday night, February 24.

Mr. Checker and the 'Twist' are the hottest attractions in show business at the moment. He is the cause of this the greatest dance craze in years. Both "Life" and "Time" magazines have featured this new dance, which has traveled to Europe where international society sets hold 'Twist parties'.

Chubby's records and albums are currently among the best sellers. He has appeared on the Ed Sullivan show and is currently being sought by the best and biggest night clubs. His ambition was to be an actor, which is coming about through his contracts for several films.

This production is being undertaken by Joe Mancuso of Hartford, who is a junior at Worcester Tech. Mr. Mancuso's most recent production was Johnny Mathis's performance in Hartford at the Bushnell Memorial Auditorium.

"I'm going to keep Chubby's dance on a dignified level", Mancuso said, "Nobody under 18 will be allowed inside the hall. Dress will be semi-formal, which means the young women are expected to wear dresses, and the men will wear suits."

"I'm running a 'Twist Contest' with Springfield members of the Arthur Murray studio as the judges. Howard Lemaire, who is the manager of the studio, will award two beautiful stereo record players to the most talented twisting couple among the audience."

Synthesis Holds Symposium To Discuss Nuclear Testing

by KAREN BURGESS '64

Last Wednesday night a panel of five Amherst College and UMass professors met at Bowker Auditorium in a Symposium to debate the issue and effects created by nuclear testing. The meeting was moderated by Dean Hunsberger.

The Symposium, sponsored by Synthesis, a four-college political organization, was opened by Mike Palter, who explained some of the aims of the group, the most immediate of which is to secure nuclear disarmament. Members of synthesis have demonstrated in Washington for this end. He pointed out that not all of the Washington demonstrators were in total agreement with Synthesis but acted out of a spirit of peace.

Professor Henry T. Yost of the Amherst Biology dept. informed the group that there is no such thing as a safe dose of radiation. With every new dose of fallout, there is the serious hazard that 100,000 people will die from leukemia as a result. The genetic effects of this fallout could be even worse. Dr. Yost said that a nuclear war would kill us all, and that peace should be preserved at all costs.

Professor Adam Perry, of the Amherst Classics department, agreed with the turn toward peace, and said that the decision on whether to resume nuclear testing should be left up to the majority of people and not on the shoulders of a few technicians.

Professor John Fenton of the UMass government department explained some of the beneficial effects of the Cold War, such as improved living conditions and a population explosion. If, however, either the United States or Russia won the Cold War, loss of this competition would be a tragedy. Fenton supported the idea of competition, not Soviet domination, believing that testing should be resumed if Russia is leading.

John Foster, Assistant Professor of Agricultural Economics at UMass, showed that there is a great danger of radiation from vegetables and milk.

Arnold Silver, of the UMass English department, warned that the peace groups are out to destroy. "It's better to be dead than Red even if there is the calculated risk of radiation fallout." Silver cautioned that there can be no appeasement of the Russians and that any negotiations should be made for our benefit.

Margaret Loomis Receives Opera Company Scholarship

Margaret Loomis, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ralph Loomis of Lincoln Avenue, has been named as recipient of this year's Amherst Community Opera Company Scholarship.

A 1960 honor graduate of Amherst Regional High School, Miss Loomis is now a sophomore at the University of Massachusetts. At the University she is a member and soloist of the University Chorale and a member of the Literary Club. She was last year's winner of the University Alumni Scholarship.

During the past year, Miss Loomis has appeared as soloist for many local service organizations. On campus, she was soloist for the 1961 graduation of the School of Nursing. Winner of the University's 1961 Talent Show, she will represent the U. of M. in a similar contest at the University of Connecticut later this month (February).

Miss Loomis is a member of the First Congregational Church Choir and the Pioneer Valley Symphony Chorus. A voice student of Miss Helen Olheim, Miss Loomis plans to use her AMCOP scholarship funds for further musical studies.

Members of the Amherst Community Opera Company's Scholarship committee are: Mrs. Theodore Soller, Chairman; Miss Patricia Brown; J. Heywood Alexander; Mrs. Robert Gass and Mrs. Frederick Ellert.

(c) Another cue bid. North has more than a minimum for his first bid.

(d) North can count at least 33 points and first round controls of all suits but the trump suit, so slam should be very likely.

This hand was selected from the last Thursday night game because it illustrates the effective use of the cue bid. The opening lead is the spade deuce which goes to declarer's king. A spade is led to dummy's ace, and the queen of diamonds is finessed with east playing the king. At this point declarer can count all the tricks as the small diamond and small heart can be ruffed in dummy. The reason the grand slam is an unwise bid even though it makes is that a finess is necessary while the small slam is sure.

Faculty Senate Aware Of Student Problems

by NEAL ANDELMAN '63

"Campus police action relative to student picketing of the ROTC dance" was a recent item on the UMass Faculty Senate agenda. Discussions of this nature point out that the faculty are cognizant of student problems as well as academic matters.

Police Training To Begin

Dean Field stated the University's position on the matter of student demonstrations and other campus police matters. "The University stands firmly for the right of all to participate in orderly democratic demonstrations, and it is not intended that they be limited in any way." He went on to point out that "opportunities for formal training of campus police have been limited, but that this situation is being corrected, and training will begin shortly."

Weapons or Not Weapons

Another matter discussed was the use of sidearms by campus police. First, do our police need side-arms? Dean Field answered "side-arms are carried because our police have all the functions, responsibilities, and may encounter all the dangers of regular policemen, and arms are a part of the equipment of regular policemen."

Next arose the problem of training the police in the use of these weapons. Prof. Conlin asked Dean Field if the police were trained in the use of side-arms. Dean Field replied that training in the use of side-arms will start next semester.

One final matter that Dean Field commented on was that "the positioning of armed police at the bookstore is recognized as an imprudent gesture . . . The procedure will be changed next semester."

Registration Rules Passed

Several new rules regarding registration matters have been passed by the Faculty Senate. Among these are that: (1) courses may not be added to a student's schedule after the first ten calendar days of classes; (2) for a student to receive credit for an added course, he must have the recommendation of his advisor and the Registrar; (3) a student may withdraw from a course within ten calender days after the start of classes without its being recorded on his permanent record; (4) a student may withdraw from a course before 28 calendar days and receive a "W" (withdrew passing) on his permanent record; (5) a student who withdraws from a class after 28 calendar days will receive a "WF"—withdrew failing; (6) students must take a minimum of 12 credits each semester; and (7) a course dropped without the approval of the registrar and a student's advisor is regarded as a failure. It was pointed out that exceptions may be made in extenuating circumstances.

Classes Cancelled For Columbus

Another note from the minutes of the Faculty Senate which may be of minor interest to UMass students is that Provost Woodside, acting upon an opinion from the State Attorney General's Office, has instructed that classes be cancelled on Columbus Day.

(The next article in this series will include the Faculty Senate's opinion on voluntary vs. compulsory ROTC, as well as other matters pertinent to the student body.)

by STEVE LEVINE '65

A new organization on the UMass campus is the Young Americans for Freedom Club, a group dedicated to providing leadership for young political conservatives, especially those on the nation's campuses.

Intend to Make Noise

"We intend to make a little more noise as Synthesis is doing," said Denson Satterfield, the organizer and president of the club on this campus. He feels that the dedication and perseverence of liberals has accounted for much of the success of their movement. Satterfield considers his club an educational group striving to clarify the principles of conservatism. "Many people consider us a fanatical group living in the past," he said. "We believe that the past has many lessons for the modern world and that studying the mistakes of the past is the surest way to avoid repeating them."

Impressed by Synthesis

Satterfield attended the Synthesis symposium last Wednesday evening. "I was quite impressed," he said. "Their arguments were persuasive, and they were all educated men, but they seem to be living in a dream. They were idealistic but impractical."

YAF is a national society with no affiliations to a political party or to any other conservative group. It has testified before Congress for its measures, and has supported others by picketing.

Campus News Broadcast To Begin From Collegian

UMass student communications facilities will team up to present 15 minutes of campus news every Monday, Wednesday, and Friday at 6:45 p.m. beginning Monday, February 12.

The campus news broadcast will originate from the Collegian news room and will be broadcasted by a WMUA announcer following the regular WMUA program of world news and commentary by Louis Lyons at 6:30 p.m.

The WMUA-Collegian program will consist of campus news as compiled and edited by the Collegian news staff and will include news and sports as well as the regular Collegian feature, the Club Directory.

The program has been made possible through the cooperation of the S.U. and the joint efforts of WMUA and the Collegian. A special telephone line will be installed in the Collegian office to permit direct communication with the campus over WMUA's broadcasting facilities.

Final Precisionette Tryouts To Be Held On Wednesday

Final tryouts for the Precisionettes Drill Team will be held Wednesday, Feb. 14 at 5 p.m. in the S.U. To be eligible a girl must be between the heights of 5'4" and 5'7" tall and must have an acceptable scholastic average.

The sixty girls comprising the Precisionettes perform during the football season under the direction of Joseph Contino, Director of University Bands. The Precisionettes are known throughout New England for their precision marching and showmanship. Every girl must perform with a feeling of supreme confidence and with an intense desire to please and thrill an audience. Achieving this confidence for each 15 minute performance requires at least 6 hours of practice a week.

During the five week tryout session each potential Precisionette undergoes a program of drilling designed to train her in self discipline so that she will be able to execute maneuvers precisely and instantaneously. Each candidate will be judged on her sense of cadence, beat, ability to perform simple maneuvers of marching, and ability to improve during the five weeks. From a field of over 200 applicants, approximately thirty girls will be chosen to become Precisionettes.

The newly appointed squad leaders Constance Curtis, Patricia Fielding, Judy Soule, Joanne Solitario, Joyce Traquair and Carolyn Mozden will help Mr. Contino train the candidates. Since no previous marching experience is necessary in order to tryout, the squad leaders will teach and demonstrate correct drill procedures. Don Witkowski will serve his third year as drill master for the Precisionettes.

Fashion Show To Be Held Saturday

The Winter Carnival Queen and her court will be included among the fashion models for the International Fashion show being held as part of the Winter Carnival Weekend. The show, beginning at 3 p.m. on Saturday, February 17, is based on the theme of the weekend, "With a Continental Flair," and will feature imported but practical-on-campus outfits.

Dr. Marion A. Niederpruem, dean of the School of Home Economics, will act as advisor and commentator for the show.

Modeling men's clothing will be Tex Tacelli '62, John Gounaris '63, Paul Pisinski '64, and Jim Bloom '64.

Two graduate foreign students, Rosalita de la Mar and Seva Sud, will also participate.

Admission to the Fashion Show is 50 cents.

This is a playground in "The Inner City". Children of the families in the tenaments surrounding this area use it as a recreation area. Many aspects of "The Inner City" will be discussed at a Coffee Hour Thursday at 7 p.m. in the Colonial Lounge of the SU.

Problems Of The Inner City To Be Discussed On Tuesday

by DICK HAYNES '64

"Renewal in the Inner City" will be subject of an informal Coffee Hour to be held on Tuesday, Feb. 13 at 7 p.m. in the Colonial Lounge of the SU. The discussion is sponsored by Alpha Phi Omega, The Womans' Service Organization, and the Christian Association.

During the last two months, a group of UMass students has been working with needy families in the "Inner City", a three-block by 10-block section of the North End of Springfield. These students have participated in two weekend workcamps and several special projects. one of which was taking some of the children Christmas Carolling.

The students are working under the directorship of Mr. and Mrs. Carl Olivier, volunteer directors of North End Workcamping Activities.

[illegible]iers and Max Imhoff, a veteran of both Springfield and Roxbury workcamps, will speak at the Coffee Hour about the "Inner City" and its problems.

Getting The Best Costs — But It's Worth It

The Best Students:

An important bill will be coming up before the student senate very soon, and the action taken by the legislators could have broad implications for the future quality of the University. The bill concerns an unusual project that has been undertaken by the Special Committee on Promising Entrants (SCOPE).

SCOPE, composed of faculty and students, has initiated a High School Honor Students' Day to be held at the University in the spring. The purpose of the occasion is to bring to campus the top scholars in the state and to show them what the University has to offer, perhaps inducing some of them to attend UMass rather than a smaller, private college. SCOPE has entrusted to Adelphia the task of organizing the Honor Students' Day and bringing the students to campus.

The cost of operating such an all-day conference is considerable: Charles Curtis, Adelphia treasurer, estimates it at about $1200 for this year. The University has offered to foot half of the tab, the bill before the senate asks the students to provide the other half.

It is the belief of SCOPE and of Adelphia that such a program, in order to be successful, must have the wholehearted endorsement of the student body. If the students don't care about improving the quality of their University, then there's little sense in taking the trouble to organize the event.

The $600 worth of support that is being asked in the bill (sponsored by Senator Robert Brauer) will not require any additional payment of taxes by the students: it will be taken out of the surplus that exists in the senate treasury. Here is a chance for students who are sincerely interested in the excellence of their University to do something about it by approaching their senators and urging passage of this vital bill.

—A.B.

The Best Professors:

For the price of about one mile of highway, the General Court can make a significant contribution to academic excellence here at the University. This contribution is in the form of H. 1504, a proposed salary increase for the faculty. According to the computations of the two sponsoring groups, the total cost for this increase will be approximately one and one half million dollars. The cost of constructing one mile of highway amounts to about one and one quarter million. Therefore the question we pose is, is a step toward a distinguished university worth the price of a mile of road?

This increase is not only a step in the right direction, but is a necessity in the light of our future expansion. By 1965, enrollment is expected to reach 10,000. Our faculty must be stabilized; that is, the present members kept and new members recruited. The curriculum for the future is now being planned, and the departments must be able to count on each faculty member remaining here. The faculty will be enlarged, and if we are to have a top quality faculty we must pay top quality wages. But, it must be understood that this increase will not put us in the forefront in recruiting. It will merely put us in the middle instead of leaving us in the rear. Massachusetts has never followed in education, it has always led. An educational system is no better than its instructors, and no person can be so naive as to believe that we can get top quality professors at rock bottom prices. There is no such thing as bargain basement education.

Since its founding, the University has been overshadowed by the better known Eastern private colleges. Thus, the public does not see the potentiality of a strong, distinguished state university. If we are ever to achieve this, steps have to be taken now. Our present faculty gives us a strong foundation to build upon. It would be the epitome of foolhardiness to build a weak frame on a strong foundation.

Therefore, let the General Court pass H.1504, and instead of building a road between two geographical points, they will be building a road to the future.

On Student Government: Is the Senate Treated With General Apathy?

Recognize Administration Problems Brauer Tells Student Senate

The following is the text of a speech delivered from the floor of the Student Senate last Wednesday evening by Senator Robert Brauer '64 of Butterfield concerning student government and the ROTC question.

"The question with which we are dealing now, namely that of endorsing or opposing voluntary ROTC on our campus, seems to me to have more implications than at first meet the eye. This question involves more than ROTC alone; it encompasses a large area of affairs which the students and the Student Government on this campus do not seem aware of.

"I have been informed by reliable sources that Student Government throughout America is, on the whole, dying on the college campus. Do we, as Senators, know why this unfortunate trend is taking place? Are we aware of why certain campus administrations have dissolved their Student Senates? It seems to me that the answer to these questions is no? We do not know why other campuses have lost their student autonomy. We merely hope that this will not happen on our own campus.

Opinion On Student Government

"If I may, I would like to express my own opinion on why Student Government is losing stride so rapidly throughout America and why, on our own campus, the Senate is treated with general apathy on the part of the student body.

"A college education normally instills within a person a sense of idealism which this person uually obtains, for the first time in his life, during his college years. As a result of this newly gained set of ideals, the typical college student feels obliged to proclaim to the world his recently acquired revelation. This "proclamation" takes place in many foms, some of which include marching on the White House in defense of unilateral disarmament or, of the mere expression of one's feelings on a particular matter, ROTC in this case.

"Please do not misunderstand me! I do not oppose anyone who expresses his opinions. But it seems to me that one should be aware of which channel he uses to express these opinions. I definitely feel, for instance, that letters, even controversial letters, should appear in our newspapers. Every issue of controversy has, of course, two sides to be told, and through the media of the press this can be accomplished.

Extra Considerations

"However, there are certain issues which carry extra considerations and which require action and words only at a time when they can be used effectively. Such an issue is the ROTC question.

"I, myself, am in favor of voluntary ROTC on the campus of the University of Massachusetts. Yet, I will not support the motion before us tonight. I will not do so for one reason in particular. As I stated before, I am aware of the backward trend of Student Government on the American college campus. It is my belief that this occurrence has taken place due to the fact that students and their campus governments long in such a way to express their "newly-gained set of ideals" that they fail to understand the position and problems in and with which their administrations are faced. This is particularly true when speaking of a state institution, such as our own, whose financial dependence upon certain persons of influence requires it to be most careful in its political dealings.

"Perhaps, if the students in general and the student government in particular would try to understand the administration's problems, and would co-operate with the administration in every way possible, student government would find its way back.

"It is obvious that our administration has valid reasons for delaying the ROTC question. Let's find what these reasons are before making a decision which could lead us nowhere but in the wrong direction."

Who Are The Patriots?

To the Editor:

I would like to reply to those whose letters appeared in the Collegian of Wednesday, February 7, setting forth the purposes for the existence of Synthesis and similar groups, and clarifying their right and perhaps their obligation to exist.

Some of those opposed to such groups would say that they are unpatriotic, "a discourtesy to the national government." May I remind Mr. Halevy that the national government, or any other government in this country is not set up to be served, but to serve those who have created it. ". . . that to secure these rights, governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed, etc." I believe that I need not give the source of the quotation. These people, if asked what they were defending, would answer "my flag", or "my country", and would be unable to consider or discuss the implications of these phrases. These platitude-mumblers, in my opinion, are far more "unpatriotic" than those involved in movements such as Synthesis. It is my feeling that to feel patriotism to some country or some flag solely because one is born under it is folly. One defends an idea, an ideal, that in which one believes, rather than a specific object. The ideals of this country are most emphatically worth defending, and this is what Synthesis is doing, by means of trying to save the entire world from destruction. The liberties set forth by the founders of this country are increasingly being limited, and its moral atmosphere is far from what it should be. Synthesis,in my estimation, is trying to point out the ideals and is striving to reach them. In this sense, it is far more patriotic than those who would merely defend the status quo for the sole reason that it exists.

Now, Mr. Buckley, I deeply resent your use of the terms "communist" and "conscientious objector" both in your letter and in your rude interruption of last Sunday's meeting. The word "communist" is increasingly being used by those who do not know any better, to include all those who are concerned about a world which with very little effort can be eliminated. The phrase "conscientious objector" applies to persons who refuse to fight on moral and religious grounds. I rather doubt that any of Synthesis' members has this status. A more careful choice of words would be advisable. May I suggest a good dictionary, at the very least?

Further, in the throes of your super-patriotism, you would have us black-balled, silenced. Is this, or is it not, a direct negation of the ideals which you profess to uphold so strongly?

Synthesis and similar organizations are groups which are trying desperately to end testing and the arms race, so that we may sincerely live by the idea in which we all profess so strongly to believe. At the risk of sounding repitious, I say again that a war would obliterate civilization. The present course of both the United States and the U.S.S.R. is leading us rapidly in this direction. We must end this utter foolishness before it becomes utter nothingness. The members of Synthesis are trying with heart and soul to produce a world in which we can live, and live as self-respecting human beings.

The Pathfinder

As I emerge from line 7 at the Commons (I have my own line) and peer with squinty eye in the general direction of Bartlett, I suddenly perceive a new route across campus!

With a bound I cut towards Morrill and the new physics building, travelling parallel and approximately 20 feet to the left of those bourgeois students walking on sidewalks. Here I make an extreme right, taking care to avoid such pitfalls as wayward construction projects, and cut a path of alternate transverse past the workmen.

At this point I step onto ice, the most treacherous part of my journey. Assuming an air of bravado, I stiffen my leg muscles and proceed cautiously, at the same time tensing my neck muscles preparatory to smiling confidently at all passersby.

Now I approach the college pond, Lake Lackablasko, a forgotten oxbow of the Connecticut River. I pass the Student Union Botanical Gardens where ---- can be seen through the brush, Metawampee's hinny. (As a little outside fact, the whole arrangement was donated by Harvard in 1867 in memory of the Japs.)

Now, a further cross-country cut past Old Chapel, between two poplars (be careful, low bridge), over a low stone wall, and we're there!

What did you say? You were going to Goessman?

Paul Meier Dies In Hospital From Auto Collision Injuries

Paul J. Meier, Assistant Professor of Economics, died February 8, 1962, at the Cooley Dickinson Hospital, Northampton, Massachusetts as a result of an automobile accident February 4, 1962. Mr. Meier resided at 88 North Prospect Street, Amherst. He was 33 years old.

Born in Basel, Switzerland, in 1928, Mr. Meier was educated at the University of Basel and received his M.A. and Ph.D. in Economics from Basel.

Mr. Meier entered this country in 1958 and taught at Clarkson College of Technology, Pottsdam, New York, before coming to the University in September of 1960. Prior to Clarkson Mr. Meier had taught at Sir George Williams University, Montreal, Canada, and at the University of Basel. During this period he was associated with the Swiss Bank Corporation, in Basel as an Assistant Economic Advisor and with the Credit Swisse, a Swiss bank in Montreal, as an Economist. Mr. Meier was also a member of the American Economic Association and the Montreal Institute of Investment Analysts.

A very active man, Mr. Meier was involved in research in economic development at the time of his death and numerous articles written by him concerning economics and theology had appeared in magazines in this country and in Europe.

He was regarded by his colleagues in the Economics Department as one of the most learned men there, being well versed not only in economics, but in theology, philosophy, and literature as well. Students with a zest for learning spoke of Mr. Meier as being demanding and challenging, and as having those qualities that foster the spirit of inquiry which is so necessary for an institution of higher education to exist and to attain is objectives. Students, teachers, and all persons associated with the academic field regret his loss, especially since he had not the time to fully to realize his contribution to the field.

Mr. Meier is survived by his mother and a sister in Basel, Switzerland.

THE TRUE AND TRAGICAL TALE OF HAPPY JACK SIGAFOOS

Who would have thought that Happy Jack Sigafoos, the boy the sky never rained on, would teeter on the edge of a life of crime?

Certainly there was no sign of it in his boyhood. His home life was tranquil and uplifting. His mother was a nice fat lady who hummed a lot and gave baskets to the poor. His father was a respected citizen who could imitate more than 400 bird calls and once saved an elderly widow from drowning in his good suit. (That is, Mr. Sigafoos was in his good suit; the elderly widow was in swimming trunks.) Happy Jack's life was nothing short of idyllic—till he went off to college.

Here Happy Jack quickly became a typical freshman—tweedy, seedy, and needy. He learned the joys of rounding out his personality, and he learned the cost. His allowance vanished like dew before the morning sun. There were times, it grieves me to report, when he didn't even have enough money for a pack of Marlboro Cigarettes—and you know how miserable that can be! To be deprived of Marlboro's matchless flavor, its easy-drawing filter, its subtly blended tastiness, its refreshing mildness, its ineffable excellence, its soft pack or flip-top box—why, it is a prospect to break the heart in twain!

Marlboro-less and miserable, Happy Jack tried to get more money from home. He wrote long, impassioned letters, pointing out that the modern, large-capacity girl simply could not be courted on his meager allowance. But all Jack got back from home were tiresome homilies about thrift and prudence.

Then one dark day a sinister sophomore came up to Jack and said, "For one dollar I will sell you a list of fiendishly clever lies to tell your father when you need some extra money."

He gave Jack the list of fiendishly clever lies. Jack read:

1. A bunch of us fellows are getting together to buy a new house for the Dean of Men.

2. A bunch of us fellows are getting together to buy a headstone for Rover, our late beloved dormitory watchdog.

3. A bunch of us fellows are getting together to endow a chair of Etruscan Art.

4. A bunch of us fellows are getting together to build our own particle accelerator.

For a moment poor Jack was tempted; surely his father could not but support all these laudable causes. Then Jack's good upbringing came to the fore. He turned to the sinister sophomore and said, "No, thank you. I could not deceive my aged parent so. And as for you, sir, I can only say—fie!"

Upon hearing this the sinister sophomore broke into a huge grin. He whipped off his black hat and pasty face—and who do you think it was? None other than Mr. Sigafoos, Happy Jack's father, that's who!

"Good lad!" cried Mr. Sigafoos. "You have passed your test brilliantly." With that he gave Happy Jack a half million dollars in small bills and a red convertible containing power steering and four nubile maidens.

Crime does not pay!

Money and girls haven't changed Happy Jack. Except for the minor bulge in his cashmere jacket caused by (1) a pack of Marlboros and (2) a box of Marlboros, he's the same old Sigafoos.

To the Editor:

The February 9 Collegian summary of the faculty symposium on sor Silver's talk. Then it fell into gross distortion.
Silver's talk. Then it fell into gross distortion.

Professor Silver analyzed the danger involved in the glib use of such words and phrases as "calculated risk," "red or dead," "cold war," "appeasement"—the standard, emotion-laden vocabulary of the right wing. He argued that in the interests of our own survival we should not allow our minds to be stultified by such terminology.

Contrary to the impression conveyed by your reporter, he supported peace efforts and endorsed student protests against resumption of atmospheric tests.

Raymond D. Gozzi
Asst. Prof. of English

Hit or Miss—

To the Editor:

After three and one-half years as an undergraduate I have one complaint which I believe goes to the root of the most significant inadequacies of our University.

I have often found myself registering for courses in which I had only passing interest mainly because I knew the calibre of the teacher, and shying away from other courses in which I may have had a great interest, because the professor was incompetent as a teacher. This is commonly known as "picking the teacher, rather than the course," and I understand that I am not alone in practicing it. What is more unfortunate, I frequently make mistakes in my choices, and I must then suffer through a course taught by someone who may be a brilliant scholar, but who has no intellectual contact with his class.

The problem is this—not even a Dean, let alone a student, has any means of evaluating the teaching skill of the faculties. In fact, it is considered indiscreet even to ask, and only in the case of the greatest injustice will a student complain to a department head, if even then. A teacher's scholarly achievements are easily seen in the quantity and quality of his published work. But what do his students, especially underclassmen, benefit from his published work when they may touch on his speciality for only a day or two during the semester? In an increasing number of unhappy instances they profit little.

I do not ask for increased stress on methodology in the training of teachers—only a system of evaluation by which a student may make intelligent choices at registration, one which would enable the department heads and Deans more easily to determine the competence of their staffs, and one which would serve notice on lazy or incompetent teachers that they have a responsibility to their students as well as to the administration. Let us note here that, to my knowledge, the Chemistry Department is the only one which conducts a comprehensive survey of its faculty, and, incidentally has one of the finest teaching staffs on campus.

The most important criterion for evaluation should be the degree of intellectual challenge a teacher offers his students. If we are forced to study the caprices of the teacher rather than the demands of the subject, then the teacher has clearly failed his first duty. Naturally a genial disposition and friendly relations with the class are important—but secondary. I have studied harder for a course taught by someone I despise yet respected than I have for another course taught by a genial incompetent.

As an English major I have been fortunate to be in a generally well-staffed department, but even there I find a few whose reputations among their colleagues would plummet if it became known how they conduct their classes. For the reasons here outlined I feel that a University-wide system of teacher evaluation merits further consideration.

UMass Economics Association Plans Weds. Program

The UMass Economics Association is presenting a discussion aimed at giving the student a clearer understanding of the occupations available for economics majors. Dr. Philip Gamble will elaborate on the career opportunities open for students with a B.A. while Robert Morrissey, Placement Officer for Men will present information concerning careers open to post-graduate students in economics.

This discussion should prove interesting and valuable to students who have not as yet selected their major and also to presently confirmed economic majors. In addition, election of officers for the coming year will be held. All interested persons are encouraged to attend this meeting to be held in the Barnstable room of the S.U. on Wednesday, Feb. 14 at 7:15 p.m.

Freshmen Hoop Squad Downs Stockbridge, Chamberlayne

by AL COHEN '63

Coach Jack Leaman's freshman basketball team is now 7-1 on the season by virtue of two weekend victories at the Cage. Fourteen Braves saw action in Friday's prelim as the yearlings handed Stockbridge a 74-34 drubbing. On Saturday a scrappy Chamberlayne Junior College five fell victim by a 61-55 count.

Reynolds with 11 markers and Lindberg with 12 led the Braves over Stockbridge. Ted Hyland had 10 for the losers. The Blue, behind 39-9 at the half, were outscored by only 10 points in the second canto.

Saturday's game proved a much more closely contested affair as a small but defense-minded Chamberlayne squad held the Brave offense to 31 first half points. The frosh, behind Clarence Hill and Chuck O'Rourke rushed into a 31-18 lead with less than four minutes remaining in the first half of play. Chamberlayne countered with 8 straight to trail by five at the buzzer.

The lead see-sawed for much of the second half until successive baskets by O'Rourke, Gerry Knight and Jim Retos gave the Braves a 54-40 bulge. Then Hill and the visitors traded four baskets each for 61-47. The final two minutes saw the hustling Chamberlaynes erupt for eight more markers in a desperate comeback attempt.

Hill led the Little Redmen with 18. Guard Jim Neary impressed with 7 from the floor for a total of 14. Walsch sparked the visitors with 13.

Just how much the loss of first semester sensation Steve Bonds will hurt the Braves will be seen this Tueday night when the University of Connecticut Pups are host to the Leamens. The Braves were able to topple the Pups in overtime largely due to the efforts of Bonds in their Amherst encounter last December. Leaman will probably go with the same five who started against Chamberlayne, Hill, Kingston, O'Rourke, Retos, and Knight.

LOOKS LIKE TWO

This UMass freshman doesn't look as if he'll have much trouble in sinking his layup. A Chamberlayne rookie makes a good try.

Varsity Rifle Team Beats Brown, Downed At YanCons

Team captain Ed Moses once again led the varsity rifle team to victory as it outclassed Brown University Friday night at Brown. Moses' 284, followed closely by Fluet with 282 sparked the Redmen to a team total of 1383, their highest shoulder-to-shoulder score of the season. Wright was high for the Bears with a good 278, but lacked needed team support as Brown posted a team total of 1338.

Immediately after firing Brown the Redmen moved on to URI for Saturday's Yankee Conference match. In spite of Hal Butterworth's excellent 281, complete team support was somewhat lacking. After Moses and Fluet both dropped from Friday's scores by shooting 274's, Mark Nataupsky improved his score and moved up to the number two slot with a 277. Doug Wells also added two points to Friday's score for a 268.

Although Vermont was victorious with a 1388, their score was but 19 points higher than low scoring Maine's 1369. Trailing Vermont by one point was UConn with 1387, followed by URI and UMass. UNH took an automatic last place by failure to appear.

The UMass record of 6 wins and 9 losses in the New England College Rifle League is a good improvement over last year, and shows promise for the future. The YanCon totals:

Nataupsky	99	89	89	277
Moses	98	95	81	274
Fluet	98	95	81	274
Wells	92	91	85	268

Redmen Grab Two Games From Maine 65-54, 72-66

UConn Seen As Big Threat To UMass 6-1 Conference Slate

by AL BERMAN '62

The League-Leading Massachusetts Redmen stretched their winning streak to five games over the weekend by topping the University of Maine in two important conference contests. The Redmen, in 65-54 and 72-66 victories, extended their season's record to 10-7 and their YanCon slate to 6-1.

BOTH SCORES MISLEADING

Neither of the scores tell the stories of the games. In Friday night's contest, which UMass won by 11 points, the game was very close all the way, as both teams were fairly cold.

Two straight hoops by Roger Twitchell opened a small gap for the Redmen early in the half, but the Bears soon caught up and the play stayed even until four points by Pete Bernard pushed UMass into a five-point lead at the half-time buzzer.

But ref, (ha, ha), you know I wouldn't hit a soul.

TWITCHELL, FOHLIN SWITCH

The second half started with Twitchell playing center and Charlie Fohlin at forward. As Twitch explained later, the switch was adopted by Coach Matt Zunic in order to force Maine into a defensive setup that would enable Roger to shoot more often.

The second half was close and hard-fought for the first 10 minutes. Then a steal and fast break by Pete Bernard at 8:30 resulted in a hoop that put the Redmen ahead again by five. Pete's hustle provided the spark that set off the dozing Redmen for the first time in the game, and from then on it was no contest.

Soon the Redmen found themselves on the long end of a 14-point bulge, and coasted the rest of the way.

SATURDAY NIGHT DIFFERENT

Even though the score of Saturday night's game might indicate a closer game than Friday's match, it just wasn't so. The Redmen were never in trouble until the closing seconds of the game.

The rebounding and shooting of Kirk Leslie lifted UMass to a 20-11 lead by 10:000, and the dead eyes of Twitchell and Mike Mole kept the Redmen ahead, with the half ending at 36-31.

At the beginning of the second half, when Bernard and Twitchell combined to open the lead to 54-40, it was beginning to look like a runaway. But UMass could never quite get those extra few hoops that would have sewn the game up early. Instead, Maine kept coming back to within striking distance.

PRESS ANNOYED REDMEN

The full-court press adopted by the Bears was harassing the UMass squad, and when mastermind Mike Mole fouled out the Redmen could no longer cope with the constant pressure.

As the clock ticked away the final minutes the Bears kept coming closer. With seconds to play they had come to within four points and, with a break, might have been able to tie it up. But then Twitchell was fouled at 0:04 and sunk his two clutch throws to give the Redmen a six point lead.

THE LITTLE RABBIT

Peter Bernard goes up with the ball and seems to be pointing with an air of authority at the soon-to-swish nets.

DRIBBLING AROUND

Kirk Leslie played perhaps his finest series of the year as he scored 30 points and snagged 27 rebounds in the two games . . . Charlie Fohlin, after doing a great job at center and forward Friday night, got himself thrown out of the Saturday contest for being too belligerent . . . After Mole fouled out in the first game Bob Johnson came in and looked sharp as he scored 5 straight points . . . . Maine's Skip Chappelle scored 35 points in the series and in doing so became the highest scorer of any basketball player in history in the state of Maine . . . . UMass fans really showed that they had learned the "Sportsmanship Code" (printed on the back of the programs) as they gave Chappelle a long ovation when his record was announced.

STILL DRIBBLING

Although Maine is now virtually eliminated from the conference race (3-4), the battle for the crown is still red hot. UMass at 6-1 is in a good position to take the honors, but a victory against UConn tomorrow night at Storrs is essential. Rhode Island and Connecticut have only 2 losses each, and the Redmen have not won a basketabll game on UConn's home court in 26 years.

A loss to the huskies would put the Conference in a three-way tie . . . . Then there is also Vermont to contend with, a team always tough at home. The season will close when UMass entertains UNH here on March 3.

Peace Corps Test Scheduled For Next Saturday Morning

The next Peace Corps placement tests will be administered on Saturday, February 17. The placement test is divided into two batteries.

The general examination is for all applicants who wish to be considered for any Peace Corps project except secondary school and college level teaching positions.

The secondary school teacher's examination is for all applicants who want to teach in secondary schools or at the university level.

The examinations will begin promptly at 8:30 a.m. at Jones Library. The two batteries described above will be administered concurrently. Each battery requires about 4½ hours; an optional hour is offered in the afternoon.

The tests are not competitive. There is no passing or failing score. The test is designed to give us one profile of the applicant.

Eleven Freshmen Admitted To Soph Honors Colloquium

The traditional rivalry between college freshmen and sophomores is taking on new dimension as eleven outstanding first-year students at the University of Massachusetts invade the sophomore honors program this week.

The eleven are part of a contingent of fifty four outstanding freshmen who have been admitted to special seminars designed specifically for superior students.

Called Honors Colloquia, the seminars have been opened to freshmen this semester for the first time since the program began in 1960. All three classes at the University — freshmen through junior — now have honors programs serving as preliminaries to Senior Honors.

Each seminar enrolls about twelve students representing a cross-section of academic interests. And instead of one teacher to guide the class, the system calls for two instructors — from different fields.

The two-teacher cross-section approach is meant to reflect the fact that knowledge is a matter of many interlocking relationships. An engineering students sits alongside a major in art, for instance, and both learn more, about values in architecture. Also, hearing a physics and a philosophy teacher discuss "The Philosophy of Science," a topic for one of last semester's seminars, gives students a greater sense of perspective about the subject.

Each two-hour discussion session is based on a tough program of preliminary research and reading. The 130 students currently enrolled in the program are expected to formulate ideas from their reading and then defend them during exchange of views in the seminar.

Opening of seminar doors to freshmen brings the University's overall honors program close to full development. Early admission of superior high school students, advanced placement for entering freshmen, the honors colloquia, and senior honors are all part of that program, designed to give the superior student a chance for fuller intellectual development.

NOTICE

One of the most popular musicals of recent years for sophisticated audiences, "Les Girls", stars Gene Kelly, Mitzi Gaynor, Kay Kendall, Taina Elg, and songs by Cole Porter. Three girls travel through Europe together as part of a hit revue. One of the girls later publishes a book of memories and is promptly sued for libel by the other two. A series of flashbacks show the same set of incidences as related by the three conflicting testimonies, keeping the courts (and the audience) in doubt as to who, if anyone, is telling, "the truth, the whole truth and nothing but the truth." Tickets may be bought at the door in Bowker Auditorium next Saturday night. The presentation begins at 8:30.

Faculty Senate Forms Committee For Study

by NEAL ANDELMAN '63

Since the Faculty Senate's inception in 1957, many controversial student issues have been thrashed out. The general practice has been to appoint an ad hoc committee first to study the issue and then report to the rest of the Senate en masse. Such a committee was appointed on May 10, 1960 to study UMass' and other universities' ROTC policy in relation to putting ROTC on a voluntary basis.

In their May, 1961 report to the Senate (which was accepted at a later date) the committee stated "ROTC shows a willingness to change and improve, especially when urged to do so by universities where they are located." The report went on to explain that UMass and other universities have the responsibility of pressing for better ROTC training for the sake of our national security.

Their recommendation, which was accepted, reads (in part): "The ROTC Committee recommends a second study of ROTC at that time . . . The University through the office of the Provost should continue to take an active interest in ROTC affairs, and help to keep this activity dynamic, up to date, and responsive to new challenges and new conditions."

Although compulsory ROTC was recommended for another two years, the committee went on record as being in favor of constantly changing the program to improve its content. One such change, they recommended, would be for the Army to "reduce the contact hours to that required by the Air Force in the basic program."

In a recent interview Lt. Colonel Aykroyd, head of Army ROTC, told this reporter that changes in the ROTC courses taught here at UMass would have to come from Washington. He indicated that the Department of Defense is currently considering major changes in the national ROTC program. Since Col. Aykroyd has not yet received word from Washington, the course content and number of content hours required will remain the same.

The committee pointed out that "the University must continue to offer ROTC, the trustees are free to choose whether it be compulsory or voluntary." In other words, the ultimate decision in the matter rests in the hands of the trustees. They also noted that many other universities adopted voluntary ROTC on a two year trial basis. They did not, however, suggest that UMass adopt this measure.

Unless the Board of Trustees or the Faculty Senate receive some outside stimulus to take up the ROTC issue within the next year and one-half, the situation is likely to remain status quo.

(The last article in this series will deal with attendance regulations, graduation averages and other miscellaneous matters of student interest. A complete list of all current Faculty Senators will also be included).

"Advanced math I really can't do, but here's a formula that's an important clue: $B^2=WCS$"

Dr. John Fenton Addresses Legislature For Pay Raise

The faculty of UMass opened its own drive for pay raises yesterday without official blessing.

Two faculty organizations pushed their own pay bill on Beacon Hill without waiting for the Legislature to act on the "fiscal autonomy" proposal for UMass.

The UMass president and trustees have stated they want two things this year: fiscal freedom and modest pay raises.

The official position was to hold off the main pay raise push until next year, hoping the commonwealth might be in better financial position.

But UMass representatives of the American Assn. of University Professors and the American Federation of Teachers have inaugurated their own drive for pay hikes.

According to national A.A.U.P. ratings, salaries for full professors at the University of Massachusetts are in the lowest category in the country, faculty delegates said yesterday.

The UMass professors appearing before the House committee on education in support of a faculty sonsored pay hike were Dr. Schafer Williams, Associate Professor of History, and Dr. John Fenton, Commonwealth Professor of Government.

The following are extracts from Fenton's statement to the committee:

"I think that the citizens of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts should be aware of the foresightedness of its General Court in providing funds for the development of a fine public University in the few years since World War II.

"The General Court has shown that it wants to provide educational opportunities at least equal to those enjoyed by the fathers of our children. That means we want an excellent University of Massachusetts with a fine faculty where our children will be exposed to teachers who are intellectually alive and engaged in creative research. We do not want to simply construct extensions of our high schools.

"We have a fine faculty at the University of Massachusetts. It has been attracted here by concentrating on young, promising scholars and by employing them at or near the maximum of their salary range. They were also sold on the University by virtue of visions of dynamism and growth, planted there by some excellent salesmen for the University.

"It is apparent that the demand for good college teachers is going to become more intense in the immediate future. It is equally obvious that unless the faculty's expectations are realized that the

Highwaymen To Perform On Sunday

The Highwaymen, a group of folk singers from Wesleyan University, will give a concert on Sunday at 2 p.m. in the Cage, as the final event in the Winter Carnival schedule.

All five of the young men play the guitar, and several of them play more than one instrument. Performing in a controlled, relaxed style, they sing their folk songs in English, French, Hebrew, and Spanish.

Their renditions of foreign folk songs are in keeping with the Carni theme, "With a Continental Flair."

Tickets for all Winter Carni events are on sale from 9 to 12 and 1 to 5 until Friday at the S.U. lobby counter. Skip Oakes '63, president has announced that the ticket sales for the ball are way ahead of the sales in former years. He therefore urges that those who wish to attend hurry to purchase tickets.

Senate Elections

The Senate election committee announces hat four Senate seats have become available. Seats are available from the following constituencies: Arnold (one seat), Brooks (one seat), and Commuters (two seats).

Nomination papers may be acquired at the RSO office Thursday, February 15 and are due back at the RSO office by 4:00 P.M. Thursday, February 22.

Final elections will be held on February 27 from 9:00 A.M. to 4 P.M. in the Student Union lobby for Commuters and from 8:00 P.M. to 10:00 P.M. in the two dormitories.

—NOTICE—

On Friday, February 16, at 5 p.m., sorority preferential bidding will be held in the Council Chambers of the S.U.

All freshman women interested in joining a sorority should plan to be present at this meeting. Linda Griffin, president of the Panhellenic Council, will explain the procedure.

UMass Flying Club Offers Students Inexpensive Flying

by JACK KELLEY and JOHN GREENDALE

How would you like to become a propeller bender? There is a group on campus that has this dubious distinction. They are the members of the UMass Flying Club. They are not an elite of highly co-ordinated, physically perfect flyers, but a club of average students with average co-ordination and physical fitness who enjoy flying as a pastime.

Two years ago, with help from the Student Government, a number of interested students formed a club and bought a plane. Since then, several hundred flying hours have been logged with an impressive safety record; one minor accident resulting in a bent propeller. Club membership numbers close to forty students, graduate students, and faculty. Donald W. Cadigan of the Registrar's Office is the club advisor.

The club aircraft is a two-place 7AC Aeronca Champion with a 65 horsepower engine. A third class airman's physical, which is very liberal, is all that is required to fly the plane. A pilot can wear glasses. If one has enough co-ordination to drive a car, flying a plane should present no problem.

The main purpose of the flying club is to make inexpensive flying available to the students, faculty, and employees of UMass. Club flying rates run from one-half to one-third as much as airport rates, depending on the type of aircraft and instruction.

The next meeting of the Flying Club is Wednesday, February 14 in the Hampden Room of the S.U. at 8 p.m. Full information will be available at that time.

Slow ROTC Retreat

It is the present ROTC which will be affecting the classes of '65 and '66, for better or worse. It means little to them that an improved ROTC system will prove less of a monster to the classes of '67 and '68. The present system should be evaluated and continued as either voluntary or compulsory only on the basis of how it affects those students presently subject to it . . . NOT ON THE BASIS OF HOW A FUTURE SYSTEM WILL AFFECT FUTURE STUDENTS.

If it is decided that the ROTC system should be on a voluntary basis in its present state, then it should be put on a voluntary basis NOW. IF and WHEN the system is modified, it can again be re-evaluated to see whether or not a compulsory system will then be desirable.

At the risk of being repetitious, we suggest that those who are discussing the ROTC issue—for or against—forget about the future plans of the military, as they are completely irrelevant and tend only to confuse the issue.

The word is that the Army and Air Force are planning major changes in their ROTC programs within the very near future. Hope is beginning to blossom in many young hearts that these changes mean the end of the present compulsory state of ROTC here at UMass. However, while it is very probable that these changes—when they do materialize—will call for the end of compulsory ROTC, they are, at this time, serving the opposite end; that is, the promise of their inception is being given as a reason for continuation of the present compulsory state for "just a little longer."

The reaction to such an argument ought to be that any plans the military may have for the future of its ROTC departments is completely irrelevant in any consideration of today's issue of compulsory versus voluntary ROTC.

The Omphalos: On Criticism

by PAUL THEROUX '63

CRITICISM CONSIDERED AS A LOGICAL HYSTERIA

Without a doubt the easiest act in writing is criticism. It is also the most necessary. Merely to evaluate something does not require a lot of skill, but to evaluate something constructively, in a way that the criticism will be taken seriously and considered on its logic and its rationality, requires a great deal of intellectual acumen, keen insight, and perceptiveness.

The birth pangs of creative prose are sharp and the rewards of such parturition are often few and infrequent. We are all familiar with the cliché picture of the creative artist; that tableau of malnutrition and devotion, and of a supreme writing skill which is not really appreciated until the flesh of the artist has thoroughly decomposed underground. The creative artist has it tough; he's either an oddball or an aardvark to most of the people who know him, or know of him. But the fact is that the creative market is so flooded with literary role-players that there is a good chance that not only is he an oddball and an aardvark, but he may be a moron as well. And that is where criticism is needed.

Wordsworth was about as bad a critic of his work as Norman Mailer is today. Sincerity and devotion to creative writing is evident in both their writing and in their lives. But sincerity alone does not make great literature, just as it does not make great institutions.

The usual attitude toward any institution is that if the persons which comprise it are sincere and well-intentioned, if they are doing their jobs to the best of their ability, if they are 'nice' and bathed and shaved, then they should not only be considered good, but that they should be considered permanent and inscrutable, and irrevocably right. This is WRONG! It is just as wrong for William Wordsworth and Norman Mailer not to open themselves for criticism as it is for the Administration of the University, the Campus Police, the bookstore (that insatiable leech which was partially rendered hors du combat by those hardworking crusaders-APO fraternity) to plead sincerity and then tromp gross-booted on student's rights. In this academic vending machine we have put our money in the slot; we are required to produce in the best manner we know, but all phases of education MUST be open to us: we must be allowed the freedom of discovery, the freedom of exploration, the freedom of experimentation, the freedom to work and observe. If these freedoms are not granted, then we must exercise the duty to criticism.

Henry David Thoreau says that we must not accept without questioning thoroughly and deciding the merits of a proposition. We must not accept the government unquestioningly; its policies, its stratagems, its devious and often wrong moves must be criticised and evaluated if we are to remain strong. Total acceptance without question will only lead us into a morass of inactivity, a dangerous pit where our government, our citizens, and all that we have ever possessed (or thought we possessed) will be gone before we know it. We can only achieve harmony and justice through well-written, acute criticism. Everything flows. Everything must be examined—the flux must be maintained.

If criticism is over-hysterical it may be overlooked or disregarded. We are all guilty of the hysteria principle, yet we must do everything in our power to prevent too much hysteria from creeping in and infecting the logic of propositions; yet even if it does enter into a discussion—be it a critical study or a letter to the editor—we must infer that the basis may be sound and reasonable, even if the voice is a tiresome falsetto. If we find the hysterical whine clouding our voice, then we must switch to a lower gear. We must never cease evaluating; we must never become self-conscious. The student at the University has a duty to himself, to the Administration, and to his fellow students, and that duty consists in letting his discomfort become public. Submission can be interpreted only as defeat, as stagnancy. The University is a community which can be successful only if the individual student accepts his duty to criticise constructively, to be logical with a minimum of hysteria, remembering that mere sincerity on the part of the Administration is no excuse for the indignities and injustices promulgated on the student.

A few weeks ago, a guest article appeared in this column. In general, the article dealt with the implications of pro-nazi infiltration within the Adenauer government of West Germany. While not entirely agreeing with the thesis of the article in question, I must nevertheless answer those who have asserted that it was not valid in any sense.

I need not catalogue the long list of ex-nazis who maintain positions within the Adenauer government. In itself, this means nothing. Yet, if we consider this in the overall context of the West German situation, it bares discussion.

The central question comes down to this: Can a man who has apparently been brainwashed into an ideology over an extended period of time suddenly discard this ideology? There can be no absolute answer to this question. We can, however, and we should discuss it.

To say that the Hitler period was the fault of the German people as a whole may be correct, but this gets us nowhere. The passive acceptance of nazism by the Germans was a German tragedy. But it was a tragedy of passivity, submission to authority, and with the possible exception of the racial question, nothing more. But here we should remember that we are not bringing the character of the German people into question. What we are concerned with are those who actively supported the nazi ideology and in addition rose to or sustained high civil or military rank within the context of this ideology. Thus you see I make a value judgment as to the degree of commitment necessary to the holding of these high positions. This is not to say that a milk-man or a baker could not have been a more fanatic supporter of nazism. The fact remains however that the milk-man and the baker followed while the general and the judge led. The delineation in degree of responsibility appears to be valid.

Let us investigate the situation in West Germany to better assess the relevance of this discussion. Unfortunately, the failure of the West German government to recognize the Oder-Neisse line constitutes a long range threat to peace. As Erich Fromm states: "While the wisdom and justice of the decision to give undisputably German parts of Eastern Germany to Russia and Poland and to deport millions of Germans from these territories can be seriously questioned, this decision is a fact, concurred in by the Western allies even though not in a formal peace treaty."

The West German government, in recognizing the Oder-Neisse line, would be displaying its peaceful intentions. But this is a question for Adenauer to decide.

It is perhaps unfortunate that Western Germany does not exist in a vacuum. The two Germanies inter-react to the pressures of the "Cold War." In West Germany this reaction has been marked (as must be expected) by a gradual ascendancy of the military and of nationalism. This atmosphere can not be conducive to the democratization of Western Germany. When one adds to this situation the existence of ex-Nazis in the Adenauer government and within the structure of N.A.T.O., a reasonable degree of concern does not seem out of place.

This is not to say that the Adenauer government is Nazi (nor to imply that this is the case). This is to say that the presence of ex-Nazis within the West German government, and the possible degree of influence exercised by some of these, should be discussed.

Those who say that N.A.T.O. must be given significant nuclear potential and that the Soviets have no right to protest had better reconsider the situation. The Soviets are politically committed to prevent the accumulation of nuclear arms by Western Germany. And (even if we refuse to admit it) the Soviets believe that they have a moral right in protesting West German re-armament.

We need not accept the Soviet position as valid. Yet, we must understand their position, something we have not done since 1947. To do this, perhaps it would help if we would ask ourselves this question:

"What would be our position toward West Germany if we had lost twenty million people and our land had been ravaged by the Second World War?"

Do not answer quickly.

MEANDERING MIKE

Well, the rushing season is here again, and WMUA is no exception. We microphones and other professional equipment, such as announcers, technicians, engineers, and record librarians, have our own club-like organization. On Wednesday night at 7:30 at the WMUA studio, located in the engineering building, we will welcome anyone who is interested in announcing, news writing or any other phase of radio work.

Our new program schedule is finally on the road: every Tuesday at 7:00 P.M. Vern Pero commands the board with his exciting show Impulse, and on Thursday at the same time John Ahoe graces the air waves with poetry readings.

Due to an oversight, I very casually omitted the last zero from the number of records in our library. For those who didn't read my column last week (there's no excuse for such laxness!), the current number of records is 15,000. I also neglected to mention our new chief technician, Norm Precourt.

It might be interesting to note at this time that every Monday, Wednesday and Friday at 6:45 P.M., WMUA, with the cooperation of the Student Union and the Collegian, broadcasts the news directly from the Collegian office.

As a point of interest, we have received many complaints that there is a great deal of interference with the reception of WMUA. Well, don't look at me! It certainly isn't my facult; I'm one of the best microphones in the business. However, it could be your radio. You know, WMUA is an FM station broadcasting at 91.1 megacycles and is only received on am radios because of the converters which we will no longer have at the end of this semester.

Grad Party To Be Held Friday Night

The four college graduate students are sponsoring a dance and cocktail party this Friday evening at the Wiggins Tavern in the Hotel Northampton. The dance is from 8:30 to 1 a.m., and admission is free. All graduate students, single or married, and their guests are invited. Music will be furnished by the Roger Coulombe Quartet. This is to be the first function of a proposed "Grad Club," and the future of any such organization depends on those who attend Friday night. So plan to be at the Wiggins Tavern, in the Hotel Northampton to kick off a much needed program of "grad" social activity.

SENATE AGENDA

Ed. Note — This week's Student Senate agenda is of special interest to the entire student body in that it contains four motions concerning the Commons. All have been introduced by the Services Committee of the Senate. The four motions have been reprinted here in order to interest the students in voicing their opinions on the subject to their respective senators.

S7 Resolved that the Student Senate endorse this petition to exempt all juniors from eating at the Commons unless they expressly desire to do so with stipulation that if a student is exempt, he must not ask to obtain a Common's meal ticket anytime after the beginning of the semester.

Be it further resolved that this motion with Senate endorsement be sent to Dr. Field, the Faculty Senate, and the Board of Trustees.
(Resolve: Services Committee)

S8 Resolved that the Student Senate endorse the plan to set up a special Commons line in cafeteria style where meals will be individually priced, leaving it to the student's discretion which meals he will eat, and that this resolution be sent to Dr. Field, the Faculty Senate, and the Board of Trustees.
(Resolve: Services Committee)

S9 Resolved that the Student Senate endorse the plan to have breakfasts excluded from semester bills and served on a cafeteria style paid for individually.

Be it further resolved that this motion be sent with Senate endorsement to Dr. Field, the Faculty Senate, and the Board of Trustees.
(Resolve: Services Committee)

S10 Whereas this school is under state subsidization and whereas other state-subsidized schools receive their milk at reduced rates, be it resolved that the Student Senate petition Dr. Field, the Faculty Senate, and the Board of Trustees to obtain reduced rates on milk for the students at the University of Massachusetts.
(Resolve: Services Committee)

Silent Films To Be Shown By Art Club

The first in a series of Classic Silent Films presented by the Art Club of UMass will be shown tonight in Bartlett Auditorium at 7 p.m. The film, from the Queen of Scots Series, is "The Executive of Mary."

The series, presented every Wednesday night until April 11, is offered at student-faculty rates for university admission. The study has been endorsed by President Lederle and Dean Field, among other members of the administration, who have obtained "season" tickets.

A coffee hour will be held after each film showing. For further information, contact members of the Art Club.

Pay Raise . . .

best among them will be attracted to other institutions.

"This is not a problem for tomorrow but is one that is immediately urgent. The average salaries at the University of Massachusetts are far below the national average and more importantly are below the averages for our neighbors. At the University of Vermont the average salary is $8,383; at New Hampshire, $7,967; at Connecticut, $7,750; Rhode Island, 7,560; Maine, 7,534; and at Massachusetts, $7,528.

"I need not elaborate. You have all been exposed to these facts. But it is urgent that you act. I do not ask for these increases simply as a representative of AAUP. My membership will find adequate salaries in Michigan or Indiana or Maine or Louisiana if need be. But I ask for your support for this bill primarily for the citizens of Massachusetts and for the nation. It is important that our children have educational opportunities equal to those of children of other states. It is important for their sakes, for the Statistical Abstract of the United States tells us that they will earn on the average one-third less if they fail to graduate from college. It is important for the nation's sake, for our survival depends upon the intensive development and intelligent and informed employment of the skills of our people."

Overpowering UConn Quintet Bombs UMass, 72-56

Redmen NCAA Hopes Badly Hurt By Connecticut Victory

UMass fans can see the truth in the name given to the Connecticut Cage after last night's 72-56 drubbing handed out by the Huskies of Hugh Greer. The "Torture Chamber," named for its large capacity partisan crowds and deafening cheering, was the scene of the torturous beating administered by an overpowering Huskie quintet.

The Redmen could not compete with the offensive and defensive skill of the NCAA—yearning UConns, and their own tournament hopes were given a sharp blow in this defeat. UMass, UConn and URI each have two losses now.

Opening the game on the bright side, Mike Mole put in the ball for two points to start the Redmen out on a shortlived lead. With almost three minutes gone in the clash the Redmen led 8-6, and a Huskie basket matched by a Twitchell layup saw the last Redmen edge. Lenny Carlson, a big man in the UConn lineup—a man who severely hurt the Redmen in last year's two-point loss at Storrs—tied the game with a long jump, and it was Connecticut's game from then on.

With ten minutes left to play in the first half UConn began to widen its lead until, with three minutes remaining they held their largest first-half lead of nine points, 29-20.

Shots by Fohlin, Bernard and Mole drew the margin to six points, but with two seconds left to play in the first frame Ed Slomcenski hit on a layup to make it 33-25 at the buzzer.

Redmen Narrow Margin

Little Peter Bernard and Roger Twitchell teamed up for two hoops apiece to begin the second half, and the Huskies held onto a scanty five point edge. A UConn timeout had its effect, however, and their lead slowly increased.

A Lenny Carlson foul shot gave the Greers their largest edge of the game with five minutes gone in the final stanza, 42-32, and the Redmen could do little about it in the face of the hot-handed ball stealing and rebounding of the hosts.

It looked as if the Zunics were in for a break when defensive ace Andy Czuchry of the Huskies injured his knee after blocking a Mole push, but the hustling team from Storrs had all the bench strength it needed to widen its lead.

Maintaining a ten point edge mid-way through the final ground the Huskies kept putting the pressure on the visitors with a 1-2-2 defense which made it rough for the Redmen under the boards all night.

Hoping for a comeback, the UMass squad held their ground relentlessly until four minutes were left to be played; then the roof fell in. The UConns, hot from the floor throughout the game, outmatched the cold-to-luke-warm Redmen offensive for keeps, and when Charlie Fohlin hit on a final second jumper the score stood at 72-56, Connecticut.

DRIBBLING AROUND

UMass offensive and defensive efforts during the first half were badly hurt when ECAC choice Roger Twitchell had to be yanked by Coach Matt Zunic after having had three quick fouls called on him . . . Mike Mole, usually fire on wheels for the Redmen offensive, simmered down to a sputtering spark as his shots were far from their mark throughout the game; at one time in the game he had gone for twenty minutes with only two fouls shots to his credit . . . Even though he sat out a good part of the game, Roger Twitchell was high-scorer for the Redmen with 15 points . . . Pete Bernard was second with 13 . . . The Storrs jinx remains, as the Redmen now have been defeated there in every game over a 27 year period . . . Fast breaks employed by the Huskies to good account played havoc with the tricky Chinese defense of the Redmen; they simply didn't have the time to set it up . . . Foul shooting, greatly improved upon by the UMass squad in recent games, was far under par during the game. Hats off to the large group of UMass fans who made the trip down to Storrs.

The Redmen, still on top of the Yankee Conference with a 6-2 record as opposed to UConns 5-2, and URI's 4-2 will have to play unbeaten ball from here on in the YanCon Play. UConn and URI will battle it out for the YanCon co-supremacy shortly, and if a tie results at the end of the season, the NCAA bid will probably go to the team with the best overall record.

The Redmen meet Tufts in the Cage on Thursday night at 8:15.

Girls' Teams Win 2 Tilts

by PEG BAGDON '63

The WAA Girl's Basketball teams defeated the Springfield College WAA teams at the WPE Building, Monday, Feb. 12.

The UMass first team won its game by a score of 33-21, getting strong point production from Marilyn Cairns (16) and fine all-around play from K. Nolan, N. MacDuffee, and M. Bertozzi.

The second half told the story as Miss Cairns started to hit with her long set shot, and the guards held the Springfield team to only 6 points in the entire half. This strong defensive unit included Ellie Harrington, Peg Bagdon, Marty Graves, and Carolyn Jenkins.

The UMass second team also defeated the Springfield team by a score of 31-21. Fine offensive play was received from C. Sullivan, K. Jokisaari, N. Nichols, and R. Thruston. The defensive unit was composed of C. Akerley, M. Fitch, J. Ozone, and J. Martino.

The WAA Swim Team made a clean sweep of the evening by winning its meet with the Springfield team 22-19. Members of the team are Jeanne Rull, Cheron Laboissonnare, Ginny Quirk, and Maralyn Wood.

WRESTLING

The UMass varsity wrestling team will compete against the Dartmouth squad tonight at 7:00 in the Cage. The Swimming team pushes off at 7:30 in the WPE building.

FOUR NEW ENGLAND COLLEGE STUDENTS WIN SPRITES IN L&M-CHESTERFIELD GRAND PRIX

Four New England students—Gordon M. Clogston, Jr. of Dartmouth, Alexander D. Washburn of Amherst, Roger K. Lewis of M.I.T. and Peter K. Underhill of the Univ. of Connecticut, Stamford Campus—have won 1962 Austin Healey Sprite MK II sports cars, for their prize-winning limericks in the fall Grand Prix Contest, sponsored by Liggett & Myers Tobacco Company for New England colleges only.

From the many hundreds of limericks entered, the four were adjudged Sprite winners in the L&M-Chesterfield Grand Prix for originality, aptness of thought and clarity.

Dartmouth's winner, Gordon Clogston, submitted the most limerick entries—21, while Roger Lewis of M.I.T. sent in only one! Clogston's "batting average" would hardly put him on the Red Sox squad, but then, as Lewis can testify, "it only takes one!" None of the four Sprite winners had ever entered a contest before.

The new Sprite owners will be happy to learn that after road testing the Sprite MK II, "Car & Driver," a leading sports car magazine, stated in its July 1961 issue, "The 1962 Sprite has a new look, new power and new gearing . . . . in style, roominess and performance, the Sprite MK II is everything the MG TD was . . . ."

Although the fall Contest winners are ineligible for one of the four Sprites to be awarded in the spring Grand Prix Contest, it's hardly likely they'd be competing. When last seen, they were floating on air . . . attention, N.A.S.A.!!

Redmen Gym Squad Loses To Temple And Springfield

by JEFF DAVIDOW '65

The UMass Gymnastics Team suffered its second loss of the week as it succumbed to a powerful Springfield College squad last night. The first defeat came at the hands of Temple University last Saturday, February 10, when the Redmen were overcome by an excellent team playing on its home floor. Both defeats were not totally unexpected for both Springfield and Temple put much more emphasis on gymnastics than we at the University do. However, the squad coached by Mr. Robert James performed admirably in both meets, just as it has done throughout the season.

The scores of the two matches were quite similar, with Temple winning 65 to 31 and Springfield beating us by a score of 61.5 to our 34.5.

A look at last night's meet with Springfield, event by event, shows the match shaping up this way:

1. Floor Exercise — In this event, the first one of the evening, UMass junior Dave Yates was narrowly edged out of the first place position by Springfield star Ken Black. Yates took second place with a score of 199, while Black managed to receive 201 points to take home first place honors for the Maroonmen. Captain Charlie Paydos of UMass finished fourth behind Springfield competitor Doug Alt and ahead of another Springfield player Frank Perron who acquired a cramp in his right leg midway through his routine.

2. Side Horse—This event, the Redmen's newest and weakest, proved to be one of the more disastrous of the meet with the Jamesmen capturing only 4.5 of the available 16 points. However, the three competitors for UMass, Dave Williams, Jim Adam and Bruce McCracken, have shown steady improvement and will more than likely acquit themselves better in future meets, not only this year but, as none of the three are seniors, they will assuredly compete next year. Thus, although the present is dim, it is by no means discouraging, for this event is due to improve in the future.

3. Still Rings — The Redmen tribe lost this event 13-3, not because of the inadequacies of our own team but rather due to the excellence of the Springfield men in this phase of the meet. UMass' two top still ring performers, Charlie Paydos and Dave Williams, only managed to take fourth and fifth places, respectively. Yet the future is not discouraging here either, for Williams is only a sophomore and improving rapidly.

4. Long Horse—This was one of the brightest points in the meet for the Redmen, with Dave Yates and Dexter Brown taking second and fourth places with really superb jumping. Brown who was a favorite in this event was a little off form, but yet he showed great agility and whatever slack was left was picked up by Yates who preformed with the utmost skill.

5. Parallel Bars — A strong event for UMass and the squad's only first place. Captain Paydos came through with a fine performance to edge out Springfield star Bob Haldermann 193 to 186. The Redmen could have performed better in the parallel bars, but neither of the other two UMass competitors, Williams and McCracken were up to their usual good form.

6. Horizontal Bar — Perhaps the most graceful and interesting event proved to be the Redmen's strongest, and the only one in which they managed to split the points evenly with Springfield. Yates and McCracken were the big guns for Massachusetts gaining seven of our eight points with Bob Coffin capturing the Redmen's last point of the meet.

J. D.'s CORNER

Well, I'm the last person you'll ever see by-pass a bargain; the words sale, clearance, special, rummage, and that genre have a sort of magnetic affect on me. In fact, sometimes I spend free afternoons wandering about town, "just looking" and pricing things. Then I invariably burst enthusiastically into the dorm and proclaim, "Hey, kids! I found the most wonderful bargain . . .!" The usual reaction is condescending indifference, but there are, I know, others who do care about bargains and other marvels the local merchants have to offer.

When was the last time you bought penny candy? Well, there's a place where you can still go in, press your nose up against the glass showcase, and ask for "one-of-these and two-of-those-and one-of-those and . . ." It's right next to the movie house, and called the Fruit Store. No one's ever too old to have fun at choosing penny candy, you know.

And I stumbled on an even better bargain: Coke and pizza (1 slice) for only 15 cents. This is a "special" from 3 to 5 p.m. any day of the week at the new pizza place on 16 Main St. . . It's called Andy Robustelli's, and it's opposite the town hall.

For those of you who collect green stamps, I've noticed that Louis Foods offers double stamps on Wednesdays.

In case you're not aware of it, students may open charge accounts in most stores in town. Just present your I.D. card.

Do you know of any other bargains I could pass onto our readers?

With all due respect to those who persist in decrying the campus police when they can't think of anything else to knock to fill up space on the editorial page, you must admit that the police, and even campus police, are a pretty decent lot. Take the case of a pretty co-ed no long ago who was stopped for a violation of student driving regulations. The officer asked to see her driver's license and read the description on it:

Weight: 130.

Restrictive code: Must wear corrective lenses.

"Whose license is this?" he demanded belligerently, since the description obviously didn't fit that of the driver.

It took the girl and her date half an hour to convince the skeptical officer that since the license was issued she had:

1. Bleached her hair.
2. Dieted and lost 20 pounds.
3. Started wearing contact lenses.

Best Essay Will Receive Scholarship

A scholarship from the Evelyn Wood Reading Dynamics Institute of Boston, consisting of paid tuition for a Reading Dynamics course and the receipt in class of all textual material normally furnished the enrollee, will be awarded to those students who present winning essays on the advantages inherent in learning to read more rapidly and efficiently.

The deadline for all entries is March 25, 1962. All entries will be judged according to their aptness and originality. The award of ten scholarships is planned, but their number may be increased according to the number of collges and students submitting entries.

Only in exceptional cases, viz., the presentation of several essays of outstanding merit, will more than one scholarship be awarded at one college.

Reading Dynamics is not speed reading. It has little or nothing to do with the techniques of the average reader. It is a totally new approach to the page both physically and mentally, and its ultimate adaptation to the needs of a given reader is practically limitless.

Faculty Senate Sets Limits For Degree

by NEAL ANDELMAN '63

If you can remember that night in 1958 when a Redmen basketball game was called because of rain (the cage roof leaks), then its high time you learned the regulations on how long a student can stay here. In May 1960 the Faculty Senate minutes exlained that a student can be in residence for a maximum of ten semesters while working for a bachelors degree. Twelve credits earned in UMass' or other college's summer school constitutes one semester. If a student has the required graduation average at the end of ten semesters, but does not have all the required courses, then he may take one more semester's work for a total of 11.

In 1958 the marking system of the University was changed from a number system to the current letter system. This was accomplished by a vote of the entire UMass faculty. A suggestion that the University adopt a plus-minus system was brought up in the Faculty Senate in 1959. There was a great deal of pro and con discussion on the matter, but it was eventually defeated.

Mr. Moors of the IBM department in South College said that UMass is getting a new IBM machine next semester which will be capable of printing pluses and minuses. At this time, however, no one in the administration has indicated that the University is

by MARY ROCHE '64

In a landslide of activity Wednesday night, the Student Senate dealt with ten motions at one blow. Previous to the February 14 meeting, only six bills had been passed, the last being S6, endorsing voluntary ROTC.

President "Tex" Tacelli recessed the meeting twice in order to discuss out-of-order contentions by Senators Andy D'Avanzo and Linda Achenbach. The first order of business, a motion introduced by Senator Betsy Robicheau to appropriate $2,000 for International Weekend, passed although Senator D'Avanzo questioned its legality. Recess was called by Tacelli when D'Avanzo pointed out that the motion violated Senate By-laws because there was not a breakdown of the $2000 in the hands of every senator. After D'Avanzo had located the ruling, the meeting was called to order and Tacelli ruled the motion out of order.

Motions S7 and S8, concerning foreign student aid, were passed quickly. Motion S9, brought up by the Budget Committee, was tabled because of a conflict with laws.

Under the agenda for the meeting, there wer four motions to come before the Senate concerning, there were four motions to tions about the Dining Commons

An Ohio scholar and teacher, Dr. Howard O. Brogan, has been appointed Commonwealth Professor and Head of the Department of English at the UMass, it was announced today by Provost Gilbert L Woodside

HOWARD G. BROGAN

Dr Brogan, 49, presently chairman of the Department of English at Bowling Green State University in Ohio. will succeed Dr. Maxwell H. Numerous Activities Planned For Carni

Features from around the world will spice the setting for the 27th Annual Winter Carnival to be presented by the Class of 1963. The weekend, which introduces the main social event of the season, will consist of numerous activities planned for the enjoyment of both students and visitors.

Scenic Winter Carnival Posters will be sold during the course of the weekend ae souvenirs of the Carnival. These profits will be used to establish a Scholarship Fund for a needy Foreign Student. The Exchange Students on campus will build a Scholarship Wishing Well Sculpture to raise additional money for this fund.

The Winter Carnival will be appropriately introduced by the traditional ringing of bells at Old Chapel as well as a fireworks display in the vicinity of College Pond. At the ball there will be dancing to the inimitable sounds of Richard Maltby and his Orchestra. During the Intermission, the revealing of the Mystery Snowman will take place followed by the crowning of the Winter Carnival Queen by President Lederle.

Besides viewing the snow sculptures representing the various fraternities, sororities, dormitoies, and class projects, spectators will be entertained by a figure skating show on College Pond and a Fashion Show Saturday Afternoon in the S.U. For those who like to participate as well as be a spectator, there will be sliding and skating on the pond throughout the day.

Saturday evening there will be fraternity parties open to all. That same evening there will be a showing of "Les Girls" in Bowker Auditorium as well as the Annual Sno-Ball dance in the Union sponsored by the Stockbridge School of Agriculture.

A fitting close to the eventful weekend will be the Sunday Concert featuring the Highwaymen.

To Twist, Or Not To Twist

The corkscrew gyrations of the "twist" have spun their way from college campuses to the rarefied reaches of high society, and though moralists may debate the dance's lack of morals, and physicists the total pounds of torque developed by a twister, the physician on campus has been forced to speak out on the number of twisted twisters who have wound their tortuous ways to the infirmary:

The current "twist" fad promises to provide brisk business for the orthopedic surgeons if the experience of the Health Services is representative. Since last May, when interest developed locally on a significant scale, at least six students have been seen with major knee injuries. Oddest situation was that of the man who, trying to sneak some practice in his dorm room, had to call a physician to reduce his dislocated knee-cap. Latest additions to the list are two coeds who will be seen with casts for six weeks following a similar injury last weekend.

It looks as though it would be as pertinent to have a physician in attendance at the twist sessions as at football games. Robert W. Gage, M.D.

Whether cold, straightforward comments of a doctor will be a better deterrent to the dance than arguments of moralists and physicists remains to be seen. But we're willing to bet that unless some preventive measures are taken, the Twist Toll this Winter Carnival Weekend will spiral well above last weekend's count.

To twist, or not to twist, isn't necessarily the question; a less violent twist ought to do very nicely. Otherwise, the student Blue Cross-Blue Shield card could become as much of a party necessity as that extra package of cigarettes.

Let's Show Some Common Courtesy

No one likes to be insulted; no one cares to be embarrassed; and, we hope, no one wants to be intentionally rude. These statements should have special significance during the Winter Carnival Weekend. We are referring to the Jazz concert which is scheduled to be held on Sunday afternoon at the Cage.

Whether they realized it or not, UMass students have sharply insulted past jazz musicians at the Cage during the annual winter event, and have, by their rudeness, embarrassed numerous other students.

In 1959 Gerry Mulligan played before a capacity crowd at UMass and completed an otherwise enjoyable afternoon by uttering several bitter comments concerning certain members of the audience. Many took the remarks as jokes. They weren't.

Dizzy Gillespie, during the concert of the following year, finished his unusually short performance with a single shrill note on his trumpet which strangely reflected the bitterness expressed in a less artistic fashion by his predecessor.

Louis Armstrong, improving upon the tact of Dizzy, ended his concert with the National Anthem. No one could ask for encores after that.

Why the bitterness? Why the unpleasantness and embarrassment?

These famed musicians were insulted because many students, anxious to attend parties or satisfy their appetites, made their all-too-apparent exits during the progress of the concerts, slamming doors to boot. What more effective slap in the face can an individual administer to a performer?

We should like to respectfully request that students who will be unable to remain in the Cage for the entire performance either do not attend the concert to be presented by the Highwaymen—a group of students, themselves—or leave during the intermission. This is a matter to be decided by the individual student, of course. It cannot be enforced. But in the name of politeness, and consideration for both musicians and fellow students alike, please, exhibit some little respect. Everyone will have a far more pleasant afternoon if you do.

RE: CRITICISM

When I was in the fifth grade we used to have an expression we incessantly used, almost to the point of making it lose all of its original connotation . . . "You're full of bologna." Today, of course, I know a few variations on this same theme, but the first one I learned will do nicely.

Without a doubt, the easiest act in writing is criticism, and one of the hardest is good criticism. After all, what is good criticism without good literary taste, knowledge and skill. I thoroughly agree with the attributes that Mr. Theroux has laid down, namely "intellectual acumen, keen insight, and perceptiveness", but he simply does not follow them.

He is too, too flowery; he makes mountains out of molehills; he does not think; and worst of all, he is trying to "snow" his public.

I'm sorry, but I mistrust any person's sense of values, when he deliberately tries to show me how much of an avant-garde thinker he is, and only deals in showiness. Under the guise of evaluating literary criticism, Mr. Theroux vitriolically attacks every thing he comes in contact with, but with words, mere words and not one grain of sincerity, nor one iota of investigation.

The picture of the literary type either as a slob or fake, with no middle ground into which 99 and 44/100 percent of all serious writers are classified, that of normality, is ridiculous. Besides, the slob, better known as the "Village Type" and the fake, seem to be one and the same. Disheveledness and coarseness are no substitutes for literary competence.

This brings me to the final point, a personal one—the 'nice' people he treats, regarding personal habits of cleanliness. It is not wrong to be clean, and be judged by your appearance, by the Administration here, there or anywhere. I don't sit with people who don't bathe or wash their clothes. They stink. There are too many 'nice' people who don't offend my nose. If a person doesn't have pride in himself, what does he have pride in; that's a moral precept handed down from the time of the Old Testament, and should mean something to everyone, religious or not. I will associate with people whose clothes may be out of style, or old and threadbare, who don't have the money for perfume or roll-on deodorant or aftershave lotion, as long as they are clean. There is a difference you know, and I only hope that I have read you wrong.

Mr. Mike Palter:

Your question, "What would be our position toward West Germany if we had lost twenty million people and our land had been ravaged by the Second World War?", is not as relevant as the question "What should the United States position toward West Germany be if we intend to remain a relatively free and self-governing nation?"

Paul R. Sheehan

To the Editor:

With regard to S7, which would exempt juniors from eating at the Commons, my question is this: where would the many students taking advantage of S7 eat? The Hatch is overcrowded now; the only other eating place within walking distance is the tiny Regis diner.

With the possible exception of S7, the Senate's motions provide potential methods to allow the student to save money.

Arthur E. Clark '63

To the Editor:

"'The time has come', the walrus said, 'to talk of many things . . .'" This time let's talk of teachers.

There is an instructor on this campus who is not only educated in his field, mathematics, but has the ability to teach, which is no mean feat in itself. Yet this teacher is soon to be dropped from the department. Why? The department of mathematics, we are told, is attempting to improve its graduate department. Because this teacher does not have his Ph.D. he is to be dismissed. I fail to understand how the degree of a teacher of freshmen and sophomores will affect the graduate department. Perhaps someone can explain. Does a doctorate automatically mean one is capable of teaching and a lack of it mean one cannot teach? Perhaps the degree does confer such talent. I am sure, however, that any student can recall an exception to this implied "rule." Such an exception is this instructor. I have never heard any of his students speak against him, as a person, or as a teacher. Certainly his ability as a teacher of freshman and sophomore mathematics is a credit to the department.

This State and University are realizing themselves in many ways, a pertinent one being H 1504, the General Court measure to increase salaries of teacners. This measure has long been needed. It seems ridiculous, though, to be seeking better instructors through improved salaries on the one hand and veritably throwing them away on the other.

The Social Circus

by MARK CHEREN '64

If you want a polaroid picture of an institution of higher learning, look at its library. The general attitude of the students toward their university is reflected by their actions in its library. What do you see at this university? You see a limited number of students with no respect for themselves, others, or the privilege of an education. Some of you have been smoking in the Honor's Room and in the corridors despite the fact that a room for smoking has been provided on the fourth level. Smoking has been prohibited in areas other than the smoking room for a very good reason—the ventilators can't handle it, and in many places a fire hazard exists. At Boston University, despite the fact that the facilities in general, and the smoking areas in particular, are definitely inferior to those here at UMass, their librarian reports no butts or nicotine fits. Disobedience of the no smoking rules is an example of the lack of reverence for unmonitored rules which prevails throughout our campus.

"Get wise, Frosh, around here anything goes if you can get away with it . . ." This is the sort of talk which deteriorates our student body.

And this is the school in whose library big brave idiots dared to light a firecracker, and set a sign on fire last semester. The riots they had last year at Harvard didn't produce that kind of malicious destruction. This has the same putrid flavor as the sacking of Greenough Dining Hall last year, complete with food thrown on the ceiling, or the tearing out of sinks in Baker Dorm "for kicks" a little while later, or climbing onto the piano and dancing on small tables in the Union a few weeks back. All this is added to the vandalistic marking of books placed on reserve.

Or look at this full color spread suitable for Playboy. Our gallant Francescas and Paolos brazenly kissing etc. in the glaring light of ten to twelve study hall; not one school interviewed could match that. Not even M.I.T. eccentrics find it necessary to make fools of themselves in front of an audience of two hundred. It is one thing to study with a date and quite another to allow socializing to become more important than studying so that it becomes loud and distracting. Our student body has been accused of possessing inadequate powers of concentration by the library staff, all the more reason for everyone to try and keep noise to a minimum when in the library as well as to prove them wrong.

It is time for the shrowd to be lifted from the deeply entombed idea of student self-criticism and active remonstration of those few who mar an otherwise fine institution. If you agree that the examples cited represent a minority, then you have to prove that the majority who have passively allowed these evidences of bad taste, wrong attitude, and childishness to continue in the past can and will unite to rebuke the minority into insignificance in addition to making an added effort to improve the example offered by their own conduct.

The library is a place to study. If students want its services to improve they have to earn its improvement by remembering it is not a place to be destroyed maliciously because a state subsidy is paying for most of it; and not a place to socialize with the same or opposite sexes to the point where it becomes noisy and distracting to those who are trying to learn something. For a start, if we do quiet down, Librarian Montgomery has promised to open level three to study from ten to twelve p.m. the minute attendance warrants it.

The problems to be discussed in the remaining articles cannot begin to be solved effectively until the students make the first move and show that we don't have to be policed.

Tulane Professor To Present Lecture

"The Role of the Humanities in the Science Program of Universities," will be the topic of a major talk by Prof. Hans B. Jonassen at UMass on Monday, Feb. 19.

Dr. Jonassen, who is professor of chemistry at Tulane University, will be the guest of the Department of Chemistry under the Visiting Scientist Program sponsored by the Division of Chemical Education of the American Chemical Society. The lecture will be given at 8 p.m. in Peters Auditorium, Goessmann Chemistry Laboratory. All interested persons are invited to attend.

On the following day, Prof. Jonassen will conduct a specialized seminar on "Friedel Craft Catalysis." Students and faculty members from area colleges will attend the seminar to be held at 11 a.m. in Peters Auditorium.

During his stay, the visiting scientist will meet with undergraduate and graduate classes, confer with students as to their future as professional chemists, and discuss curricula, teaching and reearch with members of the staff. Prof. Jonassen will also visit neighboring colleges and meet with members of their faculties.

Professor Jonassen received his B.S. and M.S. degrees from Tulane University and his Ph.D. from the University of Illinois. He joined the staff at Tulane as an assistant professor of inorganic chemistry in 1946, was promoted to associate professor in 1948 and professor in 1952. During 1958-59 he served as Scientific Liaison Officer, London Branch, Office of Naval Research. Dr. Jonassen's principal research interests relate to the catalytic aspects of inorganic chemistry in homogeneous and heterogeneous system, in aqueous and non-aqueous media.

Contest Open To Students, Essay Form

Professor George Williams of The Rice Institute, Texas, has written a critical commentary on higher education in America, "Some Of My Best Friends Are Professors," published October 24th.

In This Book Dr. Williams makes a penetrating appraisal of our institutions of higher learning and teaching, and has coordinated his own provocative findings with other collegiate studies. resulting in some highly provocative judgments.

As a method of uncovering undergraduate opinions on the views held by the author of this book, the publishers are sponsoring a contest open to all upperclassmen (freshmen, though welcome to read this book, are ineligible because of their insufficient time experience in college), inviting an appraisal of "Some Of My Best Friends Are Professors."

Contest details: There will be a prize of $500 given for the best essay; all manuscripts to be no fewer than 3,000 words and no more than 10,000 words.

Write for entry blanks to Professors Contest, Abelard-Schuman Limited, 404 Fourth Avenue, New York 16, N.Y.

Columbia Professor Hanna Speaks Out On British Africa

by MARCIA ANN VOIKOS '63

"It is the policy of the British to survive anywhere even if it is in Central Africa," claimed visiting Prof. Hanna of Columbia University in the first of a series of lectures sponsored by the UMass History Club last Tuesday evening at the Student Union.

"There is a tendency in Britain to think that all whites in Africa are bad whites—this is a terribly self-righteous generalization," Prof. Hanna said. "Although I'm against racial discrimination, I think one has to appreciate the problems these white settlers have to face," he continued. "Therefore, it is essential that we put ourselves in their position."

Prof. Hanna's talk reflected the gradual breakdown of African colonialism, a major cause of current international tension. In 1933, Southern Rhodesia was granted the right of self-government by Great Britain which still maintains colonial rule over Northern Rhodesia and Nyasaland.

"The Southern Rhodesian federation is an unusual structure—the very word 'federation' arouses democratic action," Prof. Hanna said. "Although a bargain in 1961 gave the Southern Rhodesians a more prominent voice in selecting constituent members, the British still wield enough power to validate racial discrimination," he continued.

Measures to lessen discrimination in this area, he added, include the Industrial Conciliatory Act (1955) which allows Africans to operate machinery, thus lowering the prestige of White Trade Unions.

"Since there is little economic opportunity in Nyasaland, the inhabitants migrate to Southern Rhodesia in order to make a sufficient livelihood," explained Prof. Hanna. "Yet these people feel relegated to an inferior status because Southern Rhodesia is still completely in white hands," he said.

"In Northern Rhodesia the white settlers are more concentrated than in Southern Rhodesia—especially on the border of Katanga," said Prof. Hanna. "Although the Northern Rhodesians are more broadminded than the Congolese, the British Government is afraid of a rise in the labor force there and the demand for full membership in the Commonwealth," he emphasized.

Mental Problems At UMass Average Says Dr. Janowitz

by PRISCILLA LINCOLN '62

"Psychotherapy is sought by 10% of the University's students," said Dr. Julian Janowitz, in his speech, "Campus Neurosis", on Sunday night at Edwards Fellowship held in Old Chapel. Dr. Janowitz noted that this percentage of students who visit the University psychiatrist is in keeping with the percent found in other colleges.

Dr. Janowitz approximated that 60 to 70% of the students who consult him come on their own, while about 25% are referred to him by Dr. Gage.

Psychotherapy at the University, as described by Dr. Janowitz, involves visits once a week for a month. Since most of the problems are not severe, but are mild problems of adjustment to college life, they are usually easily solved in this month.

"Campus neurosis," said Dr. Janowitz, "is no pathology unique to college students but something that goes on in this stage of life." The problems of adjustment, especially problems of sex and emotion, are faced by non-college as well as by college young adults.

Although we're a little late, we all want to thank the SAE's for a terrific exchange held before vacation, and we are looking forward to our next one with Phi Sig.

Welcome back Jan Hall and Alna Werme, who spent the past semester practice teaching in Lexington. This semester Lee Carrell was selected to represent UMass as an exchange student at Florida State; we are all proud and happy for her, but sure do miss having her around.

All the Thetas feel as if they, too, have taken a trip to England, after listening to Ann Hall relate her ventures of this past vacation. She returned with all the fineness of the English culture, along with a few cashmeres and shetlanders!

We are happy to announce that Carole Amarantes, graduate as of January, now holds the title of Mrs. Luke J. Urban, graduate of Columbia University, and is down at Quantico where her husband is stationed in the Marines.

SDT

The sisters at 409 are standing up well under the hectic schedule of rush parties, classes and other campus activities.

We are lamenting the loss of our two graduating seniors, Sylvia Weisberg and Sandy Golden, who are now both teaching in Boston.

We also said a tearful good by to Wanda Letoile and Carol Grossman who are now caught up in a flurry of making plans for their forthcoming marriages. Carol is finishing up the semester at B.U.

The bright star in the horizon, however, has been the return of two of our sisters, Barbara Genter and Deanna Shapiro, who have returned atfer a semester's absence.

Congratulations to our new stewardess, Louise Bromfield, who has taken over the SDT kitchen, ably assisted by Judy Wilcox, assistant stewardess, and our unanimously elected breakfast chef, Ronnie-Sue Fireman.

Dr. Novelli Furthers Biological Research

Dr. G. David Novelli, principal biological chemist at the Atomic Energy Commission's Oak Ridge Laboratory in Oak Ridge, Tennessee, graduated from the University in 1940. At Oak Ridge, Dr. Novelli is in charge of a group called "Enomology". He has described his work as follows: "The research work of my group centers around studies dealing with the chemical mechanisms by which living cells make their proteins. Our work is largely subcellular since we must break cells open in order to learn how they carry out this complicated process. Since the structure of the individual proteins of a cell is determined by the genes, we are thus trying to understand the control of life by genes at the molecular level. The justification for these studies in a Radiation Biology Division under the auspices of the A.E.C., is that the phenomena we are studying are fundamental to the life process and these very systems are those that are sensitive to radiation. Thus if we can understand the nature of these processes in normal tissue, we hope eventually to understand how radiation effects them and perhaps learn how to protect these systems or restore them to natural function after radiation."

Dr. Novelli's study into protein synthesis has been hailed as a significant advance in biological research. Last spring his report was given in testimony before the joint congressional atomic energy subcommittee on research. Through the use of radioactivity as a research tool, Dr. Novelli has been able to observe in a test tube for the first time the genetic process by which proteins are synthesized. Protein synthesis is described as the process by which living cells convert food into energy and into new cell materials.

Through research techniques developed by Dr. Novelli, scientists will be able to study each step in the genetic process of protein synthesis. Through the use of radiation and radioisotopes, Dr. Novelli has discovered a technique which permits study of gene action in a test tube in the absence of living cells.

Dr. Novelli entered UMass from Agawam High School in 1936. He did graduate work at Rutgers University and continued training for a Ph.D. in Microbiology at Scripps Institute of Oceanography. His Ph.D. work was interrupted six months before it was completed by Uncle Sam. After the war he elected not to return to California to complete his degree, but instead started over again at Harvard, this time in Biochemistry. During the seven years at the Massachusetts General Hospital he was associated with Dr. Fritz Lipmann, who received the Nobel Prize in 1953 for the work on coenzyme A.

MR. ED SAYS:

by E.T.R. '62

Dear Mister Ed:

We are forever hearing from the administration about the great academic aims of our University—more areas of study—more rigid entrance requirements—10,000 students by 1973 etc.—phoohey; How can they talk about the future when the situation right now is academically rotten to the core. The last round of finals brought an unbelievable rash of cheating. Going to college has become a little game of seeing who can be most unscrupulous! Isn't there some way for a normal student to survive?

Disgruntled Junior

Dear Disgruntled:

Yes, there is a way! Rush down to Baucom's as soon as you can and pick up Yugi Machiavelli's book entitled "How To Get Better Grades In College". In it are such tasty morsels as "Methods of obtaining blue books in advance of exams", "How to get an entire course's material on a one inch square crib sheet," "58 of the best excuses for cutting a final", and finally "How to attach a tear provoking note to your final exam." Your instructor will really love this last item. On it you may plead sickness or explain that your 26 per cent average in the course isn't really indicative of what you know, because you DID study hard all semester—didn't you, pal? Feel free to write me again. I hope I've been of some help.

Dear Mister Ed:

Although the Centennial is approaching, I haven't heard much about it. Is anything in the way of a celebration planned?

Andy Anniversary

Dear Andy:

Yes, things will start with a bang. Festivities will begin next September with a 7-water pistol salute by the Campus Police followed by a parade of goose-stepping administration personnel. Under the command of FRATMAN the parade will head up to the men's dormitories to be greeted by a ticker tape reception. (Instead of ticker tape, students will drop crib sheets, blue books, and IBM cards). With spirits high they will then wend their way down fraternity row to a shower of roses (4 of them) and to the tune of John Philip Sousa's "Peppermint Twist". After dinner at the Dining Commons (UGH) everyone will then close out the day by attending a free showing of Lady Chatterlee's Liver in the back room of the Morrill Sin Center.

Distinguished Visitor To Speak Here Tuesday

The Massachusetts Assembly will present four Distinguished Visitors Programs during the spring semester.

Dr. Juscelino Kubitschek, former president of Brazil, will speak to the University community on Thursday, March 8. On Wednesday, April 4, Justice of the Supreme Court William Douglas will be our guest. Bennett Cerf will talk about the publishing business on Wednesday, April 25. The last Distinguished Visitor will be James Reston, the New York Times columnist. He will speak on Tuesday, May 15.

Each of the lectures will be in the Student Union Ballroom at 8 p.m.

The Assembly is currently working on the details of these programs, and will in the near future announce a policy that will guarantee first choice of seats to the students who pay for these programs.

Redmen Hoop Squad Defeats Tufts Jumbos At Cage, 82-62

by AL COHEN '63

Coach Matt Zunic's varsity basketball team pushed its season's mark to 11-8 while taking the measure of Tufts College, 82-62, in last night's Cage battle.

In the process Roger Twitchell, a 6'5" forward from Westfield, N.J., set a new scoring record Roger passed the mark set by Doug Grutchfield, UMass great, for the most points in the season by a sophomore with 20 points against the Jumbos. He now has compiled a total of 324 season points, or two more than Grutchfield.

Redmen center Don Black opened the game with a quick lay-up. Hughes countered with 2 for the visitors. Black hit on a sweeping hook. Hughes again knotted the count. Big Don hit another layout and was fouled. Don made good on his first attempt and the Redmen had a lead they never relinquished.

The Zunics were soon out in front by 30-15. Mole, Leslie, and Black were given a rest. With Fohlin and Twitchell controlling the oabrds, the Redmen forged a 45-27 half-time lead.

Tufts, sparked by little Vandy French's passing and the hot hands of Tom Brennan, had outscored the home forces 16-5 by 14:53 of the second canto. A jumper by Goldberger brought the Jumbos within 8 points at 50-42, but this was as close as they could come.

Baskets by Twitchell, Leslie and Mole went un-answered and U-Mass led by 58-42. French then made good on two foul tosses but the taller Zunics would allow only one shot to the Jumbos for every two or three by the home squad. With just 3:49 remaining the Redmen sported a 77-56 edge. A Bob Johnson drive ended the contest at 82-62.

The game was witnessed by a sparse gathering and marked by numerous yawns. Tufts featured a platoon system type of basketball somewhat like that employed successfully by Brandeis. . . . Twithell's 20 led all scorers . . . Black, held to a mere two points in the second half, still managed 15. He was matched by the visitor's Paul Goldberger . . . Bobby Johnson again played his fine ball but may have sustained a shoulder injury on the last play of the game. Chuck Fohlin played one of his better games.

The Redmen travel to Vermont for a return match with Benny Becton and company tomorrow night. This looms as a must game if the Zunics are to retain their co-ownership of the YanCon lead. The Catamounts proved none too potent after Becton had fouled out in an earlier Cage battle, but are expected to take full advantage of their home court Saturday night.

State College Coaches Want Pay For Rules

Love of sports should not be the only compensation for athletic directors at the state colleges, four of them testified yesterday before a legislative committee in seeking passage of a bill providing pay for their services.

The measure would grant athletic directors and football coaches at the state-supported colleges $1200, assistant football coaches, $600, basketball coaches, $1000, hockey and soccer coaches, $800 and track and intramurals coaches, $300.

The athletic directors provide the instruction now on a voluntary basis, the quartet told the education committee at a State House hearing.

James Twohig of Salem State College, said he teaches athletics "because I love it," but he still feels the commonwealth should offer pay for the extra service.

Frosh Quintet Bumps Leicester Team, 89-69

Coach Jack Leaman's freshmen made Leicester Junior College their eleventh victim in the prelim to the varsity game last night as they routed the Blue 89-69.

The lead changed hands often for the first 14 minutes of the first half. The Braves, behind Gerry Knight and Chuck O'Rourke, spurted to a 36-23 half-time lead.

In the second canto opening baskets by Charley Kingston, Clarence Hill and O'Rourke put the Braves in command by 44-23. Leicester failed to make a field goal until five minutes of the half had elapsed. By 11:12 it was 55-42. Then the Braves began to run. A perpetual fast-break game gave the frosh a 67-44 lead. This forced the Blue into a full court press.

The speedy frosh found the Leichester press to their liking, and with four minutes remaining they enjoyed a 78-52 bulge. Leaman emptied his bench and Leicester, with Burns hitting his twelfth of thirteen free-throw attempts, fell by 20 points.

Five Braves hit for double figures with Hill's 21 showing the way. O'Rourke had 15 and controlled the boards admirably. Norcross and Burns impressed for the losers. The loss gives the Leicester team a 13-5 record. The freshman, at 11-1, meet the AIC yearlings next Thursday at the Cage.

UM Pinned By Dartmouth

The Dartmouth frosh and varsity wrestling teams pinned their respective UMass opponents Wednesday afternoon in the Cage. Before a comparatively large crowd, the Dartmouth teams handed the varsity their sixth defeat of the season, and the freshmen their second.

The varsity match was highlighted by a couple of very close matches. In the 137 pound weight class Carl Wirsen was pinned with only thirty seconds left in the match. In the same manner, in the 157 pound class, Chapman managed to last through his whole match without either his opponent or himself able to score any points. However, in the last few seconds, his opponent scored a near fall, giving the decision to Dartmouth.

The final meet score stood at 27-3, Dartmouth.

The freshmen, who lost their first match of the season to Williams on February 6, succeeded Wednesday night in winning the 123 and 130 and unlimited weight classes, only to lose the combined meet. The final score was Dartmouth 21, UMass 9.

The next meet for both teams will be held on Saturday, February 17, at Tufts.

Pistol Team Does Well

The University of Massachusetts varsity pistol team has made a respectable showing against top-flight competition during the first half of the winter season.

The Redmen opened against a strong field consisting of West Point and Michigan State in a shoulder-to-shoulder match at West Point. In this match, UMass placed second to the Cadets, 1387 to 1341, but defeated Michigan State which finished with a score of 1325.

In their next match UMass placed third as Coast Guard had a score of 1399, the Air Force Academy 1341, UM 1329 and MIT 1325, at Hanscom Air Force Base.

The Redmen were led by 1961 Collegiate All-American Roy Fritz, who posted a record-tying score of 291 at West Point, and followed with a 283 at Hanscom. Fritz reecived an All-American first team berth for this efforts last winter.

The pistol team has extended an invitation to all those interested in trying out for the team, including freshmen. Practice is held at the range in the ROTC building every afternoon between 4-6 p.m. Coach Alan Rogers stated that many positions are open, no experience is needed and there are sufficient instructors and weapons for those interested in becoming members.

Stockbridge Rifle Squads Outgun H.C. And Harvard

In a three-way shoulder-to-shoulder match fired under near-freezing conditions at Worcester on Saturday, the Stockbridge Rifle Team outgunned the Holy Cross Freshman and Harvard Freshman rifle teams. Although Brad Allen's 269 for the Stockbridge riflemen was topped by Murphy's 281 for Harvard and Swanther's 280 for Holy Cross, team totals gave wins to the Aggiemen over both opponents.

A see-saw contest that carried the decision down to the last pair of shooters saw the UMass Freshmen win over the Stockbridge School Rifle team by a 5 point margin. Lindsey's 262 was high for the freshmen, but Chuck Miraglia punched out a 264 to be high individual for the night. Both teams were below form, and delays were caused by breaks in the target carriers' cords.

Swim Team Downs Holy Cross Squad

Coach Joe Rogers' swimming team won its second meet in six starts last Friday evening at the W.P.E. bld., setting back Holy Cross, 63-30.

Mike Rothschild and Bruce Morton were the star performers for the Redmen. Rothschild took the 220 yard freestlyle in 2:22.5 and won the 440 yard freestyle with the time 5:12.2.

Bruce Morton swam the 100 yard butterfly in 1:06.2 and won the diving event.

Ron Chiras, Don Grant, Mike Bjornholm, and John Grybko, who set a new pool record for the 220 yard breaststroke, all took first places.

The Redmen captured several second and third places with Rutkowski, King, Desjardins, O'Neill, and Coffey picking up points for the Massachusetts team.

Victories Over Conn. Mark Track Openers

by ABE SHEINKER '62

The UMass varsity and freshmen track teams opened their indoor season Wednesday, with victories over Connecticut at Storrs. The scores of the solid wins were 57.5-46.5 in the varsity meet and 63-40 in the freshmen meet.

Ken O'Brien and Bob Brouillet starred for the Redmen. O'Brien was UMass' only double winner, in the 600 and 1000, running easily in both and missing his own record in the 600 by one tenth of a second with a 1:15.6. Brouillet missed the school record by three-tenths of a second in winning the mile event with a time of 4:24.8. This was an easy win for the "Digger," but he was edged in the two mile run by teammate Dave Balch, although both clocked the same time, 9:53.3. Balch also ran a strong 4:29 taking second in the mile.

The Redmen strength came in the five flat races, outscoring the Huskies, 34-12. Loren Flagg remained undefeated in varsity sprint competition by taking the 60 yard dash in 6.6 seconds.

Several unusual circumstances deevloped during the meet. To begin with, the 35 pound weight throw, held outdoors for lack of, was cancelled due to the heavy snow. It was later learned that UConn's best thrower had been doing only about 40 feet while the three Redmen in this event are capable of easily exceeding this distance. Here was a possible nine points erased from the UMass totals.

It also developed that UConn did not have a high jumper who could clear 5'6", therefore Redmen Dick Ward, Joe Cassidy, and Al Garsys all tied at that height and did not bother going higher. George Giddings lost second place in the shotput event in the last round of throws, and Mike Salem was edged in the broadjump by one-quarter of an inch. Bob Avery also lost a place in his two-mile race by less than an inch—a real heartbreaker.

The meet ended with Bruce Thompson anchoring the UMass the UMass mile relay team to a-come-from-behind dead heat finish, a very unusual occurence.

Dave Parsons of UConn, Yan-Con hurdles champ, was the individual star of the meet, winning the high was low hurdles, the broad jump, and taking second in the dash, and anchoring the mile relay, for a total number of points of 19.

FROSH WIN

Burt Kline led the UMass freshmen to victory with wins in the high and low hurdles, and in the high jump for a total of 15 points. He beat all UConn opposition in the high jump as he cleared 5'6".

Other Frosh winners for the Redmen were Al Richardson with a 42'6.5" throw in the shotput competition, Armand Millette at 1:19 in the 600, Bill Young at 2:28.2 in the 1000, and Dave Sadowski with a 10'6" tie in the pole vault.

Girl Watcher's Guide

First field trip

LESSON 7- Keep moving

One of the most important rules of girl watching is this: keep moving. In fact, it is always a good idea not only to move, but to appear to be going somewhere. (This is especially important on group field trips.) Beautiful girls, although they enjoy being watched, are instinctively suspicious of strollers and downright fearful of loiterers.

The man who is walking briskly, who looks like he's "going places," makes a better girl watcher. For one thing, he sees more total girls and in the end he enjoys his hobby more. (If you are planning an extended field trip—to Paris and Rome, for example—be sure to pack a couple of cartons of Pall Mall.)

Mechanics Explained By Men's Judiciary

The Men's Affairs Committee and the Services Committee of the Student Senate, concerned with student questioning of the mechanics of the Men's Judiciary, requested the Judiciary to submit a report to clarify such questions. Especially at a time when new members are to be selected, the importance of this body on the University campus, both to the student and the continued success of student government, and to the Administration, must be emphasized. To accomplish this end, the following text is presented.

The Men's Judiciary is a segment of student government created by, and operating under the constitution of the Student Government Association.

The purpose of the Men's Court of Justice is to try violations of the University's regulations and those laws passed by the Student Senate which apply to the male student body. When any violation is brought to the attention of the Dean of Men, the student is given a hearing. Depending on the nature of the case, the Dean has three alternatives: 1) consider the case according to his own experience and training; 2) refer the case to Men's Judiciary; 3) allow the student to choose between (1) and (2). It is in this manner that a case is brought to the attention of Men's Judiciary.

When a case is to be heard by the Judiciary, a hearing is scheduled for the student. At this time the student is given the opportunity to present to the board any and all relevent material concerning the case. The student may present this material in the form of statements from witnesses, counselors, instructors, etc., on his behalf. He is in no way restricted as to the evidence which he may present.

The Board then considers very carefully all testimony presented at the hearing and a decision as to the disposition of the case is rendered. This decision takes the form of a recommendation to the Dean of Men. The Dean then either approves or disapproves this recommendation.

Men's Judiciary is comprised of seven students: three Seniors, three Juniors, and one Sophomore. The candidates are chosen not for their knowledge of law, but rather for their ability to think clearly, analytically, and objectively. The members are comprised of students from all segments of the campus and thus have a first hand knowledge of conditions and circumstances under which violations may result. It is these criteria under which the Court operates.

It must be remembered that regulations are not just for the control of students, but to provide for student safety and well-being. This illustrates that the rights of the student must be protected and the rules of the University enforced.

sory eating at the Commons, was introduced by Senator Donald Cournoyer. S10 was passed, reconsidered and amended, and passed as amended.

Cournoyer introduced S11 which would endorse a plan to set up a special Commons line in cafeteria style. The motion was passed after a few minutes of debate.

Senator Achenbach presented President Tacelli with proof that the Senate had violated its order of business earlier in the meeting. Tacelli called a recess to discuss the matter with Senators Achenbach and D'Avanzo. After the meeting was called to order again, Tacelli apologized for conducting the meeting on the wrong order.

Cournoyer introduced S12 and S13. S12 dealt with excluding Commons breakfacts from the semester bills; S13 was a petition to obtain reduced rates on milk for the students. Both motions passed.

Varieties Seeks Cast For Parade

The casting for this year's Campus Varieties' Production has begun, and the production shows promise of far surpassing such well-known Varieties presentations as "The Flowers Grow Wild," and "Bula-Boola Bull."

This year's show, entitled "Parade," is under the direction of Nancy King, and is an all-student, original production. The play was written by Wes Honey, a member of the class of 1962, and is set against an Irish-American background. The plot revolves around the lives of two young people, very much in love, and a parade. The music is written and directed by Ernie Bilodeau, the choreography is under the direction of Sandy Brodsky and Steve Litky, and the technical director is Robert Smith.

Perhaps one of the most unusual suggestions ever considered by the Faculty Senate was the proposed regulation that students who have maintained a 3.0 or better average for two consecutive semesters be allowed freedom from all attendance regulations. To the disappointment of all those whose cum was 3.0 or above, this motion was not passed.

Many members of the student body have stated that they would like to know just who the Faculty Senators are. The following list represents the membership of the Senate for the 1961-62 session.

Lederle Announces Graduation Speaker

Federal judge Thurgood Marshall will be the main speaker at this year's commencement exercises at UMass, it was announced by President John W. Lederle.

The commencement address, on a topic to be announced later, will be given June 10 at exercises closing the University's ninety-ninth year. The institution's centennial observance will begin in the fall.

Mr. Marshall, former chief counsel to the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, was appointed to the U. S. Second Circuit Court of Appeals by President Kennedy in Sept. 1961.

A third-generation descendant of Negro slaves, Judge Marshall gained major recognition during the past two decades for his work as an outstanding advocate in civil rights cases.

Director-counsel for the Legal Defense and Educational Fund, he won twenty-five cases before the U. S. Supreme Court on various issues involving civil rights.

A graduate of Lincoln University and recipient of a law degree from Howard University, Mr. Marshall was admitted to the Maryland bar in 1933. After three years of private practice in Baltimore he became assistant special counsel to the NAACP. His work as legal counsel in civil rights proceedings dates from that time and was concluded only after his appointment to the Circuit Court.

Judge Marshall is a member of the National Bar Association and an elector of the Hall of Fame at New York University. He has received honorary doctorate degrees from nine institutions of higher learning. In 1946 he was recipient of the Spingarn Gold Medal, awarded annually to a Negro by the NAACP for outstanding achievement.

Renowned Dinizula Troupe To Highlight Arts Festival

Bringing the flavor of African culture to Bowker Auditorium, the Dinizula African Drum and Dance Troupe will highlight this year's Fine Arts Festival presented by Mortar Board. They are primarily a Nigerian group who present dance and music of the Yorba tribe. Specialists in song and dance of Africa, their program varies from play dances and songs to religious and ceremonial dances of skill and strength. The troupe, of course, is one of dance and drum, but also has with it a narration.

Known both in the United States and abroad, the Dinizula Troupe has appeared in concert halls, theaters, and schools throughout the States. They recently presented a program on CBS television, and have performed for many of the African heads of state and dignitaries such as Dr. Mboya of Kenya, President Sekou Toure of Guines, and Kenneth Kanuda of Rhodesia. Dizzie Gillespie, Marlam Makeba, Amad Jamal, Dakota Staton, Billy Taylor, Cannonball Adderley, and Carmen MacRae are a few outstanding performers with whom they have appeared at Carnegie Hall, Town Hall, and numerous schools and universities.

Students of UMass are invited to attend his unusual and outstanding program. The performance will be held next Sunday, Ferubary 25, at 3 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium.

Synthesis Joins Demonstrators In White House Peace March

by C. D. DAVIS

Washington, Feb. 17—On the night of Friday, Feb. 16 at the time when the Carni Ball was getting under way, a group of twenty-five UMass students was getting aboard two buses; their destination was Washington, D.C. They were the members of Synthesis, and had banded together with other members of their group from the Four College community to demonstrate their ideals of world peace in their Turn Toward Peace movement, but above all, they demonstrated for an end to nuclear testing.

Arrival in Washington

The group, totalling seventy-two persons, arrived in Washington at 8:15 a.m. and went to the demonstration headquarters at NW 20th Street and Pennsylvania Ave., a Methodist Church. There they received their instructions, and after registering they proceeded to the picket lines in front of the White House. The picket lines, which had been going all night, were not very large at the time the UMass group arrived; they were picketing a one hundred foot area directly in front of the White House.

Russian Embassy Picketed

At 9:15 a.m. a group set out to picket the Russian Embassy, but because of the law that picketers have to stay five hundred feet away from a foreign embassy the group was forced to picket in front of the TWA offices a block away from the objective. There were four officers guarding the embassy itself, but by 10 a.m. all the picketers left the TWA building, and with a police escort returned to the White House the White House, the picket lines were so large that they were taking up the entire block double file. The police had arrived in force. By this time the demonstrators were so numerous that they were moved over to the next block, in front of the State Department Building; however, the UMass group was still in front of the White House being led by Mike Palter.

YAF Also Pickets

A group of Young Americans for Freedom formed a picket line of their own across the street from the demonstrators of the Turn Toward Peace movement. They were carying placards calling the other group names, and they also had the American flag at the front of the column; this group numbered about thirty people while the number of peace seekers was reaching two thousand.

By 11 a.m. the demonstration had grown so large that the front column of the picketers in front of the White House had been moved by the police across the street to the park where the YAF had been, and they moved the YAF to the Treasury Building. The major group of the UMass demonstrators had stayed in front of the White House where they had been throughout the day. They were marching in triple file; the group at the park were marching in double file across the entire front of the park; and the group in front of the State Dept. was in double file. At 11:20 the demonstrators from UMass moved across the street to the park and they started to march in triple file with the others. A short time later a group of the YAF moved down the lines of the TTP picketers, but neither of the groups made any comments to the other.

The members of the demonstration had moved into double file completely circling the park by 11:45, and there were still many demonstrators left in front of the White House and the State Department Building, but at 12:30 all the groups had moved across the street to the park. From the park the demonstrators started a trek to the Tomb of the Unknown Soldier; as they left Pennsylvania Ave., they piled their signs and proceeded past the Washington Monument to the Bridge of the Lions.

March to Arlington Cemetery

Upon entering the cemetery a dead quiet fell over the marchers, and they moved in triple file toward the tomb. When the first of the marchers was placing a wreath in front of the graves, the last of the line was passing the Lincoln Memorial two miles away. The group filed by the tombs in absolute quiet, and then moved back down the hill to Washington. It is estimatedt that there were over four thousand marchers in Arlington Cemetery.

The end of the march was at the base of the Washington Monument; there an estimated five thousand people, the most people to demonstrate in Washington in the past twenty years, held a final rally. Speakers reminded the group of their duty and commended them on their participation. The Deputy Police Chief of Washington. It is estimated that reoprter that the demonstrators were very well mannered and that he had no major complaints about the demonstration as a whole.

The demonstrators from the Four College community returned to Amherst at 8 a.m. Sunday full of hope that their showing had in some way helped to disclose the need of the world to Turn Toward Peace.

Our Eye - Witness At Washington

Two days ago, five thousand students let their thoughts be known to the world. But this was the least important part of the Washington Demonstration. When all was said and done, they alone knew why they had come, what they had accomplished.

They did not start out this way, however. At first, they were concerned with what Kennedy or the New York Times would think. At first, they were determined to show Representative Hollifield that this was not just "a lot of bologna." Yet, as the hours passed, these became unimportant, meaningless.

But when and why did the outlook change? If you were there you would know. It was as we crossed the Potomac and approached Arlington National Cemetery. It was when we looked behind us to the great surge of people walking slowly along the gently arched bridge. And then it was as we walked quietly through the great cemetery. Except for an occasional automobile, there was not a sound from the five thousand.

As we approached the tomb of the unknown soldier, we knew who we were. We forgot what the others had called us. Five thousand of the proud and the sorrowful knew that holding an American flag did not make one an American. We knew that what we felt made us Americans. We did not have to tell anybody.

As we wound around the road, alongside the thousands of small white crosses, we realized who the idealists were. We realized that they were the ones who forecast survival, both mental and physical, in an atmosphere of armament buildup and mutual terror. We realized that these people were not insincere or evil. We simply felt that they were wrong, and we determined not to allow them to lead us to tragedy. We knew that this very cemetery was a tragedy and we determined not to build others like it.

As I left the tomb and returned to the road I came upon a motorist who had apparently come from visiting the grave of a loved one. He was prevented from going down the road by the many students who filed past. I approached him to ask if he would like me to hold the students up so that he could return to the road. As I came closer, I noticed that his mouth was open in awe. He had never seen anything like this. His face was flushed. He was crying.

This happened again on the bridge as we were filing back. I saw a woman stop her car in the middle of the road. She simply gazed at us in awe. She too had never seen anything like this. And she was not the only one. There were others.

As we walked under the yet unripe cherry blossoms toward the Washington Monument, we had a sense of fulfillment—all of us. The sky was clear and the Monument stood sharp and clean, a symbolic exclamation point to what we had done and how we felt—all of us.

The talk that ensued at the mass rally was now secondary. As we huddled on the wet grass, the sun was almost gone.

"Only that day dawns to which we are awake. There is more day to dawn. The sun is but a morning star."

We had come so that there might be more days to dawn. We returned inspired and optimistic. We know that we are not alone. But we also realize that this can only be the beginning, the beginning of the beginning.

Let Professors Teach

To the Editor:

I say "bravo" to Dick Boardman for his letter in Monday's Collegian on the inadequacies of many of our instructors in the classroom. I have spent four years at the University as an undergraduate, and now I am attending graduate school. I too have often found myself picking instructors who could teach rather than course material in which I have been interested.

I am most discouraged at the trend at the University to make promotions dependent on a man's ability to publish. It is all too sadly true that some of our most brilliant minds and best writers are our most incompetent instructors.

This is still an educational institution in which students are entitled to instructors who have the ability to "teach". Not only are the students entitled to a system of evaluation which would force instructors to bring themselves up to standard, but they are also entitled to a system whereby college instructors make known to themselves a little about the latest in the methods of teaching.

Many college instructors refuse to recognize that there are many ways of getting material over to students more successfully than by the straight lecture method. A learning situation in which a student is only required to sit, listen, and write down what a professor says from behind his lecturn is the lowest type of learning situation. It has serious limitations and in fact very few of our professors have the ability to be truly successful lecturers. A teacher owes it to his students to learn a little of the theory of teaching, for it is here that high school and elementary school teachers as a whole have it all over the average college professor.

I have nothing against research and publication. It makes a school, a department and a man famous. But it does not make for education. If we need authors on our departmental staffs, let's bring them in to write but not stuff them in the classroom where they are often incompetent and usually unhappy. It's high time that our staff took a little pride in its primary duty, the duty to teach this student body to the best of its ability.

A Bone Of Contention

To the Editor:

Today in reading over the paper I came across one article with which I find myself, in large measure, disagreeing. I therefore took upon myself the great liberty to address to you this letter and the accompanying article. With the hopes that if it be suitable to you, you might use it to inform your readers of another outlook.

If you take the time and trouble to read this article I am sincerely grateful. If you do not you may have saved yourself some time for a more important matter. At any rate thank you for hearing me out this far.

Richard J. McLaughlin '62

Editor's note: Mr. McLaughlin's article appears in today's paper on this page.

Germany Progresses

On Valentine's Day there appeared in this paper an article of great interest to anyone concerned with the affairs of government or of the future of the world. Now, while the first category may well be limited to those who choose to study for the political field, the second category must certainly include all of us who have an interest in living and working in this world in the years to come. I have reference to an article entitled "Another Look," which concerned itself with the supposed infiltration of the West German Government by what the author chose to call Nazis, or ex-Nazis; and with the consequences or possible consequences of this infiltration.

It is not my purpose to debate with the author of the above mentioned article, the truth of his contention that there are EX-Nazis in the Bonn Government; but I do wish to take exception to some of the statements that he made in listing the results that may be forthcoming because of this situation. In connection with the Nazis-or-not category of his article though, I would wish to raise a question about what he calls his "central question." This question being, in the author's opinion, "Can a man who has apparently been brainwashed into an ideology over an extended period of time suddenly discard this ideology?" My question is, have not the ex-Nazis had enough time to change gradually, under the influence of proper instruction, in the almost twenty years since the war?

At this point we make a digression into the situation in the modern state of Germany. The West German Government is condemned for its stand in refusing to grant to the Russian Puppet in Warsaw the legal title it would like to the stolen Eastern German lands; that is those lands East of the Oder-Neisse Line. It is construed as an unfriendly act by the Adenauer government that it does not, in a friendly manner, surrender what is traditionally German land, and further, the home of a large part of the German people. Yet, in checking a very recent world atlas, I could not help noticing the remark that:

> "The government of the United States does not recognize as final the De Facto Western Limit of Polish Administration in Germany (The Oder-Neisse Line)."

This immediately suggests one question. Would we, as German allies, have Germans surrender German land that we ourselves do not recognize as belonging to any but the Germans? It seems like a rather foolish question.

We are next informed that, since Germany does not exist in a vacuum, the "two?" Germanys must respond to the pressures of the "Cold War." We are told that the reaction of West Germany has been toward a rise in militarism and nationalism. While I can not claim that there has been a rise in nationalism in the Russian Zone, I can ask rather loudly if it would seem that East German's sub-machine gun, armed police, and draft order in Berlin do not point to a slight rise in militarism. All this being neither here nor there, we proceed to the statement that this atmosphere in the Wstern Zone is not conducive to the growth of a Democratic spirit. Let us then look at the recent elections in the Western Zone. Has there been as trouble-free an elective government process on the continent recently? In France there has been none; in Italy elctions are torn by riots and strife. Yet, the Germans are not learning Democracy!

Now we come to a point that is near and dear to the heart of this writer, as it well might be to that of any young American of military age, that of NATO, Germany, and nuclear arms. First, it might be well to make clear that NATO is not German, nor is Germany all of NATO. Most of the European nations belong to NATO. But it does seem significant that Germany, of all the European lands, does the most to make NATO strong. Secondly, nuclear arms for NATO does ont necessarily mean nuclear arms for Germany, though I will be the first to admit that such a case seems unlikely. But if the Germans do get nuclear weapons, so what? It may well be remembered that the German soldier of today stands face to face with the most formidable opponent that his and our country has ever faced. If he will help defend our land as he defends his own, I say good. Give him all the help you can! Every enemy soldier who gives his life before a German position is one who will never attack an American, never set foot on American soil. Thus the German is defending us; so let us give him all the help we can, to defend himself at the same time. Do not get me wrong. I do not advocate that we build a wall of others to protect ourselves; the Romans tried that; and it did not work. But the Romans earlier had used the others as allies, and that seems to have worked very well indeed.

Lastly, we are told by the author of, "Another Look", that, "We need not accept the Soviet position as valid. Yet, we must understand their(sic) position." By this is indicated the Soviet position of being politically commtted to the preventon of the acqusition of nuclear arms by West Germany. This from a man who has told us that the Western Zone is not properly learning Democracy. A slight, and I emphasize slight, slowness in learning we are to abhor; a completely foreign ideology, avowedly hostile to our own, we are to understand.

In conclusion let me only sa ythat, we too lost many killed and wounded in World War II. Yet, we have not since followed a course of vengence, but rather one of reconstruction and rehabilitation.

And, sir, I say to you; this is not a quick answer!

New Facilities Added To Recruiting Offices

by SANDRA GIORDANO '63

A familiar scene to seniors and graduate students is the recruiting interviews taking place in Machmer Hall. New recruiting booths have been added to the Placement and Financial Aid Office facilities this year to aid job interviews.

Under the direction of Robert Morrissey, Director of Placement and Financial Aid and Miss Carole Leland, Placement Director for Women, the interviews have been set up.

February and March are heavy recruiting months on the campus, though representatives from various concerns have been coming to campus since last fall.

The services of the Placement and Financial Aid Office are known to many undergraduates through the loan, scheduling, and part-time work programs as well as career counseling aids. In the office itself may be found catalogues of information about companies in the United States and abroad.

The Placement News, a weekly bulletin, informs seniors and graduate students when the representatives of particular companies will be here. Interested students may make appointments for the interviews at the Placement and Financial Aid Office on the second floor of Machmer Hall.

Juniors especially are urged to browse through the catalogues in the office and be one step ahead when recruiting season comes for them next year.

Smith Trys Educational Experiment

Papers, examinations, and nearly all classes were suspended at Smith College for a three week period, January 8-26, for an experiment in education designated the "interim session." The new program replaces a reading and examination period which formerly followed the Christmas holidays. This year midyear examinations were held immediately before the holidays began.

The new program was designed to afford all students an opportunity for independent study and discussion, to permit juniors and seniors to investigate special topics in the field of their major, and to assist freshmen and sophomores in determining the field of their major interest.

To serve the latter purpose, two lecture-discussion series, involving the various disciplines and their relationships, were organized primarily for underclassmen but were also open to the whole student body. The subjects of the lecture series "China —An Area Study" and "Radioactivity". Both were designed for students with no background in these areas.

The projects for the upperclassmen, juniors and seniors, were worked out by the various departments. Most of these offered an assortment of topics, limited enough in scope to make a fruitful investigation possible for the student.

It is hoped that this experiment will help the underclassman in choosing her major, awaken new interests, and make her aware of the resources the college offers," Dean Doris Silbert said.

CAMPUS NEWSCAST

WMUA will give a news bradcast tonight at 6:45 from the Collegian office in the S.U. Fifteen minutes of the latest campus and four-college events will be presented.

"Question 7" Premiere Is Set For Amherst

"Question 7," named the Best Film of 1961 by the National Board of Review, will have its Western Massachusetts premiere in Amherst, March 11, 12, 13 at the Amherst Theatre. The premiere was arranged after a representative group of Amherst clergy, college and university chaplains, student leaders, and leading laymen previewed the film in January and requested the showing. Acting upon the group's request, Western Massachusetts Theatres Inc., operators of the Amherst Theatre, obtained permission for the premiere from Louis de Rochemont Associates, producers of the film.

Tops Ten Best Pictures List

The screen drama of the clash between religion and communism in East Germany topped the list of the ten best pictures of the year selected annually by the Committee on Exceptional Films of the National Board of Review. The committee felt that "Question 7" presented "with considerable cinematic competence, the most important theme of the twentieth century, to wit, the encroachment of the state into the realm of the individual's conscience and belief."

Receives Catholic Award

Previously, "Question 7" was awarded the Grand Prix of the International Catholic Office, presented at Assisi, Italy, and a special award from the International Catholic Film Bureau at the Berlin Film Festival. It has been recommended "to every moviegoer" by the Roman Catholic Legion of Decency.

Religion vs. Communism

Roman Catholic endorsement of the film is of special significance inasmuch as "Question 7" depicts the struggle between religion and Communism in terms of the trials and difficulties of a Protestant pastor serving a small parish in a town behind the Iron Curtain. Commented the Catholic magazine Information, "The unusual movie with the unusual title of 'Question 7' speaks a message deeper than simply the conflict between a Lutheran minister's family and the East German regime. It is the struggle of all those who live behind the Iron Curtain— of Catholic, of Jews, of anyone with religious convictions—against the systematic religious controls of Red Atheism."

Rabbi Arthur Gilbert of the Anti-Defamation League of B'nai B'rith called "Question 7" the most gripping film I have been privileged to watch in years." "Question 7" is the first film to be selected by the Broadcasting and Film Commission of the Protestant National Council of Churches of Christ in America for its support according to S. Franklin Mack, executive director of the Commission.

Documented in East Germany

"Question 7" is based on actual incidents and on documents from the East Zone of Germany. The title refers to a questionnaire distributed by Communist rulers to the students in the schools of East Germany. The answers pose a critical test to the conscience because only those students deemed politically reliable are allowed to pursue advanced study toward their chosen careers.

At UMass, the picture is being jointly backed by the Lutheran Club and the Christian Association. Dick Elliot, Student Vice-President of the Christian Association, after previewing the picture commented, "This picture is a must for all who are concerned with the struggle for men's minds being waged daily by freedom and Communism. Because the struggle is within the mind of a college age East German youth, the message is a personal one to all at UMass. See the picture, put yourself in Peter Gottfried's shoes, and see what decision you would make".

UMass Topples Vermont 69-52 In Conference Game

Sparekd by the hustle of Charlie Fohlin and the shooting of sophs Rodger Twitchell and Pete Bernard, the UMass Redmen whipped the Vermont Catamounts, 69-52, Saturday night at Burlington in a key Yankee Conference clash.

The Redmen, fighting for their initial Conference basketball title, extended their league record to 7-2 and overall mark to 12-8. UMass has just one league game left, with New Hamshire March 3 at the Cage.

For 25 minutes Vermont battled the Redmen on even terms. The much-taller UMass team was as cold in its shooting as the icy wind blowing off nearby Lake Champlaine. In fact the Redmen hit just 11 of 40 attempts in the first half as Vermont led most of the way, twice by margins of six points.

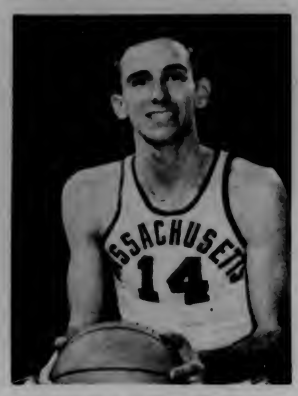
While the Redmen were missing from all angles Vermont managed to score several easy layups on fast-break situations. With four minutes remaining in the half Coach Matt Zunic inserted Charlie Fohlin into the lineup and the team began to move. Finally five points by Twitchell and a foul shot by Fohlin enabled the Redmen to knot the score at 27-27 at the half.

The Redmen were a fired-up team in the second half and quickly opened up a 38-33 margin but Vermont bounced back behind Jack Shabel to close to 40-39 with 15 minutes remaining. UMass then spurted ahead as Twitch and Bernard hit two hoops apiece and Mike Mole and Kirk Leslie one each to widen the gap to 52-36.

Vermont could never come closer than 12 points. UMass kept a susbtantial lead as Mole directed a deliberate "play-for-the-good-shot" attack that kept the offense moving. With seven minutes left and the score 55-40 Vermont Coach Fuzzy Evans removed Benny Becton from the game.

Becton had a difficult time getting position from Fohlin and connected on only 2 of 13 attempts. It was the poorest showing the "Bounce" has had all season. The "Bounceless" Catamounts then went into a full-court press but couldn't contain Mole or Bernard. Contrasted with the poor shooting of the first half was a 19 for 32 second half, featured by Bernard making six of seven attempts.

The Redmen were on the receiving end of several highly controversial calls by the officials in the first half. However only four fouls were whistled against UMass in the second half as the Zunicmen hustled on defense. Becton, unable to score in close, moved to the corner for several long bombs, but still could not connect.



ROGER TWITCHELL

The Redmen are idle until Thursday night when they tackle Syracuse at the Cage. All eyes will be turned toward Orono, Maine Tuesday night however when Connecticut travels to meet the dangerous Maine Black Bears.

Connecticut is 5-2 in the Conference, while Rhode Island is now 6-2. UConn meets URI March 3 at Storrs, the same night the Redmen tangle with New Hampshire.

Girl Watcher's Guide

LESSON 8- Becoming a specialist

Experienced girl watchers, for whom routine watching has lost some of its excitement, often become specialists. (This is definitely not recommended for beginners. However, it may be practiced as a change-of-pace by more advanced students.) They may spend an entire field trip concentrating on one part of a girl. This tends to step up activity, since it does not require that the whole girl be beautiful. For example, if you decide to specialize in knees, you watch only beautiful knees. (The doorman above appears to be an ankle specialist.) Whatever your watching specialty, make sure your smoking specialty is Pall Mall's natural mildness—it's so good to your taste.

Hockey Team Drops Match To Vt. Wildcats

by STEVE HEWEY '63

The University of New Hampshire hockey squad stunned the University of Massachusetts sextet 8-4 in a contest played Saturday at Durham, N.H. The Wildcats could not be contained for the first 2 periods as they raced to a 7-0 lead before Charlie Glew could crack the defenses for an unassisted tally late in the middle frame.

Four different Wildcats found the mark in the first period to give their team a 4-0 command at the buzzer. For most of the second period the story was the same as they boosted their lead to 7-0 before Glew registered his first goal of the day at the 16:44 mark.

The third period got under way with a score from the stick of Jim Ellingwood, assists coming from Charlie Glew and Dick Philips to make the score 7-2. The Redmen tried to put together a last period rally after Ken MacKinnon upped his team's lead to 8-2. Jim Ellingwood assisted Charlie Glew in his second goal of the day at 13:45, and Jim scored unassisted at the 19:25 mark to close out the scoring at 8-4. The Redmen had run out of time and had suffered loss number 8 for the year.

Coach Kosakowski and his crew have a chance to avenge the loss this Friday as the same two teams face-off again at the Orr Rink at Amherst College. Game time is at 3 p.m.

by DAVE WILLARD '64

In case you haven't noticed it, the New York Football Giants are getting old. As a matter of fact, they had better cherish last year's Eastern Division crown as it may be their last for quite some time. Such big name stars as Andy Robustelli, Roosevelt Brown, Rosie Grier, Ray Wytecha, Jim Katcavitch, Alex Webster, Kyle Rote, and Y. A. Tittle have reached their peaks and are on their way down the other side in this most grueling of professional sports. The Giants also recently traded Dick Nolan to the Dallas Cowboys. Another point of contention is Sam Huff, who will have to come through in a big way to redeem himself in the eyes of many after a lackluster performance in the title game against Green Bay. To top things off "Old Reliable" Charley Conerly will probably call it quits. The sage field general recently equipped, "When we win I'm called the 'Old Pro' but when we lose I'm the 'Old man'."

CASEY IS BACK

One of the best known bankers in the country is eager to don a baseball uniform once again. Casey Stengel, manager of the New York Mets—new entry in the National League—will wear the same snumber (37) that saw him through many a successful season with the Yankees . . . One of the most recent acquisitions of the Mets was thirty-five year old Clem Labine who used to play for the Dodgers, among others. The Mets are trying to sign as many former New York area players as possible in hopes that this will arouse interest amongst the fans and will keep the turnstyles clicking. Ex-Dodgers already on the roster include Gil Hodges, Charlie Neal, Don Zimmer and Roger Craig. Two of the potential gate attractions have expressed their intentions to retire however. They are Johnny Antonelli and "Broadway" Billy Loes. Loes especially would be quite a crowd-pleaser as he is always baiting the umpires and when he becomes bored is usually complaining of chronic ailments . . . What's that song? "Old ballplayers never quit, they just join the Mets."

Charley Berry has been an umpire in the American League since 1942 and in his 2600 games worked he has made more decisions than the United Nations, Supreme Court and Ford Frick combined. What is even more important his decisions are always right. This energetic man, nearing sixty, also officiates in the NFL and collegiate football. But he says, "I wouldn't change places with anybody."

Fiery Phil Watson has informed his Bruin club that only seven of them can be sure of jobs next season. They include; Don McKenny, Doug Mohns, Murray Oliver, Leo Boivin, and Johnny Bucyk plus two unnamed rookies. He hasn't named the rookies probably for fear that they might become cocky or complacent . . . Speaking of hockey and the Bruins, one can draw quite a parallel betwen the Detroit Red Wings and the Bruins. The Bruins finally realized that they had to rebuild, when it was too late. Thus they must suffer through a few lean years before the rookies develop. The Wings are just now feeling the effects of old age creeping up on them. They still depend on such fading stars as Norm Ullman, Vic Stasiuk, Alex Delvecchio, and even Gordie Howe who can't carry the team too much longer. Terry Sawchuck can't stand the pressure and the tension goalies are put under for ever, either. So in the next few years look for the Bruins to overtake the Wings unless Jack Adams and the front office pull off some quick deals, for the Detroit farm system contains no budding young players at the moment.

SEARS IS NOW SAINT

Talking about adding insult to injury, the San Francisco Saints of the ABL recently challenged the New York Knicks of the NBA to an exhibition game. What makes this so unusual is that the Saints recently enticed high-scoring New York forward Ken Sears to play for them. This infuriated the Knicks to such a degree that they have filed a suit against the Saints. Perhaps his proposal for a game was a sort of feeler for a truce by the Saints. However the Knicks were not to be placated.

Twitchell And Ernst Make All-East Five

Redman Roger Twitchell was elected last week to the weekly major college All-East basketball team of the Eastern College Athletic Conference.

Twitchell, of Westfield, N.J., has helped pace UMass to first place in the Yankee Conference.

Teamed with Twitchell in the forecourt are St. Bonaventure's Mike Aiken, who scored 69 points in two games, and Penn State's Gene Harris.

The backcourt selections are Providence's Ernst and Bill Hay of St. Joseph's.

Esquire's CLUB & CAMPUS FASHIONS

BY O. E. SCHOEFFLER, ESQUIRE'S Fashion Director

THE LOOK OF LEATHER

The Shearling (fleecy) Look in suede leather outerwear is hot fashion news for cold weather campus wear. Warm shearling linings back up leather and spill over onto lapels as a smart collar trim. Suede leather and leather-knit combinations will also score heavily in all college conferences. Let's take a look at some of the individual cold weather styles:

THIS ¾ LENGTH COAT is "Cavalry" styled with a dashing double breasted front, slash pockets and six-leather-button front. It has lambs wool shearling both at the notch collar insets and throughout the lining. It's a smart coat for casually-dressy town and campus wear.

SHORT WAISTED WARMTH will be found in many fashionably insulated waist length suede jackets. Most of these shorter models have lambs wool shearling at the collar, lining, pocket and cuff trim. Yoke fronts, large patch pockets and stitched edge trim will characterize this extremely popular style of campus outercoat.

SUEDE LEATHER'S ABLAZE . . . the blazer as a sport coat becomes increasingly fashionable with the appearance of a 3 button model in suede leather. It's correctly styled for undergraduate wear in the natural shoulder silhouette with center vent. Bolder individualists can enroll in the fashion avante garde by checking the suede leather double breasted blazer with two sets of buttons. Suede leather blazers will be seen in brown, natural tan, and olive shades.

A RUGGED STANDBY GETS A KNITTED TOUCH . . . the perennially popular zipper jacket is smartly refurbished for knock-about campus wear with a knitted waist bow and shawl collar. The zipper jacket remains the number one campus favorite and is basic to the undergraduate outerwear wardrobe.

LEATHER-KNIT MERGER . . . a smart, swinging duo in campus outerwear is the leather-knit combination that will be seen in outercoats and cardigan jackets. Many models will have such fashion touches as knitted trims at the pockets, sleeves and shawl collars. Pictured is a stylish thigh length outer jacket of suede leather with knit used only for a stitched edge trim and knitted cotton collar.

All in all, a big season for leather jackets and outercoats. The Shearling Look and smart suede leather-knit combinations should take high campus honors for fashion and warmth.

"Africa Unbound" To Be Topic Of Annual Fine Arts Festival

Mortar Board, senior women's honor society at UMass, is presenting the Fine Arts Festival, "Africa Unbound," this weekend, February 23-25.

An African mask to be featured this weekend for the Fine Arts Festival, annually put on by Mortar Board, senior women's honor society.

The Festival, an annual event put on by Mortar Board, will begin Friday afternoon with a panel discussion on African Thought and Culture at 4 p.m. in the Cape Cod Lounge of the S.U. Dr. Absalom Vilakazi, an anthropologist at the Hartford Seminary Foundation, will act as moderator for the discussion. Members of the panel are: Mr. Ola Rotimi, a Nigerian student at Harvard University; Mr. Aloysius Navaogugu also from Nigeria, a student at Amherst College; Mr. Okon Wodiong, a UMass graduate student; and Mr. Reid P. Chambers, an Amherst College student who visited Nigeria with the "Crossroads Africa" program.

Later Friday evening at 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium, the Modern Dance Club will present their annual concert in keeping with the theme of the Fine Arts Weekend. Advisors to the group are Misses Shirley Roby and Georgia Reid, both of the Women's Physical Education Department.

Drama Group Will Present 3-Act Parody

Following a general meeting last Thursday evening, the Roister Doisters ha-ve announced their spring production to be Laurent's "Invitation to a March".

This highly amusing three-act fantasy, which takes place at a summer home on Long Island, is a parody on "The Sleeping Beauty" and deals with the question of whether or not one should conform to the standards of a middle-class society.

Directing this production which will take place on April 27, 28 and 29 in Bowker Auditorium is Norman Rothstein, a UMass alumnus and Amherst resident.

Tryouts for "Invitation to a March" will be held Monday and Tuesday, February 26 and 27 at 7:00 in Machmer, W36 and 37. Those wishing to work on backstage committees may also sign up at this time.

Broadcast By WMUA - Collegian Features "Blooper"

Joe Ross of WMUA finished his Collegian-Campus News broadcast Monday with a red face. His material, prepared and edited by the Collegian (we admit it) included the following blooper:

"Professor Elliot Schwartz of the music department accompanied the first film The Execution of Mary Queen of Scots on the piano."

NOTICE

The library will be open on Washington's birthday, Thursday 22, from 2-10 p.m.

Executives Cancel "The Pajama Game"

The Operetta Guild Executive Board today announced that its production of the Adler-Ross Broadway musical comedy, "The Pajama Game," has been temporarily shelved.

Guild Business Manager Paul A. Cwiklik, who made the announcement for the campus music organization, exercising what he called "a moral obligation which The Operetta Guild owes to its thousands of patrons.

"It is unfortunate," Cwiklik continued, "that The Guild has found it necessary to withdraw "The Pajama Game"; however, the Executive Board both realizes and accepts the all too evident presence of University scheduling conflicts. The increasing demands being made upon the facilities of Bowker Auditorium and the conflicts which arise from the foray on the University's sole accommodation for proscenium theatre have been the primary causes for the Board's decision.

"The Executive Board welcomes this turn of events in some ways as it enables The Guild to search out (which it has done by auditioning 125 people for "The Pajama Game") and now cultivate its talent during this "Workshop" semester. The Guild has set up a brief series of "package" programs traveling off-campus as Scenes from Musical Theatre.

"A training crew of 30 students will present its first workshop at the Annual Meeting of the Eastern States Farmers' Exchange, Inc., in Springfield on Friday, March 2. The 1500 delegates, representing thousands of farmers along the East coast, will preview the show consisting of scenes from "Oklahoma!," "Carousel," "My Fair Lady," and several other Broadway hits. With a slight modification in selections, a few alumni appearances will round out the semester's training program.

"The Operetta Guild activities will reach their climax at an Awards Dinner Dance for members and their guests at The Schine Inn on Friday, May 11. This semi-formal program is primarily designed to honor The Guild's advisor-director, Professor Doric Alviani, and these students selected as Superior Members of The Operetta Guild and The Opera Workshop."

Cheerleaders Will Hold Tryouts

Cheerleadering tryouts for women will be held Tuesday, February 27, and Friday, March 2, from 5 p.m. to 6 p.m. in Memorial Hall. Freshmen girls are especially encouraged to try out for the positions. There is also a possible opening for a junior girl.

Tumbling experience is not a prerequisite, although any girl with previous experience will be given due consideration.

The final judging of the women cheerleaders for next year's squad will be done by co-captains Alsie Edgerton and John Nero, and the cheerleader's advisor, Martha Pratt.

A Twentieth Century Fable— The Self-Fulfilling Prophesy

There was once an eager, young, male beaver who went to college. He joined the staff of his college newspaper, he went to special lectures, he went to all the football games, and he went to all his classes. He was very proud of his college because it was a very good one, and because he was taking an active part in helping to make it good. He was a very happy beaver.

Then one day he met a sophomore beaver at a party. The elder beaver was very busy scribbling down figures on a piece of paper. "What are you doing?" asked the younger beaver. "I'm figuring out how many days there are until I graduate," he replied. "I can't stand this place. This college will never amount to anything because all the smart beavers go to the good schools, and the rest of the beavers come here. I go here because I can't afford to go to a more expensive college. Besides, there's such an apathetic attitude on campus that no one beaver can really help our college."

The eager beaver was quite dismayed by all this, but he decided to respect the elder beaver's words as the voice of experience. The next day he resigned from the newspaper staff, he stopped going to lectures, he never went to another football game, and he stopped going to classes.

One year later the young beaver met the elder beaver at another party, where both of them were figuring out how many days were left until graduation. "You were right," said the younger beaver, "there isn't anything that one beaver can do to help this terrible old college."

Moral: (With due respect to President Kennedy) Ask not what your college can do for you, but ask what you can do for your college. Every beaver can play a part in eliminating the apathetic atmosphere from a campus by asking himself this question, and then taking action on it.

If every beaver gives something of himself to his college, then his college will truly become worthy of his pride, and apathy will disappear. Idealistic? Just notice how many apathetic beavers there are at Amherst, Bowdoin or Harvard. —N.C.H. '63

A Chance For Self-Help Tonight As Senate Considers Adelphia Bill

This evening the student Senate will consider an Adelphia proposal to sponsor a High School Honor Students' Day aimed at attracting top-flight high school students to the University rather than to private schools in the region. The University has agreed to foot half of the cost involved which is a total of $1200. Adelphia is asking the Student Body to provide the other half of the bill, or $600.

Now $600 is a paltry sum when the University may expect to gain outstanding scholars who will help to build up the academic standards of this groaning-with-growing-pains University. The move, in reality, is nothing more than an intelligent public relations venture long used by United States business and industry.

To date no student opinion has been expressed against the proposal. Therefore we assume that the proposal will have no difficulty being passed by the Student Senate. After all, it would look unfortunate if the Student Body refused to pull itself up by the bootstraps here in Amherst while the administration and faculty are seeking financial aid in Boston in the name of bettering the University.

...And As The Undergraduate Students Will Soon Sink Slowly Into The Mud

by MITCHELL MILLER '63

Spring is almost upon us; that is, if you can stretch your imagination and have an undying faith in Nature's regularity. With the coming of this season of regeneration a natural phenomena arrives which is produced by the melting of snow or by some other means of producing water which when mixed with our good New England soil produces a quantity commonly known—as if the words used by the student body are not descriptive enough—MUD.

Our rocky New England soil should suffice to eliminate the problem, but I think that the rocks have sunk from the rocky soil along with a few passing undergraduates. Not being a geologist and being quite unfamiliar with all the properties of mud, with the exception of cleaning bills, might I suggest a solution?

Would it be possible in the future to build asphalt paths where people are walking, and not where these paths would form nicely designed patterns? Since undergraduates are of a determined mind and know that a straight line is the shortest distance between two points, they usually take the most direct route to a desired objective.

If it should happen that between the start and the finish of one of these treks, which usually have a ten minute time limit, a bed of the insidious material is found, the poor bewildered soul must make one of those complicated decisions of life. Should he cross or go around?

With the seconds ticking off, his time running out, he surges forward with a determined effort and finishes flat on his back slowly being engulfed by the moist tide.

And so we leave our poor undergraduate becoming a lost soul, because of his cardinal sin; he wanted to get to class on time. Tune in next time for the answer to the mystery; when will asphalt pathways be built where UMass students have left their mark?

Winter Carni Traffic Maze

To the Editor:

Recently, there was an editorial written by one Paul Theroux in which the campus police were attacked for their innumerable shortcomings. Although I have never been picked up by these men in blue, I have of late begun to wonder whether or not what Theroux said was true.

In the first place I would like to know what bird brain or sadist thought up the fantastic maze for the Amherst streets for Winter Carnival Weekend. Surely, it could not have been intended as anything but a sick sort of a joke. I came over to Amherst from Hamp, turned on Lincoln Avenue, as I usually do, went a block and was told to turn left. This was my first encounter with the white Sam-Brown-belts since I left grade school. No, it wasn't on-the-job training for the second grade. This was a traffic director, in blue no less ... with a badge and all. So, cursing, I went left, then right up Sunset, then right up another street till I got to Lincoln Avenue in front of the "married dorms." Then I was told to go right. I didn't want to go right.

"Just turn right and don't argue, fella," came the sweet reply.

Now I'm headed away from the University. I try to turn down Fearing St. but with cars parked on the right and two-way traffic, the street is horn-blaring and jammed. No room. Finally I end up on Hamp road again. I decide to try North Pleasant. I am lucky because I'm only about the five-thousandth person in line. At .01 miles an hour or something like that I finally move a block or two. I pass several men in blue who are sort of directing traffic and ask, as calmly as possible, why, if they have one-way traffic there can't be two lanes. It seemed like a simple question.

"We only got one lane. That's the orders, son." I muttered somehing about "son . . " and crept on. An hour later I reached the University. I decided to go via Butterfield Terrace on the way back.

Now, I've lived here about six years, and I got lost. They—the men in blue—had me headed up toward the high school before I knew it. Why? I'm sure that someone who didn't know this town would get confused up there, but that was the only way to go.

I talked to four "policemen" and I honestly felt "beaten to death" with clichés. Please, next year, couldn't we have some sort of traffic control?

— Who Fought In Vain? —

To the Editor:

Last weekend, five thousand students from all parts of the country converged on the nation's capitol in a mass demonstration against nuclear testing and war. As the group wound its way through the hallowed ground of Arlington National Cemetery, one of those present, upon viewing the thousands of white crosses, felt that there lay the idealists, there were those who felt that they would be able to survive "in an atmosphere of armament buildup and mutual terror."

Were these thousands really the idealists; or were the idealists those who proclaimed that the then present arms race would lead to destruction, who demonstrated that the U.S. lay down its arms. They too, not wanting their children to see the world destroyed, they demonstrated us out of the arms race, feeling that the rest of the world would follow. Unfortunately, nations bent on world conquest did not and do not play follow-the-leader. Our quest for peace was used to their advantage. Over 1000 of these "idealists" died at Pearl Harbor. Again we wonder who were the greater idealists, those who felt the race should go on that we might be prepared, or those who felt that the enemy were "good guys" and would lay down their arms as soon as we.

For months later more of these "idealists" were sitll dying because we had listened to the "realists" who had soft-talked us out of our preparedness. Just who were the idealists — those beneath the crosses? No, these were no idealists; they felt as I—for a nation to remain free, it must remain strong. They were not idealistics even until death. They did not want a mere house, they fought for a free home. If necessary they would have lived in a cave rather than give up that which their fathers had fought for. These were the realists. They fought not for a world in which all men were brothers, but simply for a free land. Their hope was that if ever their children were threatened, they would be better prepared than their fathers had been.

It was said that there were those who, while visiting the cemetery, cried at sight of this great body of students. They were justified. Their loved ones fought in vain.

— Synthesis Wasting —

To the Editor:

Congratulations to "our eye-witness at Washington" and his compatriots on their "sense of fulfillment". The men under those "thousands of small white crosses" died for our freedom. We can justify their sacrifice only by preserving freedom—freedom through the development and maintenance of an effective deterrent force, not hypocrisy through illusion. Are there no other areas in which Mr. Palter and his friends can feel a sense of accomplishment without indulging in such naive actions as the Washington demonstration?

As for the atrocity on page one, such tripe belongs in a book of fairy tales, not a journalistic publication.

Lambda Chi Fraternity Conclave To Be Hosted Umass Chapter

Gamma Zeta of Lambda Chi Alpha will be the host chapter for the 1962 New England Conclave to be held on the weekend of April 27-29. Colleges and universities throughout New England and New York will participate in the weekend activities. The first cnclave of this sort to be held on the UMass campus will hold a two fold purpose. As well as being a conclave of chapters throughout the area, this will also be the fiftieth anniverary of the founding of the Gamma chapter of Lambda Chi at UMass. In honor of this occasion, not only brothers from all over New England, but many of the Lambda Chi Alumni shall return to the campus to join in the activities.

The purpose of the conclave is to discuss the chapters activities and problem as well as promote a closer tie between the regional chapters of Lambda Chi. Banquets, business meetings, and social events will make up the weekend program to entertain the large turnout of expected brothers.

Among the distinguished guests expected to attend this important meeting is the Honorable Tozier Brown, National President of Lambda Chi Alpha Fraternity.

The Brothers of Lambda Chi are working to make this conclave the best New England has ever seen. It is hoped that the guests at the conclave will leave with an excellent opinion of Gamma chapter of Lambda Chi as well as of UMass.

THE MANY LOVES OF THORWALD DOCKSTADER

When Thorwald Dockstader—sophomore, epicure, and sportsman—first took up smoking, he did not simply choose the first brand of cigarettes that came to hand. He did what any sophomore, epicure, and sportsman would do: he sampled several brands until he found the very best—a mild, rich, flavorful smoke—an endless source of comfort and satisfaction—a smoke that never palled, never failed to please—a smoke that age could not wither nor custom stale—a filter cigarette with an unfiltered taste—Marlboro, of course!

Similarly, when Thorwald took up girls, he did not simply select the first one who came along. He sampled. First he dated an English literature major named Elizabeth Barrett Schwartz, a wisp of a girl with large, luminous eyes and a soul that shimmered with a pale, unearthly beauty. Trippingly, trippingly, she walked with Thorwald upon the beach and sat with him behind a windward dune and listened to a conch shell and sighed sweetly and took out a little gold pencil and a little morocco notebook and wrote a little poem:

I will lie upon the shore,
I will be a dreamer,
I will feel the sea once more,
Pounding on my femur.

Thorwald's second date was with a physical education major

He did not simply select the first one who came along...

named Peaches Glendower, a broth of a girl with a ready smile and a size 18 neck. She took Thorwald down to the cinder track where they did 100 laps to open the pores. Then they played four games of squash, six sets of tennis, 36 holes of golf, nine innings of one o'cat, six chukkers of lacrosse, and a mile and a quarter of leapfrog. Then they went ten rounds with eight ounce gloves and had heaping bowls of whey and exchanged a firm handshake and went home to their respective whirlpool baths.

Thorwald's final date was with a golden-haired, creamy-browed, green-eyed, red-lipped, full-calved girl named Totsi Sigafoos. Totsi was not majoring in anything. As she often said, "Gee whillikers, what's college for anyhow—to fill your head full of icky old facts, or to discover the shining essence that is YOU?"

Totsi started the evening with Thorwald at a luxurious restaurant where she consumed her own weight in Cornish rock hen. From there they went to a deluxe movie palace where Totsi had popcorn with butter. Then she had a bag of chocolate covered raisins—also with butter. Then they went to a costly ballroom and did the Twist till dawn, tipping the band every eight bars. Then they went to a Chinese restaurant where Totsi, unable to translate the menu, solved her problem by ordering one of everything. Then Thorwald took her to the women's dorm, boosted her in the window, and went downtown to wait for the employment office to open.

While waiting, Thorwald thought over all of his girls and came to a sensible decision. "I think," he said to himself, "that I will stick with Marlboros. I am not rich enough for girls."

Marlboro, however, is rich enough for anybody. It takes mighty good makin's to give you unfiltered taste in a filter cigarette. That's the flavor you get in the famous Marlboro recipe from Richmond, Virginia. You get a lot to like.

To have converters or not to have converters, that is the question. However, WMUA, at the end of this semester, will no longer take the responsibility for their maintenance. If the dorms decide to keep the converters, it will be their responsibility to keep the converters in good working order.

So much for the converters. A far more important phenomena will take place next Monday, and I will do the honors. On Feb. 26 at 7 p.m., WMUA will open its airwaves to a brand new show, Masterpieces of Western Literature which will be talks on pertinent novels by individual UMass professors for the edification of students taking English 26.

WMUA welcomes any students who are interested in working for the station. Drop by anytime during the broadmasting day, 3:30-12 midnight Sunday-Thursday, 3:30-1 a.m. Friday and Saturday.

Freedom Of Mind Cannot Be Blocked By "Iron Curtain"

A wall can change education and thought. But it cannot harness freedom of the mind that is given a chance to break the chains.

Kelly Smith contrasts education on the two sides of the wall in a DAILY KANSAN editorial.

Two girls, university students, walk along the still streets. It's dark. They're talking and laughing now and then as they play a children's game of hop-scotch with the shadows.

In another city, two more girls are walking along a street —a quiet street because there is a curfew. There is no laughing. The few words spoken are almost whispers. There are shadows, but no hop-scotch.

The difference? Two girls are students at the University of Kansas, USA, and two are students at Humboldt University, East Berlin.

Without further explanation, we recognize immediately that between these girls there is more than distance, more than a language barrier, and more than a mere variety of professors and textbooks—there is a world. A world now separated by a wall . . .

We talk about the "limited, tersely selected material" available to students on the other side of the wall. We talk and complain about the fact that two girls cannot laugh as freely on one campus as on another. We talk about the restrictions of students behind the wall. But what do we do about it? Nothing.

And what can we do? We can educate ourselves more aptly and fully. We can learn that there is a difference in degrees of academic freedom, and we can learn that those differences produce two kinds of people — Communist-inpired and democratic-inspired.

We can learn that freedom of the mind cannot be harnessed within a wall if given a chance to break the chains, and we can learn that one person, one student body, one country is enough to break the vacuum seal over the student, any student, anywhere.

Folk Festival At UMass March 2-3

Do you remember the square dancers in the Operetta Guild's production of "Oklahoma!"? They were the "Heymakers," members of the Square Dance Club, (sponsored by the SU Dance Committee).

Since last fall members of the club have been busy corresponding with folk and square dance groups from other colleges to prepare for the 9th Annual Intercollegiate Folk Festival which will be held on March 2 and 3. For the past few weeks 17 students have been practicing for the exhibition in the festival.

In 1960, the Intercollegiate Folk Festival was held here on campus. At that time several groups attended from distant schools.

It's kind of hard to conceive, but one man is making a living beating the Yankees. Frank Lary, noted for being a Yankee-killer, recently signed his contract for this coming year for a reported $35,000. His overall record is not that impressive as in eight years he has won only seven more games than he has lost, but his record for the same period of time against the Yankees is 27-10. Maybe the Yankees will pay him $40,000 to sit out.

Next time you are in St. Louis and you go to a St. Louis Hawk basketball game, you can easily spot their owner Ben Kerner. He's that man in the first row with the bright red face. The story goes back to about 1950 when he was the owner of the now defunct Tri-Cities team. At that time he drafted a magician from Worcester by the name of Bob Cousy, whom he promptly traded for a non-descript. In 1955, now the owner of the St. Louis Hawks, Kerner passed up Maurice Stokes in the draft to get to Dick Ricketts. Then in 1956 he pulled off what was to be his best blunder yet, by swapping the draft rights to Bill Russell for Cliff Hagan and Ed McCauley. Thus the red face. It also leads one to wonder where the Celtics would be without benevolent "Uncle Ben."

Contrary to his public statements, it appears that Jerry Lucas is turning Pro, for he recently hired a business manager . . . Art Ditmar, now pitching for the Kansas City A's finally received his BS degree from AIC. He started in 1954. He also received another written document recently asking him to play ball for the tune of $30,000. It's not often that a BS man starts off with such a salary . . . While still on the subject of baseball, Early Wynn just inked a contract for the twenty-first straight year. At the venerable age of forty-two he needs only seven more victories to reach the coveted 300 mark.

Hit and Run

Basketball has the 24 second rule, football the too much time in the huddle penalty and baseball has a time limit between pitches. Now golf has got into the act and has instituted a new speed-up rule. The recent PGA ruling calls for a penalty of two strokes if a player falls one hole behind the group in front. This tends to discourage the older players such as Jerry Barber, Sam Snead, etc. Golf is by nature a slow game, its very being depends on a slow, deliberate, thought-out plan of attack. Baseball and basketball needed to be sped up because people were getting orbed. But the galleries that follow the golfers around expect and appreciate the pace. This rule can't help but to hinder the "old guard" golfers who are really dedicated to the game. Why, pretty soon courses will look like go-cart race tracks with golf carts scurrying around to keep up with the field.

NIT And NCAA Each Choose Four Teams

The National Collegiate Athletic Association championship (NCAA) and the National Invitation Tournament (NIT) each picked four teams Monday as the tug-of-war for talent began between the two major post-season basketball tournaments.

Here's how the first chips fell:

NCAA—Oregon State (17-3), Creighton (16-4), Detroit (14-7), Villanova (16-6).

NIT—Providence (16-5), Duquesne (16-5), Loyola of Chicago (16-2), Houston (18-5).

Houston, former member of the Missouri Valley Conference, became the fourth NIT entry Monday night. It will be Houston's first appearance in the NIT, and the first time the school has appeared in New York.

The National Invitation Tournament, with a 12-team field, is scheduled March 15-24 at Madison Square Garden. The NCAA semifinals and finals are slated at Louisville March 23-24 after a series of regional eliminations involving 25 teams.

At-Large Teams

The NCAA teams—all picked as at-large representatives—were announced by Bernie Shively, athletic director at the University of Kentucky and NCAA tournament chairman.

The NIT representatives were released by Ken North, Manhattan coach and chairman of the Garden event.

The NCAA field will be made up of 15 conference champions and 10 teams picked from at large. Oregon State will be placed in the draw for the western regional eliminations. Detroit, with one of the nation's standout players in Dave Debusschere, will compete in the Mid-East Regional; Creighton in the Mid-West, and Villanova in the East.

The NIT landed three teams with outstanding records in Providence, Duquesne and Loyola of Chicago.

Providence won the title last year with a fast, sure-shooting squad. Vin Ernst, last year's tourney MVP, is back again along with all but one of the regulars of the successful 1960-61 team. Only one varsity player, John Egan, has graduated.

Duquesne is an NIT regular, making its 10th appearance in the 25-year-old tournament. The Dukes won the championship in 1955 and finished second in 1940 and 1954. Last year they lost to Louisville in the second round.

This will mark the third NIT appearance for Loyola.

Villanova, under the direction of coach, Jack Kraft, will be making its fifth start in the NCAA. Its last appearance in the college championship was 1955.

Ken Norton, coach of Manhattan College and chairman of the NIT selection committee, said that nine teams had been given bids. St. John's (N.Y.) and NYU were two of the clubs invited, but either would announce an acceptance.

It was learned that St. John's also received a bid to the NCAA tournament. NYU, apparently hoping to be invited to the NCAA tourney had not received a bid as of noon Monday.

There is a possibility if St. John's turns down the NCAA offer in favor of the NIT bid, then NYU might still be given an NCAA invite.

FROSH BASEBALL

There will be a meeting of all candidates for the freshman baseball team on Tuesday, February 27, at 6:30 p.m. in Room 10 of the Cage.

UMass Hockey Squad Meets UNH In Finale

by STEVE HEWEY '63

The University of Massachusetts hockey team will fill out its 1961-62 schedule this Friday afternoon when it entertains UNH in a return match. In two previous encounters this season, New Hampshire has come out on top both times. The Wildcats coasted to a 14-2 decision over the Redmen in the Brown Invitational Tournament last month. In last Saturday's contest they picked up an 8-4 win.

Going into this Friday's finale Coach Steve Kosakowski's squad is sporting a 7 win, 9 loss record. The team's scoring punch has been strengthened by Jim Ellingwood and Charles Glew. Co-captain Ellingwood leads his team's scoring list. His total of 32 points has come on 14 goals and 18 assists.

Charlie Glew has parlayed 18 goals and 5 assists for 23 points. Charlie leads the Redmen in goals scored.

Coach Kosakowski hopes to see a good turnout of Redmen supporters on hand for the season closer this Friday. The Redmen will be out to avenge their two previous losses to the Wildcats. Face off is at 3:00 p.m. at the Orr Rink at Amherst College.

Focus On Sports

by DICK RENES '63

While the eyes of most Redmen sports fans have been directed toward Matt Zunic's Yankee Conference leaders and Steve Kosakowski's hockey team, five coaches by the names of Fusia, Schmitt, Gladchuck, Glatz and Delaney have been busily preparing for next fall's rugged grid schedule.

Former coach Chuck Studley and present head coach Vic Fusia have lifted UMass football from the doldrums of mediocrity to a team to be reckoned with in the short span of two years as their respectable 13-5 record over that period proves. As coach Fusia put it, "UMass is going to be the school of the future," and it is this writer's opinion that UMass will be one of the top football powers in New England within the near future.

Coach Fusia's dedicated "road program" is focused on bringing only the top grid prospects to the university, academically as well as athletically. The team was dealt a harsh blow by the loss of three of its top performers due to academic reasons but one of the purposes of Coach Fusia's program is "to see that the attrition rate is kept to a minimum." In other words, the members of the staff are not looking for the "meathead" but the top grid prospects who are qualified students as well.

The four general criteria for selection of these prospects outside of their athletic abilities are: his graduating position in class, college board scores, reference to college prediction formula, and last but not least, a personal knowledge of the individual.

To date, the staff has screened over 600 prospects, and of these, approximately 100 are still being sought. The competition is fierce, with opposition coming from such football powers as Syracuse, Holy Cross, Boston College, Harvard, Boston University and UConn, but our coaching staff is going all out to bring the best to UMass and there is no reason to doubt that they won't achieve their goal.

When asked about next fall's eleven, coach Fusia commented, "the team will have more depth and should be better than last year." All signs point toward another successful season and our fine coaching staff deserves a lot of credit for their fine efforts to better the university both on the gridiron and in the classroom.

Zunic Prays For Maine

Tuesday, Feb. 20 — Massachusetts' coach Matt Zunic, still hoping for the best in the Yankee Conference, says he'll be "saying a prayer for Maine" tonight.

The reason is simple. A victory for the Black Bears over Connecticut will just about put the Redmen in the NCAA tournament next month.

Proud of Team

UMass is still in the driver's seat with a 7-2 record and only a home game with New Hampshire remaining. Rhode Island, at 6-2, has Maine and UConn left. After tonight's game, the 5-2 Huskies meet New Hampshire and Rhode Island.

UConn is figured to get its toughest test at Maine. The Huskies lost to the Bears earlier at Storrs.

Should UMass and UConn end in a tie for the title, a committee must choose the tourney representative. With a superior overall record and a pair of wins over UM, UConn would appear to have the advantage. If UMass and Rhody tie, the Redmen probably would get the nod for the same reasons.

"I'm quite proud of this team," Zunic told the college luncheon gathering Monday at the Lord Jeffery Inn.

"Except for a bad shooting night at UConn, we've been winning the must games.

"The unsung hero for us has been (Charlie) Fohlin. He hasn't been scoring much, but he's getting the rebounds and he's giving us that lift in the key games."

Rifle Team Places 17th

The UMass varsity rifle team competed for the first time Saturday in the Coast Guard Academy Invitational Match at New London, Connecticut. This well-established annual match is conducted under the auspices of the National Rifle Association using the official NRA 4 man team as opposed to the intercollegiate team of five men.

Twenty-five of the highest rated teams in the Eastern part of the country competed Saturday as Northeastern set an all-time NRA course record with 1147. M.I.T. placed a close second firing 1140 followed by the Coast Guard Academy with 1139. B.U. placed fourth, St. John's fifth, and West Point was held to sixth.

The team effort, a commendable 1108, placed the Redmen 17th in this annual conflict.

BY O. E. SCHOEFFLER, ESQUIRE'S Fashion Director

With the holiday season approaching, you'll be dressing formally with increasing frequency. Let's review what's new and correct in campus formal wear so you'll be at ease and in fashion at fraternity and sorority dances and at the many gala parties ahead.

YOUR JACKET'S A NATURAL . . . The correct and smart silhouette for campus formal wear is the natural shoulder, single breasted dinner jacket with black satin shawl collar. The high fashion peak lapel model is also being worn by some undergraduates.

FABRICS ARE LIGHT . . . Lightweight formal wear makes sense in any season. The heavy weight, old fashioned "tux" made formal evenings a chore rather than a pleasure. A few hours spent dancing in stuffy, overcrowded, overheated ballrooms was enough to take the starch out of the hardiest college man. Modern, light weight fabrics have changed all that. Dinner jackets are comfortable and going formal is fun. This season's favored formal fabrics will be dull finish tropical worsteds and dacron/rayon blends.

GO VEST, YOUNG MAN . . . Just as vests have made a comeback in suits, and with sport jackets and slacks, you'll see more vests with formal attire. An elegant vest in matching or fancy fabric is just the added touch to boost your rating along sorority row. Pictured is the single breasted shawl collar vest in black with satin lapels and three buttons: it's made of dacron and acetate.

PLEATED SATIN CUMMERBUND AND MATCHING TIE are the smart formal wear accessories that will make you a standout on the stag line. Your dress shirt is either pleated bosom or plain front. Shirt studs are usually black pearl with cuff links to match.

FORMAL FOOTWEAR . . . Whether your forte is the Pachanga, Charanga, Cha Cha Cha or trusty Fox Trot, you should keep in step with black patent leather in either plain tip or slip on model. Highly polished calf skin shoes are a smart alternate. Plain black or midnight blue are the correct colors in formal wear hose.

LET'S GET AWAY FROM IT ALL . . . Holiday formal wear at resorts is white and/or bright. The white wash and wear dinner jacket in blends of rayon and acetate or dacron and rayon is smar and practical. Styling is in the shawl collar. You can also make a colorful vacation splash in plaid cotton or batik dinner jackets.

Foley Makes ECAC Team For 3rd Time

Jack Foley of Holy Cross, Jim Hooley of Boston College and Ron Warner of Gettysburg were repeaters yesterday on the weekly All-East college basketball team.

The team is chosen by sports writers and broadcasters of the Eastern College Athletic Conference. Gary Keenig, Rhode Island's captain and center, and Bob Kauffman, Lafayette guard, were others picked for outstanding performances last week.

Warner, a guard, broke the national collegiate record by hitting 22 of 22 free throws against St. Joseph's of Philadelphia. Foley, a forward, tallied 56 points in a game against Connecticut. It was Foley's third ECAC selection, more than any player this year.

Maine 70, UConn 68

It looks like a possible Madison Square Garden NCAA bid for the Redmen. MAINE DUMPED UCONN LAST NIGHT, 70-68.

Trailing by six points at the half, the Black Bears caught fire from the opening buzzer in the second frame, and with ten minutes gone, led by a point.

The game was far from over, however, as UConn trimmed the eventual seven point edge, an edge attained by the Bears with great effort, to three points with less than a minute to go.

The Maine squad, sparked by Chapelle, Harnum and Warren throughout the half, tallied one point on a Chapelle free throw after the Huskies had narrowed the margin to one point, and with two seconds to go, UConn had possession.

A basket for the Huskies would have sent the game into overtime, but Lenny Carlson missed a desperation, half-court jump, and it was all over for the UConn NCAA hopes.

Capt. Dowdy Gives AFROTC Address

At the request of the Air Cadet Squadron, the Tactical Air Command presented a lecture on the overall mission of T.A.C. to all A.F.R.O.T.C cadets

Capt. Darrell Dowdy presented the talk at Bowker Auditorium before 900 cadets. The lecture centered on the role T.A.C. plays in today's world. Capt. Dowdy explained that it is the general belief of T.A.C.'s officers that the Russians will not resort to all out war, but to "limited" conflicts. The basic foundation of T.A.C. is its ability to react to both types of war, particularly limited war.

The talk was highlighted by the showing of both slides and a short but highly informative movie. This movie dealt with the primary vehicles that T.A.C. has to wage in both types of war.

Of particular interest was the film of T.A.C.'s Composite Air Strike Force (C.A.S.F.) This is a highly mobile force which can be deployed to any part of the world within a few hours. The C.A.S.F. was used in both the Lebanon and the Formosa areas in 1958. T.A.C. had aircraft in both areas in less than 20 hours.

Capt. Dowdy is a regular member of T.A.C. and at present is involved in a speaking tour across the country. Ordinarily Capt. Dowdy is stationed at the Langly Air Force Base, which is one of the largest T.A.C. bases. Capt. Thomas Killion served as host for the occasion.

Fire And Safety Inspector Improves Campus Program

UMass has recently instituted new fire safety standards for all its fraternity and sorority houses.

Upon the advice of University Fire and Safety Inspector Edmund Goetzl and the Amherst Fire Department, fraternity and sorority presidents have cooperated by installing new and improved safety features in their houses. Each fraternity and sorority is now protected with an automatic interior fire alarm system and an outside warning bell.

Detectors are located throughout all structures. Six new fire escapes have been added to these buildings in the last six months. Fire extinguishers are located on each floor and in kitchen areas.

In addition to improvements in equipment and building safety features, periodic fire prevention inspections are made by Inspector Goetzl. Fire drills are held in all residences at least twice during the academic year.

Efficient fire protection is provided through the close cooperative relationship among the Amherst Fire Department, University Fire and Safety Inspector and student officers of each of the fraternities and sororities.

UMass Grad Is Training For Peace Corps

Robert Anderson '51, is among the 4-H Peace Corps trainees now at the National 4-H Center, Washington, D.C. Trainees are destined for assignment to Brazil.

The 4-H Peace Corps in Brazil is a special phase of the President's Peace Corps administered by the National 4-H Foundation. Final selection of the trainees to become volunteers is expected shortly.

In Brazil, the volunteers will work in teams of two — a home economist and an agriculturalist. They will work in with Brazilian 4-S (4-H) personnel to recruit and train local club leaders, assist with the organization and development of clubs and prepare educational material. and prepare educational material. Their assignment is for two years.

Massachusetts' first and only 4-H member selected as a Peace Corps volunteer is Marianne Gould. The daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Philip M. Gould of Spencer, she is now a teaching aide in the Philippines. In commenting recently on her first six weeks there, she said; "The people are just great-so very friendly—it's amazing how willing and eager they are to help. They are amused and pleased that we are trying to learn their language."

The City Of Fort Lauderdale Plans New Welcome For Student Invasion

This bustling lower Atlantic coast resort city, now the training home of the world champion New York Yankees, is making ready for the 1962 visitation of college students in March and April.

Public spirited citizens are working zealously with municipal officials to offer vacationing undergraduates an interesting and varied recreation and entertainment program. Even the Yankees will assist by playing 15 exhibition games in the new Fort Lauderdale baseball stadium between March 10 and April 7.

With few exceptions, all other day and night activities will center on Fort Lauderdale's well groomed beach. A single special area east of Bahia Mar yachting center will be the focal point for live music and dancing during the peak periods. Also bonfires will be permitted under the supervision of the fire department.

Pedestrian and vehicular traffic congestion at the beach is expected to be lessened by the concentration of activity in an area several blocks removed from the intersection of Atlantic and Las Olas boulevards.

The city's recreation department will construct a large stage-bandstand, which during the day will be utilized for bathing beauty contests and other forms of entertainment, including the popular twist and limbo.

Competitive events will include beach basketball, volley ball, ocean swimming and "mailman carry." Other activities will be added as requested.

On arrival students will be greeted at "Hello Booths" in three beach locations, where hospitality passes will be issued and housing information distributed. Here also bulletin boards will be maintained for lost and found information together with schedules of daily and special events.

The hospitality passes, issued on the presentation of college identification or current registration cards, will entitle students to admittance to all of the recreation and entertainment events. A nominal fee of 15 cents will be charged for the passes.

The hospitality booths will be manned by volunteers enlisted by the Junior Chamber of Commerce and Panhellenic Association. It is estimated they will work 7,000 "man" hours.

Joining students here this spring will be the presidents and deans of several universities and colleges. The educators will be guests of the city's leading hotels.

Dr. Clem E. Bininger, chairman of the civic planning group, envisions the development of a closer relationship between students and residents in 1962 by offering the latter the opportunity to invite the young visitors into their homes, clubs and churches. A clearing house will be established to register residents who wish to extend hospitality of this type to students.

The aim of the planning committee, Dr. Bininger states, is to "make the spring visitation of students pleasant for all concerned, including our residents and adult tourist visitors."

As in the past, the city will enforce its customary traffic regulations and ordinances governing good conduct.

J. D.'s CORNER

Among other odd services that Uncle Sam provides for his country is a publication called the Products List Circular, prepared by the Office of Procurement and Technical Assistance of the Small Business Adminitration (Wahington 25, D.C.). In effect, the heart of this circular is a list of newly-patented inventions and the descriptions thereof, known as "abstracts." The circular takes care to inform the reading public in no uncertain terms that "The listing of the abstracts of inventions in this Circular is for information only and in no way constitutes an endorsement thereof by the Small Business Administration."

Most of the inventions listed are for industrial purposes and rather complicated; however, there are plenty of odd inventions also. The December, 1961 issue lists: a heated baby carriage blanket, a birth record spoon, lather-applying safety razors, a portable commode (for traveling family, the aged, the sick, in the home, in bomb shelters, etc.), and a two-piece sanitary comb.

Some of the inventions listed sound very practical: a snow removal attachment for lawn mowers, an artist's palette holder, a liquid container with a built-in drinking straw, a watch case opener, an automatically-adjustable rear-view mirror, a fertilizer-spreading attachmen for lawn mowers, and an automatic self-cleaning rake.

And some of these inventions could only elicit a reply of "Huh???" See if you can identify these: a hay tedder, stereoscopic visualizers, an intrinsically-safe switching system, a tile-setter for bored wells, a foot-actuated multiple rheostat control, and perhaps a—hold your hats! —locking spring-retained fly hook holder.

But most of these inventions would clearly fall into the category of "inventions of which necessity was not the mother." These include: a severe storm and tornado warner, a pinless waterproof fitted baby diaper (with buttons), a folding pocket hat holder, a fume-removing device for toilet bowls, an elongated washcloth with hand-grip portions at the ends (for wahing the back and other normally difficult-to-reach parts of the body), and a utility compact (which includes flashlight, lighter, knife, nail file, bottle opener, etc.). And you'll wonder how you ever lived this long without some of these items: a musical crib mattress, a breath-tester ("a device by which one can detect obnoxious breath"), a device for locking toilet seat and seat cover (prevents unlocking by infants; easily operated by an adult), and a disposable umbrella.

If finals put you in the mood for a few chuckles, send away for a free copy of this invaluable circular.

Many children are highly precocious, but I never realized just how advanced they may be until I babysat with a nine-year-old boy. He was reading an encyclopedia when it was time for his little sister to go to bed, and I asked if he had a book of fairy tales or nursery rhymes from which I could read to her. "I don't read that stuff any more," I was told indignantly. "But I still have some of my baby books that I'm keeping for her . . ." So he went to his closet, emerged with a volume of Mother Goose rhymes, handed it to me, and returned to his encyclopedia. Opening the book in the middle, I noticed an addition to one of the rhymes in a childish scrawl. The "revised" Mother Goose rhyme now began:

There was an old lady who lived in a shoe;
She had so many children
she didn't know what to do.
Obviously.

Senate To Consider Incentive Program

by ARY WILSON '64

Wednesday night's Senate meeting was highlighted by debate on two issues. Andy D'Avanzo made a motion to estaolish an Ad Hoc Senate Incentive Committee for the purpose of investigating the feasibility of establishing an incentive program for encouraging qualified students to undertake responsible positions in student activities.

Committee To Look Into Incentive

D'Avanzo pointed out that in the past many responsible and able students had left student government positions, much to the detriment of the student body. He mentioned that perhaps some left for financial reasons and suggested that the solution might lie in some form of financial aid.

Senator Marilyn LeGoff opposed the motion, saying leaders who have to be "given" incentive would be less capable than those internally motivated. Senator Linda Achenbach concurred.

Senator Eddie Cass replied that many students who have all the internal motivation necessary for being capable leaders are not always able to overcome external difficulties. Any incentives the committee might recommend would not necessarily have to be in the form of financial aid, Cass said; perhaps some other method would be advisable, but they would never know unless they looked into it. He claimed the problem of maintaining responsible leadership would grow with the expanding student body and organizations and then pointed out that the "2.0" bill had already eliminated "at least ⅓ of all potential student leaders."

The bill passed with only three votes in opposition.

600 Dollars For High School Honor Student's Day

The second major issue was the motion to "appropriate the sum of $600 to match the University's equivalent contribution for the purpose of subsidizing the first High School Honor Student's Day program to be held at the University of Massachusetts . . ." The bill was introduced oy Linda Achenbach for Adelphia.

Passage of the bill was slowed somewhat by misunderstanding concerning the details of travel expenses, but once these were cleared there remained three objections on the floor.

Senator Samma objected to the idea of paying for the travel expenses of the high school students who would be visiting here under the program. Dana Clark objected to the idea of openly "recruiting" desirable students. Marilyn LeGoff doubted the general effectiveness of the program but apparently was convinced by supporters of the bill as she voted for it.

Passed also was a motion defining a commuter as "any undergraduate student at the University who does not reside in a University dormitory, recognized fraternity or sorority, or married students apartments" (for electoral purposes), and Senate by-law changes concerning RSO appointments.

Lederle Says UMass' Growth Should Provide Town Industry

UMass, under its new expanson program, will provide this community with, "a great growth industry," University President John W. Lederle told the Chamber of Commerce at its meeting at the Lord Jeffery Tuesday night.

First Appearance

Making his first appearance before an audience of townspeople, Lederle told chamber members this university hopes its growth will also help the town to attract high grade industries and research enterprises.

Lederle, who spoke on a panel of three university administrators, said the university hopes to obtain funds for additions to the ininstitution's payments to the town in lieu of taxes.

UMass will remain willing to "sit down with the town manager and the selectmen to do what we can to alleviate the problems which will arise" during the expansion period, be emphasized.

Other panelists were university Treasurer Kenneth Johnson and Business Manager Gerald J. Grady.

Johnson told the chamber the school will begin this spring as much new dormitory construction as has been completed in four years. The more than $5 million in new dormitory projects will continue the university program of construction on a self-liquidating basis in which student residence fees amortize the construction cost, Johnson said.

10 to 12 Story Buildings

After completion of the dormitory expansion started this year, UMass is planning a new complex of high-price dormitories for four to five thousand students he said.

The program, combined with present "dorm" space, will leave the school with one dormitory complex at each corner of the campus, thus leaving room for academic buildings to "squeeze" outward and expand into the areas beyond, Johnson said.

Additional construction planned for this fall includes a $3 million physical education building and the third and fourth sections of the new science center, he said.

As a means of conquering campus pedestrian traffic problems, he observed, the school is working toward grouping of all buildings by subjects taught in them. To avoid automobile traffic problems, the university is contemplating a proposed "circular" traffic pattern which would put a "ring" around the campus in the form of a main road which would be the deepest point to which automobiles would be allowed to enter the campus, he said.

Grady told the chamber the university's payroll will soon exceed $200,000 weekly, paid to 1989 employees, of whom more than 60 per cent reside in Amherst.

The university's central purchasing agency places orders for more than $75,000 in goods and services with Amherst concerns every year, Grady noted. Grady described the university as "a built-in stability factor which will provide the town with a gradual growth for many years to come."

S. U. Plans Evening Of Unusual Music

An evening of experimental music will be offered on Sunday, Feb. 25, at 7 p.m. in the Commonwealth Room of the Student Union.

The combination lecture-demonstration-recital is sponsored by the Student Union Arts and Music Committee, and will include presentations by students, a faculty member and a guest lecturer.

The evening's entertainment is unde the direction of Elliott Schwartz of the University's music department.

Featured will be an example of "chance music" which Schwartz defines as "planned improvisation," and a performance of antiphonal music—in which the sounds come from different directions.

Charles Whittenberg, New York composer, will lecture on experimental music. Following this, one of his electronic compositions, "Study for Clarinet with Electronic Extensions," will be played by University freshman Allen Blustine, accompanied by a sound track.

An example of antiphonal music, featuring student players scattered about the room, will be conducted by the composer, University senior John Maggs.

Schwartz, composer as well as teacher, will have two of his compositions, "Patterns," and "Flood Tide," played this spring in Philadelphia and at the University of Kansas, respectively.

The Sunday concert of experimental music is open to the public without charge.

Fines Arts Festival Opens Today

The Fine Arts Festival, "Africa Unbound," begins this afternoon with a panel discussion on African Thought and Culture at 4 p.m. in the Cape Cod Lounge of the S.U. Dr. Absolom Vilakazi, an anthropologist at the Hartford Seminary Foundation, will act as moderator. Panel members are: Ola Rotimi, Aloysius Navaogugu, Okon Wodiong, and Reid P. Chambers.

Later this evening at 8 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium, the Modern Dance Club will present its annual concert in keeping with the theme of the Fine Arts Weekend.

An exhibition of African sculptures and handicrafts will be displayed in the Commonwealth Room of the S.U. during the festival.

Tomorrow at 3:30 in the Commonwealth Room, Mr. Ladislas Segy of the Segy Gallery in New York will present a gallery discussion about his collection of African masks and handicrafts, which are a part of the display.

Dr. Dana Harlowe of the UMass Men's Physical Education Department is also displaying his collection of African masks.

The Festival will end Sunday at 3 p.m. in Bowker with a performance by the famed Dinizulu Dancers of South Africa.

CAMPUS NEWSCAST

WMUA will give a news broadcast tonight at 6:45 from the Collegian office in the S.U. Fifteen minutes of the latest campus and four-college events will be presented.

Mina Lowe and Ellis Smith practice for the Modern Dance Club recital tonight in Bowker at 8 p.m. The performance is part of the Fine Arts Festival being held this weekend.

Dep't. Head Views Faculty Promotions

Mr. David Axelrod (a Collegian reporter) has asked me for an interview in reference to Mr. Jay Warner's letter in the Collegian of February 16, 1962. I prefer instead to write a reply to that letter. That mattters involved are very important, and I wish to express my views about them as precisely as I can.

Mr. Warner asked, "Does a doctorate automatically mean one is capable of teaching and a lack of it mean one cannot teach?" Of course not. But let me pose another question. Would not a good teacher become a better teacher if he were to continue his study toward a doctorate degree?

Mr. Warner stated, "Because this teacher does not have his Ph.D., he is to be dismissed." This statement is not quite accurate. Our departmental tenure and promotion rules do not specifically require a doctorate degree, although they certainly do strongly imply its desirability. These rules require, among other things, ". . . or a Master's degree in Mathematics and continued, substantial progress toward a doctorate degree. In practice this usually means the completion at least of residence requirements. Young staff members whom we consider good teachers will be encouraged to take a leave of absence, before tenure, for study toward the doctorate degree . . ."

Rules Made By Committee

The rules were not made by me. They were proposed by a committee of department members and were adopted by a vote of the department members over five years ago.

I have thought a very long time and, I hope, very carefully about these rules, and I cannot believe that adherence to them is contrary to the best interests of this university. Mathematics is advancing so rapidly these days that continued training is very highly desirable.

In closing let me say that in my opinion the best teacher is one who has the best and most modern academic training possible and who is, either by hard work or by nature, a skillful expositor. It is to obtain such teachers that the University needs higher salaries.

Head of Dept., Mathematics

Jacques Barzun in "Teacher in America":

The American university system is built on the two false premises that all teachers must add to the existing stock of knowledge by research, and that all self-respecting institutions fulfill their role only by employing productive scholars.

A Student Views Faculty As Teaches

by MITCHELL MILLER '63

If we assume that the criteria for judging the worth of an instructor is his ability to teach a course and to inject, with or without undue strain into the rather dense atmosphere of his students the subject matter required by the context of the course; one must come to the decision that some if not many of the instructors here are not educators of sufficient quality.

I am not charging that these people are not qualified academically to teach these courses; but I am advocating that they do not have the ability to transmit their knowledge efficiently and effectively to the students.

It is probable that poor marks are not just the fault of the student; but that they may be directly traced to the lack of competence of the instructor.

I have been informed of instructors who raise the passing grades of their exams or who produce exams which take an hour to copy; let alone to complete the problems.

I would prefer to disregard these insinuations as prejudice on the part of an angered student. Not all of these accusations can be assumed to be false.

I repeat that I do not question the knowledge of the subject posessed by members of the faculty; but I do question their ability to teach this knowledge to undergraduates.

Editor's Note—

In today's paper we have presented the comments of a University department head, a student, and a renowned scholar and educator. From the letters and inquiries we have received at the Collegian office, it is apparent that the Student Body is greatly interested in the process of faculty promotions.

Therefore the Collegian requests that faculty members who wish to express their views and opinions on the system of faculty promotions direct their communications to the Collegian.

NSMCC

To the Editor:

Two years ago, February 1960, a group of college students staged a spontaneous sit-in in Greensboro, North Carolina. The spirit which had moved these students to action soon spread throughout the Southern community. By February 1961, the various independent student movements had been brought together by student leaders and an organizational center was set up. This organization, the Student Non-violent Coordinating Committee (SNCC) has become, in the past year, a coordinated, active group with a dedicated full-time staff.

The group was formed because of the need to present a unified front to the South. The program has evolved as one in which students from all over the South in conjunction with adult leadership unite their energies in a massive protest to challenge segregation. This is not a desperate movement towards securing individual liberties, but a breaking down of every social institution that maintains the inferior position of one group of people. Education, employment, and the vote are the basic social institutions which are perpetuating white supremacy in the South, and are therefore of first importance.

The Northern Student Movement Coordinating Committee (NSMCC) has been organized in the past year as a New England counterpart of SNCC. NSMCC is trying to coordinate the various independent organizations on campuses throughout New England, as well as to initiate and coordinate action programs aimed at the problems of discrimination found in the North. During the past few months NSMCC has been concentrating on raising money for SNCC's voter registration program. There have already been very successful campaigns and button sales on the campuses of Yale, Harvard, N.Y.U., Amherst, and Mt. Holyoke. This Friday there is a similar button sale on the UMass campus. It is hoped students will show as much enthusiasm and interest in supporting this program as other students have shown, by buying a button and wearing it for others to see.

Kudos For Collegian

To the Editor:

The student body of this campus has been blasted from many sides for its general apathy toward itself and its operation. This attitude of many students is often excused by those same inert students on the grounds that "I didn't know about it."

The Collegian, for the past few weeks, has included on the front page each Wednesday the Senate bills to be acted upon that evening. Let us hope that the paper shall continue this policy in the future so that, at the very least, these lethargic students will be forced to think of another, probably lame excuse. Who knows, perhaps some of them will be sparked into attending a Senate meeting.

The Cage: For Man or Beast

To the Editor:

How can we expect to attract the best talent to this campus when we offer only the worst type of makeshift facilities? Last year, Rise Stevens probably thought it some stroke of luck that she escaped pneumonia, after her oft-interrupted performance in our Cage. Cage . . . that's a good word. Implies, to me, a place where we exercise the animal in us—our physical bodies. It is no place for exercise of the spirit. It is impossible to fully enjoy a musical performances in it.

If the University cannot provide decent facilities it should not invite people to perform here. But this problem may be solved of its own accord. No performers will come.

Land-Grant Colleges Aid Space Research

Much of the booster power needed to keep the United States space program in orbit is being contributed by our land-grant colleges and state universities. These institutions, many of which are concerned with space science, are singularly well equipped to make significant contributions to this country's space exploration in the area of theoretical research and prototype model-making. Their large staffs, extensive laboratories, and liberal supply of Ph.D. candidates to help with (and learn from) such research place them in the exciting forefront of Space Age science.

Educating young space scientists of the future and supplying the government with key personnel is just one contribution these colleges and universities are making, for space-related activities are in progress at campuses across the country.

While scientists at Florida State are exploring effects of radiation on cells, others at the University of Michigan are learning as much as possible about the moon—preparatory research for human lunar-surface landings—and designing floating space observatories.

At the University of Utah, studies are underway that should help in determining the scientific success potential of people interested in careers in space science. The University of California's space Science Laboratory is investigating the problems of weightlessness in space vehicles.

The University of Massachusetts is undertaking studies of the effects on human behavior of extreme conditions in outer space.

On the day the first American satellite went into orbit, miniature instruments designed and built under supervision of Dr. James Van Allen at the State University of Iowa, provided this country with our first communications from outer space. Later, the great belts of intense radiation which circle the earth were revealed by his instruments and were named the Van Allen Belts. Dr. Van Allen and his assistants are presently perfecting more instruments for space investigation and radiation measurement.

One of the most interesting examples of University centered space activity is the satellite and small rocket work being done by the Space Research Group at the University of Maryland.

In view of the continuing interest in space-related research, activities on the part of National Aeronautics and Space Administration and other scientific agencies and the major role the land-grant colleges and state universities are playing in carrying projects to fulfillment, it appears that the number of projects will double in the coming year.

Rather than building up national laboratories, the emphasis will be on strengthening the universities' own programs to enable them to develop facilities, train more students, and retain their creative personnel. Within a decade, it is hoped that over a dozen space science laboratories will be in operation.

Mister ED

by E.T.R. '62

Dear Mister Ed:

It has recently been stressed by President Lederle that there is to be more research asked of our faculty— "Publish or Perish"—so it is called. Just what effects will this have?

Non Entity '64

Dear Non:

Other than transforming the University into an inkless carbon copy of Harvard and Yale—and the UNIVERSITY of MICHIGAN—it will have far-reaching effects. I've been told, notwithstanding the possibility of error, as part of the research program, the psychology department, instead of following rats through mazes, will instead study students in the coffee line at the Hatch about 9 a.m. Leading this study group will be a young instructor who is writing his doctoral thesis on the effects of mass hysteria. The sociology department will study the social stigma attached to engineers who carry slide rules on their hips and the feasibility of Art majors carrying paint brushes in similar fashion. Home Ec majors carrying spatulas, etc., etc. Also THE ADMINISTRATION WILL STUDY ITSELF.

Now of course, our administrators have other exciting ideas as well. They hope, by bringing noted researchers to campus, that graduate students will flock to our doors to study under them, getting first hand information on their specialty. The undergraduates? Well, if they have these men of note for a course, they should be able to get one or two lectures from him on his specialty during the course of the semester. Undergraduates should take good notes, however, because they will most assuredly find 250 students in the class—discussion Verboten—and they should not bother him after class at his office where he is surely not to be since he is more likely to be out somewhere 'searchin'. Don't let this get you down. Just think, we'll have a top notch graduate school. If you're not satisfied with the undergrad program, why not take correspondence courses instead—SAME THING!

"Invitation To A March" Previewed For Students

Arthur Laurents' "Invitation to a March", which will be presented by the Roister Doisters on April 27, 28, and 29 in Bowker Auditorium, concerns the conflict between conventional society and the self-motivated individual.

The main story concerns a very conventional young man, Schuyler Grogan, son of Tucker and Deedee Grogan, and Norma Brown, daughter of Lily and the late General Brown. Norma and Schuyler are engaged and both families have come to the South Shore of Long Island to meet each other and have the wedding. There is a problem, however; Norma keeps falling asleep.

She is awakened during one of her naps by a kiss from Aaron Jablonski, son of Camilla Jablonski who lives on the beach and rents the house in which the Browns are staying. Aaron challenges Norma and she goes off with him for a night of love, although he has said he will never marry her. It is later learned that Aaron is the result of an affair between Camilla and Tucker Grogan which took place 21 years before.

When this becomes known, Norma must decide whether she will marry Schuyler who loves her, but who constantly puts her to sleep with his conventionality, or if she will stay with Camilla, who is free from the superfluities and false conscience of conventional society.

Aaron, too, has to make the decision between following the convention as exemplified diversely by Deedee, Lily Tucker, and Cary, Norma's little brother, and remaining free and happily self-sufficient as is his mother.

After the decision has been made, Camilla explains to the audience: "Everything's changing so fast, who knows? Maybe someday West Point will be a dancing school! My, that ocean looks pretty! But the tide's coming in and the evening's over. Good night."

Real as the characters and actions are, the entire play is set in a mood of fantasy. Music plays during the performance; the moon appears and disappears like a will-o'-the-wisp. The Sleeping Beauty theme also adds to this atmosphere.

The reality of the situation is made less dominant by the stage techniques of having the actors direct lines to the audience without breaking the action. To add to the lightness are many beautifully witty lines and some almost slapstick comedy.

"Invitation to a March" is an altogether delightful play with considerable depth of meaning on many levels. It should prove to be a challenging production.

Tryouts for this performance will be held in W36 & W37 Machmer, Mon. and Tues., Feb. 26 and 27 at 7:00.

SORORITY NEWS

ALPHA CHI OMEGA

The sisters of Alpha Chi welcome their new pledges: Judy Burke, Carol Eggers, Carol Evans, Karen Hebert, Judy Hirchberg, Carolyn Howarth, Connie Jandris, Peggy MacDonald, Dotty Margolia, Betty Peck, Linda Van de Werf, Irma Wheeler, Ann Williams, and Linda Willis. However, Judy Burke won't be with the pledge class long. We're all looking forward to her initiation on Sunday . . . the very best wishes from us all, Judy. A pledge breakfast was held last Sunday morning, and we certainly hope the pledges enjoyed it as much as we did.

Thanks go to Katy Dix and Peggy Maloney who did a good sculpture, and also to the town of Amherst which kindly disposed their snow on our front lawn. Our only regret is that no one was aware that the disposed snow was salted. We'll all cross our fingers for next year.

Congratulations to Mary Ellen "Chic" Chichetti who was recently awarded Alpha Chi Omega's carnation girl of the month award for January.

CHI OMEGA

Sixteen enthusiastic Chi O pledges have been added to the Massachusetts Greek world making sixty-five sisters happy and proud. The new pledges are Pris Crane, Eileen Diggle, Diane Driscoll, Kathy Eichhorn, Barbara Engel, Marcia Lockhart, Andy Long, Sue Lydon, Kathy Manning, Kathy Meehan, Sally Palmer, Lynne Peirce, Barbara Policow, Julie Ryan, Linda Small, and a sophomore transfer student from Germany, Nancy Fish. Congratulations, kids.

Roses and telegrams showered our own Carol Madison along with her new title as Winter Carnival Queen. Good things really do come in small packages.

The Chi O's were all proud to see Ann Kelley, Nancy Pizzano, Andy Long, Carol Madison, and Ann Slattery in the fashion show Saturday.

The mail between Amherst and Albuquerque, New Mexico has increased considerably since Joan Hussey has begun her exchange program there. We agree it's a tremendous experience but we sure do miss her. (By the way our snow sculpture missed her too—being social chairman.)

Best wishes go to Nancy Ridill who transferred to Jackson this semester. Best wishes also go out to our president Barbie Winslow Robidoux who was married January 27.

Now that rushing is finally over the Chi O's will join the seven other sororities and really begin their second semester.

KKG

Our appreciation is extended to Miss Carole Leland, Placement Officer for Women, whose company we enjoyed very much at supper Tuesday night.

College Bookstores Use Advertising Innovations

College bookstore advertising has taken a new turn. Take, for example, this opus placed by the bookstore in the Eastern New Mexico University CHASE.

The Textbook is a unique animal in the world of Books.

It is many things to many people.

It comes off the presses a robust and happy infant, adored by its author and praised to the skies by its publisher.

It was conceived of Scholarship and Patience and nurtured by Effort. However, its future is brief and full of ups and downs.

As an infant, it's worth its weight in diamonds, but the day comes quickly when the publisher won't give a dime for his offspring.

Spanking new, this infant's price outrages students who buy it over the counter.

The new baby matures fast in a world of hard knocks. By turns, it is used and misused. It is handled and mishandled. It is talked about, talked over, talked up and talked down.

By turns, it is a friend and foe. It is taken to dinner and kept up all night. It gets picked up, patted and praised. It gets discussed, cussed, and kicked across the room.

It gets dog-eared and dog-tired. It gets rained on and sat on. It is thumbed through and flipped through and flopped over.

It knows many owners. It is bickered over, bargained for, derided, and disowned.

And its short unhappy end comes when the Publisher announces a new baby brother with a birthmark that reads "New Edition."

LAMBDA DELTA PHI

We would like to congratulate and welcome our new pledges: Virginia Kochanowski, Elaine Packard, Doris Loeser, Joan Shusta, Rene Potish, Janet Wood, Sheila Cooper, and Bonnie Goldman.

The sisters enjoyed a wonderful evening Wednesday at the exchange supper with Alpha Tau Gamma.

We would like to thank the sisters very much for the hard work they put into our prize winning sculpture.

PI BETA PHI

Now that formal rush is over, the Pi Phi's would like to welcome their sixteen new pledges. They are: Gail Benvie, Mary Lyon; Joan Congdon, Hamlin; Kathy Fiddes, Johnson; Patricia Gully, Crabtree; Meredith Halstead, Johnson; Sharon Hanahan, Dwight; Carlene Ingram, Crabtree; Diana Mick, Mary Lyon; Gretchen Nelson, Crabtree; Kathy Osterberg, Lewis; Judy Seddon, Hamlin; Cookie Siepel, Crabtree; Pat Simmons, Johnson; Donna Titus, Johnson; Teresa Wright,

Silver Co. Conducts Opinion Competition

During the months of February and March, Reed & Barton, America's oldest major silversmiths, are conducting a "Silver Opinion Competition" in which valuable scholarship awards totalling $2050 are being offered to duly enrolled women students at a few selected colleges and universities. UMass has been selected to enter this competition in which the First Grand Award is a $500 cash scholarship; Second Grand Award is a $300 scholarship; Third Grand Award is a $250 scholarship; Fourth, Fifth and Sixth Awards are $200 scholarships; and Seventh, Eighth, Ninth and Tenth are $100 scholarships. In addition, there will be 100 other awards consisting of sterling silver, fine china and crystal with a retail value of approximately $50.00.

In the "Silver Opinion Competition", an entry form illustrates twelve designs of sterling with nine designs of both china and crystal. (Entrant simply lists what she considers the six best combinations of these to match certain design periods.) Awards will be made to those entries matching or coming closest to the unanimous selections of table-setting editors from three of the nation's leading magazines.

Patricia Howorth is the Student Representative who is conducting the "Silver Opinion Competition" for Reed & Barton at UMass. Those interested in entering the "Silver Opinion Competition" should contact Patricia Howorth at Sigma Kappa for entry blanks and for complete details concerning the Competition rules. She also has samples of twelve of the most popular Reed & Barton designs so that entrants can see these sterling patterns.

Through the opinions on silver design expressed by college women competing for these scholarships, Reed & Barton hopes to compile a valuable library of expressions of young American taste.

Prof Speaks On Problem Of Drop-out

As admission to American colleges and universities becomes more difficult and entrance requirements and academic standards get tougher, the problem of drop-outs before graduation takes on added significance. New dimensions of the problem, including analysis of percentages and factors related to attrition, are explored in the following summaries of information from two recently published books and a statement by the dean of Rutgers University.

Nationally, approximately one out of three dropouts occurs for academic reasons, reports John Summerskill, vice-president of Cornell University in a thousand-page study "The American College" (edited by Prof. Nevitt Sanford of Stanford University, published by John Wiley & Sons).

Approximately half the freshmen who enter American colleges drop out during the next four years; about 40% never graduate. And there has been no appreciable change in drop-out rates during the past 40 years, concludes Summerskill, after reviewing 35 major studies of the problem completed in the years from 1913 to the present.

Some colleges lose as few as 12 percent of their freshman class over a four-year period, while others have drop-out rates as high as 82 percent, he notes.

"In general, the attrition problems that predominate in colleges involve the student's failure to meet the psychological, sociological or economic demands rather than the strictly academic demands of the college environment," says Summerskill. "The largest numbers of drop-outs involve motivational forces—goals, interests, and satisfactions relative to college and other facets of the student's life . . . In most existing studies, the largest proportions of dropouts are attributed to 'lack of interest in college,' 'lack of interest in studies,' 'marriage,' 'entered military service,' 'transfer,' and so forth."

"The trouble in dealing with this problem is that we do not know what motivational factors are actually predictive of college success."

"Parents occupy key positions in the wider circle of influences upon the changing motivations of the college student . . . The lives of many college students are influenced in important ways by feelings of dependency, ambition, fear, guilt and rebellion, stemming from family aspirations, sanctions or disapproval."

"Research evidence does not support the common notion that dropouts are frequently caused by over anticipation in extracurricular activities," he continues.

Financial difficulties are listed as one of the important causes of attrition, rating with motivation and study problems as one of the top three causes for dropouts. The annual incomes of parents whose children fail to graduate also tend to be lower than those who successfully complete college.

Last Thursday night the Bridge Club had a Team of Four contest instead of its usual game. During this contest an unusual number of possible slams came up. This particular hand was chosen because it illustrates how precise bidding makes a slam of this type relatively easy to reach. North is fairly sure that a slam can be made at his first turn to bid because of his strength and his partner's promised strength (13 points), so he lets his partner know of the slam by a jump shift (a). When the bidding gets to South, he reveals his heart suit. All that North needs to know now is the first round controls in his partner's hand, so he makes an artificial bid. This bid (b) is called the Blackwood Convention; it is a demand bid asking partner how many aces his hand contains. The responses are as follows: 5C—none or four, 5D—one, 5H—two, 5S—three. After South's response, North knows that he is missing one ace, and he therefore stops at six.

Last Thursday night the Bridge Club decided to change the night on which the sessions are held. Beginning Monday, Feb. 26, sessions will be held on Monday instead of Thursday.

Mass. Beta extends another welcome to Sandy Abrams, a Pi Phi, who is an exchange student this semester from the University of New Mexico. Sandy has already been down to meet the sisters and we hope she will soon be eating at the house with us.

Twelve hours of steady work in the snow and cold last Friday captured third place in the snow sculpture competition for the Pi Phi's. Needless to say, the reward was greeted with a great deal of elation by all the sisters.

The Pi Phi's would like to welcome their two new dishwashers this semester, who are Dick Stephan and Steve Huey.

Our future is in the hands of men not yet hired

At Western Electric we play a vital role in helping meet the complex needs of America's vast communications networks. And a career at Western Electric, the manufacturing arm of the nation-wide Bell Telephone System, offers young men the exciting opportunity to help us meet these important needs.

Today, Western Electric equipment reduces thousands of miles to fractions of seconds. Even so, we know that our present communications systems will be inadequate tomorrow; and we are seeking ways to keep up with—and anticipate—the future. For instance, right now Western Electric engineers are working on various phases of solar cell manufacture, miniaturization, data transmission, futuristic telephones, electronic central offices, and computer-controlled production lines—to name just a few.

To perfect the work now in progress and launch many new communications products, projects, procedures, and processes not yet in the mind of man—we need quality-minded engineers. If you feel that you can meet our standards, consider the opportunities offered by working with our company. In a few short years, you will be Western Electric.

Challenging opportunities exist now at Western Electric for electrical, mechanical, industrial, and chemical engineers, as well as physical science, liberal arts, and business majors. All qualified applicants will receive careful consideration for employment without regard to race, creed, color or national origin. For more information about Western Electric, write College Relations, Western Electric Company, Room 6206, 222 Broadway, New York 38, New York. And be sure to arrange for a Western Electric interview when our college representatives visit your campus.

Redmen Roll To Easy Win Over Syracuse Club, 74-51

The UMass hoopsters took long-awaited revenge upon the Syracuse squad that beat them twice last year, by soundly drubbing the Orange 74-51 in the Cage last night.

Syracuse has now lost 25 straight games (The last team they beat was UMass.), while the Redmen are swinging on a 13-8 record.

Close At First

The game was extremely close at the start, with the lead changing hands seevral times. Finally, the Redmen pulled ahead by five points at 11:30, and were never seriously threatened again. Late in the half Syracuse closed the gap to one point, but UMass quickly recovered and, sparked by the excellent all-around play of Charlie Fohlin, sped to a 37-27 lead by the midway buzzer.

Fohlin's smart play earned him a starting post in the second half, but he started at forward, not center. Roger Twitchell took the tap for the Redmen, however he soon returned to his normal position.

Little Doubt

With Fohlin, Twitchell and Kirk Leslie leading the way in the forecourt and Pete Bernard and Mike Mole masterminding the operation, the Redmen pulled further and further away. By 11:50 the breach was extended to 19 points.

Then Coach Matt Zunic began to pull the starters. Coach Marc Guley of Syracuse, realizing the inevitable, did the same, and the last ten minutes of the game was a battle of the alternates.

Dribbling Around

Roger Twitchell continued his prolific output, scoring 22 points . . . Don Black looked sharp during the second half, as he sunk four pretty hoops during a short period of time, and ended up with 11 points . . . Charlie Fohlin snatched 11 rebounds before a slight injury forced him to leave the game early in the second half. Charlie's hustle and drive have been major factors in the Redmen's stretch drive to the YanCon crown.

Still Dribbling

Pete Bernard was second-high for UMass with 15 points. Pete's shots, as usual, were clutch baskets that shut off several of the Orange spurts . . . Mike Mole's flashy ballhandling thwarted the Syracuse full-court press during the second half, while Kirk Leslie handled the backboards, snagging 12 rebounds . . .

The Redmen travel to New London, Conn., Wednesday, where they'll meet the sailors from the Coast Guard Academy... But the big game is next Saturday night when the UNH Wildcats invade, attempting to spoil the YanCon crown for the Redmen. On that same night UConn will be meeting Rhode Island in Kingston. One of the hottest races in Conference history will be carried right down to the wire.

Zunic Mum

Rumors were flying around campus after several newspapers reported that UMass Coach Matt Zunic has been approached by Syracuse to fill the vacancy when Orange Coach Guley retires at the end of this season. When asked Zunic had little to say, stating only that "Right now, all I'm worried about is winning the Conference."

UM Rookies Squeak By Spirited AIC Quintet In

Coach Jack Leaman's freshman basketball squad inched past the AIC yearlings 68-67 in last night's spirited Cage Prelim. Frosh guard Charlie Kingston had 18 points, including the two final-second charity tosses that proved to be AIC's death blow.

The first half saw the Braves score first. A return basket by the Aces set the stage for 8 minutes of neck-and-neck basketball. At 12:00 successive baskets by Gerry Knight, Hoss and O'Rourke put the Braves up by 18-10. At 7:00 O'Rourke hit for a 26-17 Mass bulge. Then the Aces behind Sands and Lanbert fought to within 34-32 by the half.

Kingston opened the second canto with a jump. The Aces countered and managed to stay within 5 points for the first 10 minutes with aggressive rebounding. By 6:30 the score was knotted at 51-51.

After flashy guard Clarence Hill sent the Braves up by 2 with a drive, the visitors managed their first and only lead of the night with a 3 point play at 5:17. The Braves roared back for a 64-61 lead with but 1:14 remaining. The Aces' King hit and Jim Retos answered with foul tosses.

AIC center Jim Sands made good on a layup and was fouled. He missed both attempts and Chuck O'Rourke was there for the all-important rebound. Now the clock read 0:30. Kingston dribbled away 15 seconds before he was fouled. Charlie tallied twice. The unrelenting Aces, however, struck again at 0:09 for 68-67. The Braves ran out the remaining time and boosted their season's record to 10-1.

The game proved to be a repetition of the fine game in which the frosh topped these same Aces in Springfield, 65-62. Behind Kingston in the scoring column were Hill with 14 and Knight with 10. Lambert with 17 and Sands, 13, sparked the losers. Subs John Hoss and John Reynolds rebounded well for the Leamen. O'Rourke and Jim Retos looked good under pressure.

The next and final freshman game finds the Braves in a return match with Holyoke Junior College on Tuesday, Feb. 27.

UM Swimming Squad Loses Sixth Meet To RPI Team

The University of Massachusetts swimming squad suffered its 6th defeat in eight starts Wednesday as it suffered a loss to RPI—the score being 63-30. The Redmen were plagued with many cases of the flu which resulted in numerous second and third places instead of firsts. The Massachusetts swimmers were not even able to enter swimmers in the diving or 200 yard butterfly event.

Two first places were taken by Mike Rothschild who won the 220 yard freestyle in 2:22.5 and set a varsity record in the 440 yard freestyle event with a time of 5:10.0.

Also, Mike Bjornholm won the 200 yard backstroke in 2:24.4.

Second places were taken by Chiras in the 50 and 100 yard freestyle, Grant in the 200 yard individual medley, and by Coffey swimming the 200 yard backstroke.

Other points were mustered by O'Neill, Grybko, and Desjardins.

Joe Rogers' swimming team will meet Tufts at the W.P.E. building on Tuesday the 27th at 8:15. It is predicted that the UMass team will finish the season with a victory and that many records will be broken.

SPORTS FEATURE

Portrait Of The Challenge

by BILL STERN, Noted Sportscaster

In my years as a sportscaster, I have written and broadcast hundreds of stories of sports greats, men and women who have triumphed over physical handicaps or have made thrilling comebacks after personal tragedy has struck. There is something about these men and the stories they live, that leave us poised at the zenith of pride and admiration for the challenge they have dispelled. Such a man is Henry Elwood Davis, "Hank" to his host of friends.

Hank Davis lives in Rotterdam, New York with his wife Marge and their five children. Daytimes, he sells cigars, newspapers and candy bars to over 300 workers at the Corporation Tax Building at 119 Washington Avenue, Albany.

In the evenings, Hank is always found at the Boulevard Bowl, a local AMF bowling center, participating in the sport he loves. He bowls a 184 average. Not much to boast of you say? Or perhaps you're unimpressed. After all, though the national bowling average is below 150 there are still a number of bowlers averaging 184 or better. But you would be, if you could watch him on the lanes. For you see, Hank Davis is tottally blind.

He's been blind for six years now. A disaster resulting from a rare skin disease took his sight in a brief five days during March of 1955.

At that time Hank and his wife Marge had five youngsters . . . the baby only seven months old. They were a normal happy family getting along fine on his salary from the Schnectady, New York, Post Office plus an Army disability check. In fact, the Davises had just bought a new car and moved into a new home.

Then the darkness closed in. The doctors gave no hope for the restoration of his sight. It wasn't easy at first; Hank admits he just went home and cried for days. "For about seven months," he recalls, "I was a pretty rough guy to get along with. I felt the world had stopped. If it wasn't for my wife and children and all my friends I don't think I would have made it." But he's made it and how he's made it.

Before his illness, Hank loved bowling. He had maintained an average of 165 in three leagues. Now, he would try it again. It was a combination of three forces that sent him back to the lanes in 1958. His determination, the restlessness during the long months that followed his blindness and his wife's spirited encouragements.

Just before Christmas in 1958, he took his wife and five kids bowling. Marge helped him get his bearings. Helped him to take his stance, to find his direction and to locate his ball on the return.

Hank didn't kid himself about the possibilities. He was nervous and afraid. But if Hank was afraid, Marge was more so. How would it affect her husband if he failed in this brave attempt?

They need not have had these moments of frightened anxiety, for Hank's first ball took eight pins. Trembling with excitement, Marge told him which two pins were left. His second ball clipped one of them and right then and there a new life was born for Hank Davis.

Since that momentous day, he has worked hard and practiced long hours. Till now he carries a 184 average, at times rolling games high up in the 220's and 230's.

Unselfish about his personal triumph, he presently dedicates many hours teaching other handicapped players the fundamentals of the sport. It has become his self-expressed and cardinal desire to travel across the nation instructing and helping all the handicapped so that they too, may find a new life.

Last February, the blind kegler competed in the Ballantine-AMF Pro-Am Tournament at the New York Coliseum during the Annual Sports and Vacation Show. It was here that Dick Weber, a member of the AFM Staff of Champions, recently voted by the Bowling Writers of America as the "Bowler of the Year," said this of Hank, "The execution of his approach and delivery is perfect. As good as any of the top bowlers in America."

His precision is so uncanny that spectators can scarcely believe their eyes. He uses no guide rails or mechanical aids. His wife Marge, before the game, describes the whole set-up, the apron, the lane, the spots, the pins. Marge puts his hands on the spots (discs set in the lane, which bowlers may use to guide ball placement). Then with his hands Hank must feel the channels on either side of the lane to get the layout in mind. He touches the back of one leg against the ball return in order to set himself dead center on the lane. Someone has to tell him to start far enough back so his three-step delivery won't carry him over the foul line. Any spares and splits that ensue are described to him. Then once again, he is on his own.

When Hank wishes to relax from the lanes, you'll usually find him out on the links, where he plays an excellent game of golf. Or, I should say a championship game. In 1958, he won the Middle Atlantic Blind Golfers Association's Annual Tournament, and was crowned the "Blind Golf King." He broke 100 during an informal match in the summer of 1959. In October of that year, Hank promised to bring home a championship to his son George as a present for the lad's 11th birthday. At Wolfert's Roost in Albany he needed a par on the 18th to win by a stroke. He did it, and brought home the trophy to a proud and happy youngster.

Hank's personal victory in a tough battle with fate is best reflected in the eulogies heaped upon him by fellow sportsmen. After a meeting with N.Y. Giant football star Kyle Rote, the All-Pro grid great had this to say, "Hank Davis is not only a courageous and remarkable man, but is a daily inspiration to all the sports world."

UMass Trackmen Outrun By Holy Cross, Brown; Beat Tufts

The UMass track team finished third in a quadrangular meet against two of New England's top teams at Tufts' Coussens Cage in Medford on Wednesday. Holy Cross won the meet with 46 points, Brown came in second with 37, and the Redmen edged Tufts for third, 29 to 28. Holy Cross' relay teams have been consistently winning indoors in Boston, and in New York, and Brown is New England outdoor champion.

Dick Ward led the UMass attack with his finest performance in a Massachusetts uniform. The big junior (6'3", 223 lbs.) smashed the school record in the 35-lb. weight throw with a heave of 56'4", five feet better than his previous best. All his throws were over 50 feet, and he was leading the competition after the third round with 55'5". Then Dyer of Brown hit 56'11" and Ward unloaded his big one on his last toss, missing first place by seevn inches.

The old mark of 52'½" was set by Roger Kindred in 1960. Ward also outdistanced the field in the high jump, winning at 6'2" by four inches. Joe Cassidy tied for second by clearing 5'10" to give the Redmen seven out of eleven points in this event.

Other good varsity performances were turned in by Jim Bradley, second in the low hurdues against a fast field; Jim Lumley, second in the pole vault at 11'6"; and Dave Balch and Bob Brouillet, second and third in the two mile run.

Marvin Maiberger paced the Crusaders with a 21'11.5" winning broad jump, a second in the dash, and a third in the low hurdles. Brown was led by Joe Dyer, double winner in the weight throw and shotput.

Frosh Third

The UMass freshmen also finished third in their meet. The final scores were Brown 58, Holy Cross 51.5, UMass 26.5, and Tufts 5.

Outstanding for the frosh were Tom Parke and Gus Anagnostopoulos. Panke won both the mile and the two mile events, with a strong kick on the last lap of the two mile run. His times were 4:41.6 and 10:18.0. Anagnostopoulos (he claims that's an abbreviation), took second in the weight throw at 45' 11".

Hockey Team Blanks Lord Jeffs, 10-0, In Eighth Win

The University of Massachusetts hockey squad found its in-town rival, Amherst College, easy prey Wednesday evening and proceeded to lay a ten goal barrage on them enroute to the Redmen's eighth victory of the current season. This was the second time this year that Amherst has bowed to UMass on the ice.

Accounting for eight of the Redmen's goals was the forward line composed of the Glew Brothers, Charlie and Bob, and Co-Captain Jim Ellingsworth. Left winger Charlie Glew led all scorers with a four goal performance.

UMass defenses were air-tight, allowing not one Amherst goal through. In the net for Amherst was Dave Stringer who was about the busiest man on the ice. Dave made 61 saves, but let 10 big ones get by.

This afternoon the Redmen entertain UNH at the Orr Rink in Amherst. New Hampshire, in two previous encounters with the Redmen this season, sports a pair of wins, 14-2 and 8-4. Face off is at 3:00.

Tough Meet Saturday

The UMass varsity and freshmen track teams have tough assignments against Northeastern this Saturday. Both N.U. teams recently beat UConn by scores almost identical to those by which the Redmen topped UConn last week. Both meets should be close.

Stockbridge Riflers Lose To N. Dakota

Still feeling the loss of three first-stringers who did not return for the second semester, the Stockbridge Rifle Team was handily defeated by the North Dakota State University marksmen on the postal circuit. Although Loren Valley's 273 was only two points behind the top man for the Dakotans, their team effort showed better balance.

Yan-Con Champ To Meet NYU In Phil.

It was learned yesterday that the Yankee Conference Basketball champion, whoever it will be, will meet New York University at the Palestra in Philadelphia on March 12.

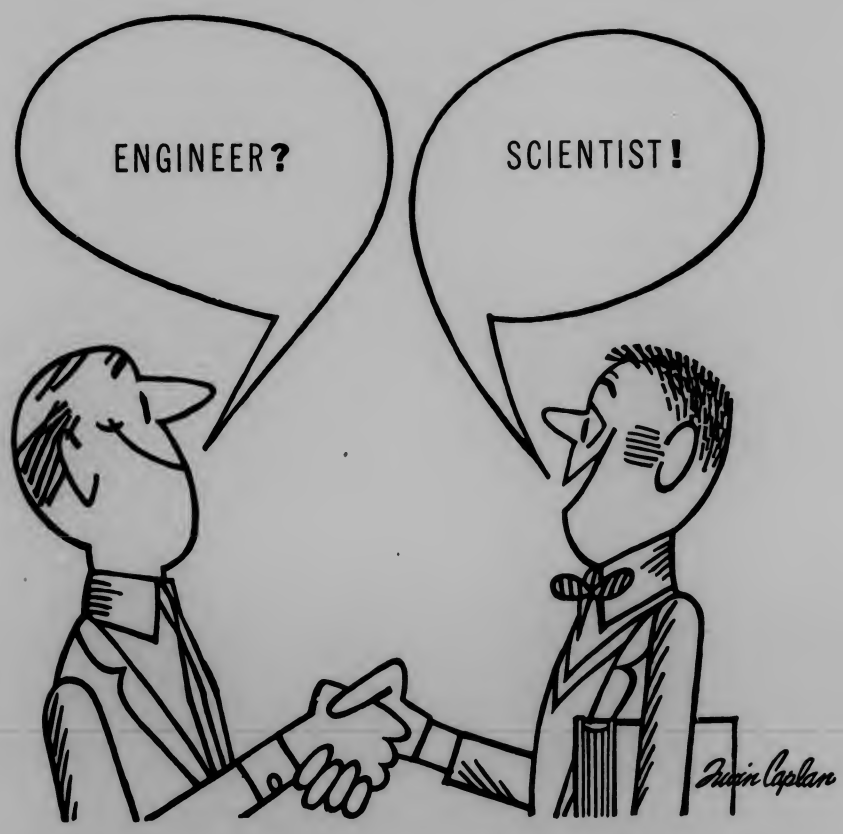
This game will be part of the Eastern Regionals in which the Atlantic Coast Conference champion will play the Ivy League champ and Villanova will face the Southern Conference champion.

The winners of this round will qualify for the regionals at College Park Maryland where the winner of the A.C.C.-Ivy game will play the Middle Atlantic Conference champion, and the other Philadelphia winners will meet each other.

So with luck it will be UMass vs. N.Y.U. in Philadelphia on March 12.

ATTENTION FRESHMEN MEN

Next week there will be meetings for all those interested in Freshmen Baseball and Freshmen Lacrosse. The baseball meeting will be held in room 10 of the Cage Tuesday evening at 6:30 P.M. The meeting for lacrosse candidates will be in the same room on Wednesday at 4:15 P.M.



We're looking forward to meeting you

We'll be on the campus on the dates listed below, ready to give engineering and science seniors information on space-age careers in a dynamic industry. If you are looking for a company offering assignments on programs of unique interest and career potential, you'll be interested in the advantages Boeing can offer you.

Boeing, for instance, is a major contractor on such advanced programs as the Saturn S-1B advanced first stage booster, the Dyna-Soar manned space glider, the solid-fuel Minuteman ICBM, and the Bomarc defense missile system. Boeing is also the world's foremost designer and builder of multijet aircraft, including the eight-jet B-52H missile bomber, the KC-135 tanker-transport, the C-135 cargo-jet, and the famous Boeing 707, 720 and 727 jetliners. In addition, Boeing's Vertol Division is one of America's leading builders of helicopters.

Research projects at Boeing are under way in such advanced fields as celestial mechanics, solid state physics, nuclear and plasma physics, flight sciences, space flight and propulsion.

Expanding Boeing programs offer exceptional opportunities to holders of B.S., M.S. and Ph.D. degrees in aeronautical, mechanical, civil, electrical-electronic and industrial engineering, and in engineering mechanics, engineering physics as well as in mathematics and physics. At Boeing you'll work in a small group where individual ability and initiative get plenty of visibility. You'll enjoy many other advantages, including an opportunity to take graduate studies at company expense to help you get ahead faster.

Drop in to your Placement Office and arrange for an interview. We're looking forward to meeting you!

Four UMass Students Win Awards In Landscape Dept.

Outstanding work by four UMass students earned them recognition by the Landscape Exchange Program early this year.

M. G. Bishop received a Blue Seal award, the highest award given under this program, and one of only two given out during the competition. P. F. Grigas received the only Red Seal award given. Raymond D. Nurme and J. L. Hall were given honorable mention when their entries were allowed to circulate around.

The Landscape Exchange is a nation-wide program open to all schools with a Landscape Architecture department. Five universities entered the competition, with a total of twenty six competitors.

The Landscape Exchange Problems are administered by an Executive Committee. In years past two members of this University have served on this committee; Raymond H. Otto, Head of the Department of Landscape Architecture and Paul N. Procopio, Associate Professor of Landscape Architecture.

The problems are judged by a jury of four. The four men picked as a jury are either teachers or practicing landscape architects. One of the four chosen as Judges for this competition, Charles A. De Deurwaerder, is a graduate of UMass and both a professor and a consultant of landscape architecture.

To avoid any unconscious partiality on the part of the judges, the names of the participants and the universities which they attend are not revealed during the competition.

The purpose of the program is to allow students to compare their work with others and to give them the benefit of professional criticism.

The problem judged in this competition involved the design of a 32-unit garden apartment development on a partially wooded site in Wisconsin. The submissions were made on a 30"x40" sheet and showed proposed buildings, roads, parking area, walks, terraces, proposed planting, perspectives and elevation views.

Worry About Your Dreams? Read The Latest Information

Though you may not remember it, last night you spent between one and two hours dreaming. If you heard someone talking, it was probably you: dreamers rarely hear anything but their own end of a conversation. And no matter how bizarre your dream was, its setting probably was commonplace—a room, a car, a street, a field.

These are but a few of the findings that researchers have made about you and your dreams. For something we do so often, it's surprising how little we know about dreams—what they mean, why we dream . . . even what dreams can tell about us.

For example: if you remember your dreams clearly, then you are probably quite aware of your inner feelings and emotions. This was demonstrated by a survey carried out by Dr. Rosalea Schonbar, a clinical psychologist at Columbia University's Teacher's Colege. And if you tend to forget your dreams, you may be inhibited emotionally.

No, don't say you never dream. Investigators at the University of New York's Down-State Medical Center, after exhaustive tests, concluded that everybody dreams—but some people have trouble remembering their dreams.

How much do you remember about dreams? For example, do you think you move around while you're dreaming? Not at all—you remain motionless, though you may thrash about both before and after. According to Dr. Nathaniel Kleitman of the University of Chicago, dreamers are like people at a theater; they fidget before the curtain goes up, then remain spellbound.

How much time do you think you spend dreaming? Believe it or not, you probably spend 22 per cent of your nightly rest in dreams. University of Chicago scientists also maintain that you start to dream an hour after you fall asleep, and first dream lasts ten minutes. Then come three, four, or five more dreams, lasting 20 to 35 minutes, and at 90-minute intervals. Your dreams tend to last longer as the morning approaches.

Who dreams more—men or women? Women dream more than men, bright people dream more than not-so-bright people, and single women dream more than married women—though no one had to tell you that. Researchers for the Chemstrand Corporation also report that women are more apt to dream in color and they are more apt to dream about men. Men, according to the Chemstrand researchers, dream equally about men and women. Young folks between 20 and 25 dream the most; elderly people dream the least.

Among most of us, dreams that show our dislikes and hatreds predominate. You have three dreams that are unfriendly to other people for every one that is friendly. Nonetheless, psychiatrists find that most people think that the majority of their dreams are pleasant.

Why do we dream? Dr. Sigmund Freud, the founder of psychoanalysis, thought that dreams help keep us asleep—by blotting out unpleasant thoughts.

This was corroborated by a study made by Dr. William Dement in the Department of Psychiatry at Mount Sinai Hospital, New York. Dr. Dement decided to have a group of subjects awakened whenever they began to dream (you can tell when someone begins to dream by the movement of his eyes). The subjects, because their dreams were disturbed, became panicky and irritable, and—oddly enough—developed ravenous appetites.

You yourself can probably supply testimony of how dreams keep you asleep — haven't you once incorporated the ringing of an alarm clock into what was going on in your dream? Further proof: a group of heroic subjects tried to sleep amid bright lights, noises, and even cold-water sprays. All these distractions were woven into their dreams, and they thus managed to get some sleep—though not much.

You probably didn't know it, but you can even force someone to dream. Studies conducted by Dr. Hugo Beigel, professor of psychology at Long Island University, show that you can do this by holding perfume under a dreamer's nose, whistling, placing a pillow on his lap, or turning on a light. The sleeper dreams in order not to wake up.

Many observations you never noticed before come to the fore when you are asleep. You may have barely noticed how pale your friend looked, how tired he seemed—but, in your dream, you put two and two together.

And sometimes dreams can bring you a fortune.

Back in the 19th century, a writer went to sleep and had a fascinating dream. When he awakened, he decided to write a story about that dream.

The writer was Robert Louis Stevenson. And the story he wrote is one of the classics of literature, a story that everyone knows—Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde.

"No matter how much you nurse a grudge, it won't get any better."

Berlin Affair To Be Topic Of Mt. Holyoke Weekend

Abdul Samma '63, president of the International Club on campus, has announced the beginning of the International Weekend at Mt. Holyoke College in South Hadley. All students are invited to attend.

The program includes a keynote speech on the Berlin situation by Hans Kohn, to be given tonight at 8 p.m. The topic will be continued on Saturday, when speeches will be given by: Edward Mkiek, 1st secretary to the Polish Embassy; Karl Anthom, a professor at American University; Dr. Phillipp Schmidt-Schlegel, German consul in Boston; M. Polohik, 1st Press secretary of Perm. Delegation of USSR to the UN; and William Griffith, a professor at MIT.

Later on Saturday, the club will hold a banquet, a square dance, and an International Student Bazaar. The weekend will close with entertainment at Kendall Hall on Sunday afternoon.

Flu Cases Requested To Give Info

At the preesnt time there appears to be a mild outbreak of influenza on campus. Currently, graduate students in Epidemiology are involved in a research program dealing with this problem. Students who felt sick enough to enter the infirmary have provided specific information when an influenza diagnosis was made.

However, it is assumed that there are many more students wh have had mild flu-like cases —but did not feel sick enough to enter the infirmary. Students who have experienced chills, cough, aching eyes, aches or pains in the back, legs or shoulder since the beginning of the semester, are asked please to fill out the influenza questionnaire.

This questionnaire will be available at the reception desk of the S.U. After filling it out it should be returned to the reception desk. All cooperation in the matter will be greatly appreciated by all involved in this study.

WMUA Presents Five New Series

Beginning tonight WMUA will present a new series, Masterpieces of Western Literature. This will be a series of discussions by various professors in conjunction with the English 26 course taught at the University. These discussions will be presented as near as possible to the times these works are being studied in class.

Each discussion will be composed of two one-half hour segments. Part one will be presented at 7 p.m. on Mondays and Wednesdays and Part two will be presented at 7:00 p.m. on the following Mondays and Wednesdays. The only exception to this will be Goethe's Faust Part 1 which will be presented in one week only. Part one will be on Monday and part two on Wednesday.

The series will conclude in May with four programs on Robert Frost, highlighted by a rebroadcast of Frost's lecture of Fall semester 1961 and other readings.

Four other new series have been introduced to the programming schedule. The first of these is "Music of the Twentieth Century," with Dave Collins and Dave Mitchell, on Wednesday evenings from 7:30 to 9:00. This program, which is educational as well as entertaining, is devoted to the more contemporary serious music. Future programs will trace the development of contemporary music, culminating in the latest developments in experimental and electronic music.

The second innovation is "Impulse," with Vern Pero on Tuesdays from 7:00 to 7:30 p.m. This show includes interviews with campus personalities as well as the music and happenings that are a part of the Universtiy.

On Thursday evenings from 7:00 to 7:30 John Aho entertains with Readings. This is a presentation of the best in poetry and prose readings.

And beginning Monday, February 26, at 6:45 and 9:00 p.m. "WMUA Comments," a radio editorial on current University problems will be presented every evening, Monday through Thursday, at these times.

Collegian Questionnaire Reveals Most Colleges Have "Incentives"

by ALLAN BERMAN '62, Editor-in-Chief

This is the first in a series of articles concerning the results of a questionnaire circulated by the Collegian to many colleges and universities throughout the country. In this article we will give merely the results of the poll. Interpretation and commentary will be published in later issues on the editorial page.

Forty-eight institutions of higher learning from all areas of the country have responded to the Collegian questionnaire concerning incentives for student leaders. The questionnaire asked whether salary, course credit, or preferential treatment is given to participants and/or leaders of various campus activities.

The overwhelming majority of institutions gives incentives of some sort, usually monetary, to students engaged in extra curricular activities. Out of the 48 responding colleges, thirty-five give at least a salary (some give credit in addition), three give course credit only, and eleven report that no incentives are given.

The poll is broken down further into just state universities. Twenty publicly-run institutions reported. Seventeen declared that they had salaried student leaders and three claimed no incentives. Those claiming no incentives were, besides UMass, our neighbors the Universities of Rhode Island and Connecticut. Lest this seem like a Yankee Conference fad, we are quick to point out that the University of New Hampshire reports that incentives are given on the Durham campus.

There are several interesting sidelights of the poll. Of the eleven colleges reporting no incentives, five are from the ivy league, one is a jesuit institution, one is the United States Naval Academy, three are from the Yankee Conference and the other is a small independent eastern college. But all come from the Northeastern section of the country.

Of those colleges reporting salaries, the highest salaries, oddly enough, are given by state universities. The University of Mississippi pays the editor of its newspaper and the editor of its Yearbook 100 dollars a month. In addition over $6,000 a year goes to the members of the staffs of the newspaper and yearbook. The University of Nebraska reports $85 a month to the editor of the Yearbook and Newspaper, while the University of Virginia pays $250 per semester to those positions.

At the University of New Hampshire, the editor of the Yearbook gets 400 dollars per year plus expenses.

Salaries go from the highs just reported all the way down to token sums of two or three dollars a week. And not only the newspaper and yearbook editors get paid, but also members of student government bodies, disciplinary boards, radio stations and musical groups share in the booty.

There seems to be no common denominator that determines whether or not an institution would provide incentives. Large and small, public and private, all report the same thing. Even the broad generalization mentioned above concerning the location of the colleges not giving incentives is shattered when we notice that Tufts, Brooklyn college, Bates, University of New Hampshire. and Temple—all in the Northeastern section of the country—pay their student leaders.

There are many subtle implications in the data mentioned, as well as in the information not presented here. In addition, many of the students from other universities who filled out the questionnaires had interesting, constructive comments to offer concerning the value of incentives. These implications and comments will be discussed on page two of the Collegian beginning Wednesday.

Lederle To Speak On "Good Teaching"

President Lederle will be the main speaker at an all-University Convocation to be held this Thursday at 11:00 a.m. in the Ballroom of the S.U. Topic of the president's talk will be, "Who Wants Good Teaching?"

The Convocation will be informal, with no academic procession. All members of the student body and the faculty are urged to attend.

The president's remarks will deal with a matter of great importance to the entire University community.

Pioneer Valley Ass'n. Elects Gamble President

Dr. Philip L. Gamble, head of the UMass Department of Economics was elected president of the Pioneer Valley Association at the annual meeting in Hotel Northampton Wedneday night.

The role of the University in research and its probable effects on the development of the Pioneer Valley were discussed by Dr. John W. Lederle, UM president, Dr. Richard S. Stein, commonwealth professor of chemistry, director of the new Polymer Research Institute at the university and chairman of the UM Research Council; and Dr. E. E. Lindsey, head of the department of chemical engineering and associate dean of the School of Engineering.

It is a foregone conclusion, Dr. Lederle told the nearly 100 who attended the dinner event, that industry will not locate in an area that does not have good educational facilities. He discussed the important research work being undertaken on the UMass campus, including such facilities as the Research Computing Center and the Polymer Research Institute.

Dr. Stein discussed the latter facility, which has to do with important advanced studies into the properties of plastics and rubbers. The role of the university in science and engineering research was outlined by Dr. Lindsey.

Whose Commencement Is It?

There are very few who will deny that students ought to be the fundamental participants in any University Commencement ceremony. The obvious simplicity of that reasoning makes it almost foolish to have to mention. Because Commencement is for students, because of students, and impossible without students, it is only reasonable to expect that students will have some voice in one of the most important events of Commencement—the selection of the main speaker.

In past years the procedure for selecting the speaker has involved the students to some degree. Usually the senior class, or one of its representatives, submits a list of desired speakers to the Board of Trustees. The Board then sends an invitation to that person on the list most agreeable to them. If no one on the list is agreeable, the Board usually asks the class for additional names. In almost every case, however, the class, or a member of the class, has at least been consulted if the Board wished to select someone who was not on the list.

This year, however, things are different. President Lederle and the Board of Trustees, without so much as even informing any member of the class, went ahead and appointed the Commencement speaker. This despite the fact that a senior class committee had been working on the project and had submitted a list of names LAST SEPTEMBER, despite the fact that after all but two of the first list were rejected by the Trustees and the remaining two had refused, the class submitted ANOTHER LIST, and despite the fact that President Lederle gave every indication that the selection procedure for this year would be the same as it always has been.

Bernie Murphy, president of the senior class, is "disgusted at the way Marshall was picked. It's strictly a matter of principle," he says, "and nothing else. The senior class had nothing to do with the selection of its own speaker.

"We realize that the President and the Trustees are the ultimate authorities on the selection of the speaker, but the fact that we were asked to submit a list of names led us to believe that the class would be involved as much as ever. When we were told about the impossibility of having anyone on our original list, we submitted another.

"But from the time we submitted the second list until the announcement of the speaker, representatives of the class were unable to see or consult with President Lederle."

The question that we are asking, along with Murphy and most other seniors at this University, is "Where do we stand? Do the students have any voice in the selection of their speaker?"

Apparently not. "It is my feeling," continued Murphy, "that the President acted in extremely poor taste."

We agree. President Lederle, in a deliberate attempt to prevent the opposition he would get from the class for selecting the speaker in this manner, waited until the news was in the papers before informing any member of the class. We think it deplorable that the president of the senior class should have to find out from the newspapers who the graduation speaker will be.

"I realize," says Murphy, "that the speaker has been picked and, basically, we do not object in any way to Mr. Marshall. He is probably one of the best speakers we could have gotten, and out of courtesy to him we do not plan any action to have him removed. We do hope, however, that in the future the President will let us know exactly where we stand."

It is our opinion that when the President does get around to letting the students know exactly how many rights they have, they'll be wondering whose commencement it really is!

The Arnold Poll

Some weeks ago, the Collegian received an advertisement from a certain Joseph Arnold of Cambridge, Massachusetts. The ad was a declaration concerning the advantage of Brotherhood Religion over sectarianism. The Editor-in-Chief, in consultation with the Business Manager, rejected the ad for two basic reasons. They are, in order of importance:

1. The newspaper of this University is supported by public funds, gained from a tax imposed upon student bills. Neither this paper, nor any organ connected with a public institution, has any right to publish articles that advocate the supremacy of any religion.

2. The so-called "advertisement" was a full page of small print that, we believe, very few students would read, if we did print. Even in our advertising, we try to include things of interest or usefulness to the students.

Refusing to accept our decision, Arnold started a Poll, and sent postcards to many students and faculty on campus, asking if they approved of the "iron curtain" the Collegian had set up with reference to his advertisement. We knew that Arnold was conducting this poll, but we had little apprehension, because most of the people with whom we have come in contact had thrown the cards in the basket.

What we didn't know was that Arnold didn't stop with this campus. A letter received from Reverend Charles W. Griffin, Minister of the First Baptist Church of Boston, tells us that the Arnold Poll has been circulated to the Boston clergy. We are gratified that Reverend Griffin supports our reasons for rejecting the advertisement. He says, "I know of no publication responsible to the public that would accept advertising which tries to prove that one religious group is better than another."

The Collegian has no desire to suppress controversial writing. Witness the articles that have appeared this year on this page concerning topics of: West Germany, The Congo, Nucelar Bomb Shelters, segregation, and other controversial local and national issues. What we will not print, however, is any article, advertising or not, that advocates the abolition of any religious groups.

The Arnold Poll, as Reverend Griffin states, "is trying to fan fire into a dead cinder."

Adelphia Speaks On Speaker

To the Editor:

The class of 1962 will be honored to have Thurgood Marshall as its Commencement speaker. This distinguished American's accomplishments speak for themselves and he will undoubtedly be enlightening as well as entertaining. We are proud of his acceptance.

At the same time we are disturbed by the arbitrary method that was employed by the President and the Board of Trustees in the selection of OUR Commencement day speaker. The senior class committee, believing its responsibility was to select a speaker for the class, prepared a list of names, supposedly to be used by the University officials in selection. When this list gave out, a second was submitted.

The second list also proved to be unacceptable, but that information was not communicated to the class. Consequently the selection was made without the knowledge, much less the approval, of the senior committee. This is not to imply that approval would not have been forthcoming. Rather, the lack of any clean-cut, deliberate policy on the matter resulted in over six months of hard work by the senior committee going to waste.

Furthermore, the question of exactly whose graduation this will be is also raised. The lack of respect for the graduating class' desires as to their speaker, while perhaps understandable, is unfortunate. However, the lack of a definitive statement of policy is inexcusable.

It would seem appropriate that amends be made to those who were misled and who worked so hard in vain, and that some sort of definitive policy be forthcoming. This delusion of the seniors by President Lederle into believing that they had authority when their efforts actually were meaningless, should not prevail in the future!

Better Decorum Asked For Concerts

To the Editor:

We should like to take this opportunity to convey our feelings concerning the recent concert given by the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra on Tuesday evening, February 20, 1962. This letter is written not to condemn past actions but is instead intended to suggest a decorum which might improve the atmosphere of cultural events on campus. Several points of etiquette should be observed during the attendance of such an event, and it is our feeling that many individuals on campus are unaware of these "rules" which connote respect among other things. These "rules" may be placed in two categories:

(1) Attire should be composed of a suit or white shirt, tie, and sport jacket for gentlemen and a dress and high heels for ladies

(2) Comportment, including punctuality and general respect for the performance, should be that befitting mature individuals.

We feel that some of the conditions under which the orchestra performed could have been better and hope that in the future more consideration will be given to our guests. First of all, the entire presentation would have been much more effective had there been a background setting other than canvas. Secondly, the lighting seemed insufficient for the performers and excessive for the audience. It was unfortunate that the orchestra members were forced to frown and squint in order to read their music. Finally, it should not be necessary for the violinists to charge in numbers to the heater during the intermission.

In conclusion, may we reiterate that we can definitely profit from this unfortunate experience in our attempt to make these presentations more worthwhile.

Defense Policies Must Continue

To the Editor:

The threat of world Communism is greater today than ever before. According to many officials in the United States government, the Soviet Union has the second greatest military force in the world; second to the United States of America. Yet, there are many citizens in this country who advocate that the United States relax its defenses against this Red menace. These individuals want to do away with nuclear tests. They want the United States to pull its missile bases out of Central Europe, to abandon the Polaris ICBM program.

Nuclear tests are a threat to humanity. Radioactive fallout has been found to be a probable cause of cancer and birth defects. Radiation killed a Japanese fisherman. But . . . in the event of a nuclear attack, unless the United States were fully prepared to meet such an occurrence, the number of deaths caused by enemy bombs would far exceed the number of deaths caused by fallout from tests. Even the belligerent Soviet Union will fear to attack us if we continue to guard our freedom with the strong military force we have now. However, if the United States lowers its defenses, the serpent will be quick to strike. Abandoning the "vulnerable" missile bases in Europe would only make the United States itself more open to attack. The Polaris-armed nuclear submarine is a primary link in our defensive chain. Free to roam the seas, the submarine can come closer to enemy territory than a similarly-armed, land-based unit.

Disarmament, both nuclear and conventional, and the abolition of some military forces are possibilities that should never be forgotten. With world tension at its present height, world disarmament is a dream for the future. We can depend on the Russians to do exactly as they please to further their cause. At present, the Soviet Union seems ready to do anything but disarm. In time, the Reds may see the futility of the arms race.

At the risk of being repititious, I will say again that the United States has the strongest military force in the world. Until disarmament becomes more of a reality, we can never settle for less. NEVER!

Michigan Profs Discuss Teaching Machine Merits

Three members of the Eastern Michigan University Department of Education see a role of increasing importance for the recently developed teaching machine. Associate Professor Robert J. Fisher feels that the invention is "a significant phase of the present day revolution in instruction," while Associate Professor Israel Woronoff states that the machines will occupy a role "of increasing significance in the transmission of information and data." Associate Professor Robert L. Anderson thinks that the machines will be used exclusively, once better programs of instruction are developed for them.

The three Eastern Michigan Educators feel that there are many areas of potential use for such machines. Dr. Anderson points out that the machines should be excellent for all areas of "factual learning, such as arithmetic, the sciences, and even algebra." Dr. Woronoff feels that the machines will serve to transmit facts and information, but "will be least effective in promoting attitude change and in developing sound human relations. And both of these latter funcions are an important part of the school program."

While he feels that the machines can't be used for all types of learning, Dr. Woronoff points out that in areas of rote learning it has been shown that students using teaching machines learn more quickly than by traditional method. "The machines have been used most effectively in foreign language drill," he states. Dr. Fisher feels that aside from actual instruction, the machines will also aid educators in examining their field. "I think that these machines can show us a great deal about the learning process," he stated.

While there are many advantages, the three educators suggest a cautious approach. One major warning that all three men stress is that the machines must not be misused by teachers. "The machine isn't to replace the teacher," Dr. Woronoff states, "but rather to give the teacher a better and more efficient role in the school." Dr. Anderson states that "the teaching machine isn't inherently good. As with a textbook, if the material content of the lessons isn't good, then the learning won't be adequate." Dr. Fisher also warns that "the present machines may become quickly obsolete. At present the whole field is in an experimental stage, and further development can certainly be expected."

Teacher's Education Courses May Neglect Subject Matter

An outspoken critic of accreditation procedures in American education declares that the most revered forerunners of education — John Dewey, Henry Barnard and Horace Mann—could not get accredited to teach in a public school today.

Despite encouraging signs that subject-matter training of teachers is making headway against professional education courses, Prof. Edward J. Gordon, director of Yale University's Office of Teacher Training, takes a pessimistic view. "My prediction is that little will change in the foreseeable future in the pattern of accreditation of teachers, unless some miracle takes place."

Why? "The Professionals have too much money invested in training teachers in their pattern. Too many jobs are at stake and their lobbies in the state capitols are very strong."

Prof. Gordon said a movement to back subject-matter training of teachers is being sparked by the liberal arts colleges. He said that the national government "is spending millions of dollars in summer schools aimed at re-tooling the teacher who is not up on his subject matter. Yet many colleges go right on preparing teachers with majors in education courses instead of subject-matter, he said. "And they give lots of practice in teaching a subject that the teacher does not know."

He labeled as untrue a basic assumption that those who have taken the approved offerings in education are more fit to teach than those who have not had them. "There are in our schools many unfit teachers who are loaded with education courses. And we cannot assume that Blank High School is better than Exeter because more people in the former are certifiable.

"We are told that the product sells, that is, certifiable teachers, because it has more merits than demerits. In reality the product sells because the courses in education are required by law. In city after city teachers are paid more if they have master's or doctor's degrees even if that degree is in education and adds nothing to the subject proficiency of the individual.

"Courses are taken because they come at four in the afternoon, because they are easy, and because they open the way to administrative positions. The teacher learns that the school community values most that for which it will pay the most. And the teacher, under this system, learns that the only way to success in too many sytems is through giving up teaching. It is the rare teacher—and the good teacher—who will make his commitment to subject-matter."

for a job teaching French, he said, the one "who knows little French but has a great many education courses is far more likely to get he job."

Colonial Dames Sponsor Contest On Patriotism

The National Society of the Colonial Dames of America will award a first prize of $2000, a second prize of $1000, and five honorable mentions of $100 each for a paper on "Patriotism Reappraised"—a study of the individual American's duty to his country. The contest is open to all third and fourth year undergraduate students of accredited universities and colleges and closes on midnight, March 17.

All entries are to consider and discuss the following points: 1) The philosophy of the "Founding Fathers" of the U.S.A. in drawin-g up the Constitution. 2) The "Bill of Rights" and its privileges and limitations. 3) The individual's obligations "to a government which derives its just power from the consent of the governed." 4) Can an individual's actions affect the fortunes of a nation?—Give an example from the last 25 years. 5) From the same period, give an example of a nation whose fortunes were adversely affected by general indifference to patriotic ideals. 6) Comment on: "I was born an American; I shall die an American; and I intend to perform the duties incumbent upon me in that character to the end of my career."—Daniel Webster.

If the above points are covered, the papers will be considered on their merits, even though the conclusions may not coincide with the Society's concept of patriotism. The decision of the judges is final. Paper must be 4000-5000 words in length, accompanied by bibliography and footnotes, submitted on 8½ x 11 paper, typed double-spaced, one original and two carbon copies.

The first and second prize papers will become the property of the National Society of the Colonial Dames of America, with all rights reserved. Entries should be sent to: The National Society of the Colonial Dames of America, Post Office Box 125, Bryn Mawr, Pennsylvania.

Over 100 "Judges" Compete In FFA Judging Contests

More than 100 youthful agricultural pudges will descend on UMass Friday, March 9.

They are contestants in the Future Farmers of America state judging finals sponsored by the Vocational Division of the Massachusetts Department of Agriculture in cooperation with the College of Agriculture. All participated in semifinal judging last November and earned the return trip on their performance.

Individuals judged best as a result of their showing in both contests will represent Massachusetts in regional and national FFA contests later this year. Contests in the upcoming finals include judging in livestock, dairy products, dairy cattle, poultry and meats.

Facilities of the College of Agriculture will be used for the judging, according to Dr. William H. Annis, supervisor of agricultural teacher training. Faculty members in the department of dairy and animal science will serve as judges.

Women Entering Into Engineering, "Men's" Positions

Women are infiltrating more engineering and executive positions in American industry than ever before. Women have been making steady inroads in advertising, retailing, and other creative selling areas, but recently the acute shortage of scientists in every category has led industry and government to relax requirements and interview anyone whose qualifications and personality match a particular job situation.

The number of women in both categories is still minutely small, but the wall of prejudice is cracking. A National Science Foundation survey found that only about 4% of all federally imployed scientists and engineers are women. The largest field for women listed in the register was in biology. In the American Society of Civil Engineers there are only 54 women members out of a total membership of about 48,000.

Women should not expect that doors to laboratories and business establishments will suddenly be flung open to them. After all, women were not granted the vote with the nineteenth amendment until 1920 and look how far they have advanced in a man's world since then.

UMass Subdues Northeastern Track Squad 57-56

Records And Nerves Shatter In Down-To-The-Wire Finish

by ABE SHEINKER '62

Records fell, nerves shook, and eveyone came through brilliantly as the UMass track team squeezed by Northeastern, 57-56, in Boston on Saturday. It was the first indoor loss for the Huskies in two years, and the meet was a "cliffhanger" all the way.

Dick Ward opened the varsity competition in the 35-lb. weight throw against two of the best, Buzz Krastin and Joe Donahue of N.U. Both have been over 55 feet and the throwing was close in the first three rounds. Then Ward let go with a 57'5½" toss on his fourth throw, upping his recently-set varsity record by a foot. The two Huskies never recovered from the shock in the final throws. To prove his mark was no fluke, Ward threw 57'3¾" on his last try.

Then George Giddings raised his personal best in the shotput by a foot with a 44'7¾" heave, edging rival Randy Miller of N.U. by two inches. Miller nearly won on his last throw, but it was nullified by a disputed foul. Ward came through again by also raising his best shotput mark by two feet with 43'9¾" in this event.

UMass carried a 17-10 lead into the running events but the Huskies began to catch up. Chico Parillo of the Northeastern squad ran away from Dave Balch and Bob Brouillet in the mile in the meet record time of 4:24.8. Tupper of N.U. did likewise by setting a meet record of 1:16.1 in the 600. The Huskies took first and second in the high hurdles, swept the low hurdles, and now led, 38-25.

The score began to reverse again, however. "Lobby" Flagg edged Bill Lytle and Brady of Northeastern by inches to win the dash. Bob Brouillet got revenge in the two mile, setting a pace that forced N.U.'s Parillo to drop out, and establishing a Cage record of 9:47.7. Bob Avery annexed the all-important second place and surprised everyone with a 9:56 clocking.

Ken O'Brien was also vengeful in the 1000 with a winning 2:19.4 time, good enough for another Cage record. O'Brien had been bounced around on the turns in the 600, so the elbows were really flying in the 1000.

Those wins brought the score to 47-43 in favor of Northeastern. The relay, high jump, and pole vault were left, and the Redmen figured they needed those five points in the relay. They didn't get them. It was 52-43 and things looked dark for UMass. Then came the nerve-shaking session.

The Redmen had to sweep the high jump. Dick Ward, Joe Cassidy and Al Garsys all cleared 5'8" on their first attempts. One by one Bill Lytle and Russ Burke of N.U. tried 5'8". The crowd watched silently and nervously as one by one they failed on their three attempts. UMass breathed a sigh of relief, but the pole vault was still ahead. The score was tied and N.U. had clinched third place in the vault. Jim Lumley had to beat N.U.'s Pete Furio for the first place to win the meet. Lumley cleared 11'6" on his first try. Furia tried and failed, tried and failed. When he missed on his third attempt, the Redmen breathed aonther sigh of relief, but this was a final one, a whole point's worth.

FROSH WIN EASILY

The freshman meet was also close until the last few events when the Redmen pulled away to a 71-42 victory.

Two foreign students starred in the weigh events. Gus Anagnostopoulos of UMass and Greece finally broke Dick Ward's frosh record in the 35-lb. weight throw by two feet with a winning 49' 9½" toss. He also had another throw over 48 feet. Max St. Victor, N.U. freshman from Haiti, set a Husky frosh record in the shotput, winning at 49'6½".

UMass' Burt Kline became a triple winner for the second time this season by taking the high hurdles, low hurdles and high jump. Art Resendes was second in both hurdles events for the Redmen.

Long striding Tom Panke had another good day, winning the two mile in 10:02.1 and taking second in the mile at 4:37. Jim Dennis, Dave Sadowski, and Paul Caisse swept the broad jump for UMass and Phil Read, Sadowski and Dennis swept the pole vault.

HOME MEET WEDNESDAY

Both UMass track squads perform in their only home meet Wednesday at the Cage against New Hampshire. This is also their last dual meet indoors. The weight throw is the first event at 7:00 out on Alumni Field, while the other events are inside.

Redmen Gym Team Trounces Cortland And Slippery Rock

The UMass Varsity Gymnastics squad closed out its 1961-62 season Saturday afternoon, with a 4-3 record as it scored a double victory over Cortland and Slippery Rock Colleges.

The scoring of the triangular meet bears explanation. Each was competing against each of the other two teams, and therefore although a competitor would go through his routine only once, it would count as though he had performed twice. For instance, in the first event, Floor Exercise, UMass' Dave Yates performed excellently and was awarded a total of 240 points by the judges. Dave thus gained two first place berths for the Redmen; one over Cortland, for none of their men could top his score, and one over Slippery Rock for the same reason.

Keeping this scoring system in mind, we can proceed to recap the events of the meets.

Floor Exercise—As has already been mentioned, Redmen star Dave Yates outstripped all competition in this event. Finishing right behind Dave in the standings was teammate Charlie Paydos with a score of 210 points. They were in turn followed by Ballard of Cortland and Tabish of Slippery Rock. The scoring for this event was UMass 11—Cortland 5, and UMass 11—Slippery Rock 5.

Side Horse—In this phase of the competition Redmen Jim Adam narrowly edged out his teammate Bruce McCracken for the first place position. Jim's score of 204 was just one point too much for Bruce who finished up his routine with a score of 203. Both Jim and Bruce far outdistanced all other competitors except for Cortland's Petrosino who scored 189 points, and UMass' Dave Williams who finished fourth in the standings. The scoring for this event was: UMass 12 — Cortland 4, and UMass 12 — Slippery Rock 4.

Still Ring— This event proved to be one of the stronger for all three of the teams. Redmen captain Charlie Paydos met his match in Cortland College's Abrahamsen. These two men, both going through their routines with the grace and beauty of motion that exemplifies the sport of gymnastics, scored exactly the same number of points, 234, and tied for the first place position. It was also in this event that Dave Williams performed well enough to secure the fourth place berth against Cortland and the second place spot behind Paydos against Slippery Rock. UMass' other performer, senior Bob Coffin, took fifth place against Cortland and fourth place against the men from Slippery Rock. The scoring for this event was: UMass 8—Cortland 8, and UMass 13—Slippery Rock 3.

Long Horse — The Redmen squad performed excellently in this event earning for themselves the first, second and fourth place another first place with some beautifuly executed vaults. Teammates Dexter Brown and Dave Amundson also performed admirably and were awarded second and fourth places respectively by the judges. The Slippery Rock team did not enter any men in this event, therefore no score was recorded between UMass and Slippery Rock. However, the scoring of the UMass-Cortland contest was UMass 12—Cortland 4.

Parallel Bars—Tabish of Slippery Rock captured first place in this event with a score of 237. He was trailed by UMass' Williams. While Dave was only able to take the second place spot in the UMass-Slippery Rock contest his score of 214 was more than the score of any Cortland competitor thus allowing him to take first place in the UMass-Cortland match. In that contest Cortland's star Petrosino finished second, two points ahead of Redmen Paydos. Bruce McCracken also gained points for the UMass cause by finishing fourth against Cortland and fifth against Slippery Rock. The scoring for this even was: UMass 11—Cortland 5, and UMass 8—Slippery Rock 8.

High Bar—This event, the last and perhaps the most breathtaking, proved to be a strong one for the Redmen squad. UMass' high scorer for the day, Dave Yates, and his partner in victory Bruce McCracken, wowed the assembled crowd with their excellent routines. Yates with a total of 250 points, and McCracken with his score of 242, captured first place in both meets. UMass' Bob Coffin finished fifth about twenty points

Redmen Puck Team Loses To Wildcats 9-4 In Season Finale

by STEVE HEWEY '63

A hard skating University of New Hampshire hockey squad scored in every period Friday afternoon to hand the University ice sextet a 9-4 season ending loss at the Orr Rink in Amherst. This was the third time this season that the Redmen have bowed to the Wildcats from Durham.

UNH's Bob Mayher opened the game's scoring with a tally at 9:39 of the initial period. Charlie Glew, getting an assist from brother Bob, tied the game at 1-1 on a score at the 11:12 mark. But five minutes later Mayher dumped in another to put his team out in front to stay. Goals by Lamontagne and Camusco boosted New Hampshire's command 4-1, ending the first period.

In the second period Bob Glew slammed one through the net at 3:54 to cut the gap, 4-2. New Hampshire came rolling back to put together a 3 goal effort on scores by Lamontagne, Mayher and Littell to lead 7-2 at the close of the middle frame.

The final period saw both teams scoring on equal terms. Charlie Glew and Art Chisholm teamed up to assist Jim Ellingwood in scoring the third Redmen goal at 1:50. Goals by Lamontagne and Canavan upped UNH's lead, 9-3. At the 19:37 mark Charlie Glew scored his second marker of the afternoon with help from Ellingwood and Bob Glew to round out the scoring figures for the day.

The loss to UNH Friday gives the Redmen a record of 8 wins and 10 losses for the season. For New Hampshire it was win number 14 against 4 setbacks and one tie.

UM Matmen Lose 6th Meet As Wesleyan Wins, 20-13

by DAVE PODBROS '65

The UMass varsity wrestling squad lost their sixth meet Saturday against Wesleyan in the Cage. This meet gives the varsity squad a record of one win and six losses so far this season. The one win was against Connecticut on February 20. The final score of the Wesleyan match was UMass 13, Wesleyan 20.

Carl Wissen started off by winning an exhibition match. Thom Best and John Chapman then followed as both won their respective matches. Best, wrestling in the 147 lb. weight class, quickly pinned his opponent, giving the spectators hope that UMass might win its second match of the season. Chapman furthered this hope by winning a decision in the 157 lb. weight class. This hope was nevertheless squelched as Wesleyan captured the following matches. The final score, 20-13, resulted due to a default by each side.

The freshmen also lost their meet against Wesleyan. The final score was Wesleyan 28, UMass 5.

Both teams have their next and last match at the New England Regionals at Wesleyan on March 2 and 3, at 10:00 a.m.

Ski Club Heads Race

Donald Fries placed first in class B with a time of 92.6, Charles Flinkstrom second with 124.9, and Delos Hilton 151.6.

Jane Vanderweil finished first with a time of 103.7, with Jan Taylor 151.6, second.

Barbara Cushing, Dave Beldon, Roger Hoper, and Dave Varisco also participated in the race but did not finish. Many non-racing members of the club enjoyed a good day of recreational skiing.

Riflers Beat King's College

Showing improvement over its recent match with North Dakota State U., the Stockbridge Rifle Team outshot the King's College team from Pennsylvania by a wide margin. Dick Wehren found a 273 in his rifle to top the best of the King's Men by one point while the rest of the Stockbridge five outscored the next highest on the opposing team.

Biologist Experiments With Chemical Vapor Sterilization

Shooting for outer space from the research lab may sound like a bit of science fiction—but it's just one aspect of a practical, $122,000 scientific study, so far as Dr. Hamed El-Bisi and his associates are concerned.

El-Bisi, food and industrial microbiologist in the College of Agriculture at UMass, isn't actually planning a trip to Mars or another planet.

But his research on the use of chemical vapors as a new method of sterilization that could be used to disinfect space vehicles and probes may play a part in seeing that the planets we might hit or visit remain free from earthly micro-organisms.

"To contaminate or disturb environmental and/or life balance that might be found would be most detrimental and unforgivable," he says.

His research to date on vapor sterilization appears significant for use not only in the field of space, but in food protection and preservation; clinical, pharmaceutical and military technology.

And, the recent $122,000 grant from the U.S. Public Health Service for a five-year continuation of this three-year old Experiment Station project, has put new life into the search for an efficient vapor sterilization technique. Says El-Bisi: "Heat sterilization — the most efficient method of sterilization now known — leaves something to be desired. Glass containers, for instance, are subject to heat damage. Or, it may be impractical and in some cases prohibitive to provide a heating system adequate for sterilization. Numerous pharmaceutical and clinical preparations are difficult to sterilize without altering their biological functions."

Prior research on the vapor sterilization project focused heavily upon the obtaining of proper equipment and instrumentation. A $30,000 vapor-phase resistometer built by American Sterilizer Co. of Erie, Penn. according to plans developed by El-Bisi, is now in use. This unique equipment provides, controls, indicates, records and monitors test vapor atmospheres. Also, the Glass Containers Manufacturers Institute has contributed $30,000 to this project during the past three years.

Astronomy Dept. Sponsors Lecture On "Other Worlds"

The Four College Astronomy Department is sponsoring a public lecture on Thursday, March 1, at 8:00 p.m. in the Auditorium of the Public Health Building at UMass. Dr. Arne Slettebak, Visiting Professor in Astronomy from the American Astronomical Society, will speak on "The Possibility of Life on Other Worlds."

Dr. Slettebak is Director of the Perkins Observatory at Ohio State University. He was awarded his doctorate at the University of Chicago, has been a member of the Department of Physics and Astronomy at the Ohio State University and a staff member of the Perkins Observatory since 1949. Undergraduates Are Eligible For Chemistry Contest

Opening of the 1962 Contest in Colloid and Surface Chemistry among college undergraduates is announced by the University of Southern California. The contest is sponsored by the Continental Oil Company of Houston, Texas, and Ponca City, Oklahoma, and is now in its sixth year.

Students at all accredited colleges and universities of the United States and Canada are eligible if they are regular undergraduates on April 1, 1962. In past years winners have come from all parts of both countries and from large universities as well as small colleges.

The contestants may enter either a report on a research project conducted by themselves or an essay on the subject, "The Contribution of Floyd E. Bartell to Colloid and Surface Chemistry." Dr. Bartell, who died in 1960, was on the University of Michigan faculty many years.

The best essay and the best report will each receive prizes of $500 and the second best $200 each under contest regulations. Honorable mention prizes of $50 each are also provided.

The deadline for submitting entries is July 2, 1962. Entry blanks and also a bibliography of the late Professor Bartell's publications may be obtained immediately by writing to Professor K. J. Mysels, Chemistry Department, University of Southern California, Los Angeles 7, California. The prizes will be awarded by a panel of anonymous judges and will be distributed September 1, 1962.

U.S. Government Spending Equals .8 Of Russia's GNP

Government spending in the United States has grown so vast that in a fifteen month period it would be sufficient to buy up everything that Soviet Russia produced in one year, including financing the Russian armed forces and all missile work, according to the Chamber of Commerce of the United States.

In 1960, federal, state, and local governments in this country spent $190 billion. The federal government alone accounted for $130 billion.

This $190 billion total equaled 80 per cent of the value of all the $230 billion in goods and services produced in all of Russia that year (the Russian Gross National Product).

The large size of government spending in this country is not generally known. For one thing, most people consider that the federal budget reveals all the federal spending. It does not. Omitted are tens of billions spent on highways, Social Security, and other programs not included in the budget.

The American states were cradled on the concept of limited government. But they now appear to spend close to the full means of Communist Russia.

Convo Will Feature Address By Lederle

"Who Wants Good Teaching?" will be the topic of a major address by President Lederle at tomorrow's all-University Convocation to be held at 11 a.m. in the Ballroom.

All members of the student body and the faculty are urged to attend the Convocation to hear the President's remarks on "a matter of great importance to the entire University community."

The informal Convocation has been planned to consider the role of teaching as a national resource in America's colleges and universities.

Much of the President's talk will be concerned with the relationship of teaching to the general program here at the University of Massachusetts.

The Convocation is a pre-centennial event planned as a means of indicating what paths the University will take as it begins it second 100 years as a Land-Grant institution.

As a member of the national community of state universities, the University of Massachusetts reflects many of the problems of other Land-Grant Institutions. The President's remarks, on this and other occasions during our Centennial, will be included in the interchange of information among all state universities on matters of common concern.

Smith Professor To Speak To C.A. Religious Embassy

The 1962 Christian Association Religious Embassy, "Unbelief and the Justification of the Unbeliever," will present as its speaker William May, Assistant Professor of Religion at Smith College.

WILLIAM F. MAY

May will lecture on the condition of unbelief in American religion. Although he will consider the role of the unbeliever, his main concern will be with the more subtle forms of unbelief which plague those who are of the Christian community.

The first lecture of the Embassy will be held at 7 p.m. on Sunday, March 4, in the Commonwealth Room of the S.U. An open discussion and coffee hour will follow in the Governor's Lounge.

On Monday afternoon, after a coffee hour from 2 to 4 p.m. in the Old Chapel, May will speak in the Franklin Room of the S.U. until 5 on "Death." A final presentation of the Embassy will be given Monday at 8 p.m. in the Commonwealth Room.

May started at Smith in 1952 as an instructor. He is a graduate of Princeton University, and holds his Bachelor of Divinity degree from Yale University. From 1957 to 1960, he served as secretary of the faculty at Smith and is now chairman of the department.

Contributing editor of the publication "Christianity and Crisis," May is a member of the committee on literature of the Commission on Worship and Fine Arts of the National Council of Churches. He has also contributed articles to "Crossroads' and "Social Action."

Guest Philosopher Pandeya To Speak On Indian Thought

A visiting philosopher from India will lecture in Marks Meadow School Auditorium at UMass tonight at 8.

Pandeya, chairman of the philosophy department at the Hans Raj College, University of Delhi, India, and currently a Fulbright Visiting Lecturer in Philosophy at Colby College in Maine, will speak on "Indian Thought Since 1900." Professor Pandeya will appear under the sponsorship of the Four College Non-Western Studies Committee.

Educated in his early years in a Sanskrit school, Professor Pandeya did his undergraduate and graduate work at Lucknow University. He has published numerous articles on philosophical and cultural subjects and several technical monographs.

Nearing completion is his major work, "The Problem of Meaning in Buddhist Logic with Special Reference to Dharmarkirti." In addition, he has translated Hindu philosophy texts and edited textbooks on Buddhism for a sourcebook of Indian philosophy.

The lecture is open to the public without charge.

S-35 Program Adopts Policy Giving Students First Tickets

The University of Massachusetts Distinguished Visitors Program has adopted a ticket policy to guarantee the University students, who pay for the Program, first rights to hear and see each event. The following procedure will be used:

Each University student will be given one free ticket to each event by showing, in person, his ID card at the announced place (probably the Student Union Box Office or Lobby Counter), several days in advance of each event. Approximately forty-eight hours prior to each event, the tickets will become available to the rest of the University community, students from the other three colleges, and Amherst area residents.

No one will be admitted to a Distinguished Visitors Program without a ticket. Since the total number of tickets available will closely conicide with the capacity of the area being used, standing and congestion will be minimized.

This policy will be inaugurated with the appearance of former Brazilian President, Dr. Juscelino Kubitschek. He will deliver his address in the Student Union Ballroom, on Thursday, March 8, at 8:00 p.m. Tickets for students will be available on Monday, March 5 and Tuesday, March 6 in the Student Union. Tickets for all other interested persons can be obtained on Wednesday and Thursday, March 7 and 8, also in the Student Union. The exact times that the tickets will be available will be announced.

Counselor Applications Are Available

Women students of the classes of 1963 and 1964 who are interested in applying for positions as House Counselors in women's dormitories next year may secure application blanks from Heads of Residence and from the Office of the Dean of Women. They must be returned on or before Thursday, March 8.

Final selection which will be announced in April, will be made from recommendations by present House Councils, Dormitory Heads of Residence, Faculty, and the Senate Committee on Women's Affairs. Financial need is not a consideration. Selections will be made on the basis of personal qualifications of maturity, leadership, dependability, and scholarship.

SCHOLARSHIPS

David Lawrence, Assistant Director of Placement for Men, in charge of Scholarships and Loans, has announced that there are still one hundred fifty applications left. The deadline for the return of the applications is March 15. Students who are in financial need and have a 2.5 are encouraged to look into the possibility.

"INCENTIVES" -- PART TWO

(This is the second of a series of articles dealing with the problem of incentives for student activity leaders. In Monday's COLLEGIAN the results of a questionnaire were discussed, revealing that a large majority of colleges pay their student leaders.)

by ALLAN BERMAN '62, Editor-in-Chief

In view of the overwhelming statistics concernings monetary incentives for student leaders, many observers might make hasty conclusions about amending the system on this campus. But before any conclusions are made, a closer look at the benefits of salaried activities is warranted.

The Collegian questionnaire was sent to the editors of the student newspapers of the schools involved. Many of these editors had interesting comments to make concerning the relative advantages and disadvantages of this type of incentive.

PRO SALARY

Steve Taylor of the University of New Hampshire newspaper claims that even though UNH gives salaries to its newspaper staff, the pay "doesn't seem to attract students to work on the paper, as only three or four of us put it out each week."

From the Tufts University Weekly, editor Arthur Wolf states that salaries "rarely act to motivate students to participate."

There are more statements from others who feel that money is not the answer, but the feeling of the anti-pay editors is summed up by the editor of the Colgate University Maroon, when he maintains that "activities should justify themselves and not seek outside motivation." This statement is, we believe, crucial, and we will reurn to it when we are considering methods for improving the situation at UMass.

ANTI SALARY

But now, what about the other side? Richard Parker, of the Bates Student, feels that salaries attract more people to apply for leadership positions on campus, thereby giving organizations a better selection from which to choose.

From the University of Toledo comes the opinion that, even though officials there receive salaries plus expenses, the rewards are too small and should be increased. In addition, since the newspaper and yearbook act as "journalism workshops," members should also receive course credit.

Elsie Unchapper, of the Ohio University Post, feels that certain student positions on campus involve considerable learned skill and experience, and should thus be paid.

Other editors expressed the view that since many students quit part-time jobs in order to devote the time necessary to become campus leaders, they should be recompensed somewhat for the money they've lost.

However, we must remember that salaries aren't the only form of incentives. Other types also exist. Course credit and preferential treatment, such as automobile permits, housing priority and course selection priority, also are used in many places.

The question we must answer first is whether or not external incentives are necessary, or even desirable. Only after we have decided this can we begin to consider the problem of what that incentive should be.

Always keeping that fundamental question in miind, we can then proceed to evaluate the many different forms of incentive that exist. In the next part of this series we will discuss the forms of incentives, other than monetary, that are used in other colleges.

HELP! To Students From Students

With this cry Campus Chest will be opening its 1962 charity drive, March 12-19.

The purpose of this drive is twofold: (1) to raise money for the University of Massachusetts Scholarship Fund and (2) to help support the World University Service (WUS). Little need be said for the Scholarship Fund, for we are all aware of friends who are deserving of education, but whose chances of success will be lessened by lack of financial resources. WUS, with offices throughout the world, is also in need of financial support. This is the organization that has been helping students of foreign lands since World War I to learn, in order that their countries might someday enjoy the better things of life through the achievement of these individuals.

Officers of this year's Campus Chest Committee are Dorothy Ciarlone and Mike Rosenthal, Co-Chairmen; Howard Frisch, Treasurer; Anne Griffin, Secretary; and Dr. Ben Ricci, Advisor.

The Miss Campus Chest Contest, Ed Hammond, Chairman, will again be the feature of this year's drive. Each Fraternity will enter a contestant. While the winner will be selected by the Committee from a field of four finalists, the finalists will be determined on the basis of money donated by persons voting for their favorite honey—due to "her" reasonable facsimile to Kim Novak, Zsa Zsa Gabor, or Dagmar.

So let's contribute. The price of a cup of coffee given by every student is a good start toward the feeling that this University has not lost sight of the individual, both on this campus and throughout the world.

Letters

—The Unanswered Question—

To the Editor:

We feel moved to write this letter because we do not know all of the facts concerning the proposed dismissal of a certain mathematics instructor. In a recent Collegian article, Doctor Andersen stated, ". . . the best teacher is the one who has had the best and most academic training possible and who is either by hard work or by nature a skillful expositor." Also, the Mathematics department's tenure and promotion rules, Andersen stated, ". . . require, among other things, . . . a Master's degree in Mathematics and continued, substantial progress toward a doctorate degree." We believe that these rules should be flexible enough to include exceptional cases. Who can say that an instructor with a Master's degree might not be as capable as another with a Doctor's degree? We agree that a doctorate might make him better, but this should not be the sole criterion for his dismissal. Since we are not familiar with the facts involving his proposed removal, we would like to know if there are any reasons other than his failure to make substantial progress toward his Doctor's degree. Incompetency should be the principal reason for the dismissal of any instructor. What incompetency has he shown?

We are certain that many of his present and former students regard him as one of the most helpful and capable instructors in the Mathematics department. Might we suggest that the Mathematics department adopt a policy similar to that of the Chemistry department whereby students may rate the abilities of their instructors.

In appreciation of his ability and helpfulness to students, he was elected a faculty member of Phi Eta Sigma Honor Fraternity last year. This year, his name was submitted by Honors Colloquia students to SCOPE for the purpose of aiding in attracting promising high school students to this campus.

Why, therefore, would the Mathematics department not make an exception to its rules in order to retain this valuable instructor?

—Frat Brothers—

To the Editor:

Rushees of the class of 1965:

Now that you have that all-important decision to make, a few considerations may be in order.

Join a fraternity if———you can afford to spend 15-20 hours per week at the "house" as a pledge. This is only around ten extra hours when you become a brother.

——you can afford $150-$200 extra per year.

——you enjoy being in a clique (even if it is the unaccepted one in the "house.")

——you enjoy walking to the "house." (the brothers will often not pick you up.)

——you can tolerate close, squalid living quarters.

——you are anti-intellectual.

——you like conformity.

——you can take being a "patsy" to their juvenile antics.

——you are willing to share your girl, bank account, and clothes with others, getting nothing in return.

Ponder a while——and then join. After all, everybody else does.

HOW TO BE A BWOC

Ladies, let me be frank. The days of the college year dwindle down to a precious few. And some of you—let's face it—have not yet become BWOC's. Yes, I know, you've been busy what with going to class and walking your cheetah, but really, ladies, becoming a BWOC is so easy if you'll only follow a few simple rules.

The first and most basic step on the road to being a BWOC is to attract attention. Get yourself noticed. But be very, very careful not to do it the wrong way. I mean, any old girl is bound to be noticed if she goes around with a placard that says, "HEY! LOOKIT ME!" Don't you make such a horrid gaffe. On your placard put: "ZUT! REGARDEZ MOI!" This, as you can see, lends a whole new dimension of tone and dignity.

Once you have been noticed, it is no longer necessary to carry the placard. It will suffice if, from time to time, you make distinctive noises. If, for instance, every three or four minutes you cry, "Whippoorwill!" you cannot but stay fresh in the minds of onlookers.

We come now to clothes, a vital accessory to the BWOC—indeed, to any girl who wishes to remain out of jail. But to the BWOC clothes are more than just a decent cover; they are, it is not too much to say, a way of life.

This spring the "little boy look" is all the rage on campus. Every coed, in a mad effort to look like a little boy, is wearing short pants, knee sox, and boyshirts. But the BWOC is doing more. She has gone the whole hog in achieving little boyhood. She has frogs in her pockets, scabs on her knees, down on her upper lip, and is followed everywhere by a dog named Spot.

All this, of course, is only by day. When evening falls and her date comes calling, the BWOC is the very picture of chic femininity. She dresses in severe, simple basic black, relieved only by a fourteen pound charm bracelet. Her hair is exquisitely coiffed, with a fresh rubber band around the pony tail. Her daytime sneakers have been replaced by fashionable high heeled pumps, and she does not remove them until she gets to the movies.

After the movies, at the campus cafe, the BWOC undergoes her severest test. The true BWOC will never, never, never, order the entire menu. This is gluttony and can only cause one's date to blanch. The true BWOC will pick six or seven good entrees and then have nothing more till dessert. This is class and is the hallmark of the true BWOC.

Finally, the BWOC, upon being asked by the cigarette vendor which is the brand of her choice, will always reply, "Marlboro, of course!" For any girl knows that a Marlboro in one's hand stamps one instantly as a person of taste and discernment, as the possessor of an educated palate, as a connoisseur of the finer, loftier pleasures. This Marlboro, this badge of savoir-faire, comes to you in flip-top boxes that flip, or in soft packs that are soft, with a filter that filters and a flavor that is flavorful, in all fifty states of the Union and Duluth. © 1962 Max Shulman

Electronic System To Help Farmers With Accounting

Electronic farm accounts—ELFAC for short—a mechanical marvel that can do just about every job of record keeping except write a check, is ready, willing and able to make better businessmen out of Bay State farmers.

"And," says Lawrence D. Rhoades, "this new service which has been evaluated and checked-out by a subcommittee of the Northeastern Farm Management Extension Committee, can be had at a cost of a few cents a day."

Rhoades is farm management specialist in the College of Agriculture at UMass.

Cost of the system depends on the size of the farm. ELFAC will keep records on a 50-cow dairy farm for about $1 a cow per year. Or, for the Bay State poultryman with 10,000 hens, it'll do the job for less than $5 a month.

Maine and Vermont farmers have participated in the new accounting system since it first became available about a year ago. This year, ELFAC is available throughout the 12-state Northeast region. Massachusetts county agents have attended training sessions on the methods and procedures of ELFAC and are ready to answer questions that farmers may ask.

Electronic accounting does not take the entire job of record keeping away from the farmer, says Rhoades. A farmer must list and code all his income and expenses and submit a basic data sheet weekly. ELFAC will then report back to him his total receipts and expenditures, open book accounts and loan and capital accounts monthly with amounts accumulated for the year. With this information, he can tell what is costing him money, where he can save on taxes and how he can apply a more businesslike approach to his operation.

MEANDERING MIKE

Well, I'm back on the beaten path (or more appropriately air wave), but I've hidden myself away in the tech room so that I can tell you all about this great new show that I've been broadcasting. It's called Impulse, and Vern Pero is its creator.

Every Tuesday night from 7-7:30 on WMUA, Impulse is on the air; it is a potpourri of interviews and recorded sessions with campus and off-campus entertainers, news commentaries, and special features.

Last night, Vern and his team really did a wonderful show leading off with a mythical space voyage in music and sound. The feature for the evening was a dissertation on the weights of railroad rails followed by a song by Buffy St. Marie and then the guest appearance of a student from Finland, Reino Koen (I didn't understand one word he said. Maybe because he spoke in Finnish??) I was really tired at this point, but the show was only half over and I didn't want to miss one minute. Next, my good friend Taj Mahal spoke about the blues, one of his favorite subjects, and much to my delight, gave a musical example. Vern wound up the show with a special reading by Sir John Gielgud from Shakespeare's Merchant of Venice, and in a lighter vein, Stan Freeberg portrayed the hypnotist.

Spontaneous is probably the only word that accurately describes Impulse; Vern feels that spontaneity is the key link between the students and those individuals who have something of value to offer, and Impluse presents precisely this. Don't forget to be on hand next Tuesday, and tune in tonight at 7 p.m. for a rebroadcast of Part I of Swift's Gulliver's Travels. This probing analysis is done by Charles Olmstead of the University Department of English. On March 5 and 7, Olmstead will complete the lectures on Gulliver.

Athletics: How Do We Stand?

PART I
by JIM TRELEASE '63

The opinions expressed here are those of Mr. Trelease, and not necessarily those of the Sports Department.

For many years the University of Massachusetts was considered a sick institution. Its program, faculty, facilities and teams were inadequate, underpaid, undermanned, and under everyone else in the league. Since those depressing years, the Bay State institution has made great strides in its scholastic program, its campus facilities, its faculty membership, and its athletic teams.

But it has not been a natural growth; it has been an accelerated pace. There is no doubt that the University has been rushed; a new faculty has been built quickly; the Administration and Executive branch has had an overhauling since 1959; enrollment has been increased before there was room for housing; college policies and requirements have been re-evaluated and changed and then changed again; and the athletic program has deepened to the point where many are crying for fear of drowning in water over their heads.

This series of articles is aimed at drawing a comparison between the athletic department's problems of growth and those of the main University. It will analyze the current attitudes of the Administration, faculty, and student body toward athletics. And the series will also strive to paint a clear picture of the athletic program's two largest bread winners —football and basketball—their staffs, schedules, and problems.

The problem of where athletics fit into a University is one which has puzzled educators, coaches, the NCAA, and the District Attorney's office in New York City. What comes first—the school or the team? Who builds whom? Do the teams bring prestige to the school's name or vice versa?

There is little doubt that athletics should and must serve the school. But it is with how they are to serve that disagreement enters the picture. The "entertainment" theory holds that athletics should be an organized form of recreation, entertaiment, and outlet for vitality, school spirit, and inner hostility. Opposed to this is the big business-like "public relations" theory which builds publicity, controversy, and tradition. It is this latter theory which can truly be called a servant of the University and its goals. It is this theory that the Administration should concern itself with while the former "entertainment" theory should be considered by the Student Body.

To look at the UMass Administration in respect to athletics, it is evident that it has not yet begun to use athletics to its best advantage. It has concerned itself with attracting the excellent student, the excellent professor, and projecting an excellent image. But today the University does NOT attract the excellent students in the state—Harvard, Holy Cross, Boston U., and Boston College take them. And then you have Syracuse, Penn State, Rutgers, Notre Dame, and Michigan picking them up also. The excellent professors are drawn to these name schools. Why? Big enrollment, rich alumni, liberal research programs, vast facilities, and high salaries.

Now the University of Massachusetts will soon be approaching the above qualities and should emerge from the shadows of Harvard, Holy Cross, Syracuse, Boston University, etc. They should but they won't . . . unless an attitude is changed. How do you attract the attention of high school students — good and excellent ones? Not by merely listing your costs and courses and campus in a catalogue. Not by the myriads of articles that come out of the publicity offices on our guest speakers or research projects or carnivals or open houses. All these help but they won't really do the trick. But a name will do it best of all. The UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS. Something that connotes bigness, superiority, and spirit will do it. When U-Mass means something, that young student or prospective donor or enterprising young professor will stop and look us over instead of passing us by.

Run down the names — Harvard, Holy Cross, Syracuse, Michigan, Notre Dame, Ohio State—they suggest bigness, superiority, and spirit. And almost all of them used athletics as a public relations firm to build those names. Sure, it would be effective if we had Robert Frost or Carl Sandburg in residence, or maybe Jonas Salk doing research here, or if one of our chemists were given a Nobel Prize—but those are improbable factors. Athletics is a very possible and positive instrument. Take the name Seton Hall. What do you know about it? Big. Your eye would stop on it in a list of prospective schools. Where is it? What city is it in? Is it coed? You probably do not know the answers. But the name you know it; it stands out—like Proctor & Gamble or General Motors or Scott Paper. It is a name brand. And what made Seton Hall in a name brand? A series of great basketball teams and players made Seton Hall into more than just a name familiar to central New Jersey. Athletics did not build Seton Hall or Michigan or Villanova—but they made them into name brand schools.

UM Weightlifters Place In Boston AAU Open Meet

Two UMass weightlifters placed this past weekend in the New England AAU Open meet at the Boston YMCA. The competition consisted of Olympic style lifts: press, snatch, and clean and jerk.

George Giddings decided to enter the meet after winning the shotput for the Redmen at the track meet in the Northeastern Cage next door. Giddings, a junior from Dorchester, was second in the heavyweight division. The 235 pound lifter pressed 275, snatched 235 and had a clean jerk of 300 pounds. Giddings started "light" because of a virus attack last week, but underestimated his potential. His 300 pound lift felt so light, that he pressed it instead of using the customary leg split to jerk it. His 810 total was eighty pounds behind perennial winner Charles Ryan of Beverly.

Barry Whitcomb, freshman physical education major from Holland, Mass., placed fourth in the middleweight division. He weighed in at 158 and performed a 190 press, a 180 snatch, and a 250 clean and jerk. Whitcomb had been lifting only three years, and his snatch and jerk lifts matched his best in practice.

Hockey Team Breaks Four Mass. Records

Four new records were established by the University of Massachusetts hockey team which finished a successful 8-10 season.

Coach Steve Kosakowski, pessimistic in pre-season forecasts, saw his Redmen sextet establish a new mark for most victories in a single season. The previous high of seven wins was first established during a 7-3 campaign in 1954-55 and then tied by the 1960-61 club which ended with a 7-6-1 mark.

Co-Capt. Jim Ellingwood (Arlington) set a new point-total mark of 41 points, on 16 goals and 25 assists. The old mark of 37 was made by Russ Kidd in 1954-55. And sophomore Charlie Glew (Framingham) broke Kidd's goal record of 23 by notching two in the final game to end with a total of 24.

The steller Redmen first line of Ellingwood, Charlie Glew and co-capt. Bob Glew (Framington) totalled 51 goals and 48 assists for a record 99 points. Charlie Glew had 24 goals and 9 assists while brother Bob had 11 goals and 14 assists. Charlie finished the season with a flurry, scoring 19 goals in the final seven games, including three four-goal games.

Much of the success of the Redmen can be attributed to the fine goalplay of senior Frank Cesario (Hudson). Cesario, who saw little action during the past two seasons, averaged over 33 saves per game. He had a high of 46 against Bowdoin and nine time made over 35 stops.

QTV To Face Van Meter I

This year's hard-luck fraternity team, SAE, was upset by QTV's quintet in Monday night's contest which decided the fraternity crown. The QTV's, sparked by Don Barnes on offense and Logan Doane on defense, dumped last year's fraternity hoop champs 46-33 in a game which was all QTV's.

The defending champs, getting off to a slow start, managed to bring the score within 6 points shortly before the end of the first half, 18-12, but that was as close as they came.

It will be QTV aaginst Van Meter I on Thursday night at 8:00 p.m. in the Cage. The Van Meter team was able to edge out the Butterfield quinet last night, 31-28, after Butterfield had won their dorm league championship on Monday night by defeating Greenough, 46-35.

The Thursday night battle will produce the team which will meet the independents for the Intramural championships.

The UMass-Coast Guard hoop game will NOT be broadcast over WMUA tonight.

Rhode Island's Charlie Lee Leads Conference Scorers

Charlie Lee, who tallied 28 points against Maine last Saturday night, continues to lead the Yankee Conference scoring parades, according to statistics released recently by the conference publicity office. The University of Rhode Island junior has tallied 150 points in eight games for an average of 18.7 points per contest.

Tom "Skip" Chappelle of the University of Maine, who has been handicapped by a bad ankle, has taken over the runner-up spot with 121 points in seven games and a 17.3 average. Rodger Twitchell of Massachusetts and Don Harnum of Maine are tied for third with 16.3 averages while Dave Ricereto of Rhode Island and Benny Becton of Vermont are tied for fifth one-tenth of a percentage point behind.

Dear Mr. Gordon,

Upon reading your column we notice you take exceptional pain to glorify one Charlie Fohlin. We consider this glory a dire exaggeration of Charlie's ability. He is a fine ballplayer, but certainly Don Black makes a mockery of his talents, few as they are. We feel Don Deserves much more praise than he has been given in the past. It seems as if Charlie's brother must write the basketball column.

Let's see what can be done about giving credit where credit is due.

Respectfully yours,

Editor's Note:

Thanks for your interest in UMass basketball and in the Collegian, guys, but I think you're way off base. Our news stories are objective, not subjective, and the one instance of the heralding of Charlie Fohlin that I can recall appeared in the February 21 edition of the Collegian. It was a direct quote from one who should know what he's talking about—Matt Zunic.

"The unsung hero for us has been (Charlie) Fohlin. He hasn't been scoring much, but he's getting the rebounds and he's giving us that lift in the key games."

It seems that Coach Zunic has a little more faith in Charlie than you express.

Playoffs To Decide YanCon NCAA Envoy In Event Of Tie

A Yankee Conference release announced yesterday that a playoff among the conference leaders would be held in the result of a tie for the YanCon basketball crown.

A three-man committee, including Fred Tootel, the U.R.I. Athletic Director, and representatives from Vermont and Maine, decided that in the case of a tie for the beanpot honors, an occurence which has never come about in YanCon hoop action, precedent would be set by the staging of the playoff series. In the event of a tie, the playoffs would be held on a neutral Yankee Conference court, if one is available by March 10.

The playoffs, however, will NOT decide the Yankee Conference champion, but rather, will serve to determine the Yankee Conference representative in the upcoming NCAA tournament. The UMass Athletic Department had been led to believe that overall records would determine the NCAA envoy.

At the present moment, Massachusetts holds the top slot in the standings with seven wins and two losses in Conference play. Rhode Island, with six wins and two losses, has two Conference games yet to be played those contests being with Connecticut and Maine. Connecticut is six and three thus far.

Thus, it is statistically possible for a three way tie to occur for the YanCon crown. If UMass is upset by New Hampshire in Saturday night's game, this record will equal UConn's, and if the Huskies manage to dump the Rams, all three squads will wind up with the same Conference record, barring other wins or losses.

The Frozen Rope

by DICK MACKLEM

With the college cage season heading into the tournament stretch, it's time for selections for the All-Americas and our personal picks.

Many fine ball players were active in New England this winter, headed by Jack Foley of Holy Cross. Rather than try to place them in first, second, and third teams; here's our selections for All-New England:

Forwards: Jack Foley, Holy Cross; John Thompson, Providence; Roger Twitchell, UMass; Bob Mahland, Williams; Fred Sayles, Amherst; and Charles Lee, Rhode Island.

Center: Jim Hooley, Boston College; Jim Hadnot, Providence; and Larry McNulty, Boston University.

Guards: Chuck Chevaliar, Boston College; Vinnie Ernst, Providece; Skip Chappelle, Maine; Steve Spahn, Dartmouth; Lenny Carlson, UConn; and Benny Becton, Vermont.

Moving around the country, the season was a delight for the professional coaches as the big man ruled the roost more than ever before. Without the benefit of news-service aid, here's out attempt at the team: Jack Foley, Holy Cross; Art Heyman, Duke; Len Chappell, North Carolina State, Jerry Lucas and John Havlicek, Ohio State; Jerry Dischinger, Purdue; Dave DeBusschere, Detroit; Chet Walker, Bradley; Billy McGill, Utah; John Rudometkin, Southern Cal.; Paul Hogue, Cincinnati; and Leroy Ellis, St. John's.

If this entire group were to invade the NBA next year, it would change the complexion of the league. However, so many complications have arisen that the pro teams will have to be very careful in the draft if they want to stay alive. Lucas, despite the $5,000 plaed in front of him by the Cincinnati Royals, still claims he is going to drop out of Ohio State for the spring quarter so that can relax and study this coming summer and fall to pass the entrance requirements for law school next year. His team-mate John "Hondo" Havlicek, of Romanian background, wants to play pro ball all right; but it is football, for the Cleveland Browns.

Dischinger has had an attractive offer of a job along with basketball from an AAU team. DeBusschere wants to play baseball. Foley weighs so little that an NBA team would have to change their entire pattern of play to set him free to shoot. The last, and probably least, of the problems is the new ABL. The new league really had it rough this year with one team, Bill Sharman's Los Angeles team, folding, and another, the league leading Cleveland Pipers, almost being expelled for illegal recruiting tactics. To attempt to survive, the ABL will have to dangle high salaries at the name players to pick up this year's horrible attendance.

This year brought quite an upswing in Eastern basketball with seven teams gaining some national recognition. Holy Cross, Providence, St. John's, N.Y.U., Seton Hall, Villanova, and Duquesne all did their share to help the cause We hope at this writing that Holy Cross and Boston College might be invited to the NIT along with Providence, and that UMass and Yale, the Ivy League champ, might bring some glory to the area in the NCAA.

Along with the already mentioned Foley and Ellis, two other names were outstanding in Eastern basketball this winter. Little Nick Werkman of Seton Hall, only a soph., is the third leading scorer in the country averaging 31 points a game, a clip which places him behind only McGill and Foley. Hubie White singlehandedly lead Villanova from basketball obscurity into the NCAA. We here at UMass should be proud of our initial relationship with Villanova in football and hope that the rivalry will grow. With a bowl football team, a tournament basketball team, and the finest track team in the country; they have gone far in promoting their universiy through athletics.

Don't forget the name Cotten Nash in the next two years. This lad, minus scholarship and press clippings, walked into Adolf Rupp's practice session at Kentucky last year and easily won a spot on the varsity; ranked in the nation's top five this year. Young Cotten is by far the finest soph in the country and Rupp bills him as a definite All-American of the future.

Don't forget the Western Mass. high school tournament at the Springfield College cage next week. From the Berkshires comes Pittsfield (18-2), with its high-scoring ace Mark Belanger; and Adams (15-5), who backed into the tourney when Wahconah Regional chose to come here for the Small Schools Tournament.

From the Connecticut Valley are strong Chicopee High (17-1), with big "Moose" Stronczek; Springfield city champion, Commerce High (18-1); and Holyoke High (15-3).

Central Mass. staged a playoff for the first time this year to select the three teams to fill its berths. The competition was tremendous, with both semi-finals, the final, and he consolation game (which determined the third berth), all being settled by one or two points.

Worcester Classical (17-3) emerged as champs; followed by Northbridge (20-1); and Fitchburg High (16-3), who in the amazing Joe Spagnola, have one of the finest young ball players one would ever hope to see in high school.

It must be mentioned that St. John's of Worcester, annually a visitor to the tournament (who last week won he New England Catholic Tournament by easily defeating Boston College High), was defeated in the quarter finals by Worcester Commerce, who in turn was defeated by both Northbridge and Fitchburg.

It should be quite an interesting tournament. The quarter finals are Monday and Tuesday nights with the semi-finals on Thursday and the final on Saturday night. (My Guess? Worcester Classical vs. Chicopee.)

AFROTC Cadets Fly To Maguire Air Base

Lt. Col. Carl Sprague and several cadets from the AFROTC department of UMass recently flew to New Jersey to visit Maguire Air Force Base, the eastern headquarters for the Military Air Transport Service (MATS).

A complete tour of the base included a comprehensive examination of the Base Operations Headquarters, the Semi-Automatic Ground Environment command building, and the overseas passenger terminal.

High points of the weekend were a tour of a KC 97 aerial refueling tanker and a talk with an alert crew who fly Convair F106's used by the Air Defense Command. These planes are used to protect the New York and Philadelphia areas from attack by enemy bombers.

An AFROTC graduate gave a briefing on Maguire's control tower, which is necessarily complex because of the large role the base plays in the defense of the Eastern Seaboard and movement of personnel throughout the world.

The cadets also visited the engine maintenance shop, where engines of all types for all aircraft are rebuilt and repaired.

Springfield Students Protest Dismissal

The fifteen members of the Editorial Board of the Springfield Student, newspaper of Springfield College, unanimously resigned Wednesday at 11:59 p.m. in a walk-out action in "protest and sympathy" following administrative decision to release Dr. Egon Bergel, 67, professor of sociology and economics, and Professor Franck A. Warren, 66, of the history department.

Acording to Donald A. Albano, editor-in-chief of the paper, the policy of the college is to cancel the contract between the college and any faculty member once the teacher has reached the age of 65. They are allowed a post-retirement year if they so desire.

Beryl Kemp, assistant news editor of the Student, noted that having taken the allotted extra year, both professors want to remain on the faculty, and the students are in full support. The one-year post-retirement plan has once before been waived, and the students believe that by their actions they can do it again, Miss Kemp commented.

Council Calls Class Boycott

The Student Council, called to an emergency meeting by President Irving Conrad, passed a recommendation for students to "boycott all classes Friday (today) except those of the two professors."

"I think it will be met successfully," stated Miss Kemp. "This is the first time the student body has taken part wholeheartedly in anything."

From the Student Council meeting also came a statement to the Board of Trustees that the body wanted "to go on record as unanimously opposed to the refusal of Springfield College to extend the post-retirement of the professors to cover the 1962-1963 academic year."

The newspaper was informed of the dismissal Wednesday afternoon by a student. Later the report was confirmed by Dean E. Cummings Speakman.

Folk Festival Will Begin This Evening

This evening the ninth Annual Intercollegiate Folk Festival will begin. Late this afternoon and all evening the participants from other colleges will be arriving.

The first event of the weekend is a decorating and get-acquainted dance at 7 p.m. in the ballroom. This dance is open to any one and there is no admission charge.

On Saturday from 2 to 5 there will be square and folk dancing exhibitions. Between these exhibitions the leaders of the participating groups will teach some of their dances to anyone who wants to learn. From 8 to 12 in the evening there will be a "fun level" square dance with Dick and Squire Davis as callers and their Do-Si-Doers Orchestra. There is an admission charge to both of these events.

The UMass students who are in the Heymakers exhibition are: Dick Sawyer-caller, Bill Dennen, Marilyn Welsh, Bill Llewelyn, Betsy Perry, Don Kelso, Nancy West, Charlie Souza, Donna Hastings, Earl Waterman, Betty Primmer, Leo Cormier, Terry Freni, Bernie Harland, Jeanne Stevens, Ray Woodis, and Pat Foss.

Other college groups that are participating are the Brooklyn College Folk Dance Club, The Durham Reelers from U.N.H., Northeastern College, Danbury State College, R.P.I., and Mount Holyoke.

Lederle - "Maturity In Teaching; No Shortchanging The Students"

"We will continue to insist upon maturity in our teachers .... The teacher who prides himself on his superior intellectual attainments at the same time he fails to communicate effectiveiy with his students is no teacher .... Professionally speaking, he does not deserve his license."

In an informal convocation yesterday in the Student Union Ballroom on the subject—"Who Wants Good Teaching?"—President John Lederle issued a call for greater conscientiousness on the part of faculty members in the allocation of their time and effort to the education of students.

Prime Role—The Individual

In his opening remarks he indicated the "tendency to obscure the role of teaching in our colleges and universities . . . Will we become a massive educational machine . . . will the role of teaching become similar to that of a cog in a machine . . . or will we somehow preserve the essential humanity that must mark our educational activities?"

The "prime role of a university . . . must be devoted to the individual . . . a being of intrinsic worth to all society."

The best contributor to this educative process, he emphasized, "is he who combines the ability to pursue and to acquire knowledge with the capacity to communicate what he has learned—and to invest the entire activity with a sense of its significance and value in general human terms."

Funds For Research Draw Faculty From Teaching

Lederle expressed concern that "the increasing availability of funds for research draws attention of the faculty away from teaching to research."

During its first hundred years the University has had a long tradition of good teaching, as evidenced by the many students who have gone on to further their education. Our science departments especially have been productive.

But "with the increasing emphasis upon research . . . the faculty is in danger of being seduced into shortchanging the students through giving inadequate attention to teaching. Teaching and research go hand in hand .... But there is increasing evidence that some members of faculties of all universities are guilty of shoddy treatment of the students entrusted to their care."

Calls For Great Teaching

Lederle continued: "I'd like to issue a call today for great teaching at the University of Massachusetts. I know of no more valued contribution a faculty man can make to the university and its mission than serious attention to improving the skill with which he imparts his subject matter to the students entrusted to his care.

"I am deeply concerned when . . . I hear a professor cynically remark that he can hold the percentage of successful students in his classes down to a bare minimum . . . as though this indicates his high standards."

"What we want . . . and what we encourage . . . is the kind of teacher who posters good performance on the part of students on whatever campus he practices his profession"

"Review" Announces Two Writing Awards

The Massachusetts Review, professional quarterly of arts, literature and public affairs, has announced the establishment of two new writing awards.

The Quill Award of $200, to be granted for the best short story of the year is from a fund given by the Quill Bookshop of Northampton, Mass. The other award, also for $200, is for the best poem of the year and is called the Jennie Tane Award. Funds for this stipend were given anonymously. Manuscripts published in any issue of the current volume will be considered for the awards.

The Massachusetts Review was founded in October, 1959, by faculty members of UMass, and now is a joint project of the University and Amherst, Smith and Mount Holyoke Colleges The Review is presently an international magazine whose subscriptions and manuscripts come from many parts of the United States as well as from foreign countries.

Some of the Review's poetry has been printed in the New York Times Sunday Book Section, the Boston Globe Book Section, and in other publications. A special feature of the quarterly is the arts section, devoted to fine reproductions of major artists' works.

The decision of the four colleges to give assistance to the Review assures continued publication of the magazine through the next three years. At the end of that period the editors expect that it will be self-sustaining.

Contributors should send their material to: Editor, The Massachusetts Review, Bartlett Hall, University of Massachusetts, Amherst, Mass. Subscriptions may be obtained from the same office.

Zoo. Research Renewed By Health Dept.

The Public Health Service of the United States Department of Health, Education, and Welfare has announced renewal of support in the amount of $22,044 for research in the Department of Zoology at UMass.

The project, entitled "Thermal Acclimation of the Sunfish Lapomis," is concerned with the seasonal effects of temperature and day length upon the metabolism of sunfish and their cells, and is under the direction of Assistant Professor John L. Roberts.

According to Roberts, the project is designed to determine how climatic factors trigger changes in activity of fish and to find out how they may have participated in the evolution of the various types of sunfish.

Roberts came to UMass in 1952 after receiving degrees from the University of Wisconsin (M.S.) and U.C.L.A. (PhD.). He has taught at both of those institutions

Tickets for the appearance of former Brazilian President Dr. Juscelino Kubitchek this coming Thursday at 8 p.m., will be available in the Student Union lobby at the following times: Monday and Tuesday from 10 a.m. to 1 p.m. and 2 p.m. to 5 p.m.

On these days, tickets will be given ONLY to undergraduate students, graduate students, and to students' wives. ID cards must be presented.

On Wednesday and Thursday tickets will be available to all who wish to attend. The hours are: Wednesday from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. and 2 p.m. to 4 pm, and Thursday from 11 am to 1 p.m. and 2 p.m. to 5 p.m.

There is NO CHARGE for the tickets.

DO WE REALLY WANT GOOD TEACHING?

President Lederle's Convocation address yesterday was concerned with a topic that is close to the hearts of most students. Upon announcement of the convocation a few days ago, and judging by the Administration's release concerning the topic, we assumed that the President would unfold a broad new policy that would drastically change the professorial situation on this campus.

We were extremely disappointed. We were disappointed not because of the "call for good teaching," and not because the speech was padded with platitudes. What disappointed and somewhat amazed us, was the flagrant discrepancies between the theories expounded in the speech and the actual practices employed by the administration in its hiring and promotion of teachers.

Ever since the accession of Dean Hunsberger, the administration has been operating under a "publish or perish" policy of hiring and promotion. According to President Lederle's address, we would believe that this policy will be changed so that we might obtain some good teachers.

Yet, right after the President spoke of "recognizing . . . dedication to teaching," he openly admitted that "the policies under which we hire, grant tenure and promote" will receive only "careful study." No hint there of any change, no hint of any desire of change, only the harmless, evasive promise of "study."

While we have witnessed the dismissal of a mathematics teacher who was openly praised by many students as the best in the department, while we know of at least one teacher who has given himself tirelessly to the interests of his students and is STILL AN INSTRUCTOR AFTER TWELVE YEARS OF SERVICE, and while we know of several professors on this campus who have been ordered to cease their work with students so that they might publish more—while we see all of these things staring us in thes face—how, then, can we interpret the President's speech as anything but a lot of empty words?

We repeat that the thought of having a "teaching" campus is extremely welcome, and any ACTION taken in that direction would be backed, we believe, by the entire campus. But so far no ACTION has been taken. There have been words and promises, but ACTIONS have constantly been flouting them. There have been speeches, but they have been speeches lacking the ACTION necessary for conviction.

President Lederle can not just stand up and exude promises without supporting them. If he really wants good teaching, he must force the academic deans and department heads to follow through and amend their hiring and promotion procedures to coincide with the supposed new policy. Without this assertion of leadership and conviction, the President's speech stands useless.

Awareness combines action and understanding to secure its goal—that of helping the youth of today become the well-informed citizens of tomorrow. We have so many opportunities to show that we are really interested in becoming useful and valuable citizens of our university community. Each of us is a citizen; but do we always act like citizens?

Before we can act, we must learn by understanding such things as running a meeting, parliamentary procedure, the techniques of employing individual talents, the campus resources and resource people available to us, student self-government, and student activities. Learning can be fun when it is done in a contructive way. The techniques of audio-visual aids may also be available. Discussion and seminars on the present day university can turn into lively fun if we are intelligent enough to be aware of what is going on at the university.

In such ways the Freshman Leadership Workshops can be invaluable to each member of our class and can help to mold a successful stay on campus. Leadership is an essential part of our university program, but above all, we must make it an essential part of ourselves.

PEP, which when translated means programming, education, and participation, is the magic ingredient needed to get things done. Many of us have pep, but what about those of us who don't?

Resumption Of Nuclear Testing

CON

Our objections to the resumption of atmospheric tests have previously been stated in relation to the Washington Project. Thus, in this discussion, we will extract some material from a policy statement of this Project.

First of all, nuclear testing raises the probability of disease malignancy in general, specifically such as leukemia and cancer. There will also be increased probability of harmful mutation because of the affect on our germ plasm. These facts are based on the findings of Muler, A.E.C. and U.N. reports, and Pres. Carlyle of the American Cancer Society.

Let us now run through the arguments in favor of resumption of nuclear tests.

1. Such testing by us would help develop an anti-missile missile. The Russians have one, so we should have one too.
   ANSWER: A. There is no indication whatsoever that the recent Russian tests gave them a lead in the development of an anti-missile missile.
   B. Even if it had, it would not be to their advantage to develop an anti-missile missile because: The United States has 150 operational ICBM's, each one costing more than two million dollars to build. An anti-missile missile would cost more than four times that amount (more than $8,000,000 apiece). To be sure of knocking down one attacking missile you must shoot at least four anti-missile missiles at it. Thus to neutralize the threat of each one of our missiles, the Russians must spend $32,000,000 for each missile we have. Thus to counteract our present force, they would have to spend 4.8 billion. The National Security Council has decided to enlarge our missile force ten times. To neutralize the threat of this force would cost the Russians $48 billion, an absolutely prohibitive cost.
   C. Development of an American anti-missile has virtually nothing to do with nuclear testing. The real problems are guidance and decoy discrimination, totally independent of whether the missile carries a nuclear warhead or not.

II. We could develop warheads which give greater yield for less weight, thus giving lighter and more potent missiles.
   A. We don't need lighter or more potent missiles. According to Admiral Raborn, one submarine carrying a Polaris missile could destroy any Soviet city but the two or three largest (it would take two missiles to destroy these!) A submarine carries 16 Polaris missiles.

III. Tests would help us to develop clean bombs.
   A. This is not valid because:
   There are two ways to make a bomb cleaner:
   - Remove the outer shell of U-238 (reducing the yield by one half). This can be done without testing.
   - Replace the inner core of Uranium by a non-fission ignition device. This could be tested underground.

IV. We could produce cheaper warheads.
   A. Are the lives of 100,000 people to be measured in these terms? You can answer this for yourself.

However, all the questions are not scientific. Too often we distort the central question with technical observations. Pauling states that 100,000 people will die if we test. Teller states that this is not so, and that perhaps 50,000 people will die. Slowly but surely we become mathematical figures instead of human beings. How many Americans will die in a nuclear attack? The proponent of fallout shelters says that we can save perhaps 5,000,000 Americans. Thus, only 175,000,000 will die! Indeed, what if we could save 50,000,000 Americans? Then only 100,000,000 would die!

We are living in an atmosphere of super-heated chauvinism. The arms race prolongs this atmosphere. Civil liberties recede into the hopper as the right-wing becomes more bellicose. And the arms race continues.

Atmospheric testing by the United States at this point can only constitute saber rattling. We can gain nothing. If we go ahead, the Soviets will follow, and vice versa. This situation conduces to the growth of anti-democratic tendencies within our society. We need not be weak, but we must not fail to see the inevitable result of our actions.

SYNTHESIS

PRO

Young Americans For Freedom is a national bipartisan conservative organization that was formed to organize conservatives throughout the nation: to make them more effective through group action and to help present the conservative viewpoint to the public. The individual chapters may operate almost completely independently of the National Organization, which serves mainly as a guide and coordinator for the chapters. The major tenets of Y.A.F. are: that the federal government has ventured beyond its rightful function; that this has resulted in reduced freedom and individual initiative; that when government interferes with the work of the market economy, it tends to reduce the moral and physical strength of the nation; and that the U.S. must stress victory over, rather than co-existence with, the menace of international Communism.

It is with this last point in mind that Y.A.F. considers the resumption of nuclear testing in the atmosphere to be the only course open to America.

This decision was made reluctantly, as we are all aware of the dangers of fallout and the greater inherent dangers of a nuclear arms race. But what are the alternatives? We were tricked into a moratorium and disarmament talks at Geneva while the Soviets secretly prepared tests of their own. Our scientists tell us that the Soviets gained much from these tests; perhaps enough to put them ahead of us in some phases of nuclear weaponry. Now the Soviets want to talk some more, on condition that we do not test. Will we fall twice for the same trick? It seems fairly obvious by their actions that the Soviets intend to continue the arms race as long as they can profit by it. They accomplished another important objective by their tests. They have frightened many Americans into urging what seems to be an unconditional surrender to the Soviets. For by not resuming testing by adopting a "peace at any price" attitude, we are encouragaing the Communists to be bolder in their drive for world conquest. Certainly we should learn and learn again the lesson of Chamberlain at Munich. We will not "turn toward peace" nor shall we achieve "peace in our time" by being weak and vacillating. A potential aggressor is halted only by strength.

J. Edgar Hoover has said, "We are at war with the Soviets and the sooner every American realizes it, the better." This is, to be sure, a very different type of conflict that we are accustomed to. But this does not mean that we cannot achieve victory. And let me here define what I would consider "victory." If the Soviets were to realize finally that they have nothing to gain by the arms race and were then honestly to sit down and negotiate with us on nuclear disarmament, offering adequate safeguards to prevent cheating, then we would have achieved a great victory removing the danger of a nuclear holocaust. But they will not give up the arms race until it is quite plain to them that they are losing it. It has always been thus; the lion does not have to come to terms with the lamb.

We have a priceless heritage of freedom in America; gained not by surrender, but by sacrifice. We pray that the world will attain a just and lasting peace. But men cannot have either peace or freedom unless they are willing to fight and even die for it. If we fail to recognize this obvious historical truth, then we are well on our way to losing the cold war.

Incentives* — *— See Page Three

Is It Me?

Psychological warfare has entered the classroom, reports the University of Texas DAILY TEXAN.

A professor, in complimenting his students on their conduct after their first big quiz, commented: "I'm very proud of you. That is, all of you except one person. I'm afraid that there is one of you that will bear watching."

Students allegedly began guilty sideglances, apparently wondering, "Is it me?"

INCENTIVES — PART THREE

by ALLAN BERMAN '62, Editor-in-Chief

(This is the third article in a series dealing with the problem of incentives for participation in extra-curricular activities on campus. Today we deal with incentives, other than those involving salaries, that are used at various colleges throughout the country.)

There are very few colleges where actual course credit is given for extracurricular activities, but many places have unusual types of "point" systems that act as great incentives. One of the most elaborate point systems is at Utah State University.

UTAH SYSTEM

At USU, editor Lee Roderick tells us that "activity points" are awarded to students for their participation in extracurricular activities throughout the year. These points accumulate and entitle the bearer to attend a banquet at the end of the year and receive a certificate of achievement. Roderick forwarded to us a pamphlet that lists almost every extra-curricular position conceivable, along with the number of points each position is worth.

But, an important aspect of the USU program is that in order to be able to accumulate points, a students must have a 2.5 or better grade average.

Stanford University awards quarter-units of activity credit to partcipating students, and requires that a student obtain 6 quarter-units of activity credits in order to graduate. Activity credits are given for a "huge amount of activities," reports Jerry Rankin, "from p.e. to student legislature to football team to choir, and so on. Thus, in almost any organization you can pick up activity credits—but they aren't real inducement to join any particular organization."

At Texas A & M, honor points are awarded for participation in certain activities. The number of honor points received by a total military outfit brings prestige to the outfit and to the individuals in it, thus inducing the men to participate.

AIR FORCE'S UNIQUE SYSTEM

One of the most unique systems is in operation at the United States Air Force Academy. At the AFA, membership in any and all activities credits the cadet with "quality points. Twenty per cent of every students' academic grades are dependent upon the number of quality points he has. Each extracurricular activity is worth a certain amount of semester credits (just as though they were courses), and all participants are "graded" by the activity advisor. Then the activity "cum." is figured and averaged in with the academic grades.

At Brooklyn College awards are given at graduation to students who have done a great deal for the school.

The number of different types of "credit" incentives that have been developed are testimony for the belief that many colleges and universities have experienced incentive problems. Most of the editors who wrote us about these systems seems to favor them as methods of incentive, but they are almost unanimous in their belief that course credit alone is not enough.

But the question still remains of what we should try to develop at UMass. What type of incentive would be suitable here? Or is an incentive needed? To answer this question, a sort of "depth analysis" is necessary. We have to decide exactly why UMass students aren't participating before we can figure out how to get them to participate.

In the last parts of this series we will explore these ideas.

"As I look back, graduating from college in the depth of the depression was a blessing in disguise. It was difficult to get a job, and even more difficult to hold it. It proved to me early in life that to succeed in business requires constant struggle.

"I found that the truly successful individual never stops learning, that a formal college education is the foundation on which we continue to build the knowledge and experience required to get ahead.

"Even in today's age of specialization, a man eventually reaches a point where breadth of knowledge is necessary. The engineer must understand accounting and marketing. The marketing man must know his product. The financial man must be sympathetic to engineering development and sales programs. Management must have a working knowledge of all phases of the complex and highly competitive business world.

"Therefore, even though specializing, a student should make his college curriculum as broad as possible, and diversify his outside activities. Authoritative surveys have shown that only a small percentage of individuals end up in the field in which they specialized in college.

"Widen your world. Broaden your interests right now. Since graduation from college I've discovered that those who are really succeeding today are the ones who do more and keep on learning from what they do. The broader your college interests are now — the steadier your ladder of success tomorrow!"

ALPHA CHI OMEGA

Wednesday, February 21, marked the advent of the snowmen when the Alpha Chi's dined, danced, and tobogganed with the Alpha Gams. Thanks guys. We only have one request . . . Next time let's use toboggans. Also, Lorraine thanks you for her lovely trophy.

Five new and excited expledges became sisters in an initiation ceremony last Sunday. Congratulations and welcome Judy Burke, Mary Katherine Dix, Deena Ferrigno, Peggy Maloney, and Pam Salvati.

As we all shiver and shake in our snow-covered Amherst home, we receive glowing reports of the Alpha Chi chapter at sun-kissed Florida State University from Lisa Nordberg who is South of the Mason-Dixon line supposedly on an exchange program. However, we're all sure she's got other motives—namely, avoiding the flu and getting a suntan. We're also all quite envious.

The Alpha Chi's were pleased to have Dr. and Mrs. J. Harold Smith to dinner last Monday night, and we want to thank them for their inspiring talk on scholarship. Naturally, we don't need it . . . MUCH!! I'm sure many of us will be accepting their kind invitation to visit them soon and play a few games of ping pong. We're going to have to brush up on our game first, though.

In one of our unusual moments of generosity, the sisters granted the services of the new pledges to serve dinner at Alpha Gamma Rho last Monday night. Now that they're experienced waitresses, we can put them to work here on a more permanent basis.

KAPPA ALPHA THETA

The sisters and pledges thank the Phi Sigs for a terrific exchange held last Wednesday night.

Kappa Alpha Theta presents twenty-two pledges this Saturday night at the annual pledge formal and dinner, held for the first time at the Sheraton Kimball in Springfield. We are proud to welcome into Theta: Sue Bello, Eleanor Campobasso, Lynda Carlo, Barbara Cocchi, Mary Collins, Paula Cox, Nancy Dowling, Eileen Glynn, Barbara Guerton, Jan Hatcher, Ellen Hastings, Bette Jonas, Joy Kerr, Nancy Malhman, Elaine Procaccini, Ann Ruthel, Dianne Scandifio, Carol Sherman, Virginia Spence, Bea St. Laurent, Nancy Stack, and Angie Sutherland.

Congratulations to Nancy King and Mary Jane Stack who was selected to "Who's Who."

The Thetas were happy to receive several of their neighbors Sunday afternoon at a tea given in their honor.

This semester Kathy Kelly and Julie Iversen are affiliating at Lemuel Shaddock hospital in Boston as speech therapists.

KAPPA KAPPA GAMMA

The words "pizza party" seem to make every get-together a success these days and this was no exception at Kappa Monday night. The advisors and officers of KKG were happy to welcome as guests, the advisors and officers of the other sororities on campus. Involved with mutual responsibilities, the evening proved to be quite valuable because of the new acquaintances made and various topics discussed.

With the onset of last Thursday's holiday, Wednesday night at Theta Chi was the scene of great fun for Theta Chi's and Kappa's alike. The party was the first function attended by our new pledges as Kappas and we hope many of Theta Chi's pledges to be, for it was a wonderful evening.

A pizza supper and a twist band were the highlights of last Friday's exchange supper. Our thanks to the brothers of AGR for so grand an evening.

The Kappas extend their best wishes to Roz Zacher married Sunday to Eddie Conneley of SAE.

SIGMA DELTA TAU

The greater part of house activity this past week was centered on the election of a fine new group of house officers. As we commend our outgoing officers for a job well done, we would like to introduce our new officers as: President, Linda Lederman; First Vice President, Janet Louis; Recording Secretary, Carol Langbort; Corresponding Secretary, Honey Gold; Treasurer, Jean Zimmerman; Asst. Valparaiso Univ. Experiments With Sorority Dorm.

After two years of experimentation, a new dormitory designed to house eight sororities is in operation on the Valparaiso University campus.

According to The Torch, Scheele's Hall's residents are practically self-governing. A coordinator of sorority affairs lives on the first floor, but each sorority selects a housemother to be in charge of its own administrative details.

Included in the building are a sun deck, dining rooms with "best quality" china and stainless steel silverware, and "compact" rooms with built-in sleeping and washing facilities.

B. U. Newspaper Questions Campus Mass Production

Quality education may be fighting a losing battle as universities expand to meet increasing enrollments, suggests the Boston University News in an editorial:

". . . Our colleges have entered the age of 'Fordism'—the age of mass production.

"While this system may be fine for the production of cars, it is not for education. Learning is an individual process, and when put on a conveyor belt it more than likely will belch out mediocrity.

"We are losing quality in favor of quantity. We should have both, but why have we only quantity.

"One of the major reasons is that numerous college officials have lost the main objective—education of the student . . .

"In an effort to expand numerically, administrators have become, to an almost stultifying degree, concerned with producing a 'corporate image' for their universities.

"We are not denying that the image a university projects is important, but it should not override education.

"A university's image abroad and outside its immediate area, must not supersede that which it has with its own student body. For the student draws an image of his university from the 'quality' education he receives rather than from the numbers it can turn out in an academic year.

"The answers to America's educational problems at the higher level lie then, not only in expansion for numbers, but in higher standards for educators and students.

"In the expansion of facilities the University is making rapid strides . . . Let us hope that our University will take a leading role in solving the whole problem by 'building the student' as well as building a new campus."

UM Squad Looking For Win Sat. Night

The torrid pace of the Yankee Conference could very well come to a climax Saturday night when the University of New Hampshire Wildcats invade the Cage to tangle the Redmen in a game slated for an 8:15 tapoff. The game is a "must" for the Redmen if they expect to retain their slim lead over Rhode Island and Connecticut and the Bill Olson-coached Wildcats would like nothing better than to throw a monkey wrench into the whole works by toppling Matt Zunic's boys. By beating New Hampshire, the Redmen would assure themselves of at least a tie for the title, providing Rhody comes through with wins over Maine and UConn.

If the previous clash between the two clubs means anything, the Redmen could very well be in for a rough night. The Redmen spotted the Wildcats a 10-point 40-30 lead at halftime before they rallied a seek out a 67-65 win in overtime, thanks to Pete Larkin's jump shot with eight seconds to play. The Redmen, however, played without the services of Mike Mole and lost high-scoring forward Roger Twitchell early in the game due to personal fouls.

New Hampshire's scoring punch is centered around 6'4" Bob Bron and 6'2" Skip Gale who scored 25 and 19 points respectively in the previous clash between the two clubs.

Bron is the 7th ranking Yankee Conference scorer with a 15.7 points per game average while Gale ranks 11th with a 12.9 average. The lowly Wildcats, losers in 19 of 22 games, have nowhere to go and nothing to lose, so you can be sure that they'll try every trick in the book to pull an upset.

Just off the record, the Redmen will be entering the game as the third best scoring team in the conference with a 70.5 average per game. In defense, their 65.6 points per game allowed is second only to UConn's 63.8. The Huskies are also the offensive leaders with a 76.7 average per game followed by Rhode Island's 73.9. In the 13-year history of Yankee Confeernce basketball, the UConn Huskies have compiled a phenomenal won-lost record of 94-19 going into Saturday's clash with Rhode Island. The Rams place second with a 78-39 record, and the Redmen, in third place, own a 51-48 record. The Wildcats, who will provide the opposition on Saturday night, are at the bottom of the heap with 23 wins and 100 loses.

Annual Wrestling Tournament Nears

The intramural department's annual wrestling tournament will be held during the week of March 5th-12th. The tournament is open to all the men students from dorm athletic chairmen or enrolled in the University.

Entry blanks may be obtained from dorm athletic chairmen or from Mr. Cobb's office in the cage. These blanks should be filled out no later than 5 p.m. Monday, March 5th and returned to the tournament director at this time to insure participation.

This year trophies will be awarded to the winners in each weight class. The classes are: 125 lb. class, 137 lb. class, 147 lb. class, 157 lb. class, 167 lb. class, 177 lb, class, 191 lb. class, and the unlimited weight class. A trophy will be awarded to the organization that scores the most points in the intramural scoring schedule due to winners and runner-ups in the various weight classes.

Athletics: How Do We Stand?

PART II

by JIM TRELEASE '63

This is the second part of a series on UMass athletics by Jim Trelease. The opinions expressed are those of Mr. Trelease, and not necessarily those of the Sports Department.

The UMass football and basketball teams, as well as the slew of small team Yankee Conference champs we have had over the last two years, have given the University more solid, black headlines than President Lederle's inauguration, Robert Frost's and Eleanor Roosevelt's visits, and this year's graduation speaker Thurgood Marshall combined. They worry about sports becoming too big here; they worry about whether the athlete is also a good student. The University should not fear its athletics; rather it should use them. The bigger the teams and opponents—the bigger the headlines. Coach Matt Zunic's basketball victory at Madison Garden a month ago garnered a thick, banner headline in the early Eastern edition of the New York Times. Such instances, from the Administrative stand point, can only add to the overall name of the University. Headlines bring attention, money, and interest. Athletics remain your most convenient and efficient public relations tool.

The attitude of a large portion of the faculty at UMass remains that of anti-athletic. I would wager that less than half of the faculty have witnessed an athletic event on this campus over the last three years. Many faculty members look at athletes as strange "animals" who came to college to play with a pigskin at no living costs. They resent their scholarships, they resent the fame accorded to them, and resent the fact that an All-Yankee Conference football player receives more recognition on campus than a grade A poet or mathematician in their department. This resentment has grown to the proportion that most athletes are afraid to wear their Varsity Letter sweaters, knowing that their chances of attaining a fair grade are better if the professor is not prejudiced negatively by the knowledge of their athletic prowess. If this appears strong, count the number of Varsity sweaters you find in the Hatch some weekend. Still within the realms of realism, the resentment has made itself evident in the bragging of several faculty members as to their incorruptibility in dealing with athletes. They flunked them cold, they exclaimed proudly.

What these individuals fail to realize is, not only that athletics serve as an instrument in spreading the name of their own employer, but that athletics is used by many students as a means of acquiring a college education. It is a means — not an end. A former great All-Yankee Conference football player said recently that if it were not for the scholarship involved, he would never have put on a grid uniform. And the professor who seriously resents the fame afforded athletes over scholars will suffer for his entire lifetime; it is the way the American mind is oriented. Until history sifts the merits and accomplishments, Perry Como will be known by more Americans than is Dr. Jonas Salk. It is debatable whether or not consideration is due the athlete but definitely he does not deserve the negative attitude he receives from the faculty at the University of Massachusetts.

Stockbridge Quintet Ends Successful Hoop Season

The Stockbridge Basketball Team, coached by Dick Bergquist, recently completed one of its most successful seasons, finishing with an 8-4 record. Captain Ted Hyland led the team throughout the season and finished with a 22 point performance in the season finale against the Athol YMCA.

Stockbridge's season started off with a thriller, with the home team defeating Windsor Mountain Prep School in double overtime by two points. Two games later, Stockbridge was involved in another overtime game, this time winning over Northampton Commercial College 70-68, as Ted Hyland's hot jump shot accounted for 26 points.

Jeff Silverman led the team to a close victory over the Mt. Hermon JV's, 51-47. In the return game with Northampton, Bernard and Hyland threw in 40 points between them, in leading the team to a 64-62 victory. A week later, Stockbridge was involved in its second double overtime of the season, this time beating Winchendon Prep School by one point. Bruce Perry and Bill Quist were standouts in this game. In all, Stockbridge played in eight games in which the teams were only separated by ten points or less.

A Grain Of Salt

The recent decision by a three-man Yankee Conference committee to decide the YanCon NCAA representative to Philadelphia, in the event of a YC tie, by a playoff has raised a good deal of talk and controversy on the UMass campus and in the Conference in general.

Just what is the score, we might ask ourselves. Are we getting a new deal? What can we do about the situation?

We propose that we can do nothing about it, and should not chant a sour-grapes chorus. Sure, UMass has got a right to gripe, but what will be the result of any bickering?

There has never been a situation comparable to the existing one in the Yankee Conference. Connecticut and Rhode Island have always been the top-notch hoop teams, and there has never been the chance of a last-minute tie, along with NCAA consequences. Now UMass is beginning to make a name for itself in the conference, and has challenged the traditional leaders.

The question whether or not Fred Tootel, the Athletic Director of Rhode Island, and longtime secretary-treasurer of the conference, has been pressured by his own interests is a moot one.

The fact that we've beaten Rhody twice in YanCon play this year is a negligible one. Connecticut has beaten us twice, and has, in turn, been beaten twice by the Rams. If a conference tie does occur the chances are that a playoff with Rhode Island (and possibly Connecticut) will result in the most capable team's going to Philadelphia.

Let's take the YanCon committee's decision with good grace, but let's also offer some constructive criticism.

We'd like to suggest that, in the future, crucial decisions of this nature be decided before a season gets under way. A forward-looking Yankee Conference administration should, and must, avoid squabbles which can only give the impression of a fly-by-night conference. This year's unfortunate situation should serve as a warning and an example of the serious consequences which can result from faulty planning.

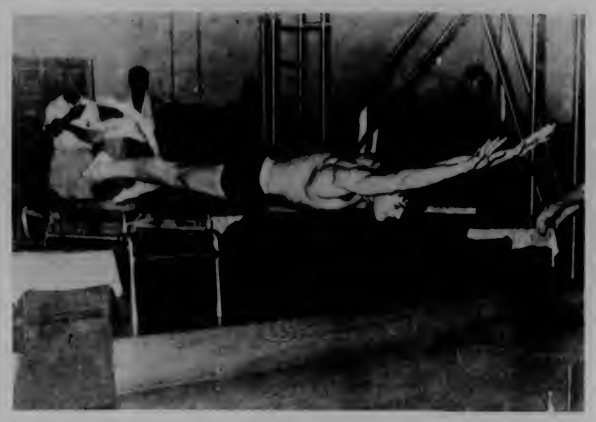
Swim Team Ends Season With A Big Victory Over Tufts

by KIM WALLACE '64

Joe Roger's swimming team finished the season with an important victory over Tufts University, 59-36, at the W.P.E. building on Tuesday, February 27. Three records were broken at the meet as Bjournholm, Grybko, Morton, and Rothschild for Massachusetts broke the school record for the 400 yard Medlay Relay in 4:17.0, Mike Rothschild won the 440 yard freestyle record with a record time of 5:07.4, and Joe Brada set a new Tufts record in the 200 yard breaststroke in 2:46.7.



A FINE DIVE

BRUCE MORTON gets a beautiful dive off which manages to help him take second place in the 100 yard butterfly.

Credible performances were turned in by Mat Ruthowski winning the 220 yard in 2:33.6, Mike Bjournholm who took the 220 yard backstroke in 2:23.2, and Brendon O'Neill who took the 200 yard Individual Medley in 2:33.6.

Chiras and Coffey Win

Second places were taken due to fine swimming on the part of Ron Chiras in the 50 yard freestyle, Jim Coffey in both the 200 yard backstroke and in the 220 yard freestyle, Don Grant in the 200 yard Individual Medley, King in the 100 yard freestyle, Des Jardins in the 200 yard breaststroke, and Bruce Morton in both the 100 yard butterfly and diving event. Also, the 400 yard freestyle relay team consisting of Rutkowski, King, O'Neill, and Chiras placed first with a time of 3:54.0. Additional points were mustered by King and Grybko.

Season Over

The Massachusetts team ends the season with a 3 win and 6 loss record. Not as bad as it seems as they were plagued with a lack of depth and occasional sicknesses.

UMass Hoopers Win By 61-56 At Coast Guard

University of Massachusetts, after blowing a 14-point lead, came back to defeat Coast Guard, 61-56, here last night. This marked the 14th victory against eight losses for UMass, which has won nine of its last 10.

Turn Sloppy

The Redmen opened a 14-point spread midway through the first half, but turned sloppy. Steve Pochman led a surge which left Coast Guard down by only 34-28 at halftime.

The home team moved into a 43-42 lead early in the second half, but UMass regained the lead and held it the rest of the way. The spread moved to 61-53 in UMass' favor with a minute to go.

Rodger Twitchell with 18 points and Kirk Leslie with 15 topped UMass, which closes its regular season Saturday against New Hampshire in the Yankee Conference. Summary:

UMass	B	F	pts	Coast Guard	B	F	pts
Leslie	5	5	15	Hastings	8	0	16

In response to the number of requests I had when I offered junk to you readers, I'd like to print a further suggestion to people who like to receive junk, or to people who need a gift for off-beat friends who might like to receive monthly shipments of odd items:

"SURPRISES! Are what you'll find in your mailbox all year if you send $3 to John Wilcock, P.O. Box 1003, Grand Central Station, NYC 17. At least ten times during the year, something you didn't expect—and probably won't want—will come thudding into your mailbox. Ah well, it adds some spice to life — and what a bizarre present it will make for a friend(?)."

The things he sends are really wonderful. John makes no profit on this deal (he just enjoys shopping for other people with their money) and gets fine discounts for buying in quantity, so you're sure to get more than your money's worth.

Smarts Hold Tournament In Bridge

This Monday, March 5, the Intercollegiate Bridge Tournament wil be held in the Banrstable room of the S.U. at 7 p.m. The tournament will be run by Mr. and Mrs. Smart and will be open to all students.

The Intercollegiate Tournament is quite different from the normal game played at Bridge Club. All hands are previously constructed by a national committee. As opposed to the normal duplicate game, the object here is to reach the best contract which has been previously determined by this committee, and play the hand in the best manner. If this is accomplished by a team on a particular hand, the team receives a par. The two teams receiving the highest total of pars will have their scores sent in to the tournament commitee and compared with those of the high teams of all entries.

Entries will be accepted up to 7 p.m. on Monday.

N.Y. Rally Planned By Young Democrats

A group of Boston Area students today announced plans to participate in a "Stand Up for Democracy" rally in New York on March 7. The rally is sponsored by the Campus Division, Amerians for Democratic Action and the National Federation of College Young Democrats.

The rally, which will feature speeches by both student and adult liberal leaders, including James Wechsler, Editor of the New York Post, Roy Wilkins, Ex. Sec., NAACP, and James Farmer, National Director of CORE, will be held in St. Nicholas Arena. The rally is planned to counter a rally For World Liberation from Communism at Madison Square Garden sponsored by the Young Americans for Freedom, a right wing youth group.

The Boston Area leaders plan to have several busloads of students attended the rally. Student leaders from Harvard, Tufts, Amherst, Boston University, Boston College and other schools met last night to plan full scale participation.

In a statement by Ned Martin, Harvard student and National Treasurer of Federation of College Young Democrats and James McCann, Boston College student and BC Campus ADA Chairman, they gave the reason for their support of the "Stand Up for Democracy" rally:

"Our rally will prove that the overwhelming majority of American students favor and work for sane and realistic policies. Our ideals of democracy, freedom, and the community of man lead us to seek for constructive action that will benefit all.

"We support the right of YAF to hold its rally. We are opposed to the principles and policies espoused by that group.

"We urge all students to join with us and stand up for Democracy."

Japanese Artist's WoodblocksPrints To Be Exhibted

An exhibition of woodblock prints by a distinguished Japanese artist-sculpture, Rokoshu Mizufune, will open Sunday, March 4, in Bartlett Hall.

The exhibition will begin with a coffee hour at 3 p.m. at which time the public is invited to meet the artist. The exhibition, sponsored by the University Art Department will continue through March 18.

Mizufune has exhibited at the Carpenter Galleries of Dartmouth College, at Exeter and will have a one man showing of his works at the Simpson Gallery in New York City around March 17. The Boston Museum of Fine Arts displays one of his select print.

His sculptures and woodblocks have also appeared in numerous Japanese exhibitions.

During his stay here Mizufune commutes to the Putney School and Marlboro College in Vermont once a week where he gives a course in Japanese Woodblock printing.

Mizufune was born in Hiroshima and is a graduate of the Sculpture faculty of the Fine Arts School of Tokyo, now Tokyo University of Fine Arts and Music. He was trained in the traditional conservative style, studying under Harusuka. He has developed a particular style all his own combining a delicate yet strong sense of color with modern abstract form.

UMass Upsets Wildcats For YanCon Crown

Distinguished Visitor Kubitschek To Speak

Issues in inter-American relations will be discussed by former Brazilian president Juscelino Kubitschek in a major lecture to be given next Thursday, March 8, at UMass.

The talk will be given at 8 p.m. in the S.U. Ballroom. Admission will be by free ticket up to the limit of seating capacity with UMass students, who support the program, having first preference. Interested persons are asked to contact the S.U. Lobby Counter March 7 and 8 for tickets.

Dr. Kubitschek will be the first of four important speakers to appear at the University under the student-sponsored Distinguished Visitors Program. Supreme Court Justice William O. Douglas, publisher Bennett Cerf, and writer James Reston will also give lectures.

Graduate of a Brazilian medical school with additional study in European medical centers, Dr. Kubitschek practiced medicine for several years before entering politics. He was successively a member of the Brazilian House of Representatives, mayor of Belo Horizone, and governor of the State of Minas Gerais.

In 1956 he was inaugurated president of the Republic of Brazil. While in office, President Kubitschek launched a program for economic development in 30 basic areas such as electric power, transportation, industry, agriculture and training of tehnicians.

JUSCELINO KUBITSCHEK

His campaign promise of "fifty years of progress in five years" was a guidepost for his entire administration.

In international affairs the President received acclaim for his "Operation Pan America," a plan to promote common interests of Western Hemispheric peoples.

Lectures established under the Distinguished Visitors Program, financed by student funds, are open to the public without charge.

"Gulliver's Travels" Reviewed

Gulliver's Travels was the topic of a speech by Professor M.J.C. Hodgart last Thursday night at 8 p.m. in Bartlett Auditorium.

Professor Hodgart is University Lecturer in English at Cambridge University, and this year is visiting Professor of English at Cornell University.

According to Professor Hodgart, the most moving parts of Gulliver's Travels occur in the second and fourth books. The episodes to which he referred concern Gulliver's parting with a particular inhabitant of a foreign land which he has been visiting.

In book two, "A Voyage to Brobdingnag," Gulliver is saddened by his departure from a child giant to whom he had been entrusted in a land peopled with giants. Book four, "A Voyage to the Country of the Houyhnhnms," has Gulliver saying farewell to a sorrel nag who has befriended him in a land inhabited by rational horses.

Pointing out that in the second book there is more emphasis on a theme of giants than on satire, Hodgart said, "It really is a children's book. He himself (Swift) writes from the point of view of a child, especially in Brobdingnag and in the fourth book."

Extending the audience of Gulliver's Travels, he asserted that "It is not a novel, it is essentially a political and moral tract," and that "It is a book that can be read at a great many levels at the same time."

A difference of opinion was cited between scholars and writers as to whether Jonathan Swift, the author of Gulliver's Travel, was a "misanthrope" or "a good and great man." Professor Hodgart also maintained that scholars disagree among themselves as to the meaning of the fourth book. This disagreement may not have a solution, he said, because there is a question as to whether or not Swift's neurosis had anything to do with what he wrote.

Professor Hodgart is the author of Song in the Works of James Joyce, and has written articles on James Joyce for the Encylopaedia Britannica. Many of his articles have appeared in English and American journals and periodicals.

The lecture was sponsored by the English Department in conjunction with a course in Masterpieces of Western Literature.

UConn Beats Rams To Break Tie; Two Redmen Scoring Records Set

by ALLAN BERMAN '62, Editor-in-Chief

The University of Massachusetts varsity basketball squad enjoyed its biggest night in history Saturday, when all at once they won the Yankee Conference Crown for the first time; got the bid to open the NCAA Regionals at Philadelphia against N.Y.U.; annihilated the UNH Wildcats, 109-62; and set two scoring records.

The Redmen got a big hand from UConn, a team that's been tormenting them all season long. The Huskies upset the URI Rams, 89-83, to break the tie that had existed between the Rams and the Redmen.

NO CONTEST

The Redmen-UNH game was virtually no contest, as the powerful UMass five put on one of its finest displays of offensive and defensive skill to befuddle completely the hapless Wildcats. From the moment Mike Mole stole the opening tapoff and quickly scored the first two points, there was little doubt as to the outcome.

Most of the excitement of the evening came from wondering whether or not the Redmen would break 100, and waiting for the occasional announcements of the UC-URI score. When the final Storrs outcome was announced with 5 minutes left, the game had to be stopped temporarily while pandemonium engulfed the bench and the stands.

FOHLIN, BLACK CLICK

Don Black had an unusually prolific night, scoring 10 points while playing for only a short time. Meanwhile fellow center Charlie Fohlin played what this observer believes to be the finest game of his career as he scored 18 points and was at his defensive best under the boards.

Danny Laakso had a couple of unusual honors during the game. He scored the big hoop that put the Redmen over the 100 mark, and also rang up the two points that broke the all-time UMass scoring record. Previously, the highest any Redmen team had scored was 104 points, 8 years ago against Boston University. Ironically, the B.U. coach at that time was none other than Matt Zunic.

The other record broken Saturday was for the number of field goals scored in a game. The Redmen hit for 45-91 from the floor to break the old mark of 41, set only last year against the same UNH squad.

Brooke To Speak At Young Rep's Club

Mr. Edward W. Brooke, Attorney-at-Law and Chairman of the Boston Finance Commission, will be the guest of the UMass Young Republican Club on Tuesday, March 6, at 8 p.m. in the Commonwealth Room of the S.U. Brooke will speak on "Massachusetts at the Crossroads."

Brooke, a graduate of Howard University and Boston University Law School, has been extremely active in Massachusetts civic affairs. In 1952, the Junior Chamber of Commerce named him "One of Ten Outstanding Young Men of Greater Boston."

For a while he found himself on 16 boards of trustees, including an appointment by the then President Dwight D. Eisenhower to chair the Massachusetts Advisory Committee of the United States Civil Rights Commission. He has served as national judge advocate and state commander of the AMVETS.

In 1960, Mr. Brooke was the Republican candidate for Secretary of State, being the first Negro in our country to run for a state wide office. Starting with 150 to 1 odds against his being elected at nomination time, Brooke, in the final analysis had a very good showing. The reason for his good showing may lie in a campaign quote of his. "People may come to listen to me because they're curious, but then remain because they become interested in what I have to say."

Under the chairmanship of Brooke, the Boston Finance Commission has saved Boston taxpayers substantial sums of money by exposing irregularities and wasteful practices in the city's various departments.

EDWARD BROOKE

Edward Brooke is unusually well qualified to chair such a watchdog committee. In World War II, as an Infantry Captain, he won the Bronze Star for organizing an attack on a German position in Italy. He also served behind enemy lines as an intelligence officer with Italian partisans.

Ten years after being named one of "Boston's outstanding young men," Brooke is still serving Boston and the State by fearlessly and earnestly combating the expensive effects of graft and corruption. The Finance Commission has seen to it that each taxpayer's dollar does ten dimes worth of constructive toil, instead of being paralyzed by inefficiency and dishonesty.

Currently, Mr. Brooke is serving also upon the boards of the New England Hospital, Urban League of Greater Boston, and the Opera Group.

Springfield's Exhibition To No Avail

The president of Springfield College said Saturday that two professors being forced to retire will not be back next year despite student protest.

College officials earlier this week announced that contracts of 67 year-old Dr. Egon Bergel and 66 year-old Prof. Frank Warren would not be renewed because both had passed the mandatory retirement age of 65.

In "protest and sympathy" last Wednesday, the fifteen members of the Springfield Student, newspaper of Springfield College, unanimously resigned. The Student Council met in emergency session Thursday afternoon and passed a recommendation for students to "boycott all classes Friday except those of the two professors."

Arnold Kenseth, John King-Farlow Will Read Poetry

The Reverend Arnold Kenseth, minister of South Congregational Church, Amherst, and a part-time member of the UMass department of English, will read selections of his poetry at the Jones (town) Library on Tuesday, March 6, at 7:30 p.m.

Joining Mr. Kenseth on the program will be John King-Farlow, instructor in philosophy at Amherst College. Refreshments will be served.

Mr. Kenseth, a native of Milton, holds an A.B. from Bates, and M.A. from Harvard Graduate School of Arts and Sciences, and S.T.D. from Harvard Divinity School. For a number of years he taught English and philosophy at Cambridge Junior College, and he was Protestant chaplain at this university from 1947-1949. Since 1949 he has also taught English part time at

Our Cultural Lag

Our nation's struggle with the Communist bloc is a well-known economic, political, and military fact. But a little-known fact is this: the Communist countries spend vast sums of money and time on propaganda to prove we are a nation of "cultureless barbarians."

This propaganda describes the United States as a "cultural desert," a materialistic society more concerned with automobiles and color television than the development and encouragement of the fine arts.

In an article entitled "Government Aid for the Arts," Senator Hubert Humphrey discusses U.S. progress in the arts and emphatically states that "the federal government's record in this area is grossly inadequate."

Humphrey has become the cultural mouthpiece within Congressional sessions many times. Recently Congress passed one of his bills which helped send more than a hundred groups of artists to more than ninety countries. On the domestic scene, Humphrey last year introduced a bill providing that one mill out of every tax dollar be deposited into a special fund in the U.S. treasury and be available to help pay the expenses of the National Symphony, the Corcoran Art Gallery, and other non-profit arts programs.

Indeed, the President and Mrs. Kennedy's interest in culture and the fine arts has been encouraging. The awareness that the federal government should assist in our cultural heritage is growing. This means a beginning of "enlightened government encouragement—financial or otherwise—to the arts," something which has previously existed in practically every country in the world except the United States.

Our Loss

The University was the loser recently when a plane cancellation forced Ladislas Segy to miss his appearance at the Fine Arts Festival. Mr. Segy arrived too late to be able to get to the University from Bradley Field on time for his appearance. He was met at the airport by Carol Veno and Mary Jane Stack, members of Mortar Board, who report that they were able to spend two hours with him after they had lunch.

After speaking with Carol and Mary Jane we feel, as they do, that "it was a distinct disadvantage that the campus didn't have the opportunity of meeting this inspiring person.

"Not only an expert on African art, he is an authority on all art and also an illuminating philosopher, well-versed in a variety of fields, and very anxious to come to the University. After being informed that his talk could not be rescheduled, Mr. Segy's only comment was regret over the fact that he would not be able to speak to the students here, and desire that he might be invited again."

We feel that it would be greatly beneficial to the campus if some organization sponsored Mr. Segy's appearance here, as a speaker on art or philosophy. Information on how to reach him may be gained by contacting any member of Mortar Board.

INCENTIVES — PART FOUR

by ALLAN BERMAN '62
Editor-in-Chief

(This is the fourth in a series of articles dealing with the problem of lack of participation in campus extra-curricular activities. Up until now we have dealt with the problem on other campuses and have seen the solutions employed elsewhere. Today's installment centers on the attitudes extant on our own campus.)

To answer definitely the question of why students aren't participating is a formidable task. Certainly there are a multitude of various reasons, only some of which play a part in the lack of participation of any particular student. We can, however, try to ascertain some of the major reasons—those which are pervasive on the campus and which affect a large number of the student body.

GROWING UNIVERSITY HURTS SELF-CONFIDENCE

Dan Melley '55, past president of the Interfraternity Council and presently Assistant to the Director of the University's News Office, has been connected with UMass for a while and has had a chance to observe trends as a student and as a member of the administration, as the campus has grown. He believes that the main problem is a lack of self-confidence on the part of entering freshmen. High school leaders come here to a vastly larger community, one in which they think their talents will be inadequate. These feelings of inadequacy and insignificance last for about two years, until the student finally has learned his way around campus and has made many acquaintances.

But by the time the feeling departs, perhaps as late as the junior year, the pattern has been set. Very few upperclassmen want to break into an organization for the first time so late in their careers.

Melley isn't alone in his ideas. Many of the present campus student leaders agree with him. As a method of checking this hypothesis we asked many freshmen why they didn't want to join extracurricular activities. Most of the replies, surprisingly enough, didn't have anything to do with lack of time or extraordinary requirements of studies. The predominant reason for not joining was that these freshmen didn't think they would have what it takes to be a successful senator, announcer, reporter, or whatever it may be.

The ironic truth of the situation is that while most campus organizations are suffering from a lack of participation, freshmen and sophomores aren't joining anything because they believe that in a University of this size competition would be too stiff, and that they would never be accepted. There's no mention of a desire for salary, no clamor for credit—only widespread, deeply-rooted misconceptions of the abilities needed to be successful in a campus position of leadership.

MONEY ISN'T THE ANSWER

Certainly salaries or course credit will not solve the problem. If anything, they will only complicate it. For the great majority of students who lack self-confidence, the possibility of obtaining a salaried or credited student position will seem even more difficult than it does now.

Several of the editors quoted earlier in this series have flatly stated that THE INSTITUTION OF SALARIES FOR STUDENT LEADERS DID NOT ADD SIGNIFICANTLY TO THE NUMBER OF STUDENTS INTERESTED IN PARTICIPATION. Some of them even noted a general decline in the moral of activity groups, because of the tendency of members to think of the activity as a job and to perform their duties with a lack of real interest.

As a general consensus, then, the editors seemed to feel that either salaries or course credit seemed to defeat the actual purpose of extra-curricular activities. Instead of creating larger, more dynamic organizations, external incentives stultified interest and emasculated activities of all enjoyment. Perhaps the newspapers were published, perhaps the senates convened and the radio stations went on the air, but they did so with a different flavor. No longer were student activities things to be done because of interest or enjoyment; they became "jobs" or "just another course"—things that were done only if a student needed extra pocket money or desired a "gut A." No longer were interest and enjoyment the by-products of these organizations: instead, extracurricular activities became "strictly business propositions."

CHANGES NEEDED ON THREE FRONTS

Instead of salaries or credit, what is needed to thwart student misconceptions and increase participation are drastic changes in three areas: in the faculty and administration attitudes toward extracurricular activities; in the activities themselves, which must change to meet the changing needs of students on a large campus; and, finally, in the students themselves, who must be made to realize that extracurricular activities on a large campus are not open only to a select few.

There are definite ways in which the above three changes can take place. In the last article of this series we will see what has been done elsewhere, and will learn about several new programs developing on our own campus which promise to result in changed attitudes and abilities.

Art Of Bubble Blowing

The President of the United States has decided that we must test in the atmosphere. We realize how difficult it must have been to decide this. We realize that he had to consider how many human beings would die because of these tests. We realize that he had to consider the number of human beings who would be born deformed because of these tests. We realize that he had to consider the number of people who would contract leukemia and cancer because of these tests.

Apparently, the President thought that these tests are necessitated by our national security. Apparently he feels that we must develop the capacity for "overkill." Although he would be the first to admit that we have enough bombs to destroy the Soviet Union, he must feel that we must develop lighter and cheaper bombs.

Or perhaps he has a "fantastic new weapon" in mind. Perhaps he has his mind on the neutron bomb. Needless to say, it does appear more advantageous to destroy the people while we save their property.

But while we are testing, what are the Russians to do? The President must feel that they will rest upon what they already have. After all, if they try to go ahead or to catch up, they too will be guilty of contaminating the atmosphere. And we all know that they would hesitate before they do that. Yes, the President must have great faith in the Soviets!

But what if they do try to catch up? Are we to be left behind? Certainly not! We must go ahead! But then again, so must they! It's almost like two little girls who try to outdo each other with bubble-gum.

But do nations behave like children? Of course not! Nations are mature, rational, sophisticated.

Long live mature, rational, and sophisticated nations! Then again, some nations die quicker than little girls with bubble-gum. But to some nations, bubble-gum tastes good. Long live little girls with bubble-gum!

Language Look

To The Editors:

There is one thing, in my opinion, that this and many other colleges seriously lack: a department of Oriental languages. In this modern world, the Chinese language is rapidly becoming more and more important. More people speak Chinese than any other language in the world.

I, among others, I'm sure, happen to have a very keen interest in the Chinese, and therefore I would like to ask why this university couldn't offer a course in their language — on an experimental basis, at least. Our Chinese graduate students, I'm sure (some sixteen in number) are fully capable of teaching such a course. I recall reading, incidentally, in a recent article in the Collegian that Chinese is now being taught in the Boston area at the high school level.

Our college library does not have a single book on the subject (nor do most libraries), so I took the liberty to compile a list of books, some of which the library might find of value, and some of which might be useful in teaching a course in the Chinese language. I sent this list to Dean Hunsberger in hopes that he will act on it. A course in Chinese is just what we need, and I would be among the first to sign up for it.

Land-Grant Leader Turner To Be Honored By UMass

A Massachusetts native son whose ideas spurred the founding of America's Land-Grant colleges and universities will be honored this spring in special ceremonies in his home town.

Jonathan Baldwin Turner (1805-1899), who believed that higher education should be made available to "All men of all classes" will be the object of commemorative exercises sponsored jointly by the town of Templeton and the University of Massachusetts, a Land-Grant institution.

The Turner Day observance will be held at the new Narragansett Regional High School in Templeton on Sunday, May 6. Main speaker will be Dr. David D. Henry, president of the University of Illinois and a leading spokesman for the Land-Grant movement in modern American society.

Turner Day has been planned as a part of the 200th anniversary program of the town of Templeton and the 100th anniversary observance of the University of Massachusetts.

The UMass delegation at the event will be headed by Dr. John W. Lederle, president of the University, and Dr. Frank L. Boyden, chairman of the institution's board of trustees.

Turner unveiled his "Plan for a State University for the Industrial Classes" before a teachers' institute in 1850. His plan called for using the money that Illinios had received from the Federal government land sales to endow a state university in Illinios. Further, he stated, "We need a University for the Industrial classes in each of the states . . ."

The Morrill Land-Grant Act was passed by Congress in 1862, and signed by President Lincoln on July 2 of that year. It provided for a grant of 30,000 acres of Federal land to be apportioned to each member of Congress. The income from the sale was intended to provide an endowment for the continuing support of the institutions.

After passage of the Morrill Act, Turner continued writing and lecturing in an effort to found an institution in Illinois under the provisions of the Land-Grant Act. He finally saw the forerunner of the University of Illinois come into being in 1870, and he laid the cornerstone for its first building.

There are two land-grant institutions in Massachusetts: The University of Massachusetts in Amherst, and the Massachusetts Institute of Technology in Cambridge.

On Campus with Max Shulman

UNITED WE STAND

The entire academic world is agog over the success of the Associated Colleges Plan—ACP, for short. I mean, you go to any campus in the country these days and you will see students and faculty dancing on the green, blowing penny whistles, grabbing each other by the elbows and yelling, "About that ACP, Charley—like wow!"

And who can blame them? The ACP is a plan not only simply brilliant, but also brilliantly simple. All it is, is a loose regional federation of small colleges. Let's say, for example, that in a given region we have a group of small colleges, each with its own academic specialty. Small College No. 1, let's say, has a fine language department; Small College No. 2, let's say, has a fine science department; No. 3 has a fine music department; etc., etc.

Well sir, under the ACP these various colleges federate. A student in any one of the colleges can take courses in the specialty of any of the other colleges and—here's the beauty part!—he will receive credit for the course at his home college. Thus he enjoys all the advantages of a big university without losing the comfy coziness of a small college!

Well sir, you can see what a good idea the ACP is. I respectfully submit, however, that just because a thing is good is no reason not to try to make it better. Like, for instance, Marlboro Cigarettes. Marlboros were good from the very beginning, and people found out quickly and sales zoomed. But did the makers of Marlboro say, "Okay, we've got it made. Let's relax"? Well sir, if that's what you think, you don't know the makers! They did not relax. They took their good Marlboros and kept improving them. They improved the filter, improved the blend, improved the pack. They researched and developed tirelessly, until today Marlboro is just about the most admirable cigarette you can put a match to. There are, in fact, some people who find Marlboros so admirable they can't bear to put a match to them. They just sit with a single Marlboro in hand and admire it for ten, twelve years on end. The makers of Marlboro are of course deeply touched by this—except for E. Rennie Sigafoos, the sales manager.

But I digress. The ACP, I say, is good but it can be better. Why should the plan be confined to small colleges? Why should it be confined to a limited region? Why not include all colleges and universities, big and small, wherever they are?

Let's start such a federation. Let's call it the "Bigger Associated Colleges To Encourage Richer Intellectual Activity"—BACTERIA, for short!

There are still a few bugs in BACTERIA

What a bright new world BACTERIA opens up. Take, for example, a typical college student—Hunrath Sigafoos (son, incidentally, of the Marlboro sales manager). Hunrath, a bright lad, is currently majoring in burley at the University of Kentucky. Under the BACTERIA plan, Hunrath could stay at Kentucky, where he has made many friends, but at the same time broaden his vistas by taking a course in constitutional law at Harvard, a course in physics at Caltech, a course in frostbite at Minnesota and a course in poi at Hawaii!

I admit there are still a few bugs in BACTERIA. How, for instance, could Hunrath attend a 9 o'clock class at Harvard, a 10 o'clock class at Hawaii, an 11 o'clock class at Minnesota, and still keep his lunch date at Kentucky? It would be idle to deny that this is a tricky problem, but I have no doubt American ingenuity will carry the day. Always remember how they laughed at Edison and Fulton—and particularly at Walter Claviele who invented the collarbone.

© 1962 Max Shulman

Three cheers for American ingenuity, which gave us the ACP, the collarbone and MGM . . . that's the Mighty Good Makin's you get in Marlboro, the filter cigarette with the unfiltered taste. Settle back and enjoy one. You get a lot to like.

Historian Defends Education System Leading To Ph.D.

A new defense of the educational program leading to the Ph.D. degree has been made by Dr. Richard Birdsall, a historian who holds his doctoral degree from Columbia University.

Attacking critics who claim that graduate schools turn out research specialists instead of good teachers with broad cultural backgrounds, Dr. Birdsall declares that the teacher engaged in research is often better able to communicate the excitement of his pursuit of a new interpretation of new materials. And Dr. Birdsall adds that the teacher-researcher can best identify himself with his students, for both the teacher-researcher and student become inteilectual adventurers engaged in self-education.

In an article in a recent issue of the Columbia University Forum, Dr. Birdsall, an assistant professor of history at Connecticut College, primarily directs his attack against modern critics of the doctoral program, particularly Earl J. McGrath, former U.S. Commissioner of Education.

In 1959, McGrath in his book, "The Graduate School and the Decline of Liberal Education," contended that graduate schools, by an excessive emphasis upon research, neglect their main function of producing teachers for liberal arts colleges. He argued that the teachers turned out by these graduate schools are unable to impart to their teaching any "common body of knowledge, intellectual procedures or philosophic wholeness."

In answering these charges, Dr. Birdsall, in his article entitled "Philosophiae Doctor," maintains that the mastery of a small area of knowledge is essential for the teacher because, in the modern world, there are "'numerous half-seeings' but no general vision, no common faith to integrate our education of youth."

The specialist, according to Dr. Birdsall, is the only man who can work his way through the "slush of opinion" to plant his feet on the ground, even if that plot of ground is narrow. He, therefore, writes that "the experience of coming to grips at first hand with a small part of man's knowledge, a facing of facts, is a psychological necessity for the man who would stand up to face a class in a world where a knowledge of the classics or of Christian theology no longer passes as moral credentials."

Dr. Birdsall indicates that the existentialist philosophers, who ask "great questions," soon lapse into pure irrationality. But he says that their dictum, "truth is subjectivity," is an idea psychologically in sympathy with the specialized work of the modern teacher-researcher.

Brown Univ. Tells Fallout Shelter Plans

Dr. Barnaby C. Keeney, president of Brown University, announced a fallout shelter program for the university Thursday.

He said the university was adopting the program because of its "responsibility to the students, to the nation, and to mankind to help preserve as many as possible of the able people concentrated here."

The Brown president thus stood in opposition to 85 members of the Brown faculty who signed a newspaper advertisement two weeks ago denouncing a national fallout shelter program.

The advertisement also signed by faculty members from University of Rhode Island, the Rhode Island School of Design, Rhode Island College and Providence College declared that a fallout shelter program is not feasible and is harmful to national security.

UM To Participate In Intercollegiate Bridge Tourney

UMass will be one of the more than 200 colleges, universities and junior colleges throughout the country which will participate in the 1962 National Intercollegiate Bridge Tournament.

The game will be played Monday evening, March 5, starting at 7:00 in the S.U. All pairs interested in seeing what the national prepared hands are like, are welcome.

The hands will be judged by William Root, a contract bridge authority, and Charles Goren, noted bridge expert.

In all, some 2,700 students representing 175 colleges located in 48 states, the District of Columbia and Canada, participated in the tournament last year.

The National Intercollegiate Bridge Tournament Committee, a part of the Games Committee or the Association of College Unions, is interested in developing contract bridge as an interesting supplement to the collegiate social program. The current competition is the 13th annual renewal of the tournament.

of the student body, staged what was called an unprecedented tribute to Professors Bergel and Warren when they boycotted all classes Friday except the 10 a.m. sociology classs of Professor Bergel. Professor Warren, who teaches history and art, had no classes scheduled, but sat in on Prof. Bergel's lecture.

Dr. Bergel later confessed that he was "very pleased" and added that he hoped he could stay at Springfield College.

Pres. Glenn A. Olds praised students Friday for their "orderly and thoughtful tribute." He called the demonstration "a good thing in principle" and expressed pride that the student body lent what many described as great dignity to the mass attendance of Dr. Bergel's class, which was held in the field house by special arrangements.

Dr. Olds said he was a "little embarrassed" because there was no demonstration in support of two other professors who are retiring this year. He said the retirement policy was fixed "in order to avoid a popularity contest" anytime a professor reached retirement age.

Awards Offered For Papers On Merchandising

Undergraduate and graduate students at UMass are invited to participate in the award program of the Automatic Retailers of America Educational Foundation.

The Foundation will grant twelve $1000 awards and five $200 awards for papers written on the general topic of automatic merchandising. Matching scholarship grants will be made to the schools of the students receiving awards. These scholarship grants will be used for Automatic Retailers of America Educational Foundation Scholarship Awards to be given at the discretion of recipient institutions.

Participating students have a free choice of subjects within the category of automatic merchandising, i.e. automatic vending.

Varsity Track Squad Pummels New Hampshire Team 98½-14½

by ABE SHEINKER '62

The UMass varsity track team finished its indoor season with a 3-1 record by burying New Hampshire, 98½-14½, at the Cage on Wednesday. The Redmen did a good wrecking job on three school records, winning every event.

Probably the most outstanding UMass running mark in recent years was set by sophomore Bob Brouillet. The "Phillipston Flash" ground out the two mile run in 9:28, breaking the UMass record of 9:34 held by "Squeeky" Horn (1956) and the Cage record of 9:30 held by Lew Steiglitz of UConn ('56). Breaking Steiglitz' record is significant since he has become one of the nation's top distance men with several international victories including the Maccabiah Games last year. Brouillet, who saved himself by not running the mile, lapped the entire field of runners.

Dave Balch also set an outstanding mark in winning the mile with a time of 4:23.9. This edged his standard of 4:24.5 set last year. Balch also finished well ahead of the field.

The third record set in the runaway meet was by Jim Lumley, who pole vaulted 12'7", edging the previous school mark of 12' 6" which was recorded by Fred Law in 1959. Jim Bradley tied the UMass record in the 40-yard low hurdles, winning in 5.3 seconds.

Ken O'Brien, in an attempt to lower his own record of 2:16.0 in the 1000, did not run the 600, but had no one to push him in his race and just missed with 2:16.7. Other track victories were turned in by Loren Flagg in the dash, John Harrington in the high hurdles, and Ron Young in the 600.

Dick Ward was unable to approach his record in the 35-lb. weight throw because of the prevailing conditions on Alumni Field. Groundskeeper Joe Paradise had not prepared the throwing circle and the contestants had difficulty with their footing on the slippery surface, with one errant weight just missing the heads of some nearby athletes. Ward managed a credible 50'9" on "McGuirk's Playground," which resembled a swamp.

The other field event victories went to George Giddings with a 43'9" shotput, edging Ward by five inches, Al Garsys with a 20' 9 3/4" broad jump, and Garsys, Ward and Cassidy in the high jump at 5'4", as the trio did not try going higher. The UMass mile relay quartet of Craig Erickson, Bob Carpenter, Foxy Monteiro, and Bruce Thompson won their event in a good 3:38.4.

FROSH MEET CLOSER

The UMass freshmen won their meet 66-47 and this one was competitive. The Wildcat frosh won six of the 13 events.

Burt Kline again starred for the Redmen by winning both hurdles events and taking second in the high jump. This 5'6" athlete nearly scored his third triple win of the season as he high jumped 5'9" and lost by one inch, ed by Dave Sadowski and Phil Read, who tied for first in the pole vault at 12 feet, and by Gus Anagnostopoulos, who managed a 46'8 1/2" heave with the 35-lb. weight despite the poor conditions outdoors.

Other good marks were record-

Mass. Hockey Squad Ends Season With Record Mark

The UMass hockey team has continued to climb in rating during the past season. Entering this year's slate with a pessemistic outlook on the squad's chances, UMass coach Steve Kosakowski saw his team skate its way to its most successful (8-10) season, and break four records en-route.

Behind the fine playing of Jim Ellingwood, Bob Glew, and Charlie Glew, the Redmen went far beyond pre-season expectations. The goal-tending of Frank Cesario, who saw little action during the past two seasons, yet averaged over 33 saves per game, was a vital factor in the squad's success.

Athletes Are Students

Although there are many people on campus who would like to think and believe differently, the present athlete who represents the University of Massachusetts in our broad intercollegiate program does above average work in the classroom.

An analysis of the last semester grades of eighteen captains of this year's UMass squads elected by their teammates, indicates that these student-athletes compiled an average quality point average of 2.75. Furthermore, seven of these captains (or 39%) compiled quality point averages of better than 3.0 to qualify them for academic honors.

Some of the academicians in schools of higher learning contend that although some of the athletes are smart, isn't it quite possible that they would do even better if they spent a little more time with their books instead of on the practice field?

A study of the grades of football players at Albion (Mich.) College during the past seven years indicates that upon comparing their first and second semester grades, it has been found that players scored .4 higher in their grades during football season, and Coach Morly Fraser attributes this revealing fact to the following three reasons. (1) During the season a player must budget his time and not procrastinate in study or work habits. (2) There's a close linkage between physical and mental alertness and health. When a youngster's body is in tune, his mind is also sharper leading to better grades. (3) Being out for a sport gives a young man something to look forward to each week, furnishing that extra little lift that is so important in mental alertness.

How would this Albion College theory work on our campus someone might ask? Well using our fall captains (as an example) John McCormick and Vin Caputo (football), David Amundsen (soccer), and David Balch and Dick Blomstrom (cross country) compiled an average quality point index of 3.0 for the last semester while they were leading their respective squad: — some interesting statistics for those who claim that participation in athletics is detrimental to the academic performances of athletes.

UM Squad Set To Meet NYU In NCAA Regional Playoffs

TWITCHELL HOT

Roger Twitchell was again high scorer, hitting for 22 points and ending the regular season with 407 points, a new UMass record for a sophomore.

After the Redmen had opened up a 35 point lead, coach Zunic started to empty the bench. However the alternates had no trouble keeping up the torrid pace. The two Johnsons, Mike and Bob, scored on some pretty plays, but the eye-catcher of the night, and probably of the year, was an amazing hook-shot from deep in the corner by Cliff Bullock.

The Redmen looked invincible against the Wildcats, and undoubtedly proved that they belong in the top spot of the Conference.

DRIBBLING AROUND

Even though the Redmen were at their best, they were assisted considerably by the ineptness of the UNH squad. Towards the end of the game it sort of looked like the Celtics playing Kalamazoo High School . . . .Soph sub Eliot Gventer took the opportunity of the scoring binge to tally his first two points of the season . . . . It's ironical that a UConn victory should have given UMass the championship, seeing as it was the same Connecticut squad that dumped the Redmen twice this season, putting them in a tie in the first place.

STILL DRIBBLING

Coach Zunic was bubbling with excitement after the players carried him off the court at the close of the game. He gave the players the weekend off for their fine performance. "No practice until 4:00 Tuesday," he said, "and keep the celebratin' moderate."

The action was rather flighty Saturday night as the UMass independent champs, the Flicks, downed UNH's Theta Chi Fraternity.

UMass Intramural Champs Defeat Theta Chi Of UNH

Led by captain Don Tremblay, the independent Flicks, champions of the UMass intramural basketball competition, downed the visiting University of New Hampshire champions, Theta Chi fraternity, 80-72 in the prelim. to Saturday's varsity contest.

Tremlbay was high man for the Flicks with 31 points to his credit during the contest, which saw the host squad push off to a quick 11 point lead early in the game, never to lose the commanding position.

Theta Chi proved to be a strong team, and a good representative from the usually strong UNH intramural system, a system which contains only 16 teams to UMass' 60.

The UNH crew bounced back to within two points of their opponents at the half-time buzzer, but the third quarter saw the Flicks move out to a 20 point margin, an edge to be narrowed only in the final stanza when captain Tremblay cleared his bench.

An interesting sidelight was the fact that Trembly was playing against an old team-mate of his from Lawrence Central, winners of the New England Catholic Regional tournament in Tremblay last year.

Dick Blomstrom won the free throw contest, downing challenger Walter Crotty.

Surveys Show A Trend Towards Electric Shaving Among College Students

Two recent surveys of the shaving habits of American college students have produced some "electrifying" results.

One study, the 1961 American College Panel survey, showed that 64.6 percent of college men used electric shavers. By comparison, a 1953 survey showed electric shavers used by only 52 percent of college men.

Translated into numbers, these figures reflect an increase in collegiate electric shaver users from 801,000 to 1,650,000 in the past eight years.

The second study, conducted by the Youth Research Institute, showed that 51.5 percent of the students surveyed shaved electrically. The study also showed that Remington was the most popular electric shaver, used by 35.8 percent of the students questioned.

Students sampled in the Youth Research Institute survey were selected at random from every geographical area in the United States. Seventy-eight schools were involved in the survey.

One of the questions asked in this survey was, "What is your biggest shaving problem?" Of the male students who did not use electric shavers, the greatest problem reported was that of irritation, cuts and nicks. Of those who did use an electric shaver, the problem of irritation, cuts and nicks was the least registered complaint (1.4%).

Researchers have found that the combination of closest shave with the least irritating skin effect is provided by electric shavers with adjustable roller combs, exclusively found on Remington shavers. With these combs, the shaver causes the valleys in which the hair grows to assume the same level as the surrounding skin area. This provides a smoother, less irritating shave.

The Youth study also indicated that there is a definite trend towards the giving of electric shavers as gifts, especially on such occasions as Father's Day, Graduation Day, birthdays and Christmas. A good many of the students questioned reported that they have received their electric shavers as gifts.

Athletics: How Do We Stand?

PART III

by JIM TRELEASE '63

The Student Body, the last of the three campus powers, has displayed an attitude toward athletics which, in the light of a sudden change in the program, is understandable but not condonable. Their attitude might be described as striving to understand this new kind of athletics while still retaining some rather "bush" characteristics.

It is only in the last year that the "animal" outlook toward athletes has faded from the campus mind. Instead, the students now welcome and enjoy the company of their sports stars. Newcomers Pete Bernard and Roger Twitchell have been adopted quite evidently to the hearts of basketball fans. There is a new attitude here which definitely wants someone to adopt and be proud of and identify with. This generation thrives on Oscar Robertsons and Jerry Lucases. It is pretty easy money to bet that the new Redman football quarterback next year will be adopted in a similarly warm fashion.

But along with this attitude, there is a lack of confidence in the teams. The premature exodus of Chuck Studley certainly fanned the flames of insecurity here. Many students expected Vic Fusia to leave us. Why? Because they think we are being used as a stepping stone by coaches who want bigger and better jobs. This attitude hurts the school. Fusia left a lifetime job with a Bowl team and Zunic left a safe spot with a team he had just led to the NCAA tourney the year before—these two coaches will both vouch for the fact that UMass is not being used by them as a stepping stone. More than a stone, UMass is becoming a rock. The lack of student confidence is evident also in the fact that when two athletes recently left the University for scholastic reasons, students were quick to proclaim. one had registered at Cincinnati and the other at Providence. Neither was true. When Zunic was losing earlier this year, they had him on the way out of his job. Now that he is back winning, they have him on his way to Syracuse. These rumors are typical of professional sports and newspaper columnists but not of a college campus. Such an attitude shows a lack of security, understanding, and pride.

Council Chambers Of S.U. Missing University Seal

Not to be outdone by Northampton, which has been agog recently over a missing United Nations flag, Amherst, too, has its mysteries. One of them is the great seal disappearance.

UMass campus cops are on the lookout for the missing seal—which has no whiskers and definitely isn't performing — after it was reported to have disappeared from the council chamber of the S.U.

The university seal, made of composition and described as about 2½ feet in diameter, was originally located in the UMass news office, and had been placed in the council chamber several years ago. It disappeared about three weeks ago.

Wagner To Establish Institute In Austria

Wagner College has announced plans to establish a junior year institute in Bregenz, Austria. The program will be initiated, the Staten Island college said, to afford a limited number of advanced undergraduate students the opportunity to study abroad for an academic year.

Plans call for the institute, under the direction of Dr. Gaspard Pinette, head of the language department at Wagner, to begin operations next September. Enrollment at the extension will not be limited to Wagner students.

Wagner officials stated that the courses to be offered will be in the humanities, social sciences and fine arts. Such courses as German language and literature; French language and literature; English literature; European, Medieval and Modern history; art history; philosophy, economics and music will be part of the curriculum.

The courses, other than the langauge courses, will be taught in English by European professors, Dr. Pinette said. Each student will be required to carry an academic load of 15 credits a semester, comparable to American requirements, he added.

Bregenz lies at the shore of the Lake of Constance and at the foot of the Arlberg Alps. Germany and Switzerland are only a few miles away. "Cities such as Zurich, St. Gallen, Innsbruck, Munich and Stutgart are so easily reached that it is possible to take advantage of their cultural events," Dr. Pinette said. "Bregenz itself," he added, "has a municipal theatre showing both classical and modern plays and the same is true of Lindau which is less than 10 miles in distance from Bregenz.

"The richest cultural areas of all Europe, the Rhine Valley at the foot of the Alps, surrounds Bregenz and should give our American students an unparalleled opportunity to become acquainted with the most ancient as well as the most modern manifestations of European civilization."

Students will be urged to take full advantage of the skiing and other winter sports activities which will be offered to them under the guidance of Austrian instructors.

Dr. Pinette stated that he preferred a small community such as Bregenz as the site of the institute because students will be able to make close contact with the people of the country.

"Many college European programs merely turn their students loose at a large university in a strange city leaving the individual to shift for himself," he said. "The Wagner institute will feature small classes in which the students are dealt with personally."

Dr. Pinette, in Bregenz last summer to lay the groundwork for the project, made arrangements with civic officials to use one of the local buildings, the Palace Turn-taxis, for classroom space. The students will live and eat in one of the hotels in Bregenz.

According to Dr. Pinette, the cost of the year abroad will be $1,995.00, which will cover transportation from New York to Europe and return, room and board, and tuition.

For further information, write to Dr. Gaspard L. Pinette, Bregenz Institute, Wagner College, Staten Island 1, New York.

Legislators Given Welcome At UMass

In a follow-up invitation to the formal Legislators' Day of last fall, several Western Massachusetts legislators visited UMass Saturday to see the campus in the more informal light of the Redmen championship basketball game.

The program also included a dinner for the legislators at the S.U. Members of the faculty and administration present were: President John W. Lederle; Dean of Students William Field; Gerald Grady, Business Manager of UMass; Warren McGuirk, Director of Men's Athletics; William O'Hare, Director of the Bureau of Government Research; and Professor George Goodwin of the Government Department.

Lederle's comment on the visit of the Legislators was, "We welcome the legislators on our campus and hope they come often, for we are very proud of our University and what the General Court has made possible here in Amherst. It was a great night, particularly because we won the Yankee Conference Championship."

Special Committee Recommends State Med. School For UMass

A special legislative committee, set up to investigate the need for a state medical school, has recently reported its recommendation of a four-year state medical school as part of UMass.

Commission's Findings

Included in the commission's findings were these factors: 1. Not enough young men are being trained to meet the state's medical needs. 2. The population of the state is increasing four times as fast as the supply of doctors. 3. Citizens of Massachusetts are demanding more care as a result of increased membership in health insurance programs. 4. Sixty-five per cent of the students in the Medical Schools of Harvard, Tufts, and Boston University, are from out-of-state.

Control by UMass

The unanimous report of the special committee calls for a state-supported, four-year medical school, controlled by UMass trustees with the commissioners of public and mental health. The choice for a site for the medical school (between Boston, Springfield, and Worcester), should be made by a dean (to be hired immediately) and UMass trustees.

Cost of the school, which would be attached to an existing general hospital, is $10,000,000 to $12,000,000, according to Health Commissioner Alfred Frechette and the recess commission head Maurice Donahue, senator from Holyoke. The actual cost of the facilitty would be reduced by a quarter to a third with federal aid, Frechette explained.

Donahue stated that the first task after passage of the School Bill would be the choice of a dean.

The opening of the school would be expected in 1964 or by the fall of 1965.

The report of the special committee shows that 40 per cent of the doctors in the state are in Boston, which has fifteen per cent of the state population. In a fifteen-mile radius of Boston are 75 per cent of the physicians and 50 per cent of the state population.

Sen. Fonseca Calls Meeting On Autonomy

Senator Mary L. Fonseca (D-Fall River), chairman of the legislative committee on education, has announced that her committee will hold a public hearing on measures to provide fiscal autonomy for the University and the state teachers colleges on Monday, March 12, and a bill calling for the establishment of a state-financed medical college on Wednesday, March 14.

"Heymakers" Entertain At Folk Festival

This past weekend the University Square Dance Club hosted the 9th Intercollegiate Folk Festival.

The exhibitions on Saturday afternoon ranged from Israeli dances performed by the Brooklyn College Folk Dance Club, to the folk dances of The Durham Reelers from the University of New Hampshire, Northeastern College, and Danbury State College, to the square dances of the UMass group, the "Heymakers."

The evening dance was well attended, not only by the college groups, but also by members of adult square dance organizations from all over the Connecticut Valley.

The weekend was considered a financial and social success, and because of the rapid growth of the Festival, a federation is forming, with a central committee composed of a member from each of the three colleges of Brooklyn, New Hampshire, and UMass. The federation will keep records of the festivals and act as an advisory board to colleges holding the festivals.

H.S. Students To Exhibit At UMass Fair

Young scientists from 25 high schools in four western Massachusetts counties will compete in the annual UMass Regional Science Fair, Sunday, April 8. The Science Fair wil be held in the University Student Union from 11 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Students in grades 10-12, participating in local science fairs in March, will be selected to represent their schools at the University. Cash prizes, donated by generous industrial, civic, scientific and patriotic organizations and local newspapers, will be awarded for the best entries.

Cups and plaques, given by the University, will be presented to the top 15 winners. All exhibitors will be given certificates in recognition of their participation.

Prizewinners at the Regional Science Fair will have a chance to go on to competition on state, New England and national levels.

Objectives of the Science Fair are to: encourage greater interest in science; develop more public awareness of modern science and technology; recognize qualified student scientists; promote closer ties between University and high school faculties for the benefit of future scientists and engineers.

Arthur H. Winer, senior art major at UMass, poses with two of his works currently being shown in his one-man presentation at the Jones Library. The sculpture, titled "A Dancer," is made of welded steel, and was done in April 1961. The painting, "untitled," is oil on wood, finished in August 1961.

Outstanding Art Exhibits On Display

Two art shows are presently being held in conjunction with the university.

One is the first one-man art show of Arthur H. Winer, a senior art major at UMass. Winer is presenting fifteen paintings, two water colors, two drawings, and four sculptures. He has been awarded several prizes for his works in different showings. The show will be at the Jones Library for the month of March.

The other show is being held in the lobby of Bartlett Hall, where the wood-cut block prints of Japanese artist R. Mizufune are on exhibition. Sponsored by the UMass art department, Mizufune will present his works until March 18.

World University Service

This coming Monday, March 12, marks the opening of the 1962 Campus Chest drive. At that time students will be able to vote for their choice of Miss Campus Chest of 1962. Pictures of the contestants, each Fraternity being represented, and ballots will be available in the Student Union Lobby. Each vote must be accompanied by a donation of any amount. The money received will become part of the Campus Chest to be used for the University of Massachusetts Scholarship Fund and the World University Services.

The World University Services (WUS), with national committees in forty countries, has been concerned with higher education on an international basis since World War I. In this country the problem of the individual has been one of financing his education and, although this entails some hardship, it is usually accomplished without too much deprivation. In many countries, however, this is only one of many problems. Such problems as acquiring the necessary books, even with the money on hand; finding adequate shelter, some type of room, even a small one; having enough to eat so that energies can be used for learning instead of being wasted in an ever constant meal-to-meal search for food.

TO MAKE SUBSISTENCE POSSIBLE

This is what WUS has been concerned with—making it possible for students to subsist at a level that is at least a minimum necessary to accomplish his purposes. The writer of this article spent a year in Korea and to see the educational conditions that exist there is to be very appreciative of the American standard of living and education. For all of the Korean student's willingness to endure hardship in order to obtain an education it becomes an almost unsurmountable barrier when he is faced by all of these problems together.

ONLY WITH HELP FROM OTHERS

These stark and defeating problems exist in other countries also and it is only through the help of other people, especially those who share the same universal goals, such people as American students who can afford to give some amount of money, that the worldwide progress of mankind through education will continue to grow.

Organizations such as B'nai B'rith Hillel Foundations at American Universities, the National Newman Club Federation, the National Student Christian Federation, the National Student Councils of the YMCA and the YWCA, and the United States National Student Association sponsor WUS in this country, but this still leaves room for the individual to take a part in helping a student in a foreign land.

INCENTIVES — PART FIVE

by ALLAN BERMAN '62, Editor-in-Chief

(This is the last in the series. In it we shall be concerned with the three areas in which changes are needed so that increased extra-curricular participation will result.)

I. CHANGE IN FACULTY ATTITUDE

The tendency for many members of faculty and administration to downgrade the value of extra-curricular activities is one of the main reasons for the lack of support of these activities by students.

As soon as freshmen hit campus, the first thing they are told is not to join anything for a semester. All that they should do is study, study and study some more. Extracurricular activities are harmful to grades and should be avoided. So, when students inevitably find that they have several hours per week that they do not spend studying, they do not think of joining extracurricular activities. Instead, they sit for hours on end in the Hatch, congregate in the head for bull sessions, and waste time in other non-constructive ways. As soon as anyone suggests that they join an organized group, the conditioned answer is that they have "no time."

Besides the fact that students are led into believing that Hatch hanging is all right first semester but that extracurricular activities aren't, they also have their self-confidence destroyed by administration and faculty members who insist that no student has enough time to study adequately and still join activities.

In addition, the activities themselves are often berated by faculty. It is not unusual to hear a supposedly mature and scholarly professor speak in a very immature and unsophisticated manner about the values of the extra-curriculum.

This attitude must change, or else the University will be producing graduates who are dangerously lacking in vital areas of education. All the book-learning in the world cannot teach students how to act responsibly in positions of leadership.

Faculty members would be doing much more of a service if, instead of parading the virtues of knowledge and the vices of extracurricular organizations, they tried to instill confidence in their students. Greater support of activities by the faculty, and a greater appreciation of their value to students, is one of the first steps necessary for increasing participation.

II. CHANGES IN THE ACTIVITES

In this section we will be quoting freely from a letter written in answer to our questionnaire by John Roberts, editor of the University of Michigan Daily. It is his opinion that the activities themselves must provide stimulus and incentive. "Today's students are more intelligent than those of the past, more serious-minded, and under considerably more academic pressure. They will not participate in childish and insipid activities, even if there is a monetary incentive.

"The solution is not to rail at their lack of spirit, but to recast the style and philosophy of the activities . . . Only if the student can see that he is making a real contribution to the intellectual tone of his community, and to his own education in life, will he make the enormous sacrifices of time and study which participation in activities requires."

Activities, then, must upgrade their scope. They must not be content merely to muddle along in bare existence, complaining that neither students nor administration cares about them. They must take steps themselves to become powerful organizations, organizations that have an effect on the thoughts and actions of the campus and the community. It is up to present leaders to see that this conversion takes place, and to make sure that those who follow in their footsteps will continue in the drive to make the organizations, no matter how big or small, meaningful forces in the operation of the University.

"Don't just tinker with the present situation—overhaul it."

III. CHANGES IN STUDENT ATTITUDES

In order to get freshmen and sophomores to join activities, the two attitudes mentioned in part 4 of this series must be changed. To review, the attitudes are: (1) That no entering freshman could possibly have what it takes to get into an organization on a campus of this size, and (2) that no freshman has the time to spend in extracurricular ventures.

Neither of these attitudes can be changed by offering money or course credit. How can they be changed? Several organizations have begun to realize the problem and are offering solutions.

The freshman class officers recently had a meeting with Dean Field and Mr. Scott, Director of the Student Union, to determine how to get students interested in joining. Several seniors have met with Mr. Watts on the subject of starting a leadership seminar. Adelphia has long been concerned, and a recent meeting of Adelphia alumni considered solutions to the problem.

The fact that these three significant groups—freshmen, senior student leaders, and alumni—are becoming aware of the problem and are interested in solving it, is heartening. Perhaps in the near future a meeting of representatives of all three groups could be arranged and something definite put into operation.

What is needed is some type of a program that would let entering freshmen know the values of participating in and eventually leading extracurricular activities. In addition they would have to be assured that they wouldn't be little cogs in a big machine, that such participation wouldn't hurt their studies. Whether it is called an orientation program, leadership seminar, or anything else, it must basicly provide the answers to those three vital questions.

STUDENTS MUST CARRY THE BALL

In conclusion, then, the lack of student participation on this campus cannot be solved by the offerig of salaries or course credit. The only solution is a changing of the attitudes of the administration, faculty, organizations, and students. But we cannot expect the faculty or administration to initiate the change. It is up to the students to begin. Students presently in organizations must fire up activities and give them a meaning to all participants. Student leaders must take charge of inaugurating a program to encourage more joining on the part of freshmen and sophomores.

Without definite action by those students who are interested in saving extracurricular activities, and without a follow-up of support by faculty and administration, the situation will continue to become worse. But by conscientious application of the ideas suggested in this series, the current lack of interest will be cured, and extracurricular activities on campus will gain a new vigor that will provide a priceless adjunct to every student's academic education.

Valuable Information?

To the Editor:

I was extremely gratified to read M.P.'s article in the recent Collegian. His argument, although shaky in points, was most profound in others. At last, a definitive article has been written which combine literary skill and profound political insight. Realizing the incompetance of the presidential investigations on the resumption of atmospheric nuclear testing, and the obvious falsehoods in the president's recent speech to the nation, M.P. has taken it upon himself to offer his expert opinions on the far reaching effects of nuclear testing.

It is quite obvious from his expert usage of such facts as pollution of the atmosphere, causes of leukemia, the neutron bomb and other significant facts of everyday living, that his article is based on facts arrived at after long hours of research.

The only ambiguous part of his profound social commentary, is his reference to bubble gum as a national pastime. However, if M.P. derives vicarious pleasures from this art, I do hope he continues in this, his most worthwhile pursuit.

New Information?

To the Editor:

I don't agree with your arguments against resumption of nuclear testing, Mr. Palter. However, if you have a message that you consider important, it is certainly your right to have it printed. But how often do you intend to bend our ear with the same information? If you have some new evidence or information to offer which supports your argument, offer it. Otherwise keep quiet until you can at least put forth something in a serious, intelligent manner; and not simply invent ridiculous analogies..

Inside Information?

To the Editor:

In your issue of Monday, March 5, describe the University Seal missing from the Council Chambers as being 2½ feet in diameter. This is an error. In reality it is about 3½ feet in diameter, and about 4 in. thick. There is a small wireless listening device implanted in the back, no doubt by the administration to keep themselves informed of the activities of the Student and Faculty Senates. We should appreciate it if you would correct the misapprehension which you may have given the student body.

Classrooms Abroad Groups Announce Program For '62

Eleven groups, each containing twenty to thirty selected American college students, will form seminars in various European cities next summer to study the language, culture and civilization of these countries during a nine-week stay. Designed for the serious student who does not plan to see all of Europe in a short summer, Classrooms Abroad tries to give him a more profound experience through a summer of living in one of the following cities: Berlin, Munich, or Tubingen in Germany; Vienna, Austria; Besancon, Grenoble, or Pau in France; Neuchatel in Switzerland; Madrid or Santander in Spain; and Florence, Italy.

Graded classes in small sections of six to ten students, each under the supervision of American and native professors, will deal with the reading of classical and modern texts, the daily press, contemporary problems, conversation and composition, pronunciation and grammer. Students will also hear lectures on history and literature and meet with outstanding personalities. They will have full auditing privileges at the university in each of the selected towns and cities and will participate in all academic and social activities with German, Austrian, French, Swiss, Spanish, and Italian students.

Members of Classrooms Abroad will live with private families in each city, eat many of their meals with their hosts and share the activities of their sons and daughters. They will have ample opportunities to meet young people from student, religious, and political organizations. Regular attendance at theatres, concerts, and movies as well as visits to museums, libraries, factories, youth organizations, and other points of interest are included in the program. Each group will follow its seven-week tour of German, French, Spanish, or Italian areas. Since most programs end in mid-August, participants have a chance to remain in Europe for private travel after the program.

"We have found through many years of experience that it is quite possible, even if you don't know a word of the language, to learn more than a year's worth of college German, French, Spanish, or Italian in the course of a summer", says Dr. Hirschbach, Director of Classrooms Abroad, "provided that we get serious and mature students who are willing to mix business with pleasure." Dr. Hirschbach who also heads the German-language groups, teaches at the University of Minnesota. The French, Spanish and Italian groups will be directed by John K. Simon, Robert E. Kelsey, and Mr. and Mrs. Charles Affron, all members of the Romance Languages Department at Yale. Classrooms Abroad, now in its seventh year, has grown from eleven students in 1956 to an anticipated three hundred in 1962. Its former students represent some two hundred American colleges.

Full information can be obtained by writing to Classrooms Abroad, Box 4171 University Station, Minneapolis 14, Minnesota.

Classrooms Abroad is looking for an agent to represent it on this campus.

Athletics: How Do We Stand?

PART IV
by JIM TRELEASE '63

When Villanova came to Amherst for football, the students had surrendered the goal line before the Mainliners had climbed out of bed at the Hotel Northampton the day of the game. When St. Peter's took on the Redmen at Madison Square Garden, the students gasped at the idea of UMass playing in the Garden, let alone winning. "That day will come when these teams come in here and no one will run scared," said Backfield Coach Jack Delaney. But before the day arrives, UMass—its Administration, faculty, and Student Body—must overcome its defeatist "bush" attitude. We want a big school with a big name backed up by big pride. For such you must perform big — in chemistry, literature, biology, food technology, and athletics. You don't want our teams competing against rusty, dried out opponents like Northeastern, Brandeis, and Springfield any more than you want our research scientists struggling to discover secrets that were revealed two years ago.

One of the most difficult of all tasks on the athletic program is the scheduling department. It would be fine to guage your opposition to fit your own capabilities each year; thus as you improve—so would your opponent. But scheduling cannot work like that. Teams schedule their games sometimes five years in advance. Who would have suspected Villanova, who had won only three games in the last two years, would go to the Sun Bowl this year? We must resign ourselves to some losses before we reach the upper bracket of the ladder and undefeated seasons. But such resignation should not take place until the game is over—not a week before it is played. Basketball fans will have an opportunity next year to readjust their attitude when UMass plays Providence, St. John's, and Canisius while the Fusiamen tackle Villanova, Bucknell, Dartmouth, and, in the future, Buffalo.

A lack of confidence in the coaching staffs can be seen in rumors about Fusia and Zunic leaving, or the catcalls heard during the early basketball season, or the boos heard when UMass kicked on the 49 yard line on fourth down and one. There is absolutely no doubt in the exclamation that Zunic is the Number One basketball coach in New England and Fusia's staff is the best from Maine to Pennsylvania. Zunic has had numerous top offers to go elsewhere while here at UMass, as well as a fancy-priced request to disclose his famed "Chinese Defense" in book form. And from the head coach of one the gridiron opponents the Redmen met last fall comes this remark: "That coaching staff (Fusia's) is so good that it scares me to think of what they are going to build UMass into by 1963. By far, it is the best staff in New England."

Those men are not just coaches. They are dedicated men; dedicated to their team, their school, their profession, and their sport. On those cold wintry nights when our hardcourt quintet is not in action, Coaches Zunic and Leamen are traveling the dark, icy roads of New England, New Jersey, and New York — scouting our opposition for the remainder of the schedule and trying to catch high school athletes in action who might become future Redmen.

Across the hall at Curry Hicks, Vic Fusia and his four man staff now are involved, during the off-season, in viewing schoolboy grid films and following these up with recruiting visits to the homes of good prospects. Fusia, back from a trip to Philadelphia, is hoping to lure the top high school athlete-scholar away from Villanova, Pitt, and Penn State. That Fusia aims for student-athletes is backed up by the fact that not a single freshman football player flunked out in January. Soon the recruiting will end and the staff will start to review this year's films of next season's opposition. Every play used in the film will be catalogued and put on a distribution chart—how often the play was used and when it was used. To prepare for one game it takes 661 man hours—including the winter, summer, and fall sessions. How many University faculty come anywhere near that figure in their preparation for one week of classes?

In conclusion, therefore, let us examine what has been determined in this series. The Administration must learn to use athletics as a "public relations" instrument if they are to appreciate its real value to the University. The faculty must

Letter To The Editor

What's In A Name?

There has appeared recently in the Collegian a series of articles by Jim Trelease which expressed the sentiment that if we strive to give the University a bigger name in sports, we will "attract the attention of high school students—good and excellent ones."

While it is agreed that space in the sports sections of Boston newspapers will attract the attention of the high school student, it is my opinion that the good or excellent high school student doesn't refer to the list of "big sports" schools when applying to college.

Take for instance a good high school senior who wants to study engineering. If he is a serious-minded young man, he refers to a listing of top engineering schools such as M.I.T., California Institute of Technology, or Carnegie Institute of Technology, all of which have very small, if any, football teams.

Although Notre Dame is often seen in the sports section of newspapers and in national sports magazines, it is seldom heard or in connection with engineering. (Notre Dame is an engineering school, by the way). Mr. Trelease placed Harvard in his listing of "name" schools. Now, granted Harvard is a "name school, perhaps the finest school in the country, but I doubt seriously if it derived that name from sports.

To sum up, if we give to the University of Massachusetts a "name" that you know — "that stands out", like Seton Hall, as Mr. Trelease suggests, we will have a name that connotes what "Seton Hall" does, namely, a "basketball school", for few have heard of Seton Hall in any other connection.

A good sports name is helpful to a school, but a sports name alone means nothing outside the realm of sports; nor is a sports name necessary if a school has a good faculty, vast facilities, and a reputation as an institution of learning.

UMass Frosh Hockey Squad Goes Undefeated

The UMass Freshman Hockey Team has just completed its most successful season, going undefeated in five games. The victims of the powerful squad were Ithica College 4-1, Amherst, 8-4, 8-4, 6-0, and Deerfield Academy 8-1. This is an overpowering 6 goals per game scoring punch for the little Redmen pucksters, with an average of two goals per game scored against them.

Coach Joe Forcette was fortunate in having his choice of two top notch goalies in Skip Bowen from Melrose and George Bernard from state champion Framingham. Both boys saw equal action with George steady and dependable throughout the season, and Skip finishing brilliantly with a shutout against Amherst, and nearly another Deerfield.

The goalies were supplemented by a stalwart defense, led by "Big Badd" John Clayton who paired who paired up with Tom Dion, Jum MacLachlan, and Jim Paaneuf. There again Coach Joe Forcette was fortunate in that he could switch the boys around without lessening their effectiveness. Consequently, Joe had four defensemen of starting calibre. This defensive unit allowed an average of only five shots per period on the little Redmen's net.

Individual scoring honors went to Captain Dick Callahan with 16 points, consisting of 11 goals and 5 assists. He was closely followed by Ed Quimby with 13 points consisting of 8 goals and 5 assists.

Freshmen Basketball Team Ends Season With 11-1 Record

by AL COHEN '63

The freshman basketball team, under the direction of Jack Leaman, had completed the 1961-62 season with an excellent 11-1 record. Leaman, in his first year at UMass, featured a well-balanced offense and a tight defense. Highlighting the season were twin triumphs over arch rival UConn and an impressive sacking of Providence.

The Braves opened the campaign with a 67-54 win over Worcester Junior. Clarence Hill, a 6'1 guard from Washington, D.C., led all scorers with 26 points. Then followed a brilliant team effort in an 81-72 overtime win over the UConn Pups. Amherst's Chuck O'Rourke at 86 shared rebounding honors with Somerville's Gerry Knight, 6'3, and 6'3 Steve Bonds, another Washington, D.C.'s resident. The latter led the Little Redmen in rebounding until his departure at the end of the first semester. The play of 6'4 Jim Retos of Peabody earned him a starting position.

Victories over A.I.C. and Holyoke Junior set the stage for a battle with the undefeated Providence College. With Leaman alternating Bonds and O'Rourke at the job of guarding high-scoring Bob Kovalski, the Braves pulled away to a 40-29 half time lead. They went on to outclass the Friars by 79-61.

Defeat came to the Braves in the person of Holy Cross at Worcester. They rebounded with two victories over Stockbridge and Chamberlain Junior. Then came a return match with UConn at Storrs. A fast-break attack led by Hill and the clutch baskets of Knights gave the Braves a convincing win. Leaman and company went on to make Leicester Junior their eighth victim as all five starters hit double figures.

A return match with A.I.C. at the Cage saw Sprinfigeld's Charlie Kingston tally 18 points, including the two final second foul tosses that gave the Braves a 68-67 decision. The Leaman victory express came to a halt after the frosh trimmed Holyoke Junior 105-82 last Tuesday night in Holyoke. Chuck O'Rourke led the scoring parade with 25, followed by Kingston with 18 and John Reynolds, 13.

In deference to the opposition, several fine individual performances should be mentioned in this summary of the season. Worcester's little Jack D'Elia netted 25 against the Braves in the opener. UConn's 6'7 center Kimball impressed in the initial UConn game as did Providence's Bob Kovalski. Ralph Burns of Leicester made 13 of 14 free throws and had a total of 29 against the Braves. A.I.C.'s tall men, Lambert and Sands, sparked the Aces. Last but not least Holyoke's John Kearne proved a prolific scorer last Tuesday with a 35 point effort.

Coach Leaman, a Matt Zunic protege from B.U. deserves much of the credit for the Braves fine showing. His coaching was supplemented by the will to win that he injected into the Frosh. His spirited calls from the bench kept the frosh steady under pressure a sin the UConn and A.I.C. games.

Three outstanding guards, the men who made the "swing" offense work are good bets to make next year's varsity. They are Clarence Hill, Charley Kingston, and Jim Teary. Hill left little as to his shooting ability, being particularly effective on long jumpers. Forwards Gerry Knight, Chuck O'Rourke and John Reynolds will also be looking to winning varsityb berths. O'Roufke can shoot and rebound with the best of them. Knight proved his ability as a pressure ball player more than once. Centers Jimmy Retos and John Yost hauled in their share of rebounds.

turn away the negative resentment and assume a positive attitude toward those individuals who strive to proclaim the good name of UMass to every newspaper reader from Maine to California. And the student body must begin to have more confidence in the caliber of our teams and their coaching staffs. All these must be accomplished if the Redmen and UMass are to beome as familiar as the Crusaders, Friars, Terriers, Johnnies, and the Orangemen. The top-notch faculty, vast facilities, and huge enrollment will soon be here. It remains now for us to build the name and image which will be synonymouse with that faculty, enrollment, and our facilities. THIS IS HOW WE STAND today — building positivism and fighting negativism.

We've added a few new shows to our reportoire since I last detached myself. Saturday afternoons from 1-4 p.m., Ron Engel, Dave Bates, and Dave Moore commandeer the air waves with Potpourri, music ranging from the folk ways to jazz; and Saturday nights from 7-1 a.m., Steve Jacobs presents Classics. This week he is featuring light classical, i.e. "Pop".

In addition to these new programs, an old show, Coffee On Campus, comes to you every morning at 7 a.m. (they get up at 6), so don't forget to tune in; I'm really ... that hour of the morning.

Next week Masterpieces of Western Literature will present Goethe's Faust, a lecture given by Professor Victor Lange of the Princeton University German Department. Also be sure to be on hand for WMUA Comments, a radio editorial on university problems which is aired Sunday through Thursday at 6:45 and 9 p.m. and every morning on Coffee On Campus.

Well, I must toddle now; it's that time again — 6:45 news broadcast from the Collegian office.

Remember: WMUA election tonight at 7:30 at the station.

Turf Conference To Be Held At UMass March 8-9

Shrub care, lawn insect problems and planning the landscape around the home are topics of interest labeled for the general public during the annual Turf Conference at the UMass March 8-9.

An alternate session on general turf management of interest to homeowners is slated Thursday afternoon along with an all-day meeting for golf course superintendents. A program for both turf workers and superintendents is set for Friday.

Nationally-known turf specialists will appear as speakers during the conference, says Prof. Joseph Troll, department of agronomy in the College of Agriculture, and general chairman. Included are Col. H. C. Eckhoff, eastern director of the National Golf Foundation; Dr. R. B. Anderson, superintendent of the Augusta, Me. golf course and graduate in turf from the university; and H. B. Musser, professor emeritus of Pennsylvania State University. Musser's book on turf management is the text used at most of the colleges and universities in the United States.

"Grasses for Golf Greens in New England and Their Maintenance," is a panel discussion topic during the Thursday afternoon golf session. Geoffrey Cornish, Amherst golf course architect, will moderate the panel of turf experts representing universities and commercial concerns.

College of Agriculture staff members speaking at the general session of interest to homeowners on Thursday afternoon are Prof. Harold E. Mosher, Extension horticulturist; Prof. Lyle Blundell, chairman of landscape architecture; and Dr. William Tunis, head of the Waltham Field station.

Summer Tour Includes Fun And Learning

The 1962 Summer Session Tour to the University of Hawaii, Honolulu, is now accepting reservations, Dr. Robert E. Cralle, Executive Director, University Study Tours to Hawaii, announced today.

Special rates for students and teachers for the six week Summer Session Tour Program begin at $555.00 he reports. This price includes round-trip jet air travel from the West Coast, accommodations in deluxe Waikiki Beach hotels, a full schedule of 22 planned activities including Island sightseeing trips and tours, cruises, dinner dances, beach parties adn free bus transportation between campus and residences.

For earning extra credits transferable to most Mainland colleges, students and teachers can attend classes at the University of Hawaii's Summer Session where a distinguished visiting faculty from all over the world offers a wide range of subjects and courses.

Air and steamship accommodations to handle the hundreds of Mainland students and teachers matriculating to the Islands for a summer of study and fun have been set on all major steamships and airlines. Dates of departure are June 23 and 24, returning August 4 and 5, 1962.

For further information write to Dr. Robert E. Cralle, Executive Director, University Study Tours to Hawaii, 2275 Mission Street, San Francisco 10, California.

Specialized Major Work Receives Encouragement

"Designed for the inquisitive mind," is the way Fred P. Jeffrey, associate dean of agriculture at UMass, describes the College of Agriculture's special project courses for four-year undergraduates.

"This program is intended to allow a student to do specialized work in his major field which he cannot cover in his regular courses." Jeffrey continues, "the responsibility for doing some original work is put upon the student".

Apparently students respond to the challenge since most departments within the College offer courses of this tqje. One student working on a special problem is Douglas Hawes, 62, an agronomy major interested in agrostology—the management of fine turf. He is attempting to find a chemical means to control annual bluegrass once it has sprouted. This grass disappears in hot weather—a trait heartily disliked by golf course superintendents who would like to be rid of it permanently.

Robert Means, '63, and entomology major, is working on an identification key to insects of the leafhopper group. He hopes to continue his study in graduate school at UMass.

Richard D. Waskiewicz, '61, used his dairy technology special project to discover the effect of emulsifiers on the freezing point of milk. During the course of his work he tested various concentrations of three different compounds.

Ralph Flint '62, did his problem in animal science. While tracing the inheritance of certain udder characteristics among daughters of six bulls owned by the New England Selective Breeding Association, Flint visited farms throughout the four western counties of Massachusetts.

Another animal science major, Robert Sargent '62, worked on a special project in agricultural economics. As his plans include eventual management of a farm now run by two uncles, Sargent drew up a master plan of proposed major changes and improvements to be made on this farm in the next five to ten years. He then evaluated their probable effect on the farm business.

A wildlife management major, George Gavutis, Jr., '62, spent many hours along Massachusetts' north shore this fall observing sea ducks. After interviewing hunters, examining their bag and watching the morning duck flights, Gavutis estimated the sea duck population in the area, their age and sex ratios and the average time spent by hunters for each bird taken.

Two forestry majors, Richard Babeu '62, and Roger Benvenuti '62, cooperated on a timber quality study in Berkshire County. Using figures on the amount and type of timber present compiled for a graduate study, Babeu and Benvenuti checked the quality of standing timber on randomly selected plots and of logs cut by commercial lumber operators in the study area.

Other special projects are just getting underway with the new semester. Pomology students David Cheney '62, and Bruce Ogilivie '62, are beginning an extensive review of the technical literautre on fruit nuitrition, preharvest drop, ripening and keeping qualities.

Frederick Karle '62, an olericulture major, will be attempting to discover whether the amino acid tryptophane, one of the forerunners of a growth hormone, has a definite effect on the branching of tomato root systems.

Gordon Oakes '63, a poultry major will be using the University's 1620 "electronic brain" in a joint poultry-agricultural economics project to design an efficient but economical feed for poultry.

Although the projects are as many and varied as the student's interests and often require more time and effort than the academic credit received would indicate, both students and faculty seem to believe they're worth it. As one faculty member put it, "Independent work is the best chance to learn."

Kubitschek Cautions Of Brazil Problems

by Audrey Ravner '63, News Assignment Editor

Kubitschek lectures on Brazil's problems to UMass audience.

In a call for consolidation of the "freedom and unity of the American family," former president of Brazil Dr. Juscelino Kubitschek warned the UMass audience last night that "Cuba is the living example of what might happen" to Brazil in the event of a revolution caused by the desire "to vanquish underdevelopment and misery. These revolutions may end up Communist."

"Brazilians prefer to act peacefully," Kubitschek qualified, "but if this way proves ineffective, rest assured that revolutionary methods will be adopted."

Fewer Communists Now

The former president feels that the present is the time to revive the faith needed to sustain democracy. He said that he has "reason to affirm that today in our country there are fewer Communists than there were ten years ago. Nevertheless, it is important to recognize that the danger of Communism is greater now, because the Brazilian people, though they have always defended liberty as the largest single Catholic population in the world . . . are today determined to achieve economic development and obtain better living conditions at all costs.

"Eradicate disease and stagnation in the different sections of our hemisphere, create wealth, nurture the well being of the civilization we know; these shall be the all-redeeming acts."

U.S. Not Receptive

Kubitschek feels that the United States was not receptive enough at the right time for effective action at the right moment.

"I was frankly rather shocked," he said, "when I saw that some United States policy makers thought that democracy could hold out on politically sensitized masses of people living in a state of privation and destitution."

Chemistry Teacher Told "Not To Return;" Reports Indicate More Casualties Ahead

by NEAL ANDELMAN '63

At least one instructor in the UMass Department of Mathematics is being released because he does not have a Ph.D. The Collegian has recently been informed that at least one member of the English department will receive notification of release within one week because he has not been active in the area of publishing scholarly papers.

The Collegian now notes another on the growing "casualty list." He is Dr. James S. Proctor of the Chemistry department. Dr. Proctor was told that his contract will not be renewed next semester, and he has decided to leave the University on March 17. "I was asked not to come back because of the research angle," said the analytical chemist.

Main Concern Is Teaching

Dr. Proctor said that his main concern was in teaching, not in research. Because of this conflict the University is losing another qualified instructor. (Monday's edition of the COLLEGIAN will carry complete coverage of this situation, including Dr. Proctor's own feelings on the matter.)

Because all of the faculty mentioned are in the College of Arts and Sciences, the Collegian is presenting a summary of the recently issued College of Arts and Sciences "Principles and Procedures Governing Tenure, Promotion, and Merit Increasees." This document has been approved by the Executive Committee, President Lederle, Provost Woodside, and the faculty.

The following is a general summary of the statement: The major functions of the University are "to disseminate existing knowledge, ideas, and expressions and to seek new knowledge, ideas, and expressions, i.e. to teach and do research, scholarly, or creative work (RSC).

Professors Must Be Good Teachers

The statement in addition emphasizes that there should be no "fundamental dichotomy" between both graduate and undergraduate levels of work or "between teaching and RSC work." The professors that do this work must also be good teachers.

The College of Arts and Sciences dedicates itself to the search for academic excellence at every level. Decisions regarding tenure, promotion, and merit increase procedures also include the criteria for "faculty citizenship"—the willingness of faculty members to participate in activities on the Department and University level.

The value of a teacher's RSC work can be most easily judged by his publications in "Scholarly or Professional Journals Having High Standards." In certain circumstances, consulting work which in some manner raises a faculty member's academic stature and or recognition could be substituted for RSC or teaching work.

"Although in some cases, tenure recommendations (which usually are made during the third year of service) must be based largely on promise, promotions — especially to the upper ranks — must be based on accomplishment." Off-campus activities often reflect this accomplishment. "Decisions on promotion and merit increases are based on essentially the same standards."

Procedures regarding tenure and promotion are initiated by a

ROTC Question Faces Faculty Senate Soon

The Faculty Senate met at 4:00 p.m. yesterday (Mar. 8) n the Senate Chambers to discuss (among other matters) the persistent problem of voluntary ROTC.

The following statement of the student "Committee to Abolish Compusory R.O.T.C." was read to the members: "We, the Committee to abolish Compulsory R.O.T.C., request that the Faculty Senate seriously consider the endorsement of voluntary R.O.T.C. by the Student Senate and reevaluate the findings of the Ad Hoc R.O.T.C. Committee. We believe that for the student government on this campus to be maintained in more than a figurehead position, the Faculty Senate must respect the student referendum of two years ago and the recent Student Senate endorsement of voluntary R.O.T.C.

"Furthermore, the Defense Department statement favoring voluntary R.O.T.C. indicates that our government sees no need for compulsory R.O.T.C. In view of this and many other arguments presented in favor of voluntary R.O.T.C., we can see no need for believe that there is no valid reason for maintaining such a syscompulsory R.O.T.C. and firmly tem."

s/Stephen Maskell
s/C. Michael Risch

Dean Field, in a telephone interview, told this reporter that representatives of the Student Senate and the "Committee to Abolish Compulsory R.O.T.C." will be asked to the next meeting of the Faculty Senate to answer questions put to them by Senators.

Reports of this meeting will be published in the Collegian as soon as they are available.

Haebler And Ford Resign; Budget Motions Passed

by Ann Miller '64

The resignations of two senators, Albert Ford ('65 Mills) and Peter Haebler ('63 Senator-at-large), were read by President Arthur Tacelli ('62 Van Meter) at last Wednesday night's meeting of the Student Senate.

Haebler, one of the 7 'old' senators in the legislative membership of 42, is leaving because of dissatisfaction with many Senate activities and with the time-consuming "quibbling" that is brought to the Senate floor. Ford cited "academic reasons" for his resignation.

A category change in the budget for International Weekend was accused of "setting a terrible precedent," according to Senator Donald Cournoyer ('64 IFC).

The proposed change was a request for $100 to pay for two panel moderators for programs during the weekend. It was pointed out that the moderators had already been contracted before the budget was passed. Because of this fact, said Senator Cass (Senator-at-large), the Senate was, in effect, "being coerced" into the passage of the motion.

The motion passed along with an amendment proposed by Senator Andy D'Avanzo ('63 Wheeler) that a statement of Senate feeling on the subject be added. The statement reads: "The Student Senate has approved the $100 for moderators; however we express strong disapproval of paying faculty and administra-

Meteorologist To Speak On Radioactivity

Radioactive fallout will be under discussion at a forthcoming public lecture at UMass.

Dr. Reginald E. Newell, scientist at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, will speak on "Meteorological Aspects of Radioactive Fallout." The talk, sponsored by the Massachusetts Chapter of Sigma Xi, will be given at 8 p.m., Wednesday, March 14, in the Auditorium of Skinner Hall.

The lecture is one in a continuing series conducted by the local branch of the national scientific society.

The M.I.T. meteorologist's talk has been arranged through the visiting scientist program of the American Meteorological Society. The event is open to all interested persons without charge.

Jean Calve To Star In "Huis-Clos"

Jean Francois Calve, talented European actor and star of the Treteau de Paris Theatre Company, wil perform at UMass on March 20 at 8:15 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium in two dramatic presentations of the French troupe.

Tickets for Jean-Paul Sartre's "Huis-Clos" (No Exit) and Eugene Ionesco's "La Cantatrice Chauve" (The Bald Soprano) will be on sale at the S.U. lobby counter until March 10 only.

Calve received his training at the Paris Conservatory, and since has played important roles in both classical and modern dramas. He has performed for audiences in Japan and South America as well as for European theatre goers.

In Satrtre's play Calve will play the role of Garcin. Tania Balachova, who has played in the masterpiece hundreds of times, wil direct the play.

Beginning its fourth tour of colleges and universities in the United States the professional troupe is offering modern plays for the first time this year.

Free — And Responsible

One hopes that students who undertake to edit and publish a newspaper will assume a measure of responsibility commensurate with the freedom granted them. And, with an occasional exception, college editors want nothing so much as to be regarded as reliable and responsible.

Freedom provides a stimulus to responsibility. For once a student knows he will get either credit or blame for the job he does as editor, he begins to be concerned about his own reputation. He seeks advice before he acts, where otherwise he would wait for a higher authority to correct his errors. He begins to learn the essential lesson that freedom never really is earned until the individual proves that he can exercise it responsibly.

In this way, the college press stimulates not just the critical faculty in the student, but also helps develop that more sophisticated faculty—the responsible exercise of freedom—which can be cultivated in no other way. The notion that responsibility can be injected intravenously and that, enough of it having been administered, freedom can subsequently be substituted in the syringe, is itself irresponsible and destructive. It is a favorite refuge of authoritarians.

Thus, the case for freedom of the college press, which is strong and persuasive, too often is put in its weakest terms. It has nothing to do with the protections the Constitution affords the press. What is at stake is protecting these very constitutional freedoms, which are based on a society whose members are free to examine and criticize all institutions. These freedoms will survive only so long as we make it a stated policy of our educational system to stimulate the critical faculty, not suppress it because it sometimes may cause embarrassment.

This is what our college newspapers can do, have done, and should be encouraged to continue doing.

— LETTERS —

To the Editor:

In reference to part four of James Trelease's article on athletics: How do we stand? We would like to question the validity of some of the statements made therein. Mr. Trelease's goals are idealistic but he seems to have failed to mention the other athletic teams that UMass has.

Should one call any team dried out just because it doesn't excel in one particular sport? Are we a dried out team in the minds of Springfield gymnasts and Brandeis in basketball (score 80-79 Dec. 16)?

Let us now look at the statement that Matt Zunic is "the number one basketball coach in New England." Although Mr. Zunic is a qualified coach as his record will attest, he does not seem to equal the abilities of some of the coaches from the "Big Name" schools (Boston College, Holy Cross, Providence) of New England.

Now to our "fine" football staff, whom Mr. Trelease said, "is the best from Maine to Pennsylvania." Just to drop a few Big Names what about Holy Cross, Boston College, Rutgers and what about the staff up in upper state New York whose coaches turn out fine teams each year—Syracuse (Orangemen).

Thus we are included to agree with the ultimate goals of Mr. Trelease's articles, but placing our football and basketball coaches on a pedestal will not help in the attainment of these goals.

THE EXTRACURRICULUM—1

Student Leaders Use 20-45 Hours Weekly On Duties

This is the first of three articles giving the results of a survey of the time spent by student leaders in extra-curricular activities and part-time jobs last semester. The survey was made by students in Dr. Arthur Musgrave's journalism seminar and members of the Collegian staff.

Results from a similar survey of two years ago were published in Collegian issues of Dec. 7, 1959 and Feb. 10, 1960. At that time a total of 54 student activity leaders filled out questionnaires and were interviewed. Last semester, 66 student leaders participated in the survey. The project was directed by Brad Rohrer '61 of WMUA and a member of the seminar.

Three of the conclusions indicated by the time estimates of the student activity leaders last semester were:

1. Most of the 66 student leaders averaged more than 20 hours weekly on activities and jobs, with 13 reporting that they averaged between 35 and 45 hours weekly.
2. Although the typical full-time student is prevented from electing more than five courses on the theory that he lacks time to handle six courses as a rule, all but two of the 66 student leaders carried the equivalent (in time spent) of six to 10 courses.
3. Today's student leaders report that they spend about the same amount of time on their extra-curricular responsibilities as was reported by student leaders two years ago. For example, most of the 54 student leaders two years ago also estimated that they averaged more than 20 hours weekly, with 12 students in the 35-45 hour category.

STUDENT LEADERS' ATTITUDES EXPLORED

The questionnaire was intended not only to obtain careful time estimates on activities and jobs, but also to explore attitudes or student leaders. Thus, the 66 students were asked to estimate the maximum time any student should spend on activities, and whether they thought their own activities helped or hurt their grades. In this first article a summary will be given of the time estimates.

Only students who held performance jobs participated in the survey. Performance jobs are those which carry responsibilities and commitments to spend time. No students participated in the survey who were in activities on a free-time basis—i.e., who had made no time commitments and hence were free to participate in the activity as the spirit, or exam schedule, moved them.

In other words, the survey covered only extra-curricular performance activities, such as the Collegian, Index, WMUA, Senate, Adelphia, Mortar Board, singing and acting groups, and the officers of fraternities and sororities. Part-time jobs were included in the survey because they involve performance responsibilities, and it is known that many student leaders must work.

The 66 questionnaires were divided into five main categories, depending upon the time estimates of the student leaders. Category one consisted of students who reported that they were spending on activities and jobs the time required by the usual 3-credit course, or approximately 10 hours weekly, while category five consisted of students reporting 35-45 hours weekly.

NEED FOR SCHOLARSHIP AID INDICATED

The 64 students who were spending 10 or more hours were distributed as follows:

Category 1) 12 students who averaged 10-12 hours weekly. One of the 12 held a part-time job.

Category 2) 15 students who averaged 15-19 hours. Seven held part-time jobs.

Category 3) 15 students who averaged 20-25 hours. Ten held part-time jobs.

Category 4) 9 students who averaged 26-32 hours. Six held part-time jobs.

Category 5) 13 students who averaged 35-45 hours. Ten held part-time jobs.

The two student leaders who were spending less than 10 hours—one had averaged five, the other eight—were put in a special category, category A.

The high percentage of student leaders who are working would seem to indicate that there is need for more scholarship funds—or more grant-in-aid funds such as are given all the best football players on the basis of the argument that they cannot afford the time for part-time jobs. Some of the student leaders who held part-time jobs had scholarship aid, but it was not sufficient to eliminate the need for working. Some had grades that would entitle them to scholarships (2.5 or above).

Among the students who held part-time jobs were class presidents, Collegian and Index executives, key persons in the singing and acting groups, and student government officials.

GOOD GRADES SHOULD HAVE PRIORITY

In discussing the questionnaire results with members of the seminar, Dr. Musgrave said he thought needy students whose grades entitled them to scholarship aid should have priority over students eligible only for grants-in-aid because of low marks, and that if there are not sufficient funds to meet scholarship aid requirements, then performance activities should transfer some of their funds to the faculty committee on scholarship aid.

For several years the Collegian transferred some of its funds to the faculty committee for scholarship aid purposes, according to Dr. Musgrave. He noted that these funds were not payment for participation in extra-curricular activities—that two conditions for the transfer-of-funds scholarships being that the student leader give up his part-time job and not spend more than an average of ten hours weekly on extra-curricular performance duties. Neighboring colleges have a general rule that students hired for campus jobs may not average more than six hours weekly on the job.

In addition to estimating how much time they were spending on jobs and activities, the 66 student leaders also gave estimates on how much time they thought students should spend on activities. These estimates, which ranged from five to 40 hours weekly, will be reported in the second article in this series.

We Really DO Want Good Teaching

President Lederle in his March 1 convocation asked 'Who wants good teaching?" If current actions in regard to the release of qualified instructors is any indication, it would seem that the Administration of the University does not!

Dr. Anderson, head of the mathematics department, has stated that a member of his department is being released so that he can obtain a Ph.D. degree. There is no doubt that the lack of such a degree would affect this unnamed teacher's capabilities of instructing advanced courses in mathematics. This particular teacher does not, however, instruct such classes. He instructs freshmen, and speaking from personal experience, he instructs them very well.

"No shortchanging the students," says Dr. Lederle on the podium. When the particular instructor in question leaves the University, the students will be shortchanged. This discrepancy between preaching and practice is unfortunately not the only such example.

Dr. Proctor of the chemistry department has been asked to leave. Is he a competent teacher? Yes. Is he a dedicated teacher? Yes. Will he be here next semester? No! He will not be here because he has devoted all of his time to teaching. Absurd, but true.

Let it be clear that we are very much in favor of research at the University level by faculty, and we are proud of the contribution that the University of Massachusetts researchers have played in the advancement of science. It is not necessary, however, for everyone to engage in research. If an instructor is more comfortable spending his time in teaching, and he teaches well, then let him teach!

The department heads seems to feel that the older and more experienced teachers should instruct the advanced courses within their departments, and the younger instructors should teach the freshmen. This is wrong. Students at every level deserve the best training available, not just those lucky few in advanced courses.

We call upon the administration to end the discrepancy between what is practiced and what is preached. We call upon them to consider carefully before they release a competent and inspiring teacher just because he doesn't have a Ph.D. after his name.

The University is in no position to lose some of its best instructors.

President Lederle has called for "Maturity in Teaching." We call for maturity in the administration to end the hypocisy that is now so evident. We call for a program that will give us good teachers, because the students really do want good teaching."

Osmond Fraenkel, Renowned Lawyer, To Discuss Church-State Separation

Osmond K. Fraenkel, distinguished lawyer, author and general counsel of the American Civil Liberties Union, will speak on "Church-State Separation in 1962: Principles and Politics" at the Bartlett Hall audiorium on Monday, March 12 at 8 p.m.

Books he has authored include Our Civil Liberties, The Supreme Court and Civil Liberties, and The Sacco-Vanzetti Case. He also edited papers of Mr. Justice Brandeis under the title, The Curse of Bigness.

Mr. Fraenkel has argued over a dozen cases before the U.S. Supreme Court, and was a counsel in the Scottsbore case, both in the Supreme Court and in the courts of Alabama.

Graduated from Columbia University Law School and Harvard University, he has written articles for the Harvard, Yale and Columbia Law Reviews, and other legal publications.

In October, 1954, after many years as counsel for the New York Civil Liberties Union, he was elected as a general counsel for the ACLU. He has held that post continuously since then. An executive vice president of the National Lawyers Guild, he also served from 1933 to 1951 as the chairman of the Hearings Board of the New York City Dept. of Welfare.

His talk here is sponsored by the Hampshire County chapter of the Civil Liberties Union of Massachusetts, an affiliate of the ACLU.

written recommendation for the department head to the dean."

Exec. Comm. Decides All

The College of Arts and Sciences has established a nine membered Executive Committee which makes recommendations to the Dean regarding promotion, merit increases, and tenure. For faculty who are veterans, tenure must be granted every third year, or he must receive written notice that his contract will not be renewed." The same usually applies to non veterans. Also, tenure may be granted before three years time.

Factors which influence the Dean's recommendation to grant tenure are: Preparation ("The individual should have a Ph.D. or equivalent degree to show evidence of satisfactory progress toward the degree if such a degree is appropriate to his field; otherwise, he should present evidence of comparable training or experience appropriate to his field."), teaching proficiency, scholarly promise, faculty citizenship, and field of specialization.

The factors mentioned above also play a part in deciding who shall receive promotions and merit increases.

Summer Job Clinic Will Be Held For University Women

In an effort to offer more assistance to university women in seeking summer jobs, Miss Carole Leland, Placement Officer for Women, has scheduled a Summer Job Clinic for Monday, March 12, 1962, from 3:30 to 6:00 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom.

With the theme "The Things We Did Last Summer," the clinic offers an opportunity for any women student to drop in at the ballroom during the scheduled hours. There she will find "consultants" to whom she can direct questions about summer jobs, sources of employment, personal expenses, earnings, living conditions, job duties etc.

The consultants are students, mainly juniors and seniors, who have had successful experience in either paid or volunteer situations.

Exchange Students Find UMass Dress Casual

by LAURA GOLDMAN '63

Sandra Abrahams and Jean Grigsby recently travelled for two nights and two days coming from Albuquerque, New Mexico to UMass. They are participating in the exchange program between the two state universities which provides the opportunity for students to attend universities outside their home state at in-state cost. Transfer of credit between the two colleges is guaranteed.

JEAN GRIGSBY

Both Sandy and Jean are education majors and find the academic standards of both the University of New Mexico and UMass students dress more casually than do New Mexico's students. At their home school, dresses are favored over slacks or pleated skirt ensemble. It's much warmer at home but Sandy says, "I wouldn't part with my knee sox."

Snow isn't new to Jean and Sandy, for the New Mexican winter lasts from November to January and includes some snow. However, both girls are amazed by the amount and the beauty of the snow here.

SANDRA ABRAHAMS

The girls find our campus rather widespread but beautiful and well worth the walking necessary in order to get to classes. The many storied buildings of New England contrast strikingly with the single story adobe buildings of New Mexico. (The quaintness of Old Chapel and its chiming bells makes it a particular favorite.)

As for our dining commons, says Sandy, "Food is food." Jean misses the convenience of indromitory dining rooms just a bit.

Once again the legend of the "cold New Englander" has been proven false, for Sandy and Jean have discovered our campus to be a very friendly one. Faculty members have been particularly gracious. Coming from a campus where all non-commuting upperclassmen live in sorority houses, the two Exchange Students genuinely appreciate the hospitality of UMass sorority chapters. Both girls are enjoying their visit to UMass this semester.

ALUMNI PROFILES

Oswald Tippo, UMass Grad First Provost At Colorado

Dr. Oswald Tippo, Provost at Colorado University since 1960, has his work clearly cut out for him.

As the University's top academic officer, he is, of course, concerned principally with getting and keeping a first rate faculty, but this task of necessity takes him into the realm of the other requirements of the top universities.

Afer earning his B.S. in botany from UMass and his M.A. and Ph.D. from Harvard, Tippo took an $1800 a year job as instructor at the University of Illinois in 1937. While the University of Illinois was being awakened and upgraded, botanist Tippo was gaining an international reputation as a teacher, scholar, and administrator. By 1949 he was chairman of the Division of Biological Sciences and in 1953 he was made dean of the Graduate School at Illinois.

In 1954 he was awarded an honorary doctor of science degree by UMass for his contribution to higher education. In 1955 he joined the faculty at Yale and was made Eaton professor of Botany and chairman of the department. At the same time he directed the University's Botanical Laboratories and the Marsh Botanical Garden. He became the first provost at the University of Colorado in June 1960.

While Provost Tippo's problems are great, they are by no means unique to the Colorado campus. It seems the minimal salary for C.U. faculty is rather low. "In fact, "says Tippo, "in the list of American colleges and universities by salary, Colorado is 95th. This list includes state colleges and universities as well as private ones. This is important to remember because when we compete for faculty, we are competing with all institutions of higher learning, not just our fellow tax-supported schools."

Given the funds by the legislature, Dr. Tippo would not only raise faculty salaries but he would hire fifteen top men in various fields of study at an average salary of $17,000 a year. These men would not be research professors. Of course, they would be expected to do research, but it is emphasized that they are being hired to teach.

DR. OSWALD TIPPO

At Western Electric we play a vital role in helping meet the complex needs of America's vast communications networks. And a career at Western Electric, the manufacturing arm of the nation-wide Bell Telephone System, offers young men the exciting opportunity to help us meet these important needs.

Today, Western Electric equipment reduces thousands of miles to fractions of seconds. Even so, we know that our present communications systems will be inadequate tomorrow; and we are seeking ways to keep up with—and anticipate—the future. For instance, right now Western Electric engineers are working on various phases of solar cell manufacture, miniaturization, data transmission, futuristic telephones, electronic central offices, and computer-controlled production lines—to name just a few.

To perfect the work now in progress and launch many new communications products, projects, procedures, and processes not yet in the mind of man—we need quality-minded engineers. If you feel that you can meet our standards, consider the opportunities offered by working with our company. In a few short years, you will be Western Electric.

Challenging opportunities exist now at Western Electric for electrical, mechanical, industrial, and chemical engineers, as well as physical science, liberal arts, and business majors. All qualified applicants will receive careful consideration for employment without regard to race, creed, color or national origin. For more information about Western Electric, write College Relations, Western Electric Company, Room 6206, 222 Broadway, New York 38, New York. And be sure to arrange for a Western Electric interview when our college representatives visit your campus.

Train Your Memory With Helpful Hints

Memory lapses were causing concern — and giving rise to strange and ingenious solutions —hundreds of years before the birth of Christ. Yet the ordinary, fair-to-middling human memory is capable of amazing feats.

Your conscious memory, if you live to be 70, will remember about 15,000,000,000,000 separate things—from your telephone number to the shape of a watermelon.

Amazingly enough, your suoconscious memory contains much more information!

How Memory Works

In your brain (you're using some of them right now) are 10,000,000,000 nerve cells. According to one theory, when a sensation or impression strikes a nerve cell, its form changes. The harder the cell is hit, the bigger the change and the longer it lasts. When the cell is hit hard enough, you remember. If it is not hit hard enough, you forget.

Memory is a very peculiar thing. You don't forget more over a long period of time. You forget more right after learning something. You remember better under pressure—time or importance.

Ever had the feeling you'd seen something before, or been somewhere before, although you really hadn't? This is called "the illusion of the already seen." No explanation is generally accepted.

Then there's "retrospective falsification." A person's memories of the past may be distorted — either by wishful thinking or a vivid imagination. Salvador Dali, the painter, claims he has memories that go back to before his mother actually gave birth to him—and perhaps this is his vivid imagination at work.

Ever forget a telephone number you know very well? A name as familiar as your own? Then you had mild amnesia — a loss of memory.

Severe amnesia — when you can even forget who you are — is probably much rarer than most people think. A survey conducted by 300 policemen in large cities showed that 95 out of 100 "amnesia" victims are faking.

According to one missing-persons investigator, Dan Eisenberg, most cases of fake amnesia involve husbands who walk out on their wives — and who forget to take along a wad of money.

True amnesia may be caused by brain damage— a blow on the head may do it, but, more often, it's caused by overindulgence in alcohol. A personal tragedy can also trigger amnesia—under a terrible emotional strain, a person may forget in order not to continue suffering.

Memory Aids

Even the finest memory in the world couldn't' recall all the varied memory aids that have been tried through the centuries.

Memory jogs can be as complicated as the one devised by a 6th century B. C. Greek named Simonides. He thought a woman could recall a grocery list by picturing the items stacked in a certain order around her bedroom or living room. Whenever she wanted to recall the items, she simply visualized the room and its contents!

A different use of groceries as memory aids was made by Laurenz Fries in 1523. "Partake of roast fowls, small birds or young hares for dinner, then apples or nuts for dessert," he wrote in a work entitled How Memory Can be Wonderfully Strengthened.

Then there was the 16th century Italian professor who published a system which used "the most beautiful maidens his mind could conceive" as keys for the items on a list of things to be memorized. Curiously, posterity has forgotten his name.

More valid are these memory improvement rules suggested by modern experts:

1. Be alert to what you want to learn—make a conscious effort.

2. Be sure you understand the meaning of what you want to remember.

3. Use your sight, movement, and sound memory. To memorize words, for instance, look at them, say them aloud, and listen.

4. Organize the material. It's easier to remember dates in a time sequence than dates that are mixed.

5. Use a trick to remember. A music student uses the phrase "Every good boy deserves fine" to remember the lines of the musical scale—E, G, B, D, F, from the first letters. Math students remember the number 3.14159 (pi) from the phrase "See I have a rhyme assisting" —the number of letters in each word

6. Get yourself interested in what you want to remember. To remember people's names, for instance, get to know them well.

7. Spread out the memorizing. Hermann Ebbinghaus, a noted psychologist, found it took him 68 repetitions to memorize a long list of words in one day. With a similar list, and taking three days, he made it in only 38 repetitions. What's more, he remembered the second list longer.

If, after all this, you still have trouble remembering things, take heart. Some things are bound to stick. And even an excellent memory has its quirks; the late columnist Franklin P. Adams could remember all the Latin he learned as a boy, yet forgot all the French he learned in his forties. Furthermore, a good memory is not necessarily a sign of intelligence; some very dim-witted people, called idiot savants, learn to memorize very well.

That's something to remember —next time you forget.

She'll wish the gift had come from

Redmen Face Big Challenge In Philly Bout With N.Y.U.

Having survived a hectic five-week period that featured 10 wins in 11 games and the Yankee Conference championship, the University of Massachusetts now faces an even bigger challenge in the opening round of the Eastern NCAA Regional playoffs against a strong New York University team on March 12 at Philadelphia.

Coach Matt Zunic's predominantly sophomore squad, not expected to be serious Conference contenders, climaxed its drive to the league title with a resounding 109-62 decision over New Hampshire. The 10 of 11 spurt gives the Redmen an overall mark of 15-8 and 8-2 in Conference play.

Massachusetts stumbled through the first half of the season at a 5-7 pace with losses to major powers Providence, Holy Cross and Toledo. Lack of experience, especially in the backcourt, hurt the team in early games. However, the return of co-capt. Mike Mole and sophomore Bob Johnson remedied the backcourt situation and the team began to jell.

Mole, a two-year starting guard, scored 292 points as a sophomore and added 330 last season. Ineligible the first semester, he made his initial appearance at Madison Square Garden against a then red-hot St. Peter's team. His 15 points, 10 assists and all-around floor leadership sparked the team to an easy 94-75 victory.

The Redmen continued to streak, notching double victories over Rhode Island and Maine, before losing at Connecticut. But five straight wins over Tufts, Vermont, Syracuse, Coast Guard and New Hampshire elevated the club into the NCAA playoffs.

Along with the return of Mole came the improved play of sophomores Pete Bernard and Roger Twitchell and centers Charlie Fohlin and Don Black. Twitchell, all-time scoring sophomore at UMass, has 406 points for a 17.6 average plus 12 rebounds per game. Bernard ranks second in scoring with 283 points and has been outstanding on defense. Black and Fohlin increased their point production to give the club a balanced offense while Co-Capt. Kirk Leslie maintained a steady pace of 11 points and 10 rebounds per game.

Massachusetts first appearance in the NCAA playoffs will be a rugged one against a streaking NYU quintet, that stands 15-3 with games remaining against Fordham and St. John's.

Experience An Edge For Mass. Underdogs

Reprinted from
The Springfield Union

Although University of Massachusetts is a definite underdog for its NCAA Basketball Tournament meeting with New York University Monday in Philadelphia, the Redmen do rate a slight edge in one department—experience.

NYU has a starting team with an accent on youth. There 19-year-old sophomores, a junior and a senior make up the Violets' first crew.

Seeks NYU Record

UM coach Matt Zunic, however, has every reason to believe that his opponents from Gotham won't be suffering much from lack of experience.

The NYU youngsters have won 17 out of 20 games—a good argument for their youth movement. The sophomore starters, all in the front line, are 6-7 Harold Hairston, 6-8 Clem Galliard and 6-4 Bary Kramer. Hairston and Kramer both have 18-point averages.

Hairston needs 23 points against Fordham tonight in Madison Square Garden to set a new NYU record for most points by a sophomore. This speedy boy from Winston-Salem, N.C., also is the team's leading rebounder.

Rossini Doing Well

Kramer, a scholastic All-American from Schenectady, N.Y., is a high-jumper in track. Galliard, the lower scorer (4.1) of the starting team, keeps his 6-8 frame in the pivot.

Mark Reiner, a 6-0 senior, and Tom Boose, a 6-3 junior, make up the smooth backcourt combination. Reiner, the big playmaker, has an uncanny outside shot which accounts for his 14.0 average. Boose, a demon on the drive, averages 12 points per game.

NYU coach Lou Rossini has had nothing but winners in his four years at the helm. In 1959, his team went to the NIT semifinals. A year later, the Violets beat Connecticut, West Virginia and Duke before bowing out in the NCAA semifinals to Ohio State. Last year might be termed an off-year, but NYU kept its head above water with a 12-11 record.

The New Yorkers have won 10 in a row. Their last loss, oddly enough, was in the same Palestra where they meet UMass Monday. The Violets were upended by St. Joseph's of Pa., 59-55. The other NYU setbacks were in the Holiday Festival, to St. John's and Dayton.

UMass Back to Work

After tonight's game with Fordham, the Violets will play a return match with St. John's Saturday night.

UMass meanwhile, has been idle since its title-clinching victory over New Hampshire Saturday. Zunic put his boys back to work Tuesday.

Rodger Twitchell, Kirk Leslie, Mike Mole and Pete Bernard are sure UM starters, with a center job always a tossup between Don Black and Charlie Fohlin.

Zunic and Co. will go to Philly Sunday, where they plan an early Palestra workout.

Half time will feature a guest speaker, plus the rebroadcast of the last two minutes of the game in which Wilt Chamberlain scored 100 points.

Stay tuned to WMUA Monday night for an evening in Philadelphia.

Twitch, Mole And Leslie UPI Choices

UMass' Roger Twitchell, Kirk Leslie and Mike Mole have been given honorable mentions by the United International Press on the latter's pick list for the all-New England basketball team. Twitch was named to the second A.P. All-New England team.

Twitchell, who has broken Doug Grutchfield's sophomore record, has tallied 406 points in 23 games for an average of 17.6 points per game, the highest average on the Redmen squad.

Mole has tallied 12.0 points in 11 games for the team's third highest point average, just under Pete Bernard's 12.3. Leslie came through with a 10.9 point average for the fourth spot on this year's quintet.

Jack Foley of Holy Cross, one of the nation's leading scorers, was given a unanimous vote of approval by the UPI committee. Joining him on the first team were Jim Hooley of B.C., Providence College's Jim Hadnot and Vin Ernst, and Steve Spahn of Dartmouth.

A second team included Charlie Lee of URI and Tom Chappelle of Maine.

Jerry Lucas: The Greatest

For the second straight year, Jerry Lucas of Ohio State was named the 1962 college basketball player of the year by the Associated Press.

The honor followed in the wake of Lucas' being named to the college basketball All-America for the third straight year, the first time this has happened since Oscar Robertson played for the University of Cincinnati.

Lucas earned player of the year honor on the basis of ballots from 322 sportswriters and radio-TV broadcasters.

Some comments to show the esteem in which he is held:

"Lucas is a pro playing against college boys," Howard Jacobson of the Norfolk (Va.) Virginian-Pilot.

"Lucas is in a class by himself," Craig Stolze of the Daily Argus-Leader, Sioux Falls, S.D. C. W. Clements, of WTOD, Toledo, Ohio, put it this way: "It seems sacrilegious somehow to put four other guys on the same team with Lucas."

"Lucas is head and shoulders above the rest," Herb Good, Philadelphia Inquirer.

Girl Watcher's Guide

Presented by Pall Mall Famous Cigarettes

Girl watching is not strenuous

LESSON 9- Advantages over bird watching

Although girl watching will inevitably be compared with bird watching, it enjoys many obvious advantages. For one thing, it is less strenuous.

The bird watcher usually has to hike out into the woods where there is often a great deal of climbing over rocks and fallen trees and, occasionally, some swimming across rushing streams. Girl watching sites, however, are generally accessible to the watcher's home, school or place of business and can usually be reached without great effort. Perhaps no other hobby is so easy to enjoy. (Pall Mall is easy to enjoy, too. That's because Pall Mall's natural mildness is so good to your taste!)

Compare all three! Smoke "traveled" through fine tobacco tastes best.
See the difference! With Pall Mall, you get that famous length of the finest tobaccos money can buy. Pall Mall's famous length travels and gentles the smoke naturally ... over, under, around and through Pall Mall's fine, mellow tobaccos. Makes it mild ... but does not filter out that satisfying flavor!

Pall Mall's natural mildness is so good to your taste!

So smooth, so satisfying, so downright smokeable!

Kubitschek . . .

he had criticized the United States policy shortly before his successor took office. "As I see it," he had stated then, "proof of indifference to genuine hemispheric stability" is the fact that no urgent attempt has been made to implement a co-ordinated program for the development of this hemisphere. Without a concerted economic effort, it will be impossible to impede the disturbing forces that spread cold war over the continent. Latin America is on the brink of a dilemma. Either it industrializes or it will give up democracy."

Kubitschek spoke of his countrymen as "hardy, modest, and quick at learning their tasks. To imagine them as a fatalistic, contemplative and sad people is to miss the truth."

Problem Is Economic One

The problem of the country, he feels, is not in its people, but in the devaluation of exports such as coffee, and subsequent economic blows. When it became obvious that economic restructuring of the country was necessary, miles of roads, cities, steel and automobile industries were set up practically overnight.

"The pioneering spirit with which we were imbued," continued Kubitschek, "was only fully understood here in the United States."

Fought For Democracy

He fought "five years for the cause of democracy and did not find here the co-operation which would have been necessary, not even real understanding. My government battled unceasingly so that Brazil might not be subjected to the Cold War, which is fed by misery and by stagnation of underdeveloped peoples. That effort was almost totally ignored by public opinion in this country."

During Kubitschek's visit to the United States when he was elected to the presidency, he declared that he would "govern Brazil with full respect for the democratic process in such a way that extremisms would not take root and grow against our traditions."

Kept His Word

"I kept my word. The presidential seal was transferred to my successor with the country under democratic control and all indexes of development moving upward."

In speaking of his firm loyalty to a system that "clears the way to the legitimate ambitions of the ordinary citizen," Kubitschek praised the United States as "an example of what I affirm. No other group of people has so justly and so vastly distributed so much wealth and, as is well known, your workers are the most highly compensated for their efforts. All this, therefore, represents the fruit of liberty, and, as such, it has no peer."

J. D.'s CORNER

Through my own carelessness, the spring poetry contest was announced in this column last week; actually, it was not to have been held until about April, but since it's been announced, it shall be run now. There'll be one slight change, though. The deadline of entries has been extended to March 16; that's a week from this Friday, which should allow you all plenty of time.

Already, I've received several entries; the most common question asked has been, "What are the prizes?" Well, for the most part they'll be books, especially books of poetry. Other types of prizes are expected to be donated or acquired before the awards are announced. In any case, though, you've nothing to lose; it doesn't cost anything to enter. Just send your poems (up to 2 pages, preferably typed) to J.D., c/o The Collegian, or leave your entries in the Collegian office. (There's a box marked "J.D.'s Corner.")

Don't forget to include your name and local address. Submit as many entries as you wish.

This spring semester is going to be a time for all kinds of contests. Already, plans have been set up for a limerick contest; first prize will be a book of French cartoons. And there will be as many puzzle competitions as I can dream up; the one I'm working on now promises to be the wackiest puzzle you've ever seen anywhere. So keep an eye on this column for further news.

In the fall, I printed a recipe for home-brewed rum. The response was favorable, and many people asked if I had any other such recipes. Well, I've just received instructions for making your own beer and for brewing "Florida champagne." I'll send either or both of these formulas to anyone who requests them. Just send me a stamped self-addressed envelope with your request.

I've finally learned exactly what "Shakespearean tragedy" is. This is the term applied when someone flunks English 68.

Three Seniors Win Wilson Fellowships

Three seniors at the UMass have been awarded Woodrow Wilson National Fellowships, it was announced today by President John W. Lederle.

The three are: Joseph M. Patten, Dorchester; William L. MacDonald, So. Deerfield; and Mark F. Taylor, Yarmouthport. Patten, an economics major, will take graduate work at the University of Illinois. MacDonald, a major in Russian, will undertake East Asian studies in the graduate school of the University of Washington. Taylor is a physics major who has not yet decided on the graduate school he will attend.

The 1,058 awards for first year graduate study announced today by Sir Hugh Taylor, Foundation President, represent the culmination of the first five-year program made possible by a Ford Foundation grant of $24,500,000 in 1957. With the new awards, some 5,000 college graduates will have started on careers leading to teaching. Of those previously appointed, 80 per cent are either teaching at the college or secondary level or are continuing in graduate school.

Each Fellowship awarded covers a full year's tuition and fees at a graduate school of the Felow's choice and a living allowance of $1,500. This year's winners of fellowships were elected by 15 regional committees from 9,975 candidates nominated from 965 colleges. Of some 2,500 interviewed, 1,407 received honrable mention in the competition.

"A candidate accepting a Woodrow Wilson Fellowship assumes a moral obligation to omplete at least one year of graduate studies and to give serious thought to a career in college teaching," Sir Hugh said in his announcement of the awards. The Woodrow Wilson Fellowships may be held at any graduate school in the United States or Canada admitting the Fellows.

Although the Fellowships cover only the first year of graduate study, the Foundation also encourages graduate schools in their support of students after one year of study by granting additional funds to each school where a Woodrow Wilson Fellow is enrolled.

"Great Decisions" Hears Panamanian Grad Student

by DIANA D'INDIA '64

Brazil was the scheduled topic for discussion by the "Great Decisions" group which met last Thursday night.

The discussion began with observations concerning the need for financial assistance in Brazil. Brazil has many natural resources, but lacks the necessary funds with which to develop them.

One member of the group stated, "We could make a showcase of democracy in Brazil by helping it."

Talk then digressed to the subject of Panama as the group realized the presence of a Panamanian, Mr. Juan Scott Hernandez, who is doing graduate work here in economics.

He was asked how Panamanians earn a living. He listed sources of income such as cocoa, sugar cane, bananas, cement, and tourists.

According to Mr. Hernandez, about 80% of the goods consumed in Panama are produced wthin the country. He estimated the percentage of the net income of the Canal received by Panama as less than 30%.

Proctor: Main Job Is To Teach; No Funds, Time For Research

by NEAL ANDELMAN '63

Dr. James S. Proctor, an Assistant Professor of the University's chemistry department, is leaving UMass on March 17. In his own words, "I was asked to leave because of the research angle."

The analytical chemist wanted it understood that he is not bitter about being asked to leave. "Both the President and the Dean are doing what they think is best," he said. "I was stunned when I learned I would not be asked back, but I am not bitter."

Situation Not Typical

Dr. Proctor said that his particular situation was not typical. "I was brought in especially to teach and to take over Dr. Robert's job. I was not brought here to do research."

"Schools that specialize in research have lighter contact hour loads for teachers than we do," he said. At UMass the average number of contact hours for a teacher is ten to twelve. "I've averaged seventeen."

Dr. Proctor feels that the present emphasis on research has its roots in UMass history. He feels that Massachusetts was an agricultural institution where no pure research work was being done. Now we are a University and it is our place in the educational system to conduct research work. "Think of it as a pendulum that has swung from one extreme to the other. Right now we are in an overswing stage."

"There are several things wrong with the way things are going now," Dr. Proctor said. The first point he made was that there is little or no sate support for research. "The money for this work is coming from outside grants, and not from within the state." He felt the University should earmark funds and equipment for research, and allow for the extra time that research necessitates.

Lack of Grad Students

Another problem which he has faced is the lack of graduate students in analytical chemistry to help him in research. "If I want to do research, I've got to do it by myself." Me pointed out that he has an unusually large number of students in his classes, and he feels that it's more important that he keep his office open to students so he can help them with their problems. He is an advocate of the "one-to-one-ratio" between student and teacher. "If I were spending my non-class time on research," he said, "I would have to cut down on my office hours because I have no grad students to help out. This isn't right. I want to give my time to the students."

"Good research does not necessarily mean good teaching," said Dr. Proctor. He feels that with the increased emphasis on research, grad students will be spending more and more time in the labs working with students.

Less One-To-One Contact

This means that the individual student will spend fewer hours in contact with his instructors than he does now. It also means a reduction of the "one-to-one" time available to each student.

Doctor Proctor said that he was asked to do more research and publication work than he was doing at that time. "I was expected to do two jobs in the time provided for one. The University expects people to do a job, and then doesn't provide the time and equipment."

Speaking on the "publish or perish" theme, Dr. Proctor said that this is one way of judging the scholarly ability of an individual teacher. He also stated that "a lot of the material that is published (in professional journals) shouldn't be. There are papers there that are there because people have been told to publish."

Research Creates Mold

Dr. Proctor said that by making everybody conduct at least a certain minimum of research, you are creating a "mold" for all University teachers. "You can't pour everybody into the same mold, so why penalize a person because he doesn't fit in."

When asked what part Dean Hunsberger had played in his release, Dr. Proctor emphasized that the Dean had personally signed his release, but he was in part acting upon the recommendations of the Chem. Dept. Personnel Committee. "Dean Hunsberger," said Proctor, "is a publish or suffocate man. Frank-

International Weekend To Feature Far East

"Communism and the Far East" will be the theme of this year's International Weekend.

Scheduled for March 16-18, the event will be devoted to a variety of topics concerned with problems of the Far East, including United States foreign policy in Asia.

Sponsored annually by UMass' student body, the weekend is dedicated to the promotion of greater understanding of current problems in international affairs.

Main events of the weekend include a keynote address by an authority on Communist China, panel discussions on leading countries of the Far East, and cultural displays from Asian countries.

Major participants will be Dr. Walter Judd, Minnesota Congressman; Dr. Benjamin Schwartz, professor of history and government, Harvard University; Howard L. Boorman and A. C. Scott, members of the Columbia University research project on "Men and Politics in Modern China"; Dr. Ardath W. Burks, professor of political science at Rutgers University; Dr. Cecil Cody, assistant professor of history at UMass; and Dr. James B. Crowley, assistant professor of history, Amherst College.

Abdul Samma, president of the International Club at UMass, has announced that the International Dance will be held on Saturday night of International Weekend, March 17, in the S.U. Ballroom from 8 to 12 p.m.

"Tenure, Promotions, And Merit Increases"

An Immodest Proposal

"Who wants good teaching?" Administration, faculty, and students alike all have the same answer—WE DO. The Collegian, however, feels that the administration's recent actions are not in the best interests of good teaching. With this in mind, the Collegian offers suggestions on this important question. We realize that these are not the only possible solutions, but we do feel that they represent an alternate course of action from the one now being taken by University authorities.

In the words of Dr. James S. Proctor, "You can't pour everyone into the same mold." We believe that every teacher is an individual. He is different from any of his colleagues, and as such he should be judged on an individual basis, and not by standards for the entire faculty. We believe that not every faculty member wants to do research work (this also includes publishing) or is capable of doing research. This does not necessarily mean that such an individual can not be a good teacher.

Therefore, we propose that each department allow for a few such people to remain within the University complex. They are teaching specialists, and deserve the same respect, rank and salary as their researching colleagues.

There are many departments on campus—English in particular—where this could apply. We feel that some teachers are "naturals." They inspire the students in their classes, and most important, they enjoy teaching. Allowing these individuals to spend their time in teaching would definitely be a step in the right direction.

By the same token, those individuals whose main interests lie in research should be allowed to pursue these interests. We propose that each department (where this is applicable) create a chair of research. The individuals filling such chairs would teach courses in research and research methods as well as work with others on research projects. This means that students and faculty could seek both the advice and aid of a trained researcher whenever they run into problems. This would also leave such a teacher free to carry on his own research work.

The suggestions presented above fill a basic gap in present procedures. They provide for either extreme in teaching — the "pure" teacher and the researcher.

Most teachers will continue in their present pattern of publishing and teaching. The benefits of such a system are obvious. The University could continue to expand its research program and still maintain the highest possible quality of teachers.

The Collegian sincerely hopes that the administration will consider these suggestions with an open mind and will make every effort to insure that the students of the University of Massachusetts will have good teaching.

Who Needs RSC?

The College of Arts and Sciences has released a statement of policy called "Principles and Procedures Governing Tenure, Promotion, and Merit Increases," which is the blueprint by which the "two principal functions of a University" are to be carried out. The two principal functions, according to the A&S sheet, are "to disseminate existing knowledge, ideas, and expressions, i.e., to teach and to do research, scholarly, or creative work" (RSC work).

Certainly, no one can disagree.

The procedures governing tenure, etc. seem to be flexible enough to reassure a man who serves either of these functions well that he is not in danger of losing his position with the University. After all, who needs a Ph.D. for English 1 and 2? Who needs research or scholarly publications to prove that he is a competent teacher of languages at the basic and intermediate levels?

It is at these levels that a student must be TAUGHT, else he may never have the desire to go on to advanced studies. Again, if the student is not taught at the basic level, he will only plow through the course to satisfy a requirement. Obviously, a lacklustre lecturer whose thoughts are mired in his latest research project as he spouts to "know-nothing" underclassmen isn't about to experience the thrill of the "teacher responsible for first awakening the intellectual curiosity of a student who formerly lacked motivation."

On the other hand, it is exactly at the advanced undergraduate and graduate levels that the student needs the advice, inspiration, and fresh approach that a man engaged in research, scholarly, or creative work can offer. For no intellectually inclined man can be fruitfully engaged in any work which he believes to be finished. In this sense the RSC man is at his best as a student since he still seeks knowledge which can be passed on to his advanced students in his role as a teacher.

Let's save the RSC man for advanced and graduate courses (this is not intended to prevent others from doing RSC work) on the theory that the student in these courses is prepared to receive new ideas and to seek new knowledge. He has received his "foundation knowledge" at the lectern of an interesting and interested instructor. "The future original accomplishments of such a student confer a kind of academic immortality on his teacher."

THE EXTRACURRICULUM—2

Student Leaders Tell How Much Time Should Be Spent On Duties

by BRAD ROHRER '61 and JOE BRADLEY '64

This is the second of four articles giving the results of a survey of the time spent by student leaders in extra-curricular activities and part-time jobs last semester. The survey was made by students in Dr. Arthur Musgrave's journalism seminar and members of the Collegian staff.

Results from a similar survey of two years ago were published in Collegian issues of Dec. 7, 1959 and Feb. 10, 1960. At that time a total of 54 student activity leaders filled out questionnaires and were interviewed. Last semester, 66 student leaders participated in the survey. The project was directed by Brad Rohrer '61 of WMUA and a member of the seminar.

Of the 66 students who participated in the survey of time spent on extracurricular activities and part-time jobs last semester, 13 students in Category Five said they averaged 35-45 hours weekly, while most of the student leaders in the various performance activities said that they averaged more than 20 hours weekly.

This indicates how much time can be spent by students who have performance responsibilities in extracurricular activities. But how much time do student leaders think should be spent on extracurricular activities?

The questionnaire distributed by members of Dr. Musgrave's seminar, hence, asked the student leaders the following two questions:

1) What is your estimate of the maximum time any student leader should spent in an average week on his or her activity?
2) Do you think your extracurricular activities:
   a) hurt your grades
   b) help your grades
   c) have no effect on your grades
   d) uncertain

The questionnaires from the 66 student leaders were divided into five main categories and one special category. The special category contained two student leaders, both of whom were fraternity officers, who reported that they averaged less than 10 hours weekly. These were the only two of the 66 who were spending less time on activities than the time required for a 3-credit course.

STUDENTS LIST MAXIMUM TIME

Of the 12 students in Category One (10-12 hours of performed duties), nine thought the maximum any student should spend on activities was 10 hours or less. The other three thought the maximum should be 15.

Of the 15 students in Category Two (15-19 hours), six thought the maximum time should be 10 hours or less, four thought the maximum should be 15 hours, and five thought the maximum should be 20 hours.

Of the 15 students in Category Three (20-25 hours), four set 10 hours or less as the maximum, one set 12 hours, one set 12-15 hours, five set 15 hours, one set 18, one set 18-25, one set 30, and one set 30-35.

Of the nine students in Category Four (26-32 hours), three thought the maximum should be 10 hours or less, three selected 20 hours, two selected 25, and one selected 30.

Of the 13 students in Category Five (37-45 hours), five thought the maximum should be 10 hours or less, two set the maximum at 12 hours, one set the maximum at 15, one set the maximum at 25, one set the maximum at 25-30, and two thought the maximum should be 40 hours. One did not answer this question.

These estimates apply only to activities. Hence, the student leaders were also asked: "Does this estimate of the maximum time any student should spend in an average week allow time for the student leader to hold a part-time job?" The student leaders differed as widely on this question as on the question of what they considered the maximum should be. For example, of the 15 students in Category Two, three who set 10 hours as the maximum answered this question with a "no," while two who set 10 as the maximum answered "yes," while the sixth of the 15 who set 10 as a maximum answered "uncertain."

Of the two students who thought the maximum time spent on activities would be 40 hours weekly, one thought this did not allow time for holding a part-time job. The other checked "uncertain." One was spending 36 hours weekly on six activities and working six hours weekly, while the other was spending 40 hours on activities.

The majority of the 66 students answered "yes"—that is, their estimates of the maximum time any student should spend on extracurricular performance duties allowed for additional time to be spent on performance duties required by part-time jobs.

HOW TIME SPENT AFFECTS GRADES

In answer to the question of whether their activities helped or hurt their grades, the student leaders answered as follows:

Category One: hurts, 2; helps, 2; no effect, 5; uncertain, 3.

Category Two: hurts, 1; helps, 3; no effect, 9; uncertain, 1.

Referring to activities related to academic departments, one said participation both helps and hurts grades.

Category Three: hurts, 5; helps, 2; no effect, 5; uncertain, 3.

Category Four: hurts, 3; helps, 1; no effect, 3; uncertain, 3.

Category Five: hurts, 7; helps, 2; no effect, 3; uncertain, 1.

The totals for all 66 student leaders: hurts, 19; helps, 10; no effect, 27; uncertain, 10—with one student answering that his activities both hurt and helped his grades.

In commenting on this question of the effect of activities on grades, one student leader, who had estimated she averaged 18 hours weekly on four activities, wrote the following comment on the questionnaire:

"I could easily spend more time on each of my activities, especially since I have a position of definite responsibility in each . . . In addition to my studies, I need time to make plans for next year—interviews, etc. It looks like something or everything will suffer to some extent—my studies, extra-curricular activities, future planning, or social life."

This student, who was an officer in an honor society, selected 15 hours as the maximum she thought any student leader should spend in an average week on activities. She also thought this would not allow time for holding a part-time job.

PERIOD SURVEY—SEPTEMBER TO THANKSGIVING

The questionnaires were distributed immediately after the Thanksgiving recess, and covered the period from the opening of the semester to Thanksgiving; that is, each student leader was asked to estimate the time he or she had averaged on activities and jobs during this period.

Dr. Musgrave, who is chairman of a national committee on student publications created by the American Association of Journalism School Administrators, said that the time estimates of students here are similar to estimates in many other colleges he has visited in making surveys on extracurricular activities.

Dr. Musgrave will present his views and analyses of the survey in the concluding article of this series on Friday.

President Lederle contributes to 1962 Campus Chest Chairman Mike Rosenthal, Dorothy Ciarlone, Co-chairman.

To the Editor:

The cause of true brotherhood has always been best served when the interest a man has in his neighbor is practically as intense as his interest in himself.

And it is true in more than just one sense that when we try to help others, we are in reality helping ourselves. What we do under such circumstances is to increase the sum of human dignity, without which the best ends and aims of man could not be achieved.

I urge everyone in our University community to give as much as he or she can to the Campus Chest — our immediate means for achieving this worthiest of goals. The funds realized in this all-important campaign will help our own scholarship program as well as the work of the World University Service, dedicated to lending a hand to students and teachers in areas of the world not as fortunate as ours.

I therefore hope that you will all contribute to making the 1962 Campus Chest a ringing success.

John W. Lederle

Future Teacher Views

To the Editor:

As one who is seriously entertaining thoughts of becoming a teacher, I cant help feeling alarmed at the recent events regarding the faculty on this campus. I had always assumed, perhaps naively, that a professor's first obligation was to his students. But apparently teaching has become secondary to publishing and advancement in degrees. I can only ask, what of the professor who wants to "teach", who feels that he has something to tell his students, and who concentrates his energies in this direction. Can our faculty afford to loose this type of person? Are good teachers that plentiful?

Why does the president spend his time speaking on "good teaching"? Why do some of the departments on this campus ask the students for a rating of professors on their "teaching ability"? Why does SCOPE ask the honors students to recommend for its program those professors who, in their opinion, have demonstrated excellence in "teaching"? Why all this when evidently a policy of "Publish or Perish" is ready to ignore these factors? Why the inconsistency? I feel we are not unreasonable in asking these questions. As students interested in good teaching and as possible future professors we are entitled to an explicit statement by the administration as to just what its policy is. So far it has not adequately justified its actions.

Proctor Hired By Dupont

ly, I think that's the same as publish or perish."

Hired By DuPont

When asked about his future plans, Dr. Proctor said that he has already been hired by the DuPont Company. He will be in Jackson Laboratory (Maryland), and wil be doing work in organic chemistry. He said that his salary will show an additional 50% increase from his present salary at the University. Ironically, Dr. Proctor will be doing research work for DuPont.

Main Job To Teach

"At the time I came here," said Proctor, "my main job was to teach and get the curriculum up to date." The curriculum has been modernized considerably in the last three years (in regard to analytical chem) and new equipment has been obtained largely through Dr. Proctors efforts.

"The reason that I'm leaving this early," said Proctor, "is because I don't want to stay around where I'm not wanted."

Activities Or Businesses?

To the Editor:

The following is a revised copy of a letter read to the Student Senate by President Tacelli last Wednesday night.

March 6, 1962

Dear President Tacelli:

In the past few months I have repeatedly asked myself what benefit should an individual derive from collegiate extra-curricular activities. The answer, I find, is highly incompatable with the puerile, static, and unimaginative activities that comprise the formal structure of extra-curricular activities on this campus. It is evident that there is a much too highly organized bureaucracy under the ever-watchful eye of the R.S.O. office. The "more important" activities, Senate, Collegian, etc., are businesses and lack the spontaneity and imagination that should be found on a college campus. It is no wonder that these organizations are sorely hurting for outstanding leaders.

The real campus leaders are joining political action organizations, be they liberal or conservative, and groups which pursue cultural goals. College students in Latin America and in the Far East can cause governments to topple, while our Student Senate debates over the amount of postage the Collegian should have next year or the fact that there are no trash cans on campus.

With all these considerations in mind, I feel compelled to offer my resignation from the Student Senate.

Sincerely,
Peter Haebler '63

Payment Refused!

To the Editor:

I learned from the Collegian's account of the last Student Senate meeting that a $50 stipend had been allocated for me in a budget drawn up for International Weekend. This was my first knowledge that stipend was comtemplated.

Several weeks ago I was asked —and agreed — to moderate a panel. This commitment was the extent of the understanding. Had payment been mentioned or implied, I—or any other member of your faculty — would have explained that a professor simply does not accept money from his students. My understanding is that the Senate will be requested to approve the deletion of the proposed item from the budget.

Clinton, a 5'9, 155 pound defenseman, was elected by a vote of his teammates following the conclusion of the season. The Redmen finished with an 8-10 record, the most victories in Massachusetts hockey history.

Clinton, a graduate of Cambridge Latin, tallied three goals and six assists during the year and was the top defenseman on the club. Gerry is a junior at the University and is majoring in the School of Business Administration. He is also a member of Kappa Sigma fraternity.

by DAVE WILLARD '64

"Hey Case, how was that for a bunt?"

"My mother could be better!"

This is a typical bantering exchange between you and your players, Charles Dillon Stengel. Yes, here you are back on the baseball field where you belong. It got awfully stuffy in that bank didn't it? Having to watch your manners, shave every day and be a diplomat issuing short concise statements to your subordinates from behind your polished desk, sitting in that soft cushioned chair.

Some difference between that and those long soliloquies you used to revel in reeling off to those gaping sports writers while in a more familiar setting; sitting on a hard bench in the confines of a cluttered dugout or a sweaty locker room. Those daily margin records you had to make out and file didn't present the challenge that went with making up those line-up slips, especially with your two-platoon system.

You really got nostalgic, sitting there reading about all the teams going down to Florida for the start of Spring Training. Then one day the telephone rang and it was George Weiss, a fellow victim of the Yankee "machine," and now the General Manager of the fledgling New York Mets. He was offering you the job of field manager. Here was your in. You had been away from the baseball wars for a year, and you knew you were itching to get back. So you accepted this offer. Thus you and George, the two talents that had much to do with building and maintaining the Yankee Empire, were united once again in a joint effort which will obviously be the toughest task either of you have faced. But this was a real challenge. Instead of pushing a pencil and looking at the dividends increase, you would be out with the boys, giving advice and drawing from an incomparable wealth of knowledge that only one who has been in baseball over fifty years could compile.

So here you are, looking out on the field now from your vantage point behind the batting cage. You have before you a panoramic view of your business, or should we say your pleasure. You're not sitting back in your office chair now, playing restlessly with your pencil; waiting for that blankety-blank financier to leave so you can sneak a peek at the morning sports page. No, you're right here with everyone out there performing for you.

Who's that guy out in centerfield, that fellow with the short blond crew cut and the baby face? Sure you know who he is but you just can't think of his name. Remember back to the 1950 World Series and the Philadelphia "Whiz Kids?" Now you can place him, Richie Ashburn, still wearing that old familiar #1. He's well past his prime and has lost some of his blazing speed, but you know he can still help the ball club with that good batting eye from the lead-off slot.

Now you're really drifting back in time, Case, but even the best of us have to reminisce. You're thinking about your own playing days when you also patrolled the outer gardens. Perhaps you were more noted for your on the field antics than your actual baseball prowess, but nonetheless you were good enough to make a few of old John McGraw's teams. And everyone knows that he was perhaps the toughest taskmaster ever to don spikes. Sure you used to caper and cavort around and have fun. There was that day when you doffed your hat to the crowd after making a nice catch and a bird flew out from beneath it.

Yes, you used to be quite a terror. But those playing days are long since gone.

You still cherish that enviable record you compiled while managing the Yankees. Yes, you remember how you kicked around the majors but never had the material to work with. Finally you wound up managing in the minors. Then in 1948 your fortunes took a turn for the better and you won a pennant with Oakland in the Pacific Coast League. You didn't realize it then but this was to start you on your road success.

UMass Gymnasts End Season; Compile Successful Record

by JEFF DAVIDOW '65

It's been a good season for the UMass Gymnastics team and better times are yet to come. The squad, coached by Bob James, finished this year's competition with a successful 4-3 record, but more than this the Redmen showed great promise and opportunity for growth.

The team started the season by trouncing the men from Ithaca College by a score of 64-30. Competing without the aid of junior Dave Yates and sophomore Dave Williams who were both to play a large part in subsequent Redmen victories, the Jamesmen captured five out of the possible six first places. It was in this meet that Captain Charlie Paydos gave the UMass rooters their first glimpse of his superb style which was to become indicative of all his future performances. However, Paydos was not the only member of the squad that performed admirably. The Redmen's Bruce McCracken took the side-horse competition and also gained ed two second place berths, once behind Paydos on the parallel bars and the second time in back of UMass' Bob Coffin who outscored all others on the horizontal bar.

With one victory under its belt the team traveled to West Point to face a powerful Army squad. However, in this contest the Redmen were simply overmatched by the West Pointers who are ranked among the top gymnastics teams in the country. Nevertheless the defeat was not an inglorious one with Paydos, McCracken, Yates and Brown starring for UMass. Dave Yates put in his first appearance of the season, not having been able to compete in the Ithaca meet because of a sprained wrist. Dave was excellent in the Floor Exercise event and captured one of the two second places taken by the Redmen.

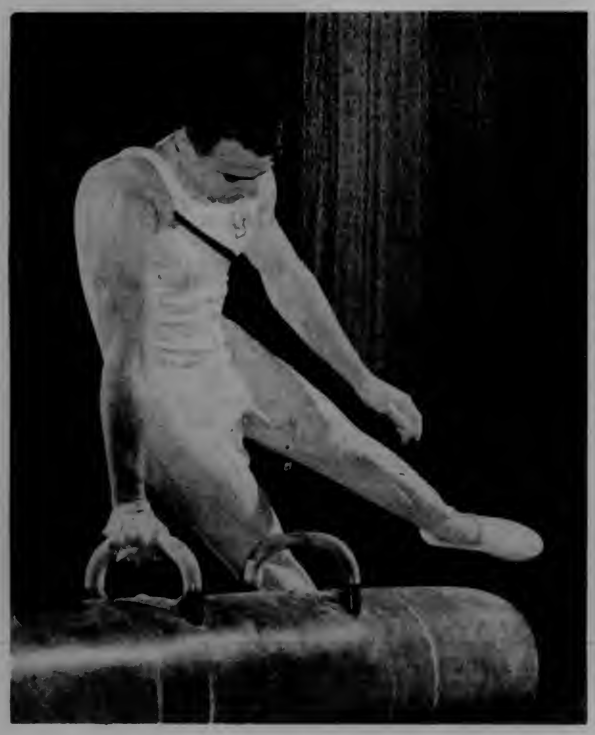
This defeat was somewhat eased by a victory over Cortland College by the Redmen in their next home meet on January 6th. However, the team's success was short lived as they lost their next two matches to Temple and Springfield. UMass' second loss of the season came on Saturday, February 10, when the Redmen traveled to Philadelphia to oppose a strong Temple team on their own home floor.

The losses to Temple and to Army makes one wonder if the Athletic department should become a little more realistic in their scheduling of meets for the Gymnastics team. Schools such as Temple and West Point place far greater emphasis on gymnastics than we here at the University do. Thus, competition stimulates a team to attain higher goals, but playing out of one's league can only act as a depressant not as a stimulant and is thus a detriment not only to the team but also to the sport in general.

Despite their losses to Army, Temple, and Springfield the Redmen managed to pull out a winning season with a double win over Cortland and Slippery Rock Coleges. In these meets as in the others, it was a team effort on the part of the squad; however, there were a few standouts for UMass. Most notable of these were Dave Yates, Charlie Paydos, Bruce McCracken, and Dave Williams. Williams, now a first semester sophomore, joined the varsity squad after the inter-semester vacation in time for the Temple meet, and has been of great assistance to the team in the latter part of the season.

Williams is only one of the bright stars that shines brightly in the Redmen's future. Of the entire varsity squad only five men are leaving: Captain Paydos, Bob Coffin, Ralph Nichols, Dave Amundsen and Jim Adam. This fact coupled with the knowledge that many fine competitors who were on the freshmen gymnastics team will be moving up to varsity positions next year leaves no doubt that UMass will again have a gym team, as it did this year, that it can be rightly proud of.

The captains for next season's squad, Date Yates and Bruce McCracken, and their teammates are already in training to make next year a great one for UMass.



Jim Adam musters strength as he prepares to master the side horse.

Bruce McCracken marks a graceful stand on the parallel bars against Cortland State.

Lee Beats Out Chappelle In YanCon Scoring Race

Despite a 36-point spree by Tom "Skip" Chappelle of the University of Maine in the final Yankee Conference appearance of his career, Charlie Lee of the University of Rhode Island hung on to capture the Conference scoring title for the past season, it was announced by the conference publicity office today.

Lee, the deadly side court sniper for the Rams, finished the campaign with 179 points to 177 for Chappelle. The latter, the conference scoring champion for the past two years, missed one game because of an ankle injury, which cost him the chance to become the first player in the history of the conference to win three years in a row. He did post the best average with a percentage of 19.6 points per game as compared with Lee's 17.9.

Rodger Twitchell of the champions from the University of Massachusetts finished third with 169 points, two better than Dave Ricereto of Rhode Island. Bob Bron of New Hampshire and Benny Becton of Vermont tied for fifth with 150 each.

Mister ED

by E.T.R. '62

Dear Mister Ed:

That was quite an article in the Collegian Friday about the "Publish or Perish" situation. I realize that the students have gripes but don't you think that the administration has some good reasons also? They certainly must know what they are doing.

A perishable faculty member

Dear Perishable:

I certainly agree with you that the administration MUST know what they are doing—that's the tear-provoking fact about it. Actually though, who wants a young invigorating instructor who can make the class laugh or make the subject interesting? We are here to LEARN, not to enjoy ourselves and get a kick out of a course. That's kid stuff.

What we need are many more Ph.D's researchers and the like—especially for the hundreds of introductory courses for freshmen and sophomores. Just think how the kids will be impressed as their grey-bearded sage walks into the room with Barker's Book of Quotes and Richardson's Hanbook of Pedantry. Why, the kids will be so impressed by these learned, stoic, no-nonsense, prolifically published examples of "MATURITY IN TEACHING" that they will probably lie in bed all morning thinking about them (as they cut their class).

Really now folks, you KNOW I'm just kidding, but think now . . . especially seniors . . . for a long minute . . . how many times in your from years did you take an hour exam given by a Ph.D. and answer the questions using any of his research-based interpretations and how many times did you have to resort almost entirely to your own ideas (supplemented by old hour exams and the introduction to the book)?

At this writing all are resting comfortably, except the brothers who are anxiously awaiting the day that the ten German shepherds will stamp throuh the house.

Inter. Weekend . . .

During intermission, several foreign students will present folk songs and dances from their various countries.

Kyungsun Choi, a Korean student at Smith College, majoring in Speech, will demonstrate Korean folk songs.

Another Smith College student, Shigeko Mori, from Tokyo, Japan, will sing "Sakura Sakura", a song of cherry blossoms. Miss Mori is a history major.

Mexican and Spanish dances will be performed by Anna Ortiz de Mortellano, from Mexico City. She is studying languages at Smith.

Philippe Consuegra, a UMass student, will accompany Miss de Mortellano on some of the latest hits from Latin America.

Sighilt Borcherding, from Bremen, Germany, will sing German folk songs. A UMass student, Miss Borcherding is studying American Literature.

Samma said that this event, which is the largest foreign student program at UMass, is celebrating its third anniversary this year.

Great Decisions . . .

"We could use some financial aid," Hernandez said, "to further mechanization in agriculture and industry."

Asked about the feeling of Panamanians on the question of ownership of the Canal, he answered that, in his opinion, "Every Panamanian should feel that Panama should control the Canal."

Mr. Hernandez described the school system in Pamana. Every student in the public high schools has to take 6 years of mathematics and 4 years of English. Two years of English are compulsory in grammar school. In American-run private commercial high schools students are taught typing and shortland in both English and Spanish.

Hernandez observed that, in general, the Panamanian student is more interested in furthering his education than is his American counterpart. In Panama teachers are paid relatively higher salaries than in the United States, because, he said, there is a higher prestige attached to teaching.

The group will meet this Thursday at 8 p.m. in Bartlett Faculty Lounge to discuss Berlin.

Dean Field Speaks At Workshop

The first of a series of Freshman Leadership Workshops was held in the S.U. on Saturday at 2 p.m. In an opening address to the group, Dean Field outlined the purpose of asuming the roles of leaders in student activities.

Dr. Field stated that the dependence of the community on organizational leaders has made it necessary that students internalize their education. "We must," stated Dean Field, "make use of the opportunities provided by the University to develop individualism."

The students were then divided into three separate groups which dwelled on specific aspects of extracuricular activities and individual talents.

Attending these conferences were Dean Field; Helen Curtis, Dean of Women; Robert Hopkins, Dean of Men; Robert Morissey, Mens Placement Officer; Edward Buck, Asst. Director of Student Activities; Isabelle Gonan, Asst. Dean of Women; S.U. Director, William Scott; and also other interested administration members and senior leaders.

The entire group later convened for a coffee hour and informal discussion of the Workshop. All agreed that the workshop was beneficial and that the series should be continued. It is expected that the program will be extended to a large number of students, perhaps to include interested upperclassmen.

Ec. Assoc. To Hold Lecture On Decline Of Textile Industry

On Thursday, March 15, 1962, the UMass Economics Association will present the first of its spring semester lecturers on subjects of economic interest. This address will present the students and faculty an opportunity to obtain a further understanding of a much misunderstood phenomenon, namely the decline of the New England textile industry. The topic of the evening is "Economic Forces in a Diminishing Industry".

The guest speaker, Clarence Gagne, is Public Relations Director for the Heywood-Schuster Woolen Mills of East Douglas, Massachusetts. He is a well known figure in the New England textile industry, and has been engaged in extensive research work on the industry in the past year. Gagne was recently named to "Who's Who in American Business and Industry in 1962."

An informal coffee hour will be held in the Governor's Lounge, S.U., following the 7:30 talk in the Middlesex Room. The Association cordially invites all those interested to attend.

Legislators Laud Bill For UMass Fiscal Autonomy

Labor Favors Autonomy Bill For UMass

President J. William Belanger of the Massachusetts State Labor Council, AFL-CIO, placed the weight of the Massachusetts labor movement in support of House No. 3350, the measure calling for more UMass fiscal autonomy to provide better educational opportunities for the children of low-income families.

In his statement, presented for him by Arthur Avigne to the Committee on Education, Belanger said that as a member of the Board of Regional Community Coleges he is fully aware that "the State University is especially important to the children of working people" and that "in some areas of training the University is the only place offering low-cost, accredited professional education."

"Organized labor," said Belanger, "has always been in the forefront in support of high-quality, low-cost public education. Free public schools and low-cost public colleges and universities have provided the major educational opportunities for talented and deserving sons and daughters of low-income families in this state and in this nation. Dr. Lederle Says Students Are Penalized By Inability Of Present UMass System

"UMass students are being penalized, in effect, by the inability of the University under the present system to adapt quickly enough to their needs," stated President John W. Lederle in his address on fiscal autonomy to the Legislative Committee on Education Monday morning at the Statehouse.

"The University must have the ability to change rapidly as conditions warrant," he went on," if it is to keep faith with its students. We need the means for flexibility to provide them with the attention and care each deserves and requires."

Lederle told the legislators their approval of the bill for more financial independence "will indicate you want us to have the means of making maximum use of our plant within the level of financial support you can give us."

Called Most Important Bill This Session

The bill, called by many legislators the most important legislation this session, calls for removal of administrative controls, the right to transfer funds from subsidiary accounts, elimination of a pre-audit, and creation of new trust funds.

Headed by House Speaker John F. Thompson, who asked to present his address first, the many proponents of the bill spoke for its passage.

Thompson, who told the Committee he gave the bill his "full and enthusiastic support," stated that "Our goal is a truly statewide university providing top-level education at low cost to qualified young men and women from all over the Commonwealth."

"The enactment of the legislation recommended . . . results in no ultimate loss of legislative control," he continued ". . . it delegates authority to meet unexpected developments to those primarily charged with handling those developments."

On A Par With Other Great Universities

Senator Maurice Donahue from Holyoke, who presented the report of the special commission on the budgetary powers of UMass, and who introduced the speakers for the bill, said "that the bill was an attempt to place the university on a par with other great universities. Trustees have their hands tied by present restrictions, he said. He also explained that the measure would give UMass free hand with the teaching personnel.

"The University of Massachusetts," he stated "is on the brink of greatness. The bill will supply Dr. Lederle and the trustees the tools that are needed."

Senator Philip A. Graham, a member of the commission, praised the work of the study group and the quality of education at UMass. However, he stated that he disagreed with the commission's recommendation for transfer of funds.

Convenient To Transfer Funds

"It would be convenient," he said, "for any administrator to be able to transfer surplus from one subsidiary account to another without consulting budget experts in Boston, but it is the people's money that is paying the major cost of this institution and it should be guided by budgetary controls set up by the state."

Rep. Kaplan Gives Report Favoring Bill

The following is the report of the "Special Commission on Budgetary Powers of the University of Massachusetts and Certain Related Matters," given by Chairman Representative Sumner Z. Kaplan.

"The legislation suggested in H3350 (the autonomy bill) is the most important long range piece of legislation before us this year. The report recognizes the uniqueness of the relationship of higher education to State Government. It is a conscious expression and fulfillment of our duty to establish and maintain an educational program of the highest quality which we owe to the sons and daughters of Massachusetts and which we are perfectly capable of maintaining. It gives the fullest possible recognition to our confidence in a principle of higher education which is peculiar to our democracy—a principle started by Harvard with its original Board of Overseers composed of six clergymen and six magistrates.

"I emphasize this because, somehow or other, the notion often pervades our thinking that the government of universities,

Fraenkel Charges Court Wlth Avoiding Decisions

by JOE BRADLEY '64

Osmond K. Fraenkel, General Counsel of the American Civil Liberties Union, lectures to UMass audience on the "Separation of Church and State."

"The Supreme Court has a habit of avoiding decisions if it can possibly do so," charged Osmond K. Fraenkel, General Counsel of the American Civil Liberties Union, in a talk on the separation of church and state Monday evening at Bartlett Auditorium.

Fraenkel told an estimated 70 persons that the Supreme Court can throw a case out of court if is doesn't want to hear the case, as in the instance which Fraenkel mentioned concerning Connecticut birth control laws.

Under Connecticut law, doctors who give birth control advice run the risk of being considered accessories to the fact which is the use of birth control instruments, Fraenkel said.

Fraenkel said that the Supreme Court refused to take a test case "on the very cute grounds" that no prosecution could be instituted simply for the Supreme Court to hear the case and to "give advice."

Leveling his attack more specifically at the question of separation of church and state, Fraenkel warned: "You can't

BULLETIN

Governor John A. Volpe today announced that he is "wholeheartedly" in favor of the bill for fiscal autonomy for UMass.

WHERE WE STAND

It is not, nor has it ever been, the purpose of the Collegian to rate individual instructors. This is the business of the University. We do question, however, the basis for the ratings of individual instructors.

We feel that this is a matter of concern to the students, and not "none of your damn business" as some of the faculty have indicated. If students do not take the initiative in the fight for good teaching, then we are every sick campus indeed.

The Collegian has brought the issue out into the open. It is now the responsibility of the University officials to reflect on the merit of student opinions. Representatives of the Collegian will meet with President Lederle and Dean Hunsberger this week to discuss these views.

Opinion from students, faculty and administration on the subject of what really constitutes good teaching are encouraged. The "Letters" column is always open to any member of the University providing that the opinions expressed therein are in good taste.

If you want "good teaching", now is the time to express your views.

N.C.A.

President Lederle On Fiscal Autonomy

President Lederle emphasized in his address that "None of this means a 'blank check'. None of this means that we wish to escape ultimate responsibility owed to the legislature and the public. Rather I am discussing how we may assume and assure real accountability. We stand ready to explain in detail our needs and plans to assist the legislature in reaching sound decisions on the level of support it can give the university. We will report continuously and completely on all major policies and on all financial transactions conducted by us. We want a comprehensive state audit each year. We want full inspection, encouraging inquiries and questions, for our way of life depends upon complete public understanding and support of the important job we must do.

"While we must grow in size to meet the demands of the young people of Massachusetts for college training, we are firmly determined not to become a regimented educational factory. We believe that our youth should be free to choose their own career objectives and to select the type of training they want in order to become useful citizens of the commonwealth. This means that as they mature during their college years they must be free to change their objectives as new opportunities arise. We need fiscal flexibiilty so that we will not be guilty of establishing rigid programs of study and then telling our students they must study only in this or that field. I feel certain that no one in America wants this type of regimented education for our children.

"Passage of the bill will serve as a landmark for public education in Massachusetts. It will reflect great credit, in this centennial year of the Land-grant College Movement, upon our Commonwealth. Under its provisions our state university can enter the mainstream of American public higher education where great progress and advances are being made daily.

"This bill is absolutely necessary if we are to provide the educational leadership expected from the great Commonwealth of Massachusetts."

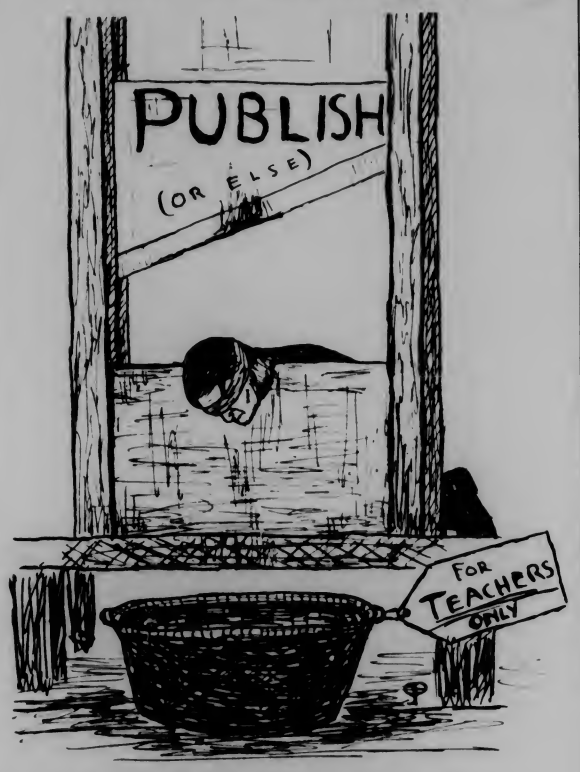
How To Get Ahead In Teaching



THE EXTRA-CURRICULUM—3

Leaders Advise Budgeting Of Extra-Curricular Time

This is the third of four articles giving the results of a survey of time spent by student leaders on extra-curricular performance activities and part-time jobs. The survey was made by students in Dr. Arthur Musgrave's journalism seminar and members of the Collegian staff.

A similar survey was made two years ago and reported in the Collegian on December 7, 1959 and February 10, 1960. Some comparisons between this survey and the one made last semester ar given by Dr. Musgrave in today's article.

Dr. Musgrave, a former Nieman Fellow at Harvard University, is chairman of a national committee on student publications created in 1961 by the American Association of Journalism School Administrators. He has been engaged in a study of extra-curricular activities for several years, and has been invited to several colleges, such as Princeton and the University of Connecticut, to discuss these activities.

The "most encouraging" result of the survey last semester is the marked increase in the number of student leaders who believe the maximum time spent on extra-curricular activities should be less than the "equivalent of the time required to carry a sixth course."

This was one conclusion reached by Dr. Musgrave when he compared the recent survey with the one made two years ago. He said:

"Two years ago I interviewed more than half of the 54 student activity leaders in the survey and had them keep a record of how their time was spent for a week. Very few thought the maximum should be ten hours: in fact, 25 hours was the figure most frequently selected. Nine of the 12 students who had averaged 40 hours selected 25 as the desirable maximum."

Altogether 29 of the 66 student leaders this year selected 10 hours or less as the desirable maximum, and Dr. Musgrave attributed this change to recommendations of several departments to their majors that the time spent on activities and jobs not exceed the equivalent of the time spent on a 3-credit course, or 8-10 hours weekly.

"These departments include such large ones as English, Mathematics, Government, History, Economics, German and Russian," he said. "They have made explicit the implications of some faculty policies that are overlooked by some students and teachers and administrators.

"The faculty thinks that five courses, rather than six, are a full-time load for the typical student. This 5-course norm implies that although the student has some spare time for extra-curricular activities, he does not have enough spare time to carry the equivalent of a sixth course. Otherwise, six courses would be the norm on our campus."

Professor Musgrave also said that if an activity takes more time from a student than the equivalent of a 3-credit course, then the activity is being conducted at the expense of his total—i.e., curricular plus extra-curricular—education.

"In such a case I would say that the student is being exploited by the activity," he declared. "For example, I would say a Collegian editor who spends more than 10 hours weekly writing editorials is being exploited, because 10 hours of writing for the Collegian is physiologically the equivalent of 10 hours of writing for a course. You do not learn as much on the Collegian, but you use the same eyesight and the same nervous energy. I think a responsible academic adviser to students, or anyone informed about extra-curricular performance activities, would advise editors not to spend 10 hours in extra-curricular writing work unless they have a B average, just as he would advise them not to take a sixth course unless they have a B average.

"It is easy for responsible student leaders in performance activities to be exploited by the activities. It would be an untypical student—or faculty member, for that matter—who would not put a public responsibility above a private one. Many student activity leaders regard their course work as a private matter and their activity as a community service for which private sacrifices should be made."

The fact that so many student leaders reported that they were spending more time than the desirable maximum time selected by them, as was reported in the previous article, would indicate that activities put strong pressures or make unusual demands on responsible students.

Dr. Musgrave said that he thought the quality of extra-curricular performance should never be achieved at the expense of the total education of the students who are carrying the performance duties. He maintained that students should define "excellence" in extra-curricular activities to mean that they "supplement the curricular activities, and hence serve the educational purposes of students."

When extra-curricular activities require excessive time—i..e, more time than the equivalent of a sixth course—they are bound to be in an unhealthy and unsatisfactory condition, according to Dr. Musgrave.

His views on how to improve our extra-curricular activities will be presented in the last article of this series on Friday.

LETTERS TO

A Group of "Boys"

To the Editor:

Recently, a form letter was brought to our attention which was sent by a group of "boys" to certain co-eds on campus. We feel that this letter is typical of the actions of a segment of the masculine population at our university. We shall not cite the numerous other instances of this type because it might embarrass some of those students who think of themselves as "B.M.O.C."s.

Considering our college years as a time for completing the process of maturation—we wonder what is motivating these individuals. Do they really feel that our campus will benefit from—or even take into consideration—their "supreme judgment" of fellow students; or is this delight in embarrassing others, merely a psychological response stemming from a need to compensate for what is lacking within themselves? We tend to feel that the latter is true!

"Boys", when you leave the confined realm of the University of Massachusetts, from which you derive group security, will you still need to judge your new acquaintances on your present set of superficial values in order to thwart all realistic knowledge concerning your status in society?

M.L.G. and J.K.R.

Who Has The Incentive?

To the Editor:

It seems there should be few people at a university who can neither lead nor follow. Yet as the Collegian has pointed out, our University organizations are longing for both. The question now at hand is, "Why?".

An Ad Hoc committee was established by the Senate to investigate the condition. The first meeting of this committee will be held on Thursday, March 15, at 7:30 in the Worcester Room of the Student Union.

Although this was originally a Senate function it has become obvious that the ideas to be expounded should not be limited to those of the Senate. I am, therefore, opening this and all further meetings to any persons who has an interest in their University and the future of its organizations.

"Letters, We Get Letters . . ."

Because of space limitations, the Collegian can print only a small fraction of the letters it has received this week. It is encouraging to the Collegian Staff to note the growing student and faculty interest in campus events and problems, and we urge you to continue voicing your opinions through the "letters" column.

What Faculty?

To the Editor:

Column 3 page 1 of the Friday, March 9, 1962 Collegian may have a common error on a point about which I am at the moment extremely sensitive. It says "The document (about Tenure, Promotion and Merit Increases in the College of Arts and Sciences has been approved by . . . the faculty." What faculty? When ? In a rather close vote in December 1960 by assembled members of the faculty of the College of Arts and Sciences it was decided to approve a report which included setting up an elected committee to study some form of organization for this faculty. As far as I know the faculty has never met to approve or disapprove of anything since.

Dr. William H. Ross

THE GRASS IS ALWAYS GOLDER

The academic world, as we all know, is loaded with dignity and ethics, with lofty means and exalted ends, with truth and beauty. In such a world a heinous thing like faculty raiding—colleges enticing teachers away from other colleges—is not even thinkable.

However, if the dean of one college happens—purely by chance, mind you—to run into a professor from another college, and the professor happens to remark—just in passing, mind you—that he is discontented with his present position, why, what's wrong with the dean making the professor an offer? Like the other afternoon, for instance, Dean Sigafoos of Gransmire Polytech, finding himself in need of a refreshing cup of oolong, dropped in quite by chance at the Discontented Professors Exchange where he discovered Professor Stuneros from the English Department of Kroveny A and M sitting over a pot of lapsang soochong and shrieking "I Hate Kroveny A and M!" Surely there was nothing improper in the dean saying to the professor, "Leander, perhaps you'd like to come over to us. I think you'll find our shop A-OK."

(It should be noted here that all English professors are named Leander, just as all psychics professors are named Fred. All sociology professors are, of course, named Myron, all veterinary medicine professors are named Rover, and all German professors are named Hansel and Gretel. All deans, are, of course, named Attila.)

But I digress. Leander, the professor, has just been offered a job by Attila, the dean, and he replies, "Thank you, but I don't think so."

"And I don't blame you," says Attila, stoutly. "I understand Kroveny has a fine little library."

"Well, it's not too bad," says Leander. "We have 28 volumes in all, including a mint copy of Nancy Drew, Girl Detective."

"Very impressive," says Attila. "Us now, we have 36 million volumes, including all of Shakespeare's first folios and the Dead Sea Scrolls."

"Golly whiskers," says Leander.

"But of course," says Attila, "you don't want to leave Kroveny where, I am told, working conditions are tickety-boo."

"Oh, they're not too bad," says Leander. "I teach 18 hours of English, 11 hours of optometry, 6 hours of forestry, coach the fencing team, and walk Prexy's cat twice a day."

"A full, rich life," says Attila. "At our school you'd be somewhat less active. You'd teach one class a week, limited to four A students. As to salary, you'd start at $50,000 a year, with retirement at full pay upon reaching age 29."

"Sir," says Leander, "your offer is most fair but you must understand that I owe a certain loyalty to Kroveny."

"I not only understand, I applaud," says Attila. "But before you make a final decision, let me tell you one thing more. We supply Marlboro cigarettes to our faculty—all you want at all times."

"Gloryosky!" cries Leander, bounding to his feet. "You mean Marlboro, the filter cigarette with the unfiltered taste—Marlboro, the cigarette with better makin's—Marlboro that comes to you in pack or box—Marlboro that gives you such a lot to like?"

"Yep," says Attila, "that's the Marlboro I mean."

"I am yours," cries Leander, wringing the Dean's hand. "Where do I sign?"

"At the quarry," replies Attila. "Frankly, we don't trust paper contracts any more. We chisel them in marble."

Stonecutters cut it in stone, woodcutters cut it in wood, seamstresses embroider it in doilies: you get a lot to like in a Marlboro—filter, flavor, pack or box.

Kudos for Chem Dept.

To the Editor:

Sometimes it becomes necessary to release an individual from a certain position for a reason which is obviously neither sound-nor very logical. There are many technicalities of this sort that are of great value to our present day society.

I can not help wondering if it is one of these technicalities which the administration is employing for the current release of Dr. Proctor from the Chemistry Department. After studying analytical chemistry under the "devoted" Dr. Proctor for a semester, I can not help replacing the technical reason given with my own ideas as to why he is being released. In any case, I extend my congratulations to the administration and the Chemistry Department for what I feel was a very wise and necessary decision.

New Zoning Laws

To the Editors:

Important news seems to have escaped your notice! Recently, and without even a line of coverage in the Collegian, An Amherst town meeting passed an important amendment to its zoning laws. This town meeting, in effect, had the fate of the whole fraternity system at the University in its hands. The amendment, as passed, makes continuation and expansion of the important fraterinty system possible. A negative vote on this amendment could have been the death of the fraternity system here.

The area available for fraternity use has now been expanded and rezoned under new zoning rules. Many of the present fraternity houses now fall into the new "Campus Residence District," which is bounded by a line running 200 feet east of North Pleasant, from Wesley Methodist Church, including QTV and the Mt. Pleasant Inn, down Fearing Street, down Allen Street, down Phillips Street as far as Nutting Avenue and up to the edge of the campus. Thus, with properly approved plans, present chapter houses may be expanded without special dispensations as were needed in the past. Also, new houses may be erected in this area after plans have been properly approved.

The fraternity system will now be able to grow to keep up with the growing University. The system will now be in the future what it has been in the past and is at present—an asset to the University of Massachusetts.

WHY THERE'S NO PROCTOR IN OUR HOUSE

To the Editor:

Why should Dr. Proctor of the College of Arts and Sciences be told to quit his job because he wants to teach? Why should a Math teacher be released because he'd rather teach than do research? Why should TEACHERS be fired because they want to HELP and TEACH? Dr. Proctor says: "If I were spending my non-class time on research, I would have to cut down on my office hours . . . I want to give my time to the students."

I want to thank you, Dr. Proctor, for your realization of the fact that the student body is here for an education—despite the fact the odds seem to be slowly mounting against this. Don't get me wrong, I'm not against research at all. Without it, we wouldn't have any of our new findings. What I can't understand is why some teachers can't be hired for the sole purpose of research and others be hired for teaching. THEN, if the college wanted, these researchists could teach graduate courses only, or even none at all, which would then make TEACHERS available to the students. President Lederle himself said that research draws teachers away from students. Isn't this "double-standard" of teaching and researching actually denying the student body a good part of the educatin it's here for? I can only feel that this is hurting us. Isn't it also depriving the student body of an education when teachers are fired for spending too much time with their students?

As things are now, most teachers and advisors have only about 3-5 office hours per week. How many will they have when they all begin to publish? Let the researchers publish; let the teachers teach. If a student happens to have classes during his teacher's or advisor's office hours, and if Dean Hunsberger's "plan" continues as it has this year, then, to see his advisor, a student will be forced to either cut a class or else locate his advisor at his publisher's office.

George E.Cusson '64

To the Editor:

Today, the faculty sits in fear of POP (Publish or Perish) Hunsberger. Who will be next on POP's list of those to get the axe? Now is the time for Mr. Lederle to show that leadership which his position requires. If he agrees with POP, let him say so, or, if he believes that a good teacher teaches let him say so. We want to know where he stands. He must show that the president runs the University, not a dean. A dean should run his school as he feels is right. The president must respect this leadership up to, but not including that point where the dean goes against University policy as established by the president. In our opinion, Dean Hunsberger is wrong, but the main question is whether or not these actions are in harmony with University policy. If it is, let Mr. Lederle support the dean in front of the whole University. If it is not, then stop this carnage of our teachers. Instead of general statements at convocations, let us see specific action. Let the student body know just what our president considers a "good teacher". Mr. Lederle should come out of the background—we need a leader, not a figure-head.

UMass Bows To N.Y.U. 70-50 In Palestra Debut

Violets Cash In On UM's Worst Scoring Performance

by BEN GORDON '62, Sports Editor

Although the sell-out, heated crowd at Philadelphia's Palestra provided a warm atmosphere for the UMass-N.Y.U. contest Monday night, Matt Zunic's Redmen, after having fired themselves to their first YanCon title, were ice-cold throughout the game and were pummelled by the Violets, 70-50.

UMass, after exchanging the lead with its equally frigid opponents throughout the first half, couldn't manage to step up its point production in the second stanza. N.Y.U. did, and that was the story.

After UMass bounced to a 4 point lead in the opening minutes of the game on a Don Black 3-pointer and a Kirk Leslie free throw, N.Y.U. came right back, going ahead on a Harry Hairston layup. A Peter Bernard jumper knotted the score.

Hairston and Barry Kramer put the Violets on top again, 13-10, but six straight points for the Redmen gave the YanCon champs a 16-13 bulge. The first half see-sawed until late in the chapter, neither team enjoying more than a 3-point lead until, with UMass ahead 28-26 and little over a minute remaining, hard-driver Tom Boose and Bob Willilams sparked an NYU flare-up to give the Violets a 32-28 half-time lead.

The Redmen, who shot for a measly 21.1 percent during the first ice-cold half, still had hopes of coming off with the win. After the first ice-cold half all the odds were in favor of their getting hot during the second half. It just didn't happen. N.Y.U., playing, like UMass, an under-par brand of ball during the first half, came back in a hurry to completely outclass UMass.

N.Y.U.'s Boose started off the half with a flashy jump shot, but Mike Mole and Charlie Fohlin retaliated with successive hoops and N.Y.U. had a scant 34-32 edge.

That's when the Violets changed from light purple to red hot, and UMass was never again a serious contender. Five minutes later the Redmen trailed 33-43, as a fast breaking, quick-passing, ball-stealing N.Y.U. squad began to take advantage of the Redmen's worst shooting performance of the season.

Although a quick-break assist from Mole to Bernard resulted in a Bernard bomb, and two more points were added to the Redmen total when Kirk Leslie swished, two N.Y.U. foul shots and a Hairston two-pointer gave the Violets a 37-51 bulge, a lead which would increase to the final 70-50 N.Y.U. winning margin.

Palestra Parlay

The UMass-U.Y.U. game was easily the most disappointing of the night, as neither UMass nor N.Y.U. showed any real proficiency on the court . . . Much of the near-10,000 crowd was all for the Redmen, as the latter had gone into the game as fairly heavy underdogs . . . Bright spots for the Redmen? There were some. Charlie Fohlin was the key man in a UMass uniform during the first half as his rebounding and steady defensive play, combined with the dependable jump shot of little Pete Bernard, kept the Redmen in the game. But when a team's big, high-scoring man doesn't produce, things are bad all over. Roger Twitchell had the worst night he's ever had, and probably ever will have, as he couldn't connect on one shot from the floor, his two points both coming on free throws.

The Redmen ran into foul trouble in the second half, as if they didn't have enough to contend with. Charlie Fohlin had to take to the bench when he fouled out with more than half of the second stanza remaining, and before the night was over, Mike Mole, Kirk Leslie and Don Black all followed him.

Peter Bernard was high man for the Redmen with 13 points. Don Black and Mike Mole were also in the double figures with 10 and 11 points. Barry Kramer, a 6'4" N.Y.U. sophomore, led his team with 18 markers. Fohlin topped both teams in rebounds with 14.

UMass, seeing a five-game winning streak smashed, finishes with a 15-9 record. The Violets, now 19-4, will go on to play Villanova, Friday, at Maryland.

Coaching Comments

UMass coach Matt Zunic commented after the game that "We just didn't play ball . . . we had the shots, but I've never seen us shoot so badly." "But we'll be back," Zunic aded.

What did N.Y.U.s Lou Rossini have to say? "We've played better games, but I can't complain."

Patriots Switch, Will Train At Andover Acad.

The Boston Patriots will do pre-season training at Phillips Andover Academy instead of at the University of Massachusetts.

The move, contemplated for a year, was completed yesterday when Billy Sullivan, team president, wound up negotiations.

Changing camps came about because of the relative proximity of Andover and its availability to football fans, who buy tickets.

Hundreds of their followers can drive out from Boston in less than half an hour. The training camp at UMass is 100 miles from Boston and only a few bothered to make the effort.

"Facilities at UMass were ideal," Sullivan said. "I doubt if there is a finer camp set up in all of professional football. Our coaches had everything they required there and so did the players. But the move to Andover will help the local folks get to know our team better before the season starts."

Mike Holovak, head coach, hadn't settled on an opening date. He says it will be around July 15 and the first week will be spent with rookies and quarterbacks.

"After that we'll go full blast and there will be no such thing as a secret or closed practice. We want the people to see how we do it and they will be welcome at all times," he said.

PART II

by DAVE WILLARD '64

In 1949 you were contracted to manage the Yankees. That first year you won the pennant and went on to win the Series from the Dodgers. As a matter of fact your teams followed the same pattern right straigth through to 1953; winning the pennants and Series both. In 1954 you lost to Cleveland but you atoned for it during the next four years through 1958 by winning four straight pennants. It is true that you lost two of those World Series, but no one could really be justified in blaming you.

By 1955 the frustrated Dodgers were long overdue to win their first World title. Then in 1957 the Series went to Milwaukee, mainly because of the strong right arm (and perhaps a spitter or two) of one Lew Burdette. In 1959 the "Go-Go" White Sox beat you out for the American League pennant, ending your four year skein of titles.

Then came that eventful year, Casey, 1960. You won the pennant quite handily as had become the custom of your Yankee teams. However, in one of the most dramatic World Series of all times you lost out in the final inning of the seventh game to the Pittsburgh Pirates. One pitch by your own Ralph Terry and one swing by that Mazeroski fellow and it was all over. This proved to be your swan song Case, as you fell by the wayside, a victim of the Topping-Webb "machine."

Thirty-five years of managing came to an end with one ruthless act. What was their excuse, Case? Something about you being too old. You knew better though. Too old be damned! Why, you still went out to the mound to talk to your pitchers, which was more than many of your contemporaries did. You knew also, although many outsiders weren't aware of the fact, that one of the toughest problems you had to face as manager of the Yankees was the front office.

It is also true that you and some of your players didn't see eye to eye, but you would fight for your boys when the "men upstairs" would plan to interfere; and goodness knows you prolonged many a players' career with the Yankees by going to bat for him against pressure from "above." You knew the bosses didn't like this and when they saw their opening in 1960 they moved in like vultures, quick to seize and ready to exploit an opportunity.

Six UMass Trackmen Competed In IC4A

by ABE SHEINER '62

Six UMass trackmen competed in the annual I.C.4.A. track meet at Madison Square Garden, New York, last Saturday. Villanova won the championship of the 65-member federation.

Although they failed to score, the Redmen turned in some exceptional performances. Bob Brouillet, the great sophomore from Phillipston, was not considered good enough to run in the seeded heat of the two-mile run, despite his 9:28 effort against New Hampshire two weeks ago. But he won his own heat going away in 9:15.8, forty yards ahead of the second man, and lowered the UMass record again. His time was only one second out of fifty place as he took sixth.

Clarence "Ding" Dussault, well-known track official, personally invited Brouillet to run in next year's Boston Knights of Columbus meet against the usual national field.

The places in the two mile went to Bob Mack of Yale (8:58.3), Tom Laris of Dartmouth, George Norman of Penn State, Morgan of Michigan State, and Pat Traynor of Villanova. Dave Balch also ran the best two mile of his career, placing third in his heat at 9:35.0 and 14th in the field of 45.

Dick Ward showed that he's in the top bracket of weightmen to stay when he threw the 35-pounder 57'5" to finish sixth. He missed his recently set record by half an inch, and was only eight inches out of third place.

Other UMass competitors in the national meet were Ken O'Brien who ran the 1000 yards in 2:17.4, two seconds out of the finals, and Loren Flagg, who was fourth in a fast heat of the 60 yard dash with 6.3 seconds. The dash was won by Frank Budd of Villanova in the world-record-equalling time of 6 seconds flat.

Amherst Nips NU: UMass Fifth In New England Ski Contest

AMHERST COLLEGE won it's first New England Intercollegiate Conference Championship by placing a scant thirty nine-hundreths of a point ahead of N.U. The final race was a 74 gate Slalom held at Suicide Six in Woodstock, Vermont, Saturday March 10.

UMass New To League

UMass, new this year in the league and starting with an inexperienced team placed a spectacular fifth out of fifteen teams under the guidance of Coach MacConnell.

M.I.T. has been absent from most of the conference races this season, and due to the accumulated point scoring system was out of the running for the title.

Individual honors for the year went to Northeastern's Rex Morey, who ranked as the conference top racer. He finished more points ahead of Dick Davidson from Amherst with Joe Cussen, Tufts captain, third. Two skiers from UMass placing in the top twenty were Dick Hurlburt eleventh and Red Kenerson thirteenth.

A banquet was held Saturday evening at the Woodstock Inn at which time the final team and individual standings for the 1961-62 season were announced. They were as follows:

Amherst	559.91
Northeastern Univ.	559.55
Tufts	522.28
Boston University	504.26
University of Mass	492.14
New England College	489.61
Brown	475.47
Boston College	458.68
A.I.C.	436.53
Princeton	402.83
W.P.I.	398.35
St. Amselm's	368.07
Merrimack	357.33
Bentley	307.81

A fourty gate Slalom course set for the women was won by Carol Temple from B.U. with Pat Anketell from UMass placing second. The seasons standing for the Women Intercollegiate Ski Conference, are as follows:

B.U.	375.0
Tuft's	367.4
N.U.	328.3
Mt. Holyoke	307.9
UMass	301.2
Regis College	271.9

The top women skier for the year was Carol Temple from B.U., with Jean Craigin from UMass second, and Rae MacLaughlin from N.U. third.

The members of the UMass Womens Ski team are; Pat Anketell, Jean Craigin, Jane Vanderwiel, Barbara Johnson, and Judy Williams.

The members of the men's team are; Red Kenerson, Ron Packard, Dick Hurlbut, Pete Hellewel, Clark Bowlen, Don Burgess, Tom Clark, and Dave Varisco.

Wake Forest Tips Yale In Overtime

Highly favored Wake Forest had to go into overtime Monday night to defeat Yale 92-82 after the Elis missed an opportunity to win the game on a free throw with two seconds left in regulation time.

The victory moved Wake Forest, the Atlantic Coast Conference champion, into the semifinals of the NCAA Eastern basketball regionals.

Villanova, sparked by Wally Jones and Hubie White, defeated West Virginia 90-75, and New York University beat Massachusetts 70-50 earlier to move into the semifinals also.

They will face each other at the University of Maryland Friday. Wake Forest meets St. Joseph's, Pa., which drew a first round bye.

Referee Steve Honzo called a personal foul on Wake Forest's All America Len Chappell for pushing Dave Schumacher but Schumacher missed the foul. Another shot by Rick Kaminsky, who led Yale in scoring with 23 points, failed as the buzzer sounded.

Tie at Finish, 76-76

The regulation game ended at 76-76. In the overtime Wake Forest put together five straight points to break a 78 tie and wrapped up the game.

Chappell, a 6-foot-8 senior from Portage, Pa., led all scorers with 25 points.

Yale made a great comeback after leading most of the first half, then trailing most of the second half before tying the score at 76 on Dick Evans' field goal with 2:46 left in regulation time.

Yale, the Ivy League champion, took advantage of a slow moving, shoddy Wake Forest defense. The Elis built a 21-12 lead midway through the first half. Only the shooting of Chappell and Dave Wiedeman enabled the taler Deacons to close the gap and pull ahead at 43-42 with 1:27 remaining in the first half. They held the lead until Evans finally tied it.

Jones, Villanova's 6-foot-2 sophomore and White, a 6-4 senior finished with 27 and 28 points, respectively.

Thorn Sparkles

Just as sparkling a performance came from West Virginia's Rod Thorn, a 6-4 junior from Princeton, W.Va. He kept the Mountaineers ahead virtually the entire first half and finished with 53 points.

During the first half West Virginia twice built 8-point leads and the Wildcats never led. But Villanova, hitting on 21 of 41 field goal attempts in the second half, erased a 42-39 half-time deficit and pulled ahead for keeps with a little over 16 minutes to play.

Neil Staebler, Distinguished Prof, Finds UMass Students Politically Informed

by BETH PETERSON

"Politics is a sport with too many spectators and too few participants." This is the view of Neil Staebler, former Chairman of the Democratic State Central Committee of Michigan and presently national committeeman, who is teaching a course in politics at UMass.

Staebler, who came to the University as Distinguished Professor of Public Affairs for the Government Department, feels that most people tend to make hasty judgments about politicians and political matters. Political discussion and participation would improve their understanding of both the nature of politics and of the important current issues. "My deepest interest in politics," he said, "is getting people to participate."

Teaching, A Challenge

Teaching offers a challenge to Mr. Staebler who expects to learn as much from the students as they do from him. It also has encouraged him to read books on politics which he had not found the time to read before, he said.

During his stay on campus, Mr. Staebler has noticed that UMass students tend to take a cynical attitude toward politics. This outlook, he feels, is at least partially attributable to the chaotic state of Massachusetts public affairs. Despite the tendency toward cynicism, the Democratic committeeman found the students with whom he has come in contact well-informed. He was surprised to learn that several have been quite active in politics.

Mr. Staebler does not agree with two currently popular beliefs about American colleges—1) that they are communities of political apathy and 2) that they are strongholds of convervatism. Rather he feels that college students today are both better informed and more interested in politics and world aaffirs than their predecessors have been. He also stated that four years of college tend to make a person more liberal.

Organizing Campaigns

Besides teaching at UMass, Mr. Staebler has several political activities keeping him busy. He is Chairman of the Democratic Party's National Sub-Committee on Campaign Planning and Techniques and recognized as one of the leading authorities on political organization. As national committeeman he has to see that congressional campaigns of Michigan's Democratic candidates are properly managed and financed.

In order to keep in touch with other political leaders, attend conferences, and catch up on correspondence Mr. Staebler has flown home nearly every weekend since he first arrived in Amherst.

The Democratic committeeman is a life-long resident of Ann Arbor, Michigan. His family, which came to Ann Arbor as pioneers in 1813, has a long record of political activity in the Democratic Party. Mr. Staebler became active in the late 1920's when he managed his father's successful campaigns for mayor.

During a "nonpartisan" period in his youth Mr. Staebler helped launch the career of a Republican congressman. However, he soon returned to the Democratic fold and has been active in it ever since.

During World War II he spent four years serving the government in Washington, D.C. He entered government service in 1942 as Chief, Building Materials Branch, Office of Price Administration. The following year he was commissioned as a lieutenant in the U.S. Navy. In 1946, he served briefly as consultant to the Federal Housing expediter, returning later that year to Ann Arbor and political activity.

Forged Strong Party

After the election of Governor G. Mennen Wiliams in 1948 Mr. Staebler and the Governor forged a Democratic Party brought the Party to a new peak of election success in 1958-59. A brief comparison of 1947—the last pre-Williams year in Michigan—with 1960, demonstrates the growth of the Michigan Democratic Party under the Williams-Staebler leadership:

DEMOCRATIC	1947	1960
Congressmen	3	7
U.S. Senators	0	2
State Senators	4	12
State Representatives	8	54
Elected Boards of Higher Education	No Mem.	Maj. on All
Supreme Court	2 of 8	5 of 8
State Officials	None	All

Mr. Staebler also has been active in State and local civic activities. He is a member of the Unitarian Church, the YMCA, the National Municipal League, the National Planning Association, the National Conference of Christians and Jews, the National Bureau of Economic Research, the American Civil Liberties Union, American Economic Association, American Veterans Committee and National Association for the Advancement of Colored People.

Fraenkel said that he thougnt that religious schools are glad to be free of state subsidy since the state can control its own schools.

such widespread opportunities, a wealth of skill and brains and knowledge could have been lost forever to the people of this country. We cannot afford such losses in these times. We must, and I know we will, continue to improve our educational institutions and the educational opportunities they provide for our youngsters."

Incorporated into his speech, Belanger included part of a resolution adopted by the Massachusetts State Labor Council, AFL-CIO:

"Resolved: THAT THIS COMMONWEALTH seize the opportunity to provide a better and more complete education for its young people by increasing financial support of public higher education and by providing through appropriate legislation and executive action for fiscal autonomy that will permit our educational leaders to develop a system of higher education in this state second to none in the nation . . ."

including our state universities, is in the hands of others than individual citizens. This has never been so. Our boards of trustees are individual citizens to whom the public has entrusted the affairs of the University. We hope talent in our society will be given every opportunity to reach its peak, within the limits of public funds. To restrict the use of these funds, impairs their abiilty to provide what we, as citizens, demand. This Bill eliminates those restrictions."

Walsh Speaks For UMass

The Very Reverend Michael Walsh, president of Boston College, who delivered the 1961 commencement address at U-Mass, disagreed with Graham's view. "As president of my own institution," he said, "I have found from experience that you must have firm management direction of the fiscal, administrative, and personnel resources of the institution if you are to support effectively the educational goals of your college."

Father Walsh also felt that "An attempt to standardize institutions of higher education would be a tragedy to our society. It is the most certain way to stifle creativity and progress. Our nation has advanced because of the rich diversity, the unfettered freedom and willingness to experiment of our people. This tradition also belongs to both our private and our public educational institutions which are working in the service of humanity."

Presents Statement For 19 Others

Father Walsh then presented a statement in support of the autonomy bill in behalf of nineteen college and university presidents in Massachusetts.

Wiliam G. O'Hare, director of the Bureau of Government Research, spoke on the lack of funds to attract "the type of man I want. We're not asking for a blank check, but merely asking you to give the Board of Trustees the true functions of trustees."

George R. Richason, associate professor of chemistry and currently acting head of the chemisty department, pointed out that "We need more flexibility in ordering classroom necessities." He caled the delay in filling all orders of twenty dollars or more a serious detriment.

The only full-scale opposition to the measure came from Representative Cornelius F. Kiernan, House Majority floor leader, who said he would favor the bill if it applied to all educational institutions of the Commonwealth.

Lederle: Good Teachers Need Scholarly Work

by ALLAN BERMAN '62 and NEAL ANDELMAN '63

In an interview yesterday, UMass President John W. Lederle said that "it is the policy of this University to stress both teaching and research." This is because a man cannot possibly remain a good college teacher for many years unless he does home scholarly, creative work along the way.

When a man comes out of graduate school, he is very often an excellent, vigorous teacher, due to the steam he has built up in his recent studies. But if teachers do not keep stimulating their minds by new research, then the vigor dies and the good teaching ends.

It is up to University officials to weed out those individuals who, although they may be good teachers now, show none of the potential necessary for remaining good teachers.

"Unfortunately, due to state requirements about granting tenure, the University is forced to make this sticky decison before the instructor has been here three years." Naturally, agrees the President, three years is really a very short time in the teaching life of a college instructor, and no claims are made as to the absolute validity of the decisions that are made.

"We hope, that if we get fiscal autonomy, we can increase the time span to six or seven years before we grant tenure." This way, there would be little doubt about the quality of an instructor when the decision had to be made.

Questions About Recent Dismissals

The following question was put to President Lederle: "All we students are aware of is the fact that there are many good teachers who are being released because they are not publishing or working toward degrees. If your statement about wanting men who are good teachers and researchers is true, can we expect that action will be taken against those people who are doing plenty of research but who are bad teachers?"

"I certainly hope so," said the President. "The problem is that, as President of such a large University, I cannot possibly keep tabs on every member of the faculty." He is forced, he said, to rely on the judgments of the individual's colleagues, department head, and dean.

Do Deans Agree With Him?

It was then asked if the academic deans and department heads had the same philosophy as the President concerning teaching and research.

"I believe so," said Dr. Lederle. He then went on to say that he is devoted to the establishment of good teaching, and that his Deans and department heads are also. But they did believe that good teaching cannot be kept up without scholarly pursuits.

The President said that he would not step in on the decisions of the department heads unless he was sure that the "teach-research" policy was being violated. "I can only set the tone for the University," he said. "But, if I become convinced that the policy of requiring good teaching is not being followed, then I will take direct action."

—NOTICE—

Any junior who wishes to enter the Secondary Education Block and who has a 2.0 cumulative average should make an appointment at once for an interview. Sign up sheets are posted in the main office of the School of Education.

Arangements for interviews must be made before spring vacation.

"Communism And The Far East" Theme Of International Weekend

by MEL SHULTZ '65

Dr. Benjamin Schwartz, Professor of government and history at Harvard University, will launch this year's International Weekend tonight at 8 p.m. in the S.U. Ballroom. The keynote address will be on the topic of the Domestic and Foreign policy of Communist China, while the general subject of the Weekend program will be devoted to Communism in the Far East. Currently working on a series of books covering the intellectual development of China in the Twentieth Century, Dr. Schwartz is author of the important study, "Communism and the Rise of Mao," published in 1951. In 1952 he collaborated with Conrad Brandt and J. K. Fairbanks on "A Documentary History of Commuist China."

BENJAMIN SCHWARTZ

Problem Of Two Chinas

Saturday's program will begin at 9 a.m. with a coffee hour in the S.U. Colonial Lounge where all are invited to meet the many foreign students and other distinguished guests who will be attending the program. At 10 a.m. in the Senate Chambers Cecil Cody, Associate Professor of History at UMass will moderate a panel discussion on the topic of the Problem of Two Chinas.

Participating in the panel will be Howard L. Boorman, Director of the Research Problem on Men and Politics in Modern China, a project at Columbia University. Co-author of Moscow-Peking Axis (1957), he has edited the Contemporary China and Chinese Issue of The Annals of the American Academy of Political and Social Science. With him Will be A. C. Scott, a staff member of the Research Problem on Men and Politics in Modern China. He traveled to China in 1946 under the British Council for Public relations and is currently writing a book on arts and literature in Modern China.

Judd—"American Policy In The Far East"

The program will continue throughout the day and into the evening. At 1:30 p.m. Dr. Walter Judd, the Congressman from Minnesota, will speak on "American Policy in the Far East." In 1925, Dr. Judd served as a medical missionary in China until malaria forced him to return to the United States. Returning in 1934, he endured the brunt of a Communist Revolution and later spend many months under control of the invading Japanese armies.

UMass Seniors Speak For Students On Fiscal Autonomy

by ANN MILLER '64

ARTHUR TACELLI

"I am Arthur Joseph Tacelli . . . a senior at the University of Massachusetts, and the president of the Student Senate . . . I am here today to speak in behalf of the University students, pursuant to a unanimous resolution passed by our Student Senate on February 27, 1962.

"As students, and later as alumni, we shall always be concerned with improving our University. Excellence is our goal. We shall always be concerned about the question, 'What are the next steps toward greatness, toward higher quality?'

"I am convinced that H. 3350 will be for the good of the University.

"As students our major concern is the classroom—the teachers, the instructional materials, and the building. But primarily the teacher. This bill will, I believe, give the administration the freedom it needs to obtain, but more important, to keep those teachers who are best. Flexibility in personnel policies and salaries for professional employees will make this possible.

Among the persons speaking in behalf of greater fiscal indepedence for UMass Monday at the State House, were two UMass seniors. Arthur (Tex) Tacelli and Lucy S. Dubiel spoke before the Joint Committee on Education as representative of student voice and opinion.

Lucy Dubiel, a senior from Fall River, is House Chairman of Lewis House. She is majoring in Sociology, minoring in Elementary Education. She called it a "Very rewarding experience to see our government in the making."

Speaking in an interview Wednesday night she said, "I think it will do wonders for the University. I don't know too much about the intricate details of the bill, but just the idea of fiscal autonomy, not to have to run to Boston every two seconds . . . will be wonderful."

Tacelli, president of the Student Senate, member of Adelphia, former president of SAE, listed in Who's Who in American Colleges, is a Government major from East Boston.

The bill was lauded Monday by scores of legislators and educators in a five hour session before the Education Committee. It has been described by several legislators as the most important to be considered this session.

Other speakers from the University for the bill included President Lederle; Professor George R. Richason, acting head of the chemistry department; and William G. O'Hare, director of the Bureau of Government Research at the University.

"Thank you for this opportunity to meet with you."

LUCY DUBIEL

Miss Dubiel did not give a prepared speech, but rather, spoke spontaneously before the committee. She began her address by commenting on the unceasing growth of the University — the constant building up of the campus and the constant need for this building up.

She pointed out that the University was not just a boys' school, but had many co-eds in it. "I spoke Monday," she said later, "to show student interest from a girl's point of view."

She went on to say how grateful she was to have a university like UMass which offers a fine education, that her fianacial situation caused her to consider it . . . "I appreciate the school."

She explained that she would like to leave a better school—a better education—for those who follow, that "if this particular bill will do this, I'm for it . . . I hope that this commission will think of us, the students, and do what is best."

"I certainly hope that our university can become one of the finest universities in the East."

Budget For Yahoo Has Difficulty

The Yahoo budget caused its usual stir Wednesday night on the floor of the Student Senate. Senator Brauer ('64, Butterfield) brought it to the floor under S7 . . . Moved that the Student Senate approve the Budget Act for the fiscal year of 1962-63. Advised Brauer, ". . . look over the budget carefully with the idea of perhaps making some changes."

Senator Barry Jaye ('65, Van Meter) opened the discussion: "I wonder if the senators here think Yahoo is a good thing . . . I don't see the need for it."

Said Senator Monetta Wronski ('63, Commuter), "Every campus should have a humor magazine . . . It could be improved."

Strongly opposed was Senator Buck ('64, Suffolk, Hampshire, Lincoln): "I want to hear one good concrete thing this magazine has done . . . You're spending $4000 for it . . . For that amount you could pay for the education of two students per year . . . There's a big segment on this campus that doesn't approve of this magazine."

THE READER SPEAKS!

Because of a recent flood of letters on the Collegian office, including readers' comments on "Publish-or-Perish," the Collegian is withholding any specific editorial comment.

However, we feel that at least one comment is in order. The Collegian has received a number of unsigned letters which we feel would be of interest to students, administration, and faculty. These letters cannot be published unless signed.

The Extra Curriculum—4

Exploitation Problem Is Key To Better Student Activities

This is the last of four articles giving the results of a survey of time spent by student leaders on extra-curricular performance activities and part-time jobs. The survey was made by students in Dr. Arthur Musgrave's journalism seminar and members of the Collegian staff. Previous articles were written by Brad Rohrer '61 and Joe Bradley '64.

Dr. Musgrave, a former Nieman Fellow at Harvard University, is chairman of a national committee on student publications created in 1961 by the American Association of Journalism School Administrators. He has been engaged in a study of extra-curricular activities for several years, and has been invited to several colleges, such as Princeton and the University of Connecticut, to discuss these activities.

By JOE BRADLEY '64

"The first thing to do to improve our extra curricular activities is to solve the problem that I am naming the exploitation problem; that is, the problem of the operation of extra-curricular performance activities at the expense of the total education of the student activity leaders. When students spend excessive time on activities they both defeat their educational aims and injure their activities."

Such was the view taken by Dr. Arthur Musgrave, when interviewed about what he thought should be done to improve extra-curricular activities on our campus.

Dr. Musgrave pointed out that it might seem that if a Collegian editor works 20 hours a week he will provide a better community service than if he works 10 hours; and if he works 30 hours, he will do a better job than if he works 20; and if he works 40, he will do a better job than if he works 30. But the excessive time spent by the editor discredits the activity, he said, adding:

"Student performance activities are part of an academic community. To flourish they must promote the community's ideals. "There are many academic advisors, for example, who would not permit a student doing an honors project to be a Collegian editor. The reason is that they have seen too many honors students who were editors fail to complete their projects."

The excessive time spent in activities hurts the activities for another reason, Dr. Musgrave said. He noted that many of the performance activities require good students because the activities require the same skills as the activity we call studying—the skills of gathering and presenting information. To flourish they must attract good students, and good students usually will not be attracted to extra-curricular activities which take so much time that they are "anti-curricular activities", he said.

DR. MUSGRAVE WAS ASKED: "DO YOU THINK STUDENTS CAN SOLVE THE PROBLEM?"

He replied: "No, although their help is important. The solution depends upon a team operation of students, faculty members, and administrators. This is an easier-said-than-done problem. I plan to write a book about it, because it is so complex. Students are quite busy, and lack the time and continuity of experience to become familiar with the organizational policy problems of performance activities. Nor do students determine the basic framework of policies in which student activities operate in every college. Students could do many valuable things, however, that would contribute to the solution."

HE WAS ASKED: "COULD YOU GIVE EXAMPLES?"

He answered: "One thing students could do is develop adequate job descriptions in such activities as newspapers and yearbooks. An adequate job description for a student activity is a duty and time analysis; that is, a list of duties correlated with the time usually required to handle them. Duties should be so distributed that no one is required to spend more than 8-10 hours weekly.

HE WAS ASKED: "WHAT STEPS WOULD YOU SUGGEST?"

He answered: "We need a review of our policies for allocating grant-in-aid funds to students who are not eligible for scholarship; that is, who lack 2.5. We should not pay students to participate in extracurricular activities, whether it be football or acting or editing. But students who have special performance talents, including athletes, should not be working at part-time jobs. Certainly, no student activity leader entitled to scholarship aid should be holding a part-time job if his extracurricular duties require 8-10 hours weekly. If the scholarship committee lacks money, then the student government or the activity should transfer funds to the scholarship committee so that the student need not work.

"What students and everyone else want is excellence in these performance activities; that is, we want them to serve the educational purposes of students as well as teachers and administors. That's why the exploitation problem is the key problem that needs to be solved."

Extra Curricular Crimp

To the Editor:

I want not to incriminate any particular teacher, but I would if I could, incriminate an idea.

We are advised not to participate in extra-curricular activities if they interfere with our studies (our primary purpose here). Is it too much to assume that a teacher's primary purpose here is teaching? But is he not (forcibly) advised not to not participate in extra-curriculars?

I offer this as an example where one administrative idea denies justice. I have had classes called off because the teacher "had too much to do!" One particular English class was called off three times in one semester. Either by choice or force, the teacher's extra-curriculars came first!

Now, supposing this teacher were to ask me to send a reference for him to a prospective employer . . .

Our Name Is Mud

To the Editor:

We've just swum back from Goessmann!

We took the scenic route, across Goessmann "Reservoir" and through "Hasbrouck Marshes." We would have taken the sidewalks that the Commonwealth has so generously provided for us, but our feeble eyes could not discern them in the gloom.

Upon emerging from "Hasbrouck Marshes," we plunged through "Public Health Falls,"—think of it, cool and refreshing—then jumped about in "Infirmary Chasm."

The trip was great fun, and were looking forward to seeing our shoes resemble Dining Commons' cube steak!

We have been told by upper-classmen that this problem has persisted for many years, despite numerous complaints. Perhaps this plea will be ignored, as have the others. We certainly hope not!

A Matter Clarified

To the Editor:

(The following is in reply to a letter which appeared in last Monday's Collegian)

Dear Dr. Cody,

At the March 7 meeting of the Student Senate, the International Weekend requested a sum of $100 for the purpose of obtaining yourself and Dr. Crowley of Amherst as panel moderators. The Senate was informed by the International Weekend chairman that verbal contracts of that amount had already been arranged. Since the contracts were drawn up without funds having been previously allocated, the Senate was somewhat hesitant to oblige the chairman in granting the request. The Senate now realizes that the information presented it through the International Weekend chairman was inaccurate and thanks you for your letter of explanation. We in the Senate truly regret any inconvenience which our deliberations may have caused you.

Fraternities Touted

To the Editor:

The endeavors of the Inter-fraternity Council at the University of Massachusetts have been aimed at three general areas. They are: first, in the formation of certain limits and standards for each of the fraternities to use in its own functioning; second, in providing for inter-fraternity activities and competitions; and third, in the planning of programs in which the fraternities work in cooperation with the entire campus community.

The fraternities take part in many worthwhile campus events throughout the school year, and there are many organizations which have fraternity men as members. There is a predominance of fraternity men serving as class officers and on class committees, in the Student Senate, Adelphia, Maroon Key, Revelers, cheerleaders, and campus religious organizations. Greeks are responsible for our three major social weekends—Homecoming, Winter Carnival, and Greek Week.

Fraternities are very much a part of the structure of our University, even though a minority group. Our fraternity system is, as are all organizations, by no means perfect. We are constantly trying to improve, and welcome constructive criticism, but not sarcasm. Our task is to rearrange the framework in which we operate so that we may better serve the University, but we should not have to make any of these alterations at the insistence of those who have no investment or productive interest in our organizations.

Richard Clarke '64

Centennial Announces Scholarship

There will be no Marlboro contests on the UMass campus for an indefinite period of time.

However, Marlboro, Alpine, Philip Morris, and Parliament boxes are now worth one-fourth of a cent each for a new Centennial Scholarship set up by a committee chaired by Fred Smith '63 and Kev Tevekelian '64.

The contest, sponsored by the Centennial Committee, will run until May 4.

The committee has set up as its goal the collection of 200,000 packs, which will be worth a five-hundred-dollar scholarship.

J. D.'s CORNER

Thanks to those of you who took time out to enter the poetry contest this column is running; the deadline, incidentally, is today. The winners should be announced by next week.

For those of you who missed this first contest, there will be others. Some, such as the limerick contest, have been designed to be as simple as possible, requiring little time, talent, or effort to send in an entry. Here's hoping for an even bigger response to these.

As long as songwriters can come up with tunes and lyrics, there will always be people to write parodies to theses songs. You probably tried your own hand at it once: simply changing a few of the lyrics for a new effect.

Summer Training For Juniors In Women's Army Corp

The United States Army Women's Army Corps offers college juniors the opportunity of a preview into the future. This summer a four week Summer Training Program specifically designed to familiarize students with the executive career as a commissioned officer of the United States Army will be offered to juniors.

This program is conducted at the United States Women's Army Corps Center, Fort McClellan, Alabama during the month of August. Room, board, uniforms, and transportation are provided, and at the end of the training period girls will receive the pay of a Cadet Corporal, $122.30.

Cadets include juniors from colleges through-out the country. In addition to a stimulating course of instruction, social events and sports activities are many and varied.

Students who apply for and are selected to attend this program will qualify to apply for a Commission as a Second Lieutenant upon college graduation. However, since the purpose of the program is orientation and familiarization, there is no obligation to continue in the Army.

Arnoldites Go To Egypt At Tea: Amr Ismail Shows Slides Of Country

On Wednesday evening, March 7, the girls of Arnold House held a very enjoyable tea. Refreshments were served and Miss Seva Sud, a graduate student from India, poured.

Afterwards, Mr. Amr Ismail, who came here seven months ago from Cairo in order to continue his studies in horticulture, conducted a trip through his country by means of colored slides. The girls were interested to see the ancient pyramids and temples which stand today.

Egypt, however, is by no means a country composed of ancient ruins. The slides showed Cairo also to be a modern-day city with a large population, many cars, and beautiful buildings. The University of Cairo is a wonderful place. Many of its buildings are modern in design and the campus is very scenic, located on the banks of the Nile.

Egypt is truly a fascinating country, and we thank Mr. Ismail for making it possible for us to see it. Those who have the opportunity to travel in the future will surely want to visit.

Diane Anzaldi and Nola Carucci served as the co-chairmen for this tea.

New Cage Mile Mark Posted As Mass Trackmen Win, 63 - 40

by ABE SHEINKER '62

In an informal track meet between UMass and Central Connecticut State at the Cage Tuesday night, Jim Keefe of C.C.S. lowered the Cage mile record to 4:12.5. This was the outstanding performance of the meet which the Redmen won, 63-40.

The UMass distance men had it planned so that Bob Brouillet would break the school mile record. Ken O'Brien was to set the pace for three quarters and then Brouillet was to sprint ahead on the last quarter. Everything went as planned, with Brouillet setting a new mark at 4:18.0. But Keefe, who was New England cross country champion last fall, passed Brouillet with two laps to go and easily surpassed the Cage standard. His 4:12.5 is one of the best mile times in N.E. indoor college annals. O'Brien ran a good 4:24.0 in his mile debut.

Keefe came back to run a fine 9:31 two mile with Brouillet second in 9:51. O'Brien, also in his first try at two miles, was third in 10:03.

Another tremendous performance came in the pole vault, with Jim Lumley winning at 13 feet. Lumley has been improving all season since doing 11'6" in the first meet. He cleared 12'7" vs. U.N.H. and 12'6" at the IC4A meet. His goal of 13 feet was always closer and he made it this time. It was a new UMass record and Lumley will be working with a fiberglass pole now in his bid for 14 feet outdoors.

Several other Redmen also showed that they are getting ready for the Spring season, Mike Dineen and Jim Reilly took two-three in the dash; Bob Carpenter won the 600 in 1:19.5; Joe Cassidy won the high jump at 5'8"; and Joe LaMarre had seconds in the 600 and 1000. The freshmen were well represented as Al Richardson and Joe Roper who took one-two in the shotput and Burt Kline had seconds in both hurdles.

Rifle Team Places 7th In Meet As Butterworth Stars

Sophomore Harold Butterworth fired an all time UMass scoring record Saturday as the Redmen Varsity rifle team competed in the N.R.A. Intercollegiate Sectional Match at West Point. Hal posted the record score in the team competition by shooting a 292. He had come very close to breaking the record in previous matches which indicated he had the potential to set a new record. Due to a misunderstanding in procedure Hal's morning score was held to 281 which was adequately compensated for in the afternoon.

Mark Nataupsky, also a sophomore, fired his average of 272 in the individuals, and by increasing his score to 276, placed second for UMass in the team competition.

Frank Fluet was second high for UMass in the morning with a commendable 281 and placed third in the team match with 271.

Team captain Ed Moses, having an off-day, shot considerably below his average in both matches. His scores of 265 adn 267 were the lowest he fired during the entire season.

West Point outclassed the rest of the teams firing with its total of 1154 out of 1200. Only a few points separated the rest of the field as UMass faced the toughest competition it has as yet encountered. The Redmen team total of 1106 placed them seventh in a field of 10 teams.

UMass Scores in the Individual Match:

Butterworth	93-94-94-281
Fluet	97-95-89-281
Nataupsky	92-86-90-272
Moses	91-88-86-265

UMass Team Match Scores:

Butterworth	100-96-96-292

Providence Squad Slated To Defend Crown vs. Temple

Providence, winner of 15 of its last 16 games, opened defense of its National Invitation Basketball Tournament title last night at Madison Square Garden as an outsider.

The Friars, who completed their season with a 20-5 record after a faltering start, played Temple (17-8) in the second part of a first round doubleheader at 9:15 p.m. EST. The first game, at 7:30 p.m., sends Wichita (18-8) against Dayton (20-6).

LATE SCORE
Temple 80
Providence 78 (OT)

Two other first round games Saturday afternoon put the field in the quarter-finals. Colorado State (18-8) faces Holy Cross (19-5) and Navy (13-7) meets Duquesne (20-5).

Two quarter-final games are slated Saturday night, with the other two next Tuesday. Semi-finals are scheduled Thursday evening, March 22, the final Saturday afternoon, March 24.

Providence is back with last year's "most valuable player," little Vinnie Ernst, as well as 6-foot-10 Jim Hadnot and a pair of scrappers, Ray Flynn and George Zalucki. A 6-10½ sophomore, John Thompson, has moved into the regular lineup vacancy left by the graduation of Johnny Egan, a crack backcourt man.

In Temple, the Friars face a comparatively small but fast team, with Rus Gordon at 6 feet, 4½ inches the tallest starter. Bruce Drysdale and Johnny Koskinen are the backcourt specialists while Ed Devery and Earl Proctor, each 6-3, provide the shotmaking ability.

Dayton got off to a fast start this year, bogged down and then finished with a flourish, winning its last seven in a row. The Ohio team has two men who stretch 6-10 soph Bill Chmielewski and Bill Westerkamp; another 6-8, Harold Schoen, and Garry Roggenburk, 6-6.

Wichita doesn't yield much advantage in height, however. The Kansans have a 6-10 center in Gene Wiley and rangy front liners in Dave Stallworth, 6-6, and Sam Smith, 6-8.

The Providence-Temple winner goes against Loyola (21-3) and the Dayton-Wichita Victor faces Houston (21-5) Saturday night in the quarter-finals. The other two quarter-finals will be played next Tuesday night, with the Duquesne-Navy winner meeting Bradley (21-6) and Colorado State-Holy Cross survivor facing St. John's (19-4).

UM Football — On The Road

PART I

by BEN GORDON '62, Sports Editor

The high school athletes who will one day wear a University of Massachusetts football uniform must meet a number of comprehensive standards set down by Coach Vic Fusia and his staff. Just what these standards are, and what kind of individual they are aimed at will be the subject of this article. The answers to these questions are essential to an understanding of the UMass "road-program," a program designed to "ferret out quality student-athletes and sell them the University." It is the hope of this writer that the reader will acquire a greater understanding and appreciation of the "new look" in UMass football.

Coach Fusia approaches his road program with many images and ideas in mind, yet three of these stand foremost in his eventual spotting, screening and recruiting of a promising high school athlete. A potential Redman must stand up favorably as a scholar, as an athlete, and, bove all, as a man.

THE SCHOLAR

An outstanding athlete is worth nothing to his school or to his team unless he is able to stand on his own feet academically. The rigorous entrance requirements of this university, requirements growing in difficulty each year, demand that the student, whether he be an athlete or not, reach the necessary level of achievement in college preparatory work and in the college work itself. Unlike the situation at many mid-western schools, athletics do not, at the University of Massachusetts, dictate academic requirements for a certain few individuals. No one is more aware of this fact, and more in favor of it, than Vic Fusia.

Beginning the road program at the end of November with a list of 600 prospective football candidates, the UMass staff has carefully screened the high school athletes until 70 remain at the present time. Approximately 40% of the original 700 could not meet the academic requirements of the University of Massachusetts. Satisfactory high school grades and performances on College Board Entrance Examinations, plus recommendations from headmasters of the respective high schools are all carefully considered by the UMass coaching staff before recruiting intensity begins.

Not one of Coach Fusia's first recruiting class has failed, thus far, to meet the academic standards of the University. Further, prospects are good that a superior student-athlete is slated to wear the Redmen uniform, this year's prospects having achieved College Board results averaging 25-50 points better than last year's freshman athletes.

A look at the academic achievement of UM football players as related to the standards of other UMass students is revealing. The cumulative average of the male senior class at the University is 2.48, while that of the senior gridders is 2.11. The correlation increases: Junior male students possess an average of 2.15 . . . junior gridders, 2.07. Sophomore gridders trail their clasmates 1.95-1.70, while, in the freshman class, Coach Fusia's first, football players have a 1.84 average as compared to a 1.85 of their classmates.

The "meathead" conception of athletes is passing at UMass. Athletes are becoming as academically productive as other members of the University community.

PART III

by DAVE WILLARD '64

Sure you were bitter, who wouldn't be? You had given many hard years of service to the cause. Contrary to popular opinion, all wasn't milk and honey, especially in the earlier years with the Yanks. Many of your critics used to say, "Who couldn't win with a team like the Yankees?" Sure, maybe you did have a bunch of stars but you know it took more than that to mold those championship teams.

When the Yankees issued that simple little statment about your release, that marked the end of an era for both you and the New York fans. Don't let anyone tell you differently, Case; you might have been booed when you would amble out to the mound or come charging out of the dug-out to dispute an umpire's decision, but the fact remains that those jeers were usually outnumbered and drowned by the cheers. Another thing to remember, Case, is that they are going to miss that familiar back with the #37 on it rising out of the dugout. Sure it was a bit stooped and maybe the gait was a bit shuffling at times, but you were just as active as many of those same patrons sitting on their fannies.

Oops! That gust of wind must have blown a speck of dust in your eye. Go ahead, Case, pull out that handkerchief and get it out. Sure, we know that you are a tough old bird; that face tanned by the sun, wizened by the years, and wrinkled from frowning. But everyone, even the most stoical of us has to show a little emotion once in a while.

But enough of this. You've got a job ahead of you and a tough one. Out there before you is one of the biggest hodgepodges of baseball talent ever assembled on one baseball diamond. And you have been the one chosen to build this team-from the ground up-into a respectable representative in the National League. But who are you kidding? This job was meant for you, you wanted it, and you are in your glory. You are back where you belong, with the good clean sod under your spikes and the spaciousness of the ball park your realm.

Sure, you're not going to have a winner right off, but you've got time, you crafty conjurer. After all, you are only seventy-one years young. What is more important, you've got determination. The determination to show everyone that you do have what it takes to be a good manager and to show those Yankees that you don't need them. Another thing on your side is Rogers Hornsby, one of the greatest hitters of all time. Maybe he is a little plump, his legs bowed and his hair white, but he still can show the boys how to hit.

No, you're not alone, Case, for you there in the office you've got friends who are with you all the way, not trying to buck every move you make. You've got George Weiss up there ready to step in and pinch hit for you any time you need it; for you two are bound together by an intangible bond that is exceeded only by the burning desire to make something of this team and show them.

Call it day-dreaming, call it fate or anything you like, Case, but wouldn't it be something if one of these years you two won the pennant and resumed the old New York "Sub-Way Series" with the Yankees! What's that? You bet Case, we know who would win, why it would only be poetic justice.

Yahoo Budget . . .

Answered Senator Hench ('64 Commuter), ". . . a smile is worth something in the age we live in . . . Some of the people who attack Yahoo attack it because the humor may be off color . . . I think Wes Honey and Tracy Wilson have done a great job in presenting college humor on this campus."

Senator Achenbach ('62 At-Large) presented a suggestion. "Some years ago Ya-Hoo was a subscription magazine. Since everyone bought it, it was put on the tax . . . In the last few years it has been run by a small group of students . . . To the tune of $4000, it's pretty expensive. The best thing would be to give them enough money to put out one issue on a subscription basis and see how they do. I think we should give them another try and let them decide."

Senator Hench pointed out that doing this to Yahoo would set a precedent for other activities, such as The Literary Magazine and the Concert Association, which are also on the student tax at present.

Senator Matthews ('63 Leach) brought out the results of a poll she had taken in her constituency. Of 52 students she consulted, 46 wanted a humor magazine and the "overwhelming majority" agreed that it needed improvement.

Senator Achenbach's suggestion that the budget "be tabled until after the next issue and that the Budgets Committee look into the possibility of running Yahoo on a subscription basis" was passed.

President Tacelli ('62 Van Meter) announced the appointments of Senators Garber and Hebert to Elections Committee, Senator Donahue ('65 Van Meter) as chairman of Elections, Senator Hench to Services Committee, and Steve Hewey to fill Peter Haebler's place as Senator-at-Large '63.

Senator Brauer announced an open meeting next Tuesday night at 7 p.m. to discuss the Collegian and Adelphia budgets.

Nation's Security Comes First—Judd

by MONETTA WRONSKI '63

Dr. Walter Judd lectures to UMass audience on "American Policy in the Far East." A Congressman from Minnesota, Judd was a medical missionary in China.

A responsive audience listened to Dr. Walter Judd, Congressman from Minnesota, expound his views on "American Foreign Policy in the Far East" as part of Saturday's International Weekend program.

Dr. Judd, a physician who served as a medical missionary in China, claimed, "The first objective of a nation's foreign policy is to safeguard the nation's security."

He claimed Red China is a vital part of the Communist conspiracy because of its position in Asia: "China is to Asia what Germany is to Europe—the hub of the wheel."

Reminding the audience that Communist doctrine requires world control he said, "They can't stop at Red China" as long as Japan, Formosa, and Hong Kong are independent of Communist control.

In speaking of our policies toward these and other independent Asian countries he stated, "The main thing is not whether they like us or not . . . it is to our advantage to help them maintain their independence."

"Until the Red Chinese keep their word on agreements they signed yesterday, it's just self-deception to sign any more agreements . . . there's not much hope in trying to get them to be reasonable." He said we should not make concessions to Red China as we have in the past: "What ally trusts you if you do that?"

In regard to recognition of Red China he said, "Don't build up your enemies." He felt there would be no benefits in recognizing Red China, but "we'd pull the rug out from under Formosa . . . both the Nationalists and the Communists know this. If we re-

Chinese Communists Checked Internally, Says Schwartz

by JOE BRADLEY '64

Chinese Communist Aggressiveness is held in check by economic pressures and unstable domestic policies, said Dr. Benjamin Schwartz, Far Eastern authority at Harvard University in an address to the UMass audience Friday night. He stressed that constant flux in policies in China was preventing the regime from stabilizing itself.

Schwartz said, "If the Chinese Communists had really wanted to get into a full-sacle war, they could have invaded the Pescadores Islands in 1957. But domestic instability interviened," he maintained.

He explained that the development of communist policies, especially domestic policy, had been erratic, with many "sharp shifts and changes." He pointed out that the Chinese are using these shifts and changes to become Communist more rapidly than the Russians.

From Communes To Collectives

For this reason, Schwartz said, "The Chinese Communists have recently retreated from the commune system to the more Russian styled collectives."

Schwartz maintained that at this time the Chinese were moving ahead in heavy industry at a rapid rate for a previously agricultural Asian nation. He termed this agricultural-industrial advance "the experiment of working on two legs."

The Russian model which the Chinese tried to imitate is based on "gigantism on a large scale—heavy industry and bigness in everything," Schwartz noted. He said the Chinese attempt at gigantism was to have a "leg of heavy industry and a leg of medium and small industry which the peasants can work on at home after they are through with their work in the fields."

Lacks Natural Resources

The Chinese believed that since their nation is not rich in natural resources, they could increase their economic output by taking advantage of the huge Chinese population by fully using Chinese manpower, Schwartz stated.

The upshot of this seemingly erratic Chinese policy of shifting emphasis from industry to agriculture and back again was starvation, Schwartz maintained.

"But," Schwartz cautioned, "it isn't necessarily starvation in the sense of people dying in the streets. It's more like a very widespread distribution of malnutrition in China today."

"This is simply because of the Chinese attempt to consolidate and organize pure Communism," Schwartz concluded.

GREAT DECISIONS

Nation "Morally Obliged" To Support W. Germany

by DIANA D'INDIA '64

"The United States is morally obliged to support the West Germans "because we have promised to help," and "have encouraged them to annoy the Russians," said Dr. Harold Jackson Gordon, Jr., Thurdsay night at a "Great Decisions" discussion.

Participants in the discussion included Dr. Gordon; Miss Marianne Reinel from Northern Bavaria, West Germany, presently Teaching German at Smith Colleeg; and moderator Greg Prentice, a senior majoring in chemistry.

Evidence of American aid to West Germany was given by Miss Reinel who said, "Germany was saved by the immense amount of CARE packages from America."

She described post-war conditions in Germany. By the East-West division, Germany lost most of its agricultural area, and there was a food shortage, she said. "We lived in an area which was mostly agricultural. We used to beg for potatoes from neigboring farmers. Many people didn't have even those potatoes," she added.

Dr. Gordon compared the industrial level of West Germany after the war to that of 1936. Industry, he said, went steadily downward.

Asked how Germany recovered so tremendously in so short a time, Miss Reinel cited the existence of technical aid, "know-how," and "a clever financial program" as instrumental. "There was still a basis upon which to rebuild . . . There were no jungles to clear" as in the newer countries of today, she said.

About German reunification, she stated, "A percentage of West Germans is not interest in reunification, but about ⅓ have relatives in East Germany."

The United States' position in Berlin was cited as a display of strength. "If the United States gives way on West Berlin, to what does it give way next?" questioned Dr. Gordon.

"One China," Conclude Panelists

In a panel discussion on Saturday morning, Howard L. Boorman and A. C. Scott, both of Columbia University, concluded that "In reality there is only one China —Communist Red China."

An illusion that Formosa is an important military base is untrue since "Formosa certainly has real germs of resentment," Borman stated as one of his main points.

He maintained that withdrawal from Formosa would not be damaging to United States relationwith other nations, and that American-Chinese policy is established by the Chinese, not Washington.

The other panelist, A. C. Scott, an Englishman, said that the United States must recognize Red China as the British have done. "You cannot be like an ostrich with your head buried in the sand," he warned.

International Weekend

IN RETROSPECT

While International Weekend probably gave no definitive solution to the problem which the United States faces on the question of mainland China vs. Chiang Kai-shek's Formosa, the addresses and panel discussions seemed to settle the point that there is only one China—Mao Tse-tung's Communist Mainland China.

As Dr. Benjamin Schwartz pointed out in his keynote address Friday night, Red China's aggressive tendencies seem to be held in check by the fact that Mao's China is trying to stabilize its government, and trying to work out its domestic problems. Red China is trying to consolidate herself as a Communist power. As long as she is faced by industrial and agricultural problems, she cannot be overly aggressive.

In Saturday morning's panel discussion, Howard L. Boorman of Columbia stated three illusions with which the United States is obsessed in its Chinese dealings. He said that Formosa is not important militarily, that U.S. withdrawal from Formosa wouldn't have a bad effect on our allies and the neutral bloc, that U.S. policy on China is decided by the Chinese, not Washington. He did concede that this is a ticklish problem, and moreover, in light of our ambiguous policies, an embarrassing one.

The other half of the panel, A. C. Scott, made it clear that Chiang is the man who left the Chinese since, actually, only one-fifth of the Formosan population is Chinese, the rest are Taiwanese. Mao is more representative of the Chinese tradition, culture and concepts. Scott likened the U.S. to the proverbial ostrich with its head in the sand.

Republican congressman Walter Judd eloquently took a stance opposite from that of all the others who spoke on the problem. To Dr. Judd, then, we would certainly have to award the International Weekend Sterling Orator's Cup. To Dr. Schwartz, Mr. Boorman, and Mr. Scott we are compelled to award the International Weekend Award for Informative and Stimulating Thought.

Our Views Aired But Not Heard

To the Editors:

While the question of "Publish or Perish" is most intriguing, I would like to concern the bulk of this letter with a more basic question: What leads the instructor into the field of teaching?

The unfortunate majority of our women instructors are either young and husband-seeking, or more aged and filling time and purse because the children are grown and gone, or because widowhood has unhappily manifested itself upon them.

The corresponding group of males (especially in the sciences) were unable to cope with the competition and insecurity of the business world and have turned to the (theoretically) serene university life.

Also to be represented is a co-gendered group of instructors who, for some reason known only to themselves and the Almighty, have a dedication to and an interest in imparting knowledge to those innocent beings who present themselves three or four times a week.

In the final classification is a mathematics instructor who, we learn, is to be unceremoniously dismissed at the end of the current semester. Is an instructor possessing such devotion, who spends holidays working in his office and manages to keep a four o'clock class alert and thinking, this easy to dispense with? When is Doctor Anderson going to state and defend the factors leading to the dismissal of this individual?

A glance at past issues of the Collegian discloses that all too often the will of the student population is aired but seldom heeded. I assert that it is time that we get a chance to work with the Administration and stop getting worked over by the Administration in matters concerning the failure or success of the University and of the individual.

Who Knows The Answer???

To the Editor:

There has been a great uproar recently by the students over dismissals and tenure decisions of faculty. A teacher in the mathematics department, whom his colleagues, department head, and students all agree is one of the best teachers of mathematics on campus, is being released. Tenure was delayed one year for a teacher of sophomore physics, who is highly respected for his teaching ability by students and faculty alike, even though his department recommended tenure. Why?

There is a growing wave in this country toward the use of publications as the criteria of good faculties. Since published papers are simple to see, they seem to be taken as the only method of judging a teacher. Obviously this is wrong, you say. Yet, when a teacher is applying for a job his publications are the foremost consideration. The work even of a great educator may not appear until his students are well beyond formal school and then he probably won't be recognized for his influence.

Dean Hunsberger has refused to discuss promotion and tenure of specific teachers with students on grounds that they are "personal matters." Perhaps he is right. Perhaps promotion and tenure are matters of personal intrigue, personal scheming. But I ask him, and you as students and citizens of the campus, whether you have a right to know why your money is going where it is going. Not only does this concern your wallet, but it affects your life. Your teachers, more than anyone else, influence your final choice of career and philosophy.

Everyone wants 'good teaching.' Yet there are opposite opinions. The question seems to be, then, "what is good teaching?" President Lederle has said that the best contributor is one who does research and communicates. Communicates what? Dean Hunsberger has stated that the purpose of a university is to teach old facts and to discover new ones. A fact by itself means little or nothing. It is the relationship of this one fact to others which is of consequence, and this relationship is theory. Is good teaching the presentation of facts or the implanting of understanding of theory?

When a student reaches graduate school he has already set his philosophies; his character as a mature human being is formed. The duty of 'growing up' as a student, then, is left to his undergraduate school. It must teach him in such a way that he will, in four years, change from a high school kid to a mature citizen, from a bumbling student to a discriminating, responsible scholar. This University is, for many low income families, the only place where their students may mature into responsible scholar-citizens. Thus the school is directly responsible to the people of Massachusetts for making itself an educating school, not a training school.

The school must give a student breadth of education as well as depth in a certain field. The first schools were set up to give a 'liberal education,' which meant making a responsible citizen, capable of intelligent thought and action in many areas. Today, with the vast increase of knowledge, a person must specialize in the one field. But unless he maintains breadth of education he is nearly as valueless as if he did not exist. He cannot act discerningly on subjects outside his field. Perhaps an example is Oppenheimer, a brilliant man in atomic physics, but an easy prey for communists, partly because he knew very little about political conditions.

President Lederle has said that if teachers do not keep stimulating their minds by new research then the vigor dies and good teaching ends. Fine. Let's not be quite so blanket in the statement, though, teachers are people; I am sure that the best educator of freshman Physics is not the only violation to this rule. The President went on to say, "It is up to the University officials to weed out those individuals who, although they may be good teachers now, show none of the potential necessary for remaining good teachers."

Do I interpret you correctly, Doctor Lederle, to mean that a teacher who does not do research, who does not publish a certain amount of material, does show the "potential necessary" to remain a good teacher? The tenure of the teacher to whom I referred in the opening paragraph was delayed at least one year because it was felt by Dean Hunsberger that he didn't publish enough. I ask you and the dean if you know how well his papers are rated in his field; if you want quantity, I ask if you know how many pages his papers are.

We must remember that not every thought a person has is of value. The discriminating scholar can tell which material he should publish and which he should not. If our teachers are madly flooding the journals with often worthless material, can we expect them to show us, to teach us, the undergraduates, what is a mature scholar and lead us along the way to a liberal, mature education? But you would make them publish everything so that they will have many titles behind them when it comes to that tenure decision. No matter if the work is of little value when the people making the decisions don't know that value; the only thing that matters is the number of titles.

I have spoken with the heads of the math and physics departments, with Dean Hunsberger, and with the teachers I mentioned in the opening paragraph. They all gave me much information which, with other considerations of the problem, are deleted for lack of space. I am only one student, who knows very little of the whole situation; it is my desire and intention to learn more. If anyone has anything to add please do so. A letter written to me last month was answered, many felt, indecisively. I ask, beg, plead for a reply and clarification, public or private, by those concerned.

Changing Times

"Where Have All The Teachers Gone?"

by MIKE PALTER

At one time or another, one must ask oneself just why he is here. This introspective process usually takes place in the junior year of a university education. The answer to this is not immediately evident. For the answer, however, one must approach a freshman. Creep up on him quietly and then, before he has time to think, yell "What are you here for?"

He will, of course, remain unabashed and reply, with a touch of supreme non-chalance,

"FOR AN EDUCATION, OF COURSE!"

Do not belittle his retort. In his supreme innocence (which declines daily) he has given you the key. Unstained by the greedy hand of the "external world" (of which he is no longer a part) and untainted by the mental prism (which most upperclassmen carry as they would tote a green book-bag) he has told you why you exist.

But do not let him off the hook! Do not let him use his innocence as a shield with which to fend off your more penetrating interrogation. Ask him how he knows that he is getting an "education" (whatever that is!). If he can come up with a reasonably intelligent answer which includes a detailed analysis of his academic agenda, you should immediately bid him farewell and recommence your search. But, on the other hand, if he simply says something like, you might have something.

"I JUST FEEL THAT I'M GETTING AN EDUCATION,"

But let us circumnavigate the Platonics. Let us advance to the crux of the question. If he truly is receiving an education, he shall alas give himself x or y or z. But do not let him get away with this. Ask him, "should you not rather be concerned with that which you study rather than with him who teaches it?"

At this point, the unfortunate freshman may well be at a loss. Certainly he could not presume to state that he does not enjoy Shakespeare simply because his professor is not competent. He would not dare assert that the supreme enjoyment of Newton is conditional upon the feeling which professor so and so evinces toward the subject.

You might ask, "If you are a true student, can you not enjoy your studies even at the hands of one who is either incompetent or distinterested?" If the freshman is indeed a true student, he should probably say,

"I WOULD ADMIRE THE SUBJECT NONETHELESS, BUT I WOULD FEEL AN EMPTINESS."

Now the confrontation with truth! It is true to ask the freshman just what he believes a teacher should be. The freshman will say,

"HE IS ONE WHO FILLS THE EMPTINESS."

Ah yes, the exquisite naivete with which he speaks. Does he not know that it is not enough to fill the emptiness with the "fire of the intellect?" Does he not know that this does not qualify one to be called "PROFESSOR?" Does he not know that this "filling" process is but half of a PROFESSOR?

You must tell him the well-known fact that a teacher is one who must retreat to his test tubes at regular intervals. You must tell him that a teacher is one who must be prepared to offer his thoughts to the world on the installment plan. You must tell him that the teacher is one who is not merely called teacher, but has a higher appellation—DOCTOR.

The freshman will become angry and say that he knows of teachers who do not fulfill these qualifications. You will say that if this is the case, these men can not be called teachers in the true sense. Furthermore you will say that a University cannot grow with men such as he has in mind. He will answer that HE cannot grow WITHOUT these people. You will say that growth is measured in different ways by different people.

"OH THOSE UNTAINTED, INNOCENT FRESHMEN; WHEN WILL THEY EVER LEARN?"

LETTERS ...

To the Editor:

The Student Senate is considering the passage of a bill which would recommend offering a course in Chinese and possibly other Oriental languages. In a personal conference Friday with the Dean of Arts and Sciences, Dr. Hunsberger, your reporter learned that the dean has himself been interested in this, and is thinking of appointing a faculty committee to investigate the possibility of offering such courses. With Chinese gaining such importance, the above measures would be very timely.

Since there are at least 615,000,000 people in the world who speak Chinese, and additional millions who speak related tongues, it is up to the Western world to cope with these increasingly important languages. We believe that courses in Chinese would provide a basis for understanding the concepts of other Far Eastern languages, all of which are written basically the same way, but pronounced differently.

The greatest problem, of course, would be that of obtaining capable instructors; but that problem fades away when we realize that we have 16 well-qualified Chinese graduate students at this university alone, not to mention those at Amherst, Smith, and Mt. Holyoke Colleges, as well as many well-qualified Japanese and Korean students. Education majors would be particularly desirable. For a more far-reaching effect, courses in Oriental languages could be set up on a four-college basis.

A course in a Far Eastern language would naturally present some disadvantages, especially when offered on a trial or experimental basis. Students with only a romantic or passing interest in it would undoubtedly find themselves in a difficult course. The students themselves would probably have to help finance the course. It may have to be offered in the evenings, and without credit; and a lot of study would be involved. But if this language experiment were to meet wide acceptance, then Oriental language courses may become a part of the regular curriculum.

Dean Hunsberger sees no reason why a course in, say, Chinese could not be offered next semester, provided that it gets student support. We therefore urge interested students to support the Oriental Language Bill by expressing their views in the Collegian. Above all, keep this issue alive.

Disconcerning Ya-Hoo

To the Editor:

The Student Senate has (as usual I am told) delayed the funds for Ya-Hoo. This is done on the pretext of awaiting "improvements" in the coming issue; improvements the Senate, as far as I know, has never specifically outlined. The worth of Ya-Hoo was questioned by Senator Jaye, and Senator Buck. Well answered by Senator Hench's "a smile is worth something in this age . . .", may the honorable Senators also consider—Ya-Hoo, in satirizing campus and national topics, often can say more in a cartoon than ten pages of Collegian editorials, and get a laugh in the process.

It was said the publication is now controlled by a small group including Wes Honey, Tracy Wilson, and others. These staff men, indeed all but two or three of the present staff, are graduating this year. An almost assured diploma can do strange things to a previously quiescent person! Thus an analysis of the future of Ya-Hoo, based on its next issue, could place a marked disadvantage on the incoming staff—the plebes who now slave in hidden corners, with one eye on their small task and the other two on the hope for future greatness in the name of Ya-Hoo. Also consider, this small group is not the sole body of contributors. Before each issue, a request is made of the campus, including the faculty (who complain of poor humor but never seem to submit).

I beg the Student Senate, do not judge an evolving being by what is only one small stage of its development. If you are not now satisfied, write a statement of policy for next year's staff, give them their money, and allow the Ya-Hoo a chance under new management. Condemning our campus humor magazine to the horridly complicated fate of soliciting subscriptions, because of past staff behavior, certainly is not logical.

Encouraging Student Government

To the Editor:

Recently, there was an election held to fill four seats in the Student Senate. I was lucky enough to be elected to one of the seats as a commuter representative. I wish to thank those people who elected me. It wasn't very difficult. I went in, got nomination papers, obtained thirty signatures, was placed on a ballot, spoke to some of my acquaintances, and was elected. I was all alone on the ballot—the only name thereon. There were two seats open for commuters.

Recently, one of the more experienced and more eloquent members of the Student Senate resigned. His reasons for resigning are too numerous and extensive to reproduce here; yet, one of them bears scrutiny. He said, in effect, that one could better fulfill his goals and aspirations in other organizations—noticeably, local political organizations.

I wish that each student on this campus could take a little time to look at our student government. It is not very complicated, nor is it ineffective. It is based on our federal government and is democracy, a scale model perhaps, but one which functions. It could function a lot better. How? With your support.

Article II, Section 8. of the Student Government Association Constitution reads "The Senate shall make all rules pertaining to the general campus conduct . . ." This statement should interest many of you. We, as a college legislative body, are representative of more than six thousand students. The largest demonstration in Washington in the last twenty or more years has not been comprised of a number so large. Historically, students have been a great force in the politics of this and any other nation. But, if we are to exercise that authority, we must clean up our own government, our own body. We can be effective, very effective. What body of six thousand couldn't be?

The music of the Tommy Dorsey Orchestra under the direction of Sam Donahue will highlight the Greek Ball on Friday night. Diane Wisdom will provide the voice that compliments the music of the band once led by the "Sentimenal Gentleman".

The next event will be the third annual Chariot Races. On Saturday afternoon each fraternity will race its home-made chariot using four men as horses and carrying a rider. The three fastest heats will run off to determine who cops the trophy and more IFC points. Saturday evening will close with fraternity parties.

The Greeks will present the Limelighters in the Sunday afternoon Jazz Concert. The trio, which has often appeared on television, has also played at night clubs and college campuses. Their performance will climax the entire Greek Week.

Definitely vetoing trade with Red China, Dr. Judd quipped, "How does a basketball team play against a football team on a tennis court? You have to have a common set of ground rules . . . We trade for commercial reasons, they trade for Communist reasons".

As for admitting Red China to the UN, he said, "It isn't necessary. There's no moral justification; to admit them would make a mockery of the principles of the UN." He recommended reading Stevenson's speech to the UN explaining our stand on admission of Red China, which was printed in last Wednesday's Congressional Record.

What about a USSR-Red China split? "Hope for it, pray for it, work for it—but don't count on it!"

Wake Forest NCAA Victor Over Villanova, 79-69

Wake Forest's tournament-wise veterans blew a 10-point lead but came back in the second half to whip Villanova, 79-69 for the NCAA Eastern Regional Basketball Tournament last night.

Packed House

The victory before a packed house of 12,500 in the University of Maryland's Cole Field House, sent the Atlantic Coast Conference champions into the national finals at Louisville next week.

Wake's Deacons, extended into overtime in two previous tournament games, scrapped the usual script with a nine-point outburst during a furious three-minute span early in the second period.

Len Chappell, Wake's 6-foot-8 All American, started the streak with 14:30 left to play, and tied the score a 54-54 on a hook shot.

Before Villanova was able to score, Dave Wiedeman added a field goal and Bill Packer followed with a three-point play on a fast break and another two-pointer to make it 61-54.

That ended the upset hopes of Villanova, despite an outstanding performance by sophomore Walter Jones, who led all scorers with 25 points while hitting 11 of 18 shots.

UM Football — On The Road

PART II

by BEN GORDON '62, Sports Editor

As the University of Massachusetts football teams become bigger and better, their demands from the student-athlete must increase in difficulty. Shortly, UMass will boast of one of the most powerful teams in the New England area, and a team with this kind of potential must, and will, obtain the superior athlete. Obtaining these athletes, and keeping them, will be the key to UMass football hopes.

Coach Fusia's staff has extended its recruiting arms throughout the East, and there is no reason to doubt that this program will not be fruitful. The high school athletes, recommended to the UM department by friends, coaches and questionnaires submitted to high school mentors throughout the area, are carefully screened for their athletic ability through scouting, film reports and personal contacts. Lack of ability, size and related factors have accounted for a large portion of the depletion of the original 700-prospect list.

THE MAN

The difficult problem of assessing the prospect's character and background is an integral part of the UMass road program. UMass coaches go into the homes of high school athletes, talk with parents and principals, coaches and friends, all with the end of obtaining a man of good "moral fiber" as well as athletic prowess.

The idea of the "animal" athlete does not belong on the University campus. Young men, believes Coach Fusia, must conduct themselves as gentlemen; they will have their chance to throw themselves around like animals on the football field, and only on the football field do they have this prerogative.

"There's not a quality student-athlete in Massachusetts whom we haven't spoken to," Fusia has commented, "and it is our hope to get our share." But how does the UMass athletic department propose to compete with schools such as Holy Cross, Syracuse, Villanova and Colgate? The answer: with sincerity and truthfulness.

During a period of approximately four months, twenty-two contacts are made with prospective athletes by the UMass staff, and on most of these contacts some phase of the University of Massachusetts is impressed upon the athlete. What has UMass got to offer? Can it compare favorably to other well-known institutions? UMass thinks it can.

Throughout the state, the UMass coaching staff has been favorably greeted by headmasters and coaches. The comprehensive healthy program offered by the University grows in status each year. What do high school students look for in a university? Here is what the staff of Coach Vic Fusia stresses:

1. UMass is a school of the future, a school of great potential both academically and socially, a potential beginning to produce results. While the Ivy League schools, for an example, look for a superior student across the board, UMass takes into consideration the total person. Here on campus the high school students can find individuals of diverse backgrounds. The type of student on the UMass campus is a great selling point. Here there is a place for everyone.

2. The UMass coaching staff stresses the fund of dedicated teachers present on the UMass campus. Whereas, in many other schools, many of the teaching staff often seek prestige rather than results, the opposite exists to a large part on this campus.

3. Geographic location and access to the Four College Plan provides the student with broad cultural opportunities on as well as off the campus.

4. Representatives of all classes are present on the UMass campus, and students will associate for four years with the broad sampling of people with whom they will be associating for the rest of their lives. UMass does not cater to the "jaguar set," but rather teaches the masses; there is no holding down of the masses.

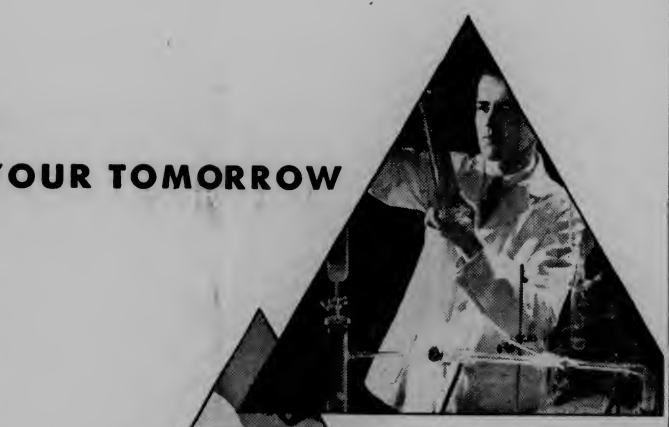
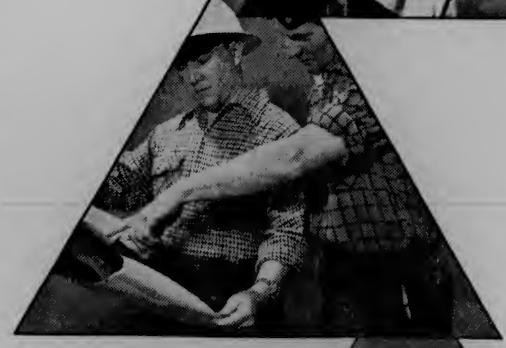
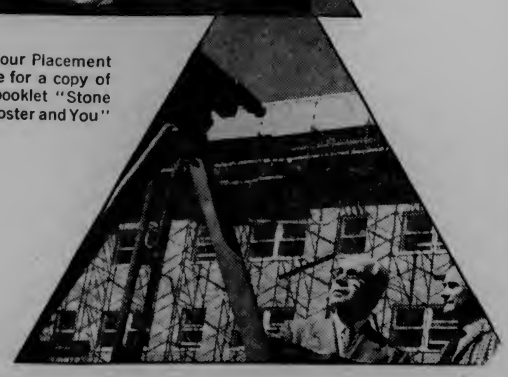
OPPORTUNITIES FOR YOUR TOMORROW







An ethylene plant in Texas; a steam power station in Brazil; a hydroelectric plant in the Pacific Northwest; an oil refinery in Canada; in Maine, the world's first commercial Chemi-Groundwood pulp mill; a phenol plant in California; oil refineries in Italy and Australia — these are some of the recent projects designed and constructed by Stone & Webster Engineering Corporation.

The Corporation also has pioneered in engineering and construction for nuclear projects.

During 73 years of growth and achievement, the primary function of Stone & Webster Engineering Corporation has always been to render highly technical, professional engineering service to its clients.

The Corporation has opportunities for a limited number of new engineering graduates who wish to participate in the engineering and construction of projects in every branch of the steam power, nuclear power, industrial, petroleum, petrochemical and chemical fields.

If you have the personal and technical qualifications required — if you look forward to advancement limited only by your own ability — if you're interested in the idea of becoming a pacemaker in your engineering generation — we invite you to get in touch with us at 49 Federal Street, Boston, Mass.

Redmen Squad To Travel South For Exhibition Games

by JERRY RADDING, Springfield Republican

Don't look now, but college baseball is just around the corner.

Four of the five Western Mass. schools will be heading south before the month is over. Springfield, in fact, will be leaving for its exhibition swing a week from Saturday.

A few weeks ago, the word around the college beat was that only Amherst was going to make it south this year. Now, it turns out, that American International will be the only team staying home.

Springfield coach Archie Allen just completed his trip arrangements this week. The Maroons will spend a week (March 18-24) at Virginia Military Institute in Lexington, Va. Allen has no set schedule, but he expects to play daily games with VMI, Washington and Lee and University of Virginia.

Springfield, an entry in the District I NCAA Tournament last year, finished with a 15-6 record—best in the area.

Allen says his big worry right now is the weather down Virginia way. The Washington-Baltimore area was hit hard by snow this week.

Amherst will spend most of its time in Florida, where the weather is not so much of a risk.

The Lord Jeffs start against Duke in Winter Park, Fla. on March 26. They also have games with Rollins, Princeton, and Stetson before hitting Georgia Southern on the way home.

Massachusetts has a seven-game slate, starting March 26 at Camp Lejeune, N. C. The Redmen also will be at Fort Lee, Va., for contests with Fort Lee and Michigan State. UM winds up March 31 against Randolph-Macon at Ashland, Va.

Williams will be away the longest. The Ephmen open at Elon, N.C. on March 26 and close at Guilford, N.C. on April 7. Other opponents in North Carolina will be Wilmington, Louisburg and Pfeiffer. Coach Bobby Coombs hopes to play 13 games.

Sophomores Spark Zunicmen

A pair of sophomores dominated the University of Massachusetts varsity basketball statistics during the successful 15-9 season, climaxed by the winning of the Yankee Conference title.

Rodger Twitchell, 6'5" sophomore from Westfield, N.J., led the team with 408 points and a 17.0 average. He was also tops with most field goals, 149, best shooting percentage, .461, most free throws attempted, 165, most free throws made, 110, most rebounds, 2992, highest rebound average, 12.1, and most personal fouls, 81.

Backcourtman Pete Bernard, 5'8 from Brockton, ranked as second best scorer with 296 points and a 12.3 average. The speedy Bernard was second in field goals attemtped, field goals made, free throws made and free throw percentage. Twitchell scored in double figures in 22 of the 24 games, including 10 times in the 20 bracket.

Maine's Chappelle Heads All - Conference Selections

Tom "Skip" Chappelle of the University of Maine has become the fourth player in Yankee Conference history to be named to the league's first team three years in a row, it was announced when the conference team as selected by a vote of the coaches was released today. Two players from Rhode Island and one each from Massachusetts and Connecticut also were selected.

The classy sharpshooter from Old Town joins Fred Congleton, (R.I., 1951-53); Art Quimby, (Conn, 1953-55), and Clyde Lord, (Vermont, 1957-59), in the group selected for three successive years.

Probably the greatest player ever to wear the spangles of the Black Bears from Orono, Chappelle led the conference in scoring during his sophomore and junior years but failed by two points to repeat this season. An ankle injury forced him to miss one league encounter and thus the scoring title although he did post the best average for the third time.

Gary Koenig, the hard-working captain and pivot man of the University of Rhode Island, was the only other repeater from last year's team. Koenig, a 6-5 senior from Paramus, N.J. is the only selectee who could be classified as a non-scorer but the blond rebounder was a demon off the boards and his overall play was invaluable to the Rams. Usually forced to give away height to opposing centers, Koenig set a new school record for rebounding this year.

Rodger Twitchell, a 6-5 sophomore, who helped the Redmen of Massachusetts to its first conference championship; Lenny Carlson, scrappy backcourt man from Connecticut, and Charlie Lee, Rhode Island junior and leading scorer in the conference, were other first team selections.

The second team is comprised of Mike Mole of Massachusetts, Dave Ricereto of Rhode Island, Bob Bron of New Hampshire, Dick Ader of Vermont and Andy Czuchry of Connecticut.

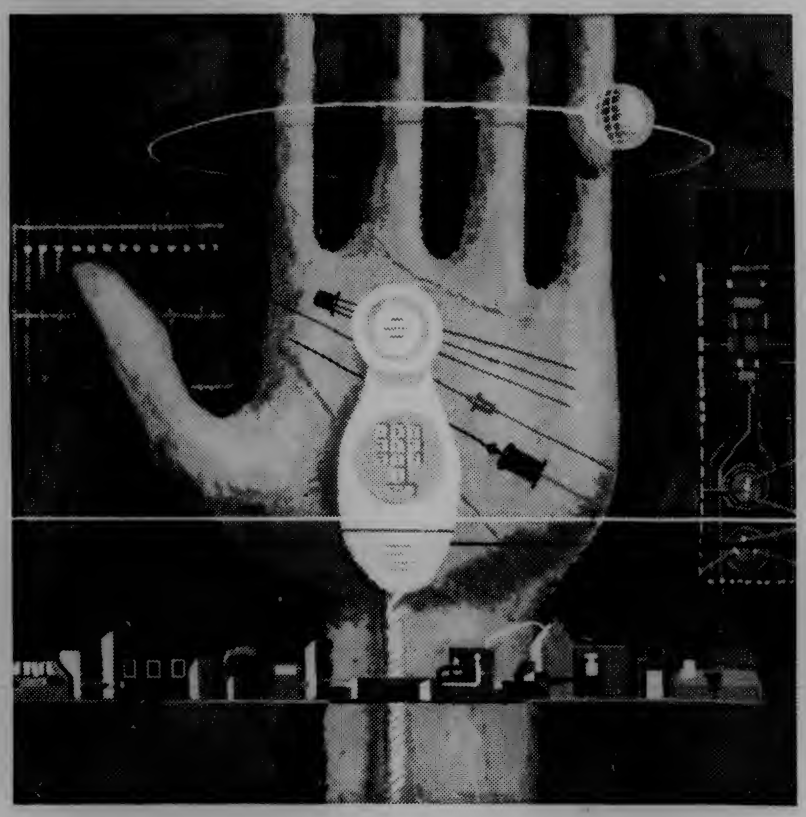
5. Opportunity for productivity and enjoyment are key factors in any high school athletes' mind, and the wide range of opportunity for the realization of these goals on the UMass campus are stressed by the coaching staff.

6. The religious atmosphere is stressed. No one is overlooked on campus.

Thus, the UMass road program, having behind it the wealth of opportunity present at UMass, can compete favorably with other schools in acquiring and holding superior student-athletes.

As the University grows and expands, so must its students' conception of it grow and expand. Athletes, as representatives of the student body, must represent the University in a manner worthy of them as men and in a manner worthy of the University. The narrow conception of athletes as "meatheads" or "animals" is a conception dying slowly on this campus, will inevitably be extinguished as Coach Fusia and his staff recruit promising men, as well as promising athletes.



Our future is in the hands of men not yet hired

At Western Electric we play a vital role in helping meet the complex needs of America's vast communications networks. And a career at Western Electric, the manufacturing arm of the nation-wide Bell Telephone System, offers young men the exciting opportunity to help us meet these important needs.

Today, Western Electric equipment reduces thousands of miles to fractions of seconds. Even so, we know that our present communications systems will be inadequate tomorrow; and we are seeking ways to keep up with—and anticipate—the future. For instance, right now Western Electric engineers are working on various phases of solar cell manufacture, miniaturization, data transmission, futuristic telephones, electronic central offices, and computer-controlled production lines—to name just a few.

To perfect the work now in progress and launch many new communications products, projects, procedures, and processes not yet in the mind of man—we need quality-minded engineers. If you feel that you can meet our standards, consider the opportunities offered by working with our company. In a few short years, you will be Western Electric.

Challenging opportunities exist now at Western Electric for electrical, mechanical, industrial, and chemical engineers, as well as physical science, liberal arts, and business majors. All qualified applicants will receive careful consideration for employment without regard to race, creed, color or national origin. For more information about Western Electric, write College Relations, Western Electric Company, Room 6206, 222 Broadway, New York 38, New York. And be sure to arrange for a Western Electric interview when our college representatives visit your campus.

THE LIMELITERS

Limeliters To Highlight Greek Week Festivities

The Limeliters, RCA Victor recording trio who will be appearing on campus, on Sunday, April 15, have in two brief years become known as the "singing Mort Sahls" among the cognosenti of the entertainment world. Not to be confused with the rash of beardless college youths who have made a mad rush for the banjo and the latest copy of "Sing Out," the Limeliters present unhackneyed material in fresh, modern arrangements. Each of their numbers bears the hallmark of professional musicianship and sophisticated humor. In the words of one observer, "the Limeliters are incapable of the musical naivete that characterizes most folksingers."

Louis Gottlieb, bass-playing spokesman for the group, has a Ph.D. in musicology, which partially explains the professorial aplomb of his hilarious introductions; these explanatory remarks, which fans have come to cherish as much as the music itself, are deadly accurate take-offs on academic stuffiness.

Alex Hassilev, were it not for his devotion to The Group, could easily crash the matinee idol circuit, being an accomplished actor with physiognomy usually required in those circles. The 27 year old linguist speaks half a dozen languages fluently and sings in over twenty tongues and dialects. In addition, Hassilev is a recognized banjo and guitar virtuoso.

Glenn Yarbrough, a vocal star in his own right before joining the Limeliters, plays the classical guitar and is the main solo singing voice of the trio. A lyric tenor of startling clarity and warmth of tone, Yarbrough approaches each song with an unaffected simplicity that wins immediate audience response. His versions of such old chestnuts as "Molly Malone" never fail to fire up the most jaded "expense account" audiences.

Tickets for their performance will go on sale Wednesday, April 4.

Tony Ravosa, a lawyer from Springfield, gave his first concert Sunday in the S.U. Ballroom. Ravosa started his group in 1954 after returning from Korea. He did this as a diversion from his main occupation and to become known in this area. This he certainly accomplished as he is constantly called to play as a dance band to many of the Greek Pledge Formals as well as to weddings in this vicinity. Their performance was ideal for a relaxing Sunday afternoon concert.

UMass Assembly Program Announces Visit Of Douglas

Supreme Court Justice William O. Douglas will speak in the S.U. Ballroom on April 4 at 8 p.m. on Communism versus Democracy in Asia, announced the Distinguished Visitors' Committee of the UMass Assembly.

Justice Douglas has been a member of the Supreme Court since 1939, when he was nominated for the position by former President Roosevelt.

Previous to taking his seat in the Supreme Council, Justice Douglas was a member of the faculty of the Columbia Law Supreme Council, a member of the faculty of the Columbia Law School and the Yale Law School. From 1929 to 1932 he conducted various studies of bankruptcy for William J. Donovan, the U.S. Department of Commerce, Yale Institute of Human Relations and the National Commission on Law Observance and Enforcement.

Douglas was also Director, Protective Committee Study for the Securities and Exchange Commission; Commissioner of the Security and Exchange Comission, and Chairman of the Securities and Exchange Commission. His work in this area led to the reorganization of the Stock Exchange.

In addition to being one of the leading jurors of the nation, Justice Douglas is a famous world traveler. He has written many books concerning his journeys, among them Strange Lands and Friendly People, West of the Indus, and Russian Journey.

The Distinguished Visitors' Committee has announced that there will be no admission charge for the lecture. An open invitation has been extended to the general public, and especially to all students in the four-college area.

Board Of Trustees Founds Microbiology Institute Here

A new Institute of Agricultural and Industrial Microbiology, an outgrowth of research in the life processes of microscopic organisms, has been established at UMass, President John W. Lederle has announced.

International Recognition

The founding of the institute by the university board of trustees at its last meeting, said Lederle, was based to a great extent on the national and international recognition of research contributions by the microbiology section of the Agricultural Experiment Station.

Also helping to spur the formation of the new institute was the desire of industrial concerns and governmental agencies to support an expanded program of microbiology research through contracts and grants-in-aid.

Research in microbiology has been concerned with the use of microorganisms in the production and processing of agricultural and industrial products such as foods and fibers, and the control of microorganisms harmful to man and his environment.

Appointment Soon

A director to head the new institute will be appointed soon, Lederle said. An advisory committee composed of university faculty and administration and representatives of industry also will be named. The institute also will function as an adjunct to departments requiring unique microbiological assistance.

The institute will be empowered to accept grants for fundamental and applied research, enter into contracts in support of the foregoing research and enter into contracts for specific research purposes.

In pointing out advantages of the new institute, President Lederle mentioned a stimulation of the development of commercial activities in the commonwealth which depend upon agricultural microbiology; an increase in the volume of fundamental research at the university; the attraction of outstanding research scientists to the campus, and financial assistance to graduate students.

Teaching responsibilities of permanent staff members of the institute will be at the discretion of the dean of the College of Agriculture and the university provost. Qualified nonpermanent staff members may offer advanced and graduate courses.

Except for the present allotment of funds from the Massachusetts Agricultural Experiment Station, the institute will be selfsupporting and operating expenses will be derived from payments and overhead on grants and contracts.

In addition to the director, the institute may employ service personnel, research technicians and research personnel.

The Institute of Agricultural and Industrial Microbiology will be housed in Marshall Hall, the present home of the Experiment Station microbiology section.

The Collegian will not be published on Friday, March 23.

Fiscal Dependence Means Educational Deprivation

The University of Massachusetts is about to face one of the most critical times since its inception as a four year institution. There is now before the General Court of Massachusetts a bill which proposes to give the University the fiscal autonomy which it desperately needs if it is to grow and prosper as an educational community. We are sure that there have been many rumors as to the object of this proposed legislation. The proposed legislation intends to make the administrative procedures of the University less complicated, and it will therefore indirectly influence the students. The main provisions which influence the student body provide for a wider pay scale which would relieve the problem of our underpaid faculty above the level of instructor; and it would allow the University to hire men of academic distinction as teachers at the salary that they are worth. It is an obvious fact that a University can not hire professorial talent on the national market if the pay it is offering is below the national average.

Bill 3350 proposes to give the University the power to make purchases of up to five hundred dollars without having to resort to asking consent of Boston. Until now the University administration could not purchase more than twenty dollars worth of equipment; and as a result of this provision the University has not been able to provide at least one course for lack of sufficient equipment.

Bill 3350 has behind it educators and legislators from the entire state of Massachusetts. There are some who do not wish to allow the University of Massachusetts to develop into the leading institution for higher education within the state.

Let us admit that giving the University of Massachusetts fiscal autonomy would be a dangerous thing to do. It would be radical; it might even be revolutionary to let an educational institution out from under the suffocation of political control.

The legislators are perfectly correct when they argue that the taxpayer's money supports the University. The main point is not that our parents' money is supporting the University which we are attending; the main point is that education is being, and is going to be deprived of those who follow us unless this bill is passed.

Last Minute Call For Faltering Drive

This year's Campus Chest drive is falling behind schedule.

We are now at the three-quarter mark of the drive, and the money raised so far does not even equal the amount raised last year at the half way point. The returns from the dormitories have been below last year's pace in both size of individual donations, and total returns.

Funds raised during this drive go towards the UMass scholarship fund and the World University Service. What is the WUS? To answer this question, a portion of the March 7 Collegian editorial is reprinted here.

The World University Services (WUS), with national committees in forty countries, has been concerned with higher education on an international basis since World War I. In this country the problem of the individual has been one of financing his education and, although this entails some hardship, it is usually accomplished without too much deprivation. In many countries, however, this is only one of many problems. Such problems as acquiring the necessary books, even with the money on hand; finding adequate shelter, some type of room, even a small one; having enough to eat so that energies can be used for learning instead of being wasted in an ever constant meal-to-meal search for food.

The WUS makes it possible for students to subsist at a level that is at least a minimum necessary to accomplish his purposes. If you haven't given a donation in the dormitory, please do so right away. Loose change dropped into the jars in the Student Union adds up fast and also helps push the drive over the top. (Money dropped into these jars is also a voice for your favorite "campus miss.")

Fiscal Autonomy
"Singular Legislation"

Fiscal autonomy for the University, called by President Lederle "The most important piece of single legislation in many years," has many myths surrounding it. What is "autonomy?" Just how much of this "autonomy" is the university asking? Does "autonomy" mean freedom from control? These are only typical of the questions asked both by students and citizens concerning the proposed fiscal autonomy bill, H. 3350.

When questioned as to whether fiscal autonomy meant a complete freedom from all state control, President Lederle said simply, "We don't ask for that." He elaborated on this by pointing out that we still will make up day to day reports, we still have the quarterly and yearly audits. These, he feels are controls enough for a university with the administrative set-up that exists here. As now, copies of all transactions are to be sent to Boston. We do not want to hide our records from the legislators, they will be able to examine our records at any time. He told how many of the present restrictions developed from abuses which should not be possible at a university. Therefore why should a university be burdened by a load of financial restrictions which are unjustified in the light of the university's record?

The new law, President Lederle feels, would give "real accountability with flexibility." The accountability would be furnished by easy access to our records by legislators, and through the budget hearings held yearly, where the President would have to account for every cent spent by the University. All transfers between accounts would have to be explained then, and explained well. The flexibility would be attained by an improved salary scale which would allow the University to recruit those instructors needed and give them a definite offer at that time, not months after, as we are forced to do presently.

Drawing upon his experience as comptroller of the state of Michigan, the President pointed out how, in many cases involving small sums, the state would save money by adopting the measure. The paper work involved, he said, often eats up any savings that might be made. He said that centralized processes do not result in economy and efficiency. They do not get as much for the educational dollar.

The President said that this bill was vitally necessary to us, it is the only way to achieve an effective University that will give one dollar's worth of education for every dollar that is appropriated, that it is the only way that we will ever get a first rate education. He ended with this question: "Are the young people of Massachusetts to be given a second rate education?"

— Senate Explanation —

To the Editor:

The Student Senate, last Wednesday night, delayed its final vote on the Ya-Hoo budget until after the next issue appears. The reason for this action was to allow the students to see how their money is being spent this year before making a decision for the one ahead. If the Senate had acted with only the first issue as evidence, the budget might have been defeated. The Senate is actually giving the Ya-Hoo staff a chance to prove to the student body that it is worth four thousand of its tax dollars.

The Senators do not want to interfere with the magazine's freedom of the press by proposing specific improvements. However, the suggestion was made that Ya-Hoo return to a subscription basis. This idea is not unreasonable since it worked very successfully in the past when the enrollment was much smaller. In fact, our campus humor magazine was so popular that it was soon included in the Student Activity Tax. There it has remained, subsidized year after year, regardless of the students' response to it.

The Senate action is only an attempt to evaluate a portion of the Student Activity Tax Fund expenditures. The "YaHoos" have been under fire for over a year, and it is time for them to produce a magazine that the students can be proud of and can read, feeling that it is worth twenty-five cents (25c) per issue. If Ya-Hoo can't do this, the Senate should, and hopefully will, not pass its budget.

— Ya-Hoo Thanks (?) —

To the Editor:

The editors of Ya-Hoo wish to take this opportunity to thank the student body for its response to the call for material for the forthcoming issue of the campus humor magazine. The response has been altogether gratifying. While the second issue is now in the presses, work is starting on the third issue. Because of the size of the planned second issue, and because of the amount of the submitted material, the second issue of Ya-Hoo will be late in release. It is for this reason that material is being accepted for the third issue before the publication of the second.

The editors hope that the student body will feel that the quality and the size of the second issue of Ya-Hoo more than make up for the tardiness of its publication. The editors also hope that material for the third and final issue of the year will be submitted soon enough, and in enough quantity, that the third issue will be released before, rather than after, its deadline.

Once again the editors would like to make known their appreciation to the student body for its interest and appreciation. The editors feel quite certain that this, the forthcoming issue of Ya-Hoo, will prove to be the best issue ever printed; and for the help given by the students in making it so, the editors give hearty thanks.

— Dining Commons Din —

To the Editor:

This letter is written in protest, to call attention to the outlandish policy exhibited by the managerial personnel operating our Dining Commons. As student employees in this establishment we feel we're entitled to a limited degree of consideration, that is to say, a more satisfactory employee-manager relationship.

Our main gripe is with the attitude the management takes against the student employees. In their presence we're made to feel "inferior" to the extent that it gives us great displeasure to work in their presence. Not only is there an abuse of superiority, but to use an old cliché—"there are too many chiefs and not enough braves."

The underlying principle of any successful management is efficient production. This can only be achieved through "effective" supervision, with cooperation of the employees. How can these ends be achieved when the management appears incapable of handling such affairs? We feel that the situation at present is one that demands immediate attention.

UMass Coed Awarded Scholarship In U. S. Army Student Nurse Corps

Many a stalwart male has gone from UMass to a second lieutenancy via the R.O.T.C. program, but Ann Feeley is the first from the University to go in the same direction via the School of Nursing.

A sophomore from Medford, Ann has worked with Dean Mary Maher of the School of Nursing, and Lt. Col. Albert W. Aykroyd, Head, department of military science at UMass. Lt. Col. Aykroyd congratulated Ann on a telegram she received from U.S. Army Surgeon General Leonard Heaton informing her of her acceptance into the U.S. Army Student Nurse Corps.

Under this program, Ann's tuition, room, board, books, uniforms, medical and dental expenses for the next two years will be paid by the government. In addition she will receive a monthly pay check. After graduation, Ann will fulfill her commitment by serving three years in the Army Nurse Corps as a second lieutenant.

Qualified student nurses in their junior year are eligible to apply for the program.

SHAKESPEARE DOESN'T LIVE HERE ANY MORE

A recent and most heartening development in American college life has been the emergence of the artist-in-residence. In fact, the artist-in-residence has become as familiar a sight on campus as Latin ponies, leather elbow patches, Rorschach tests, hula hoops, and Marlboro cigarettes.

And we all know how familiar that is—I mean Marlboro cigarettes. And why should it not be familiar? Why, where learning is king, where taste is sovereign, where brain power rules supreme, should not Marlboro be everyone's favorite? The same good sense that gets you through an exam in Restoration Poetry or solid-state physics certainly does not desert you when you come to pick a cigarette. You look for a flavor that is flavorful, a filter pure and white, a choice of pack or box a lot to like. You look, in short, for Marlboro—and happily you don't have to look far. Marlboro is available at your friendly tobacconist's or vending machine, wherever cigarettes are sold in all fifty states and Las Vegas.

But I digress. We were speaking of the new campus phenomenon—the artist-in-residence—a man or woman who writes, paints, or composes right on your very own campus and who is also available for occasional consultations with superior students.

Take, for example, William Cullen Sigafoos, artist-in-residence at the Toledo College of Belles Lettres and Fingerprint Identification.

As we all know, Mr. Sigafoos has been working for many years on an epic poem in rhymed couplets about the opening of the Youngstown-Akron highway. Until, however, he went into residence at the Toledo College of Belles Lettres and Fingerprint Identification, his progress was not what you would call rapid. He started well enough with the immortal couplet we all know: They speed along on wheels of rubber, rushing home in time for supper . . .

Then Mr. Sigafoos got stuck. It is not that his muse deserted him; it is that he became involved in a series of time-consuming episodes—a prefrontal lobotomy for Irwin, his faithful sled dog; fourteen consecutive months of jury duty on a very complicated case of overtime parking; getting his coattail caught in the door of a jet bound for Brisbane, Australia; stuff like that.

He was engaged in a very arduous job in Sandusky—posing for a sculptor of hydrants—when an offer came from the Toledo College of Belles Lettres and Fingerprint Identification to take up residence there, finish his magnum opus and, from time to time, see a few gifted students.

Mr. Sigafoos accepted with pleasure and in three short years completed the second couplet of his Youngstown-Akron Turnpike epic: The highway is made of solid concrete and at the toll station you get a receipt.

"What is truth?" said one.

Then a few gifted students came to visit him. They were a prepossessing lot—the boys with corduroy jackets and long, shaggy beards; the girls also with corduroy jackets but with beards neatly braided.

"What is truth?" said one. "What is beauty?" said another.

"Should a writer live first and write later or should he write and do a little living in his spare time?" said another.

"How do you find happiness—and having found it, how do you get rid of it?" said another.

"Whither are we drifting?" said another.

"I don't know whither you are drifting," said Mr. Sigafoos, "but as for me, I am drifting back to Sandusky to pose for the hydrant sculptor."

And back he went, alas, leaving only a fragment of his Youngstown-Akron Turnpike epic to rank with other such uncompleted masterpieces as Schubert's Unfinished Symphony, the Venus de Milo, and Singer's Midgets.

'63 Class Council To Discuss Senior Taxes On Thurs.

Senior taxes for graduation activities will be the subject under discussion at a meeting of the Junior Executive Council tomorrow night in the Student Union Council Chambers at 7:30 p.m. Skip Oakes, president of the Junior Class, will preside at the meeting which is open to the entire class.

"The purpose of the Council is to promote and limit class activities," said Oakes, "and to represent the class as a whole."

"I would say the class spirit was adequate," he continued. "But the results of Winter Carnival show the Junior Class more interested and efficient compared with other classes."

"The class of '63 had the most financially successful Winter Carnival in UMass history," Oakes stated.

Each class has an executive council to act in an advisory capacity towards the class. The Junior Executive Council now has thirty-five members who are chosen each September by the class officers.

Student - Athletes? — Forty - Six Redmen Are Honor Students

The concept that student-athletes are increasing in numbers at the University of Massachusetts is verified by the fact that forty-six members of Redmen intercollegiate athletic squads were included on the University Honor's List compiled for the 1961-1962 fall semester and released last week by the registrar's office.

Buckeye Grid Coach Asks More Stress On Education

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. (AP) —Ohio State football coach Woody Hayes urged fellow coaches Monday to do more than teach football.

"I feel a coach must help every youngster on his squad to stick it out (to a college degree) and realize how much his education means," Hayes said in a talk at the National Football Clinic.

"I feel we give a boy more earning power in college than he gets in professional football, and I don't mean under the table.

"He gets a 4-year college education, and this could very well be worth $180,000 in future earning capacity, if he sticks it out and gets his degree."

Hayes contended that an educated man will be better equipped if he also plays football or some other competitive sport in college.

"The competition and the will to win our kids learn on a football field is of utmost importance throughout their entire lives," the Buckeye's coach said. "On he football field the kids learn how to live up to their potential. They learn how to sacrifice some of their ego for the good of the team. They learn how to be leaders."

Girl Watcher's Guide

Presented by Pall Mall Famous Cigarettes

Blue-Jeaned Ranchwrecker

LESSON 10- Girls should be real

Bird watching manuals clearly state that this is the study of living birds. It has nothing whatsoever to do with stuffed birds, models of birds or photographs of birds. The girl watching purist observes this same rule. In other words, girl watchers do not consider it a true function of their art to watch girls in movies or magazines.

The real, live girl is only and always the object of his quest, the subject of his contemplation. As experienced girl watchers (such as the cowboys above) know, there's no substitute for the real thing. (Pall Mall smokers know it, too. There's no substitute for Pall Mall's natural mildness—it's so good to your taste!)

Compare all three! Smoke "traveled" through fine tobacco tastes best. See the difference! With Pall Mall, you get that famous length of the finest tobaccos money can buy. Pall Mall's famous length travels and gentles the smoke naturally . . . over, under, around and through Pall Mall's fine, mellow tobaccos. Makes it mild . . . but does not filter out that satisfying flavor!

Pall Mall's natural mildness is so good to your taste!

So smooth, so satisfying, so downright smokeable!

UM WRESTLERS

The UMass wrestling team, coached by John Douglas, has made a good deal of improvement in the last season. Although the squad finished with a disappointing 1-6 record, the sole win coming against Connecticut, gradual improvement of UMass competition was evident in the team's matches.

Coach Douglas and the team are looking for a better season next year, by virtue of their added experience.

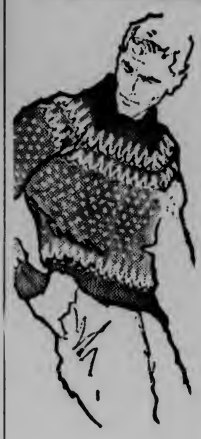
CLUB & CAMPUS FASHIONS

BY O. E. SCHOEFFLER, ESQUIRE'S Fashion Director

Mid-winter around the campus finds the brisk influence of ski-wear strongly evident in the look of outerwear . . . and some great new Icelandic ideas showing up in bulky, rugged sweaters. Color is bolder than ever, with flannel shirts the perfect background for fancy vests—and plenty of both to choose from. With the season's high splash of colorful sportswear, all the more fun is the switch to the formal elegance of the black dinner suit—an absolute must for the well-rounded ego . . .



OUTERWEAR SIRED BY SUN VALLEY . . . or Stowe or St. Moritz—so patent is the ski-look in the sporty new jackets: like square-quilted, lustrous Nylon with attached hood and zip front . . . Nylon fleece lining makes the whole job soft, warm and weightless. The color might be bright blue or more avant-garde: blackish or grayish brown, pointing towards olive shades, natural tan and strong tones. Other good-looking ski-wear effects you'll like: the variety of zipper jackets with quilt lining, smooth outside.

HOT NEWS IN A WARM SWEATER . . . borrowed from the Icelandic, this multicolor pullover with stripes-in-depth is a big hit for study, loafing or dormitory. White, green, tan and red are the tones in the unusual patterned stripes.

THE FLANNEL SHIRT IN A NEW ROLE . . . background for the fancy vest. Note the shirts in solid high shades, specially blue, green, olive, yellow, bright red, tan and gold—excellent with your patterned vests. Choose a figured, striped or plaid shirt to best carry off your solid color vest. All button-down, these sportshirts come in wool or good-looking fiber blends.

THE VEST—BOLD NEW FRONTIERS . . . the return of the fancy vest opens up vast possibilities from the bright, brash colors to the sporty designs, both traditional and new. Increasingly seen on campus is the classic Tattersall. Its distinctive two-color crossbar comes in red with black, green with gold, or blue with black—on white or cream background. Popular, too, are solid bold colors, specially red, yellow, tan, olive and gold to set off the patterned tweeds, plaids and checks.

Big challenge, the vest . . . because it's not so simple to co-ordinate it with four other garments that don't match: jacket, slacks, shirt and tie. Adding the fancy vest should emphasize either pleasant contrast or harmony. Usually, patterned garment look best against plain garments, and vice versa. Often, however, pattern in your jacket, like tweed, herringbone, hazy or finechecks, will carry off a striking print or Tattersall handsomely. If you get stymied, you'll find guidance at your favorite menswear store.

IN A BLACK DINNER SUIT you're classic, correct and handsomely turned out. Here's the suit that has it all: of black mohair or blended worsted/dacron, it's single breasted with satin shawl collar and striped trouser. Choose a harmonizing cummerbund, matching straight-cut bow tie, pleated bosom collar-attached dress shirt and—for really top level posh—black patent leather slip-ons.

PILE INTO A PILE LINED COAT OR JACKET . . . most popular for sports and general knockabout—the pile shows on the collar, the outside is of processed cotton, water and wind repellent . . . the out-standing color a natural light tan.

Premier Showman Winner Announced In Livestock Show

John W. Brown won the title of Premier Showman at the 22nd annual Little International Livestock Show held March 17.

Reserve Premier was won by Douglas Briggs who had previously taken first place in the Morgan horse division. Honorable mention was won by Orrin W. Mason, Jr. who also took first place in the Chester White swine class.

Also participating in the premier class were: Herbert Karle, Jr., Joel Shapiro, Thomas Ross, John Steel, and Linda Lupien.

The Co-ed Milking Contest was won by Ginny Spence representing KAT; second place went to Barbara Gardella representing Abbey; third was Anne Richards, representing KKG; and fourth by Andrea Apsit, representing Crabtree.

Opera Workshop Will Hold Auditions For Folk Opera

Auditions for the forthcoming presentation of Down In The Valley, a folk opera which will be presented on May 6 by the newly revived Opera Workshop, will be held Tuesday and Wednesday, April 3 and 4.

Principals, chorus members, and dancers may try-out from 1 to 5 p.m. on Tuesday at the Music Office downstairs in Old Chapel and from 7 to 9:30 p.m. on Wednesday in Old Chapel Auditorium. Students interested in the technical side of this production may sign-up in the Music Department Office.

This "students' opera" by Kurt Weill is half of a program to take place in the Rhododendron Gardens on Sunday night, May 6. Also appearing will be The Telephone, a one act opera by Menotti who also composed the last Opera Workshop presentation, Amahl and the Night Visitors.

The Telephone is an amusing work which also appeared in a French version, L'Amour a Trois, which was very successful. It has a cast of two, and the campus version will play Jay Springer, Protestant Chaplain, as Ben, and Beverly Anderson, past lead in the Amahl production, as Lucy.

Weill, creator of Down In The Valley, is perhaps best known for his collaborated work with Maxwell Anderson, Lost In The Stars. Lost In The Stars appeared on campus in the spring of 1953 by the University Chorale, in cooperation with the Operetta Guild.

MEANDERING MIKE

March 7 was a big night down here. Our new officers were elected: Station Manager, Niel Nevins; Business Manager, Jackie LaPointe; Production Director, Jim O'Hern; Public Relations Director, Vern Pero; and Technical Director, Dave Mainwaring. I'm sure the station members join me in saying thanks to the outgoing officers, Eric Sandel and Ken Brophy.

The new officers have been busy as bees lately planning program changes which will go into effect right after vacation. Vern Pero's Impulse has been moved to 7:30 on Tuesday nights, and Readings in Poetry with John Aho will be heard at 7:30 on Thursday nights. They have also made some new additions to our fine family of shows: CBC (which, in plain English, means the Canadian Broadcasting Company) will initiate an excellent half-hour-long dramatic series; another is the Guard Series featuring such favorite groups as the Four Preps and Si Zentner as presented by the National Guard. In addition to these outstanding programs, WMUA will also broadcast an hour-long series of Great Drama.

In case you did not come into the S.U. Saturday between the hours of 11 and 4, you really missed something. I was there along with some of the WMUA staff doing a special broadcast in the lobby on behalf of the Campus Chest. For a nominal donation to the Campus Chest, we played the record that you requested over the air. I hate to brag, but seeing as no one else will, I must say that it was an extremely successful day; however, it would not have been as great if I weren't there (one finds it very difficult to broadcast without a microphone).

Before I sign off, and it looks like it's that time again, I must extend most humble apologies to Steve Jenkins whom I misnamed last week. He is the originator of Classics which is aired Saturday nights from 7-1 a.m. I don't know how I could forget; after all, he keeps me up until 1 a.m. every Saturday night (I guess he doesn't think we microphones have any sort of social life. Boy! is he mistaken!!!!!).

Assoc. Justice Wm. O. Douglas Delivers Speech Here Tonight

William O. Douglas, Associate Justice of the U.S. Supreme Court, will speak at the University of Massachusetts in the Student Union ballroom, April 4, at 8 p.m. The talk is the second in the current series of lectures sponsored by the University students' Distinguished Visitors Program.

After graduation from Columbia Law School, Justice Douglas served on the faculty for four years before joining the staff of Yale Law School. During the depression he conducted a number of studies on bankruptcy, and in 1937 he became Chairman of the Securities and Exchange Commission. Two years later President Roosevelt nominated him for the position of associate justice of the Supreme Court.

Justice Douglas is well known as a world traveller, and his experiences have resulted in 15 books. He attributes his interest in nature and hiking to an early illness. Stricken with infantile paralysis, he took to climbing hills and mountains to strengthen his legs.

The Distinguished Visitors Program is administered by the Massachusetts Assembly, made up of representatives from the student body, University trustees, faculty, administration and Associate Alumni. Funds are derived from student taxes levied by the Student Senate.

Justice Douglas' talk is open to the public without charge.

Staebler To Speak On Democracy's Meaning

A leading authority on political organization will present the first of four talks on "Dynamics of Democracy" at UMass this week.

Neil Staebler, chairman of the Democratic State Central Committee of Michigan for more than ten years and Distinguished Professor of Public Affairs at the University this semester, will speak in the Council Chambers of the S.U. Thursday evening, April 5 at 8 p.m. The talk, entitled "The Meaning of Democracy: Appearance and Reality," is open to the public without charge.

A resident of Michigan and graduate of the University of Michigan, Mr. Staebler began his political career in the late 1920's when he successfully managed his father's campaign for Mayor of Ann Arbor. He has never run for office himself, and while he devotes a great deal of time to politics, he is primarily a businessman.

In 1950 Michigan Governor G. Mennen Williams appointed him chairman of the Democratic State Central Committee. During the more than ten years that he held this office, the Democratic party made significant gains in Michigan.

Mr. Staebler has served as chairman of the Democratic National Advisory Committee on Political Organization since 1955. In 1960 he was appointed to the National Committee's 1960 Campaign Planning Committee.

AFROTC Competes In Drill Team Competition

The UMass AFROTC Drill Team, the Flying Redmen, left this morning for the National Drill-Team Competitions annually held in Washington, D.C.

The UMass team, New England Champions for the past six years, is presently under the command of Cadet Lt. Colonel Archie Babaian and Cadet Captain Peter Cabana. The Redmen will compete with the top fifty-four teams in the country.

Babaian stated when asked about the prospects of the competition that, "The team has as much, perhaps even more, will to win than any other team that I have been on in my four years here at the University."

The drill leader went on to say that the team has been practicing since September for the Washington contest as well as for the competition to be held at Westover Air Force Base Field on April 29. "Often they spend as much as eight hours a week in practice," he stated.

The UMass team will compete against strong opposition such as Purdue University's drill team and the Rutgers University Queen's Guard.

After the drill competitions, the team will march in the annual Cherry Blossom Festival along with all other competing teams.

The contest will be televised from 10 a.m. Thursday morning.

John Ryan Named Sec. Of UMass

A Wisconsin professor, Dr. John W. Ryan, has been named Secretary of UMass effective July 1, it was announced today by President John W. Lederle.

Dr. Ryan, presently associate director of the Bureau of Government at the University of Wisconsin, will serve as secretary of the UM Board of Trustees and administrative assistant to President Lederle.

Formerly assistant director of the Institute of Public Service at Indiana University, Dr. Ryan was appointed assistant professor of political science at the University of Wisconsin in 1958. Two years later he was promoted to the rank of associate professor and at the same time assumed the associate directorship of the Bureau of Government.

A participant in the public administration project conducted for the Government of Thailand by Indiana University's Institute of Public Service, Dr. Ryan has had extensive experience as coordinator of training programs for public officials.

A member of the Board of Directors of the Madison (Wis.) Chapter of the American Society for Public Administration, he has written several articles on local government and municipal administration.

Dr. Ryan, a graduate of the University of Utah, received his M.A. and Ph.D. degrees from Indiana University. He is married and the father of three children.

3350 AND MASSACHUSETTS

A BILL — A BOON

by MITCHEL MILLER '63 and ELWIN McNAMARA '64

Since the idea of fiscal autonomy for the Uni... ...ty of Massachusetts has become an issue, there have been many articles saying how good autonomy would be for the University, but none has been specific enough in stating the purpose of the bill and its anticipated effects. This article and those to follow are an attempt to show the effects of H.3350—The Fiscal Autonomy Bill.

PART ONE—THE FACULTY

One of the major effects of the proposed legislation is a greater measure of control over professional personnel, i.e. teachers, for the University. This change in control will mean many benefits for those now at the University, and promises to make the recruiting of new faculty an easier task.

SALARY SCALE TO BE SPREAD

Under the present system, salaries at the associate, and full professional ranks are woefully inadequate. According to the report of the American Association of University Professors, the salaries at these ranks are far below the national average. But, as we descend to the level of instructor, we find the scale above that of the national average. This inverse proportion has led to the inability of the University to compete on a national market for any qualified faculty above the rank of instructor. The present salary system is so arranged that if pay raises are granted to those in the upper levels, it must be granted to the other ranks also. This, obviously, solves nothing.

The proposed bill would enable the University to establish its own salary scale within that of the full state scale. As a result, we could maintain our good competition position in the lower ranks and move in to remedy the very poor situation we are in with regard to the upper ranks. This of course does not mean that our instructor and assistant professorial scales will remain static, for other institutions are moving steadily in these ranges.

For example: a full professor is now in pay grade 20. Under 3350 the University could spread the number of grades assigned to a full professor. The professorial position might then take in not only grade 20, but also grades 21, 22, and 23. Under this system, a distinguished teacher would not reach a quick "dead end" as he does now, under the restricted single grade. This change would result in a person's having many useful years at the University in which he could look forward to rewards for distinguished service.

If the bill becomes law, the University would probably keep the lower ranks on an annual increment step scale, because of the newness of the men in the positions, and the great numbers involved. In the upper ranks, however, salary increases would become more contingent upon distinguished service and a fine record as a teacher. This is the method employed by the great majority of educational institutions.

LIBERALIZED TRAVEL POLICY

Also important to the faculty is the provision in the bill which would allow the University to determine the appropriateness, within available funds, of staff travel for professional meetings, conferences, and general professional improvement, without the necessity of having this approved by a hierarchy of administrative officials in the state government, many of whom make the decision quite removed from the intimate knowledge of the values of one trip as compared with another. This, we feel would result in a greatly improved faculty morale. A teacher who had a worthwhile request would have an excellent chance of having it approved.

SYSTEM OF TENURE REVISED

At the present time, the trustees of the University have the power to "elect necessary members of the professional staff and define their duties and tenure of office" but, this is overridden by the veterans tenure statute which provides lifetime tenure to a veteran after only three years of state service. The young instructor often finds this short period a distinct disadvantage. He is being asked to show that he has creative qualities for research and that he is an outstanding teacher in less than three years. Since very few can demonstrate these qualities in such an extremely short time, many an instructor who is a veteran must be "let go" because the risk is too great. The present laws are inadequate in that this probation period is too short for veterans, while non-veterans are excluded from any of the existing laws regarding tenure.

Because of these inequities in the tenure laws, the University plans, on passage of 3350, to adopt a tenure policy similar to that recommended by the American Association of University professors. This would not only lengthen the time of probation for veterans, but it would also include those of a non-veteran status. Thus, the University would not have to "take a chance" on an instructor, for the new system would provide adequate time for evaluation of a person's capabilities.

It must be evident that with the passage of this bill, the University of Massachusetts will be in a much more favorable bargaining position for a distinguished faculty. It is, we hope, also evident that being in this position, the University will make the most of it and bring itself to that position that the Commonwealth deserves.

EDITORIAL TIP OF THE HAT

JUDGES OF CHARACTER

by DONNA-LEE BONNER '63

The Men's Judiciary is a segment of student government created by, and operating under the Constitution of the Student Government Association.

The purpose of the Men's Court of Justice is to try violations of the University's regulations and those laws passed by the Student Senate which apply to the male student body. When any violation is brought to the attention of the Dean of Men, the student is given a hearing. Depending on the nature of the case, the Dean has three alternatives: (1) Consider the case according to his own experience and training. (2) Refer the case to Men's Judiciary. (3) Allow the student to choose between (1) and (2). It is in this manner that a case is brought to the attention of Men's Judiciary.

When a case is to be heard by the Judiciary, a hearing is scheduled for the student. At this time, the student is given the opportunity to present to the Board any and all relevant material concerning the case. The student may present this material in the form of statements from witnesses, counselors, instructors, etc. on his behalf. He is in no way restricted as to the evidence which he may present.

The Board then considers very carefully all testimony presented at the hearing and a decision as to the disposition of the case is rendered. This decision takes the form of a recommendation to the Dean of Men. The Dean then either approves or disapproves the recommendation.

Men's Judiciary is comprised of seven students: three Seniors, three Juniors, and one Sophomore. New members are chosen by a board comprised of: The President of the Student Senate, the Chairman of Men's Affairs, one member of Men's Affairs Committee, the entire Judiciary, and a number of male Senators to equal the number of Judiciary members present.

Each candidate for membership is given a test case which he has ten minutes to consider. After he gives his decision of the case, the interviewers ask questions about his verdict. Then follows a general question period, one-half to one hour in length. The interviewing board then deliberates and selects from the various candidates, not for their knowledge of law, but rather for their ability to think clearly, analytically, and objectively. The membership of Men's Judiciary is comprised of students from all segments of the campus and thus have a first hand knowledge of conditions and circumstances under which violations may result. It is this criteria under which the Court operates. The present members of Men's Judiciary are: Edward Hammond, Fred Karshick, John Vento, Robert Guerin, Jerry Anderson, Don Tepper, Bill Donovan, Jim Bradley, and Bruce Albro.

A Letter of Appreciation

To the Editor:

I wish to take this opportunity to express my appreciation to the Army ROTC students on their conduct of 2 April 1962. The occasion, our Annual General Inspection of the ROTC Faculty and Cadets.

The manner with which the cadets, both Basic and Advanced conducted themselves, their response to orders i.e., wearing of the uniform on that date reflected credit on themselves, the ROTC Faculty and the University of Massachusetts. It is indeed gratifying to me to see that the MEN of Massachusetts can still be counted on when called upon.

Albert W. Aykroyd, Class of 1941
Lt. Colonel, Armor
Professor of Military Science

Noted Display

To the Editor:

I wish to call your attention to, and comment upon, the new window display in the University Book Store. The hand-drawn poster reads: "The Best Read are the Least Red." In effect, what this means is that the more one knows about the Soviet Union and Communism, the more anti-Communist one will become.

While the intent of furthering reading and education is laudable, the means of doing so in this case are disgraceful.

All too often in the past, our country has justified aid to education, emphasis on scientific development, and even equal rights for Negroes, on the basis that this is anti-Communist and a weapon in the Cold War.

Actually these programs should be furthered because they are good for individual Americans, good for the nation as a whole, and the right thing to do to promote justice and democracy.

One might justify the anti-Communist device to promote goals to the general public as a necessary political device.

However, an academic community should not promote such foolish logic. We read because that's what we came here to do or ought to be here for.

I certainly do not wish to condemn the bookstore or the author of the sign. He has good intent and was simply restating slogans that have been voiced by high government officials, up to the presidency. I simply think that college people ought to be a little more sophisticated.

Would those who agree or disagree bring their comments to the attention of the Book Store?

Burt Levy, Graduate Student

Cadet's Trip

To the Editor:

Speaking for Cadets Babaian and Cabana Drill Team commanders as well as the men who make up the Flying Redmen, I wish to thank the Student Senate for their appropriation which provided the transportation for the Washington trip.

Cadet Lt. Colonel Babaian stated, "I only hope that the team will win and thus represent the University and President Kennedy's home state in the best manner possible."

Internationally Acclaimed Professor Affiliates With German Department

"An institution within an institution" is probably the best way to describe Hermann Weigand, distinguished scholar-teacher who holds the title of Visiting Professor of German Literature at UMass.

The 69-year-old Weigand came to the state university in September—and with him came an international reputation that has added a bright luster to the University's humanities program in the College of Arts and Sciences.

To his students, Professor Weigand is both—the man and a reputation. An elder statesman in the world of scholarship, he is at the same time a vigorously "young" teacher who makes the study of literature a way of life.

In one short semester, the white-haired scholar has won acclaim for his hard-driving classroom explorations of the great areas of world literature. His tireless work of spreading the word is not confined to the undergraduate and graduate classrooms he conducts as his activities this week testify.

In addition to his teaching schedule as well as work on a book about the German poet Rilke, Professor Weigand presented a major evening lecture on Goethe's Faust before a large student audience.

Formerly a professor at Yale University, where he taught for 32 years before "retiring" in 1961, the noted scholar took a quick breath between academic assignments and then joined UMass faculty.

His devotion to literature being, as he puts it, "ingrained," he wasted no time in getting his license to practice in the field. Thus, at the age of 23 he received his doctorate in German literature from the University of Michigan.

Along with his teaching, first at Michigan, then at the University of Pennsylvania, and at Yale, where he was Sterling Professor of Germanic Literature, Weigand amassed a great number of outstanding studies of the world's literary giants—including writers like Goethe, Schiller, Ibsen, Rilke, and Thomas Mann.

Internationally recognized as the authority on the Parzival legend, he has done an immense amount of work in the rich field of medieval tales and romances.

His scholarly life has, in fact, apparently started back on itself with the re-publication last year of his best known work, The Modern Ibsen. First issued in 1925, the book is based on a close reading, in the original Norwegian, of the great Scandinavian dramatist's works.

To pay tribute to this accomplishment, members of Yale's department of Germanic literature in 1957 collected scholarly articles reflecting Weigand's interests and published them as a volume in his honor.

Does he find the Amherst area conducive to the kind of activities he enjoyed, both as scholar and teacher, at other institutions? Certainly, he says. And he intends to continue in his present way through at least the next academic year.

With all these activities, does the man ever relax? Yes, surely, he says. He listens to music quite often—or if he has a "free" evening, he reads Virgil or St. Augustine—in Latin, of course.

EDUCATIONAL TV: ITS CAUSE AND CURE

A great deal of nonsense has been written about educational television. Following is my contribution:

It has been said that television allots no desirable viewing hours to educational and intellectual programs. This is simply not so. For instance, you can see "The Kant and Hegel Hour" every day at 4 a.m. This excellent show is followed at 5 a.m. by "Kierkegaard Can Be Fun." For such lazy scamps as lie abed beyond that hour, there is a splendid program on Sunday mornings at 7:15 called "Birds of Minnesota, Except Duluth."

So much for the myth that TV gives no prime time to educational programs. Now let us deflate another canard: that TV is not eager to inject intellectual content in all its programs.

If you have sat, as I have sat, with a television planning board, you would know that the opposite is true. I was privileged recently to witness a meeting of two of TV's topmost program developers—both named Binkie Tattersall.

"Binkie," said Binkie to Binkie, "if there is one thing I am bound and determined, it's that we're going to have intellectual content in next season's programs."

"Right!" replied Binkie. "So let us put on our thinking caps and go to work."

"I forgot my thinking cap in Westport," said Binkie, "but I have a better notion: let us light a Marlboro."

"But of course!" cried Binkie. "Because the best way to think is to settle back and get comfortable, and what is the cigarette that lets you settle back and get comfortable?"

"I said Marlboro," answered Binkie. "Weren't you listening?"

"A full-flavored smoke is Marlboro," declared Binkie.

"Rich tobacco, pure white filter, a choice of pack or box. What is better than a Marlboro?"

"A Marlboro and a match," replied Binkie. "Got one?"

Binkie had, and so they lit their good Marlboros and settled back and got comfortable and proceeded to cerebrate.

"First of all," said Binkie, "we are going to avoid all the old clichés. We will have no domestic comedies, no westerns, no private eyes, no deep sea divers, no doctors, and no lawyers."

"Right!" said Binkie. "Something offbeat."

"That's the word—offbeat," said Binkie.

They smoked and cerebrated.

"You know," said Binkie, "there has never been a series about the Coast and Geodetic Survey."

"Or about glass blowers," said Binkie.

They fell into a long, torpid silence.

"You know," said Binkie, "there's really nothing wrong with a cliché situation—provided, of course, it's offbeat."

A cowboy, a deep sea diver with a law degree plus an M.D.

"Right!" said Binkie. "So let's say we do a series about a guy who's a family man with a whole bunch of lovable kids who play merry pranks on him."

"Yeah, and he's also a cowboy," said Binkie.

"And a deep sea diver," said Binkie.

"With a law degree," said Binkie.

"Plus an M.D.," said Binkie.

"And he runs a detective agency," said Binkie.

"Binkie," said Binkie to Binkie, "we've done it again!"

They shook hands silently, not trusting themselves to speak, and lit Marlboros and settled back to relax, for Marlboro is a cigarette not only for cerebration, but for settling back with—in fact, for all occasions and conditions, all times and climes, all seasons and reasons, all men and women. © 1962 Max Shulman

Lacrosse Squad Sees Bright Season Ahead

The Redmen Lacrosse team won two preseason exhibition games last week with victories that should be indicative of the squad's performances this year. The team, co-captained by John Bamberry and Walt Glinski, blasted Washington and Lee 8-0 and then proceeded to whip the University of Delaware two days later by a score of 9-3. The attack in the first game was led by seniors Bob Glew and Jim Ellingwood and sophomore Steve Harrington. Glew tallied three goals and one assist while Harrington scored two goals and helped out with two more. Teammate Ellingwood also found the mark for one goal and was chief assistant in the scoring of three others.

In the second game at U. of Delaware Harrington and Ellingwood again starred throwing in two and three goals respectively. It was in this game that Co-captain John Bamberry tallied two goals. Bamberry, who tallied two All American Honorable Mentions last year as a goalie, has been switched to an attack position this year.

The outlook for the upcoming season is one of reserved optimism. Coach Dick Garber has fourteen lettermen returning from last spring's team which compiled an 8-2-1 record, won the Northeast "B" Division championship and the New England Marsters Cup.

Bamberry and Glinski head the list of returning veterans. In addition to these two the Redmen have two others who received All American Honorable Mention. They are scoring ace Jim Ellingwood and attackman Bob Glew who were co-scoring leaders last year and figure to increase their production this season.

Garber figures his team to be better offensively than last year's, which ran up 102 goals in 11 games. His starting defensive unit of Glinski, Jon Kallio and Bowen "Dutch" Dieterle is experienced and strong. New goalie Doug Cole is relatively inexperienced, but if his outstanding performances in the two exhibition games are indication the question mark beside his name can be erased.

On the whole the preseason games were excellently played by the Redmen, and it's a good bet that UMass will again lead its league this year on the lacrosse field.

Redmen Set Eleven New Hoop Records

Five individual and six team records were established by the University of Massachusetts basketball team this winter, which finished with a 15-9 overall record plus the Yankee Conference championship.

Sophomore Rodger Twitchell of Westfield, N.J., set a new soph scoring record of 408 points, erasing the old mark of 322 set by Doug Grutchfield in 1958-59. The 6'5" Twitchell also set a new rebounding mark of 292 and tied the Redmen record for most points in one half-21-against Colby in December.

Co-Capt. Kirk Leslie of Pittsfield broke Grutchfield's field goal percentage for a three-year career. Leslie hit at a .454 pace in his three varsity seasons making 289 of 637 attempts. Co-Capt. Mike Mole of Pittsfield made 12 of 12 foul shots in a win over Rhode Island Feb. 3 for a new single game consecutive record.

As a team, the Redmen set a new single game scoring record of 109 points against New Hampshire and a new field goal record in the same game, 45. These are also new Curry S. Hicks Cage marks. Even with the wretched 26% shooting against NYU in the NCAA tourney, a new field goal season percentage record of .421 was established. And 30 hoops in 49 attempts in a win over Northeastern gave the Redmen another team mark of .612 field goal percentage for one game.

The 52-year basketball history at UMass shows an overall record of 382 wins and 400 defeats. But in the "modern" era of Redmen play (which started in 1953-54), UMass has a winning ledger of 122-94 with seven winning seasons in the past nine years. The first three years of Coach Matt Zunic have produced 45 wins and 29 defeats.

Kosakowski's Men Will Try To Equal Past Performances

Nine dual matches plus the Yankee Conference championship competition compose the University of Massachusetts varsity tennis schedule for 1962 as announced today by Assistant Athletic Director Earl E. Lorden.

Coach Steve Kosakowski has a young 11-man squad headed by junior Captain Tom Simons (Montague City). With no seniors on the team Kosakowski will have trouble matching his outstanding records of the past few seasons. The Redmen netsters have captured 23 of 25 dual matches the past three years. They were also Conference champions in 1950, 1955, 1956, 1957, 1959 and tied for honors in 1960. Last year's playoffs were rained out.

The schedule shows five home matches, four away plus the Conference playoffs May 11-12 at Storrs, Connecticut.

Sports Shorts

University of Massachusetts senior and junior athletes compiled better academic averages during the 1961-62 first semester than the male average of their respective classes, which indicates that athletes can be good students.

The five seniors on the University of Massachusetts varsity hockey team, Robert Glew (Framingham), Tom Taylor (Waltham), Frank Cesario (Hudson), Jim Ellingwood (Arlington), and Ed Forbush (E. Longmeadow) compiled a better than B average in their studies during the past semester. The old adage that good students are the backbone of good teams is probably one of the reasons why Coach Steve Kosakowski's squad compiled one of the school's best record in years

Tom Leavitt, a junior forestry major from Gardner, Mass, was a member of the University of Massachusetts varsity cross county team that won the Yankee Conference as well as the New England Cross County Team Championships last fall. Tom must have found time to study in addition to intercollegiate athletic activities during the past semester as he compiled a straight A average in the classroom.

University of Massachusetts head football coach Vic Fusia is mighty proud of the classroom performances of his 1962 Co-Captains Paul Majeski (Westfield) and Tom Kirby (No. Adams) as the student-athletes were on the University first and second Honors list for the past semester.

Five different schools are represented on the University of Massachusetts baskeball all-opponent team for 1961-62 as selected by the Redmen varsity letterwinners.

Jack Foley of Holy Cross and Larry Jones of Toledo were unanimous first-team selections. Joining them on the first squad were center Jim Hadnot of Providence College, and guards Len Carlson of Connecticut and Tom Chappelle of Maine. Chappelle is the only repeater from last winter.

Ken O'Brien, Richard Ward Elected Capts.

Kenneth O'Brien of Foxboro and Richard Ward of Pembroke, outstanding track performers at the University of Massachusetts during their freshman, sophomore and junior years, have been elected co-captains of the 1962-63 Redmen indoor track team.

O'Brien is a physical education major at the University and has been one of the top students in his class academically for the past three years in addition to his exploits in cross country and track. During his senior year at Foxboro H.S., Ken was captain of the football, basketball, baseball and track teams. During the past indoor season, O'Brien turned in some outstanding performances in the 600 and 1000 yard events and this spring will probably be running the 440 and 880 yard races during the Redmen dual meets.

Ward is a graduate of Silver Lake Regional H.S. where he earned letters in football, basketball, and track. During the recent indoor campaign, Ward was one of the team's leading point producers as a result of his performances in the high jump and weight events. Last spring, Ward won the running high jump and placed fourth in the hammer throw in the Yankee Conference Track and Field Championship meet held at Kingston, R.I. A major in the School of Physical Education, Dick is a member of Tau Kappa Epsilon fraternity and is married to the former Judy Walker.

NOTICE

Intramural softball season starts Wednesday, April 11, at six o'clock. All teams will be notified by mail. Complete schedules will be posted this week.

UMass Indoor Track Team Finishes Sixth In Conn. Meet

by ABE SHEINKER '62

The UMass track team completed its indoor season by finishing sixth in the annual Connecticut relays on March 24. Holy Cross edged Yale 43-42 to win the team title for the second straight year as 16 schools participated.

The Redmen quartet of Ken O'Brien, Joe LaMarre, Dave Balch, and Bob Brouillet, took third in the distance medley relay, consisting of four quarter tion as they lapped the field in their slower heat. This event consisted of a half-mile, quarter, three quarters, and a mile. The only other relay event in which UMass scored was the mile relay, consisting of four quarter mile legs. Jack Harrington, Bob Carpenter, Ron Young, and O'Brien posted a second to Holy Cross in this race.

In the High jump, Dick Ward and Charlie Lapier were in a three way tie for second by clearing six feet. Ward had previously thrown the 35 pound weight 56' 5.5" for a third in that event. For Lapier, it was his first jumping appearance since basketball ended, and his six-foot leap tied the high. The other individual scorer was Brouillet, who after running his one mile leg in the distance relay, came back to take third in the two mile run.

Redmen Baseball Team Back From South With 2-4 Record

by JEFF DAVIDOW '65, Associate Sports Editor

The University of Massachusetts varsity baseball squad returned from its annual vacation-week Southern swing bringing with it a shoddy but misleading 2-4 record. It must be realized that Coach Earl Lorden does not take his team on an exhibition tour merely to win games. Winning exhibition games is great if a team can do it, but the main purpose of such a tour is to try out new players and prepare the men in general for a rugged twenty-game season that begins on April 14 at the Coast Guard Academy.

The Redmen were scheduled to play three games against the team at Camp Lejeune, in North Carolina, but rain caused the cancellation of the first game on Monday, March 26.

The UMass team did, however, get to play its next two scheduled games at Camp Lejeune, and lost both of them by scores 7-0 and 9-8.

In the first game the only returning varsity letterman in the pitching department, Lou Pia, pitched fairly well giving up only one run in the four innings that he pitched. Pia was followed on the mound by junior Dick Wilson who did not quite have his control and gave up six runs in three innings. The last Redmen hurler for the afternoon was senior Carl Elmstrom who kept the men from Camp Lejeune scoreless in the final stanza. In this game sophomore outfielder Ken Clark set a pace that he was to continue with throughout the tour by collecting two of the four Redmen hits. The second game was a slugfest with the Camp Lejeune team coming from behind in the tenth inning to take the game away from the Redmen. The UMass pitchers, Carl Elmstrom, Cliff Bullock, Rod Corey, and John Awdycki, gave up, among them, sixteen walks, which is evidence enough of the poor control that plagued the squad. The game was thrown into extra innings as the score was knotted 5-5 at the end of the ninth. The Redmen scored three in the top of the tenth to pull ahead 8-5, but Camp Lejeune came back with four runs in the bottom of the inning to steal away the game. Kenny Clark was again a hitting star chalking up five hits, four singles and a two-bagger. Last year's two leading sluggers for the Redmen, Jim "Corky" Schmoyer and Bob Hughes, were at it again, slamming one homerun apiece.

From Camp Lejeune Coach Lorden and his men travelled to Fort Lee, Virginia to spend a triumphal Thursday and a not so victorious Friday. On Thursday the men from UMass won two games, the first being a 6-0 victory over the travelling team from Michigan State. After their morning victory the Redmen again took the field in the afternoon and defeated the Fort Lee team. The highlights of the first game were the superb shutout pitching of Lou Pia, and the three hits collected by the team's captain, Frank Pisiewski. In the afternoon contest sophomore Joe Apicella was the UMass standout. He reached base twice, once on a single and the other time on a walk, and was able to score in both instances. He also stole a base and preformed excellently in the field making one putout, seven assists, and starting two double plays. Two Redmen homers were hit in this game, one by junior outfielder Neil Harris, and the other by sophomore outfielder Mike Brita.

On Friday the tables were turned on the Redmen as the Fort Lee team came back with an 8-6 win. The Redmen did however slug two homeruns. The first by senior first baseman Ed Forbush, and a pinch-hit homer by Neil Harris, his second in as many days.

The last game of the trip which was with Randolph-Macon College at Ashland, Virginia, was called at the end of six innings because of high winds with UMass down 11-0. The eleven runs can be attributed to the wildness of the pitching staff. One bright note, however, in this game was Neil Harris' hit, a pinch-hit triple, making a total of two homers and a three-sacker that he collected during the tour.

On the whole the team played well, with the infield and outfield both doing good jobs. The Redmen collected a total of seven homeruns, indicating a powerful team, and were paced in their slugging efforts by Kenny Clark and Ed Forbush who racked up averages of .476 and .353, respectively.

The one sore spot for the Redmen is their pitching staff which showed poor control in general on the road trip. Lou Pia is the only pitcher returning from last season's pitching staff which compiled an earned run average of 1.85 last spring to rank second in the nation to Bradley. Thus fate of the Redmen this season depends largely on its pitching staff which is at present inexperienced and lacking in control.

The following is the baseball schedule for this season:

Intramural Wrestling Finals Will Be Rough And Tumble

The department of athletics intramural wrestling championship bouts will be held in the Cage at 7 p.m. Thursday, April 5. The matches will be full of excitement for some of the top athletes in the school will be participating. The contenders have won the right to enter the finals by winning wrestle-offs that have been going on since the middle of March. The referee for the matches will be this season's varsity wrestling squad captain, Bob Ellis.

The 137 pound class will see Robert Ward and Robert Neale, both members of the class of 1965, take on each other. The 147 pound class will be battled out by two Redmen hockey players. They are Jerry Clinton, next year's varsity squad captain, and Jim Mahoney, a center on this year's freshman team. In the 157 pound division Don Tremblay of Northampton will face the winner of tonight's match between Paul Fitzpatrick and Cal Qumby. Joe Gannon, in the 167 pound, class does not as yet have an opponent, but elimination matches will produce one for him by the end of the week. Richard McLaughlin and Wayne Elliot, both forestry majors, will be battling each other for the championship in the 177 pound division. Leon Szepeucha and Joe Long, both top athletes and members of many varsity teams will vie for the title in the 191 pound weight category. The unlimited weight class will see two linemen on the varsity football team contesting each other. The two men are Paul Majeski, next year's football co-captain, and Don Hagberg, right tackle.

Lettermen, Zunic To Be Honored Tonight

Letterwinners of the University of Massachusetts winter sports teams will be honored at the University's annual winter athletic awards dinner on Wednesday, April 4th.

Earl E. Lorden, Assistant Director of Athletics, said today that dinner will be served at 6:00 p.m. in the Mill Valley Grist Mill in Amherst. In addition to the letterwinners, special awards will be made to Coach Matt Zunic and his varsity basketball team for winning the Yankee Conference Championship.

Rev. Robert Keating, pastor at St. Jude's Church in Derby, Conn., a popular banquet speaker in New England, will be the main speaker on the program.

UMass Establishes Institute For Population Research

A continuing series of profiles of Massachusetts population is the objective of a new Population Research Institute established at the UMass.

Conducted jointly by the University's department of sociology and anthropology and the department of agricultural economics, the Institute will publish specialized papers on such factors as family size and income, labor force, race and national origins, city and rural distribution, and others.

The papers, planned for general distribution, are expected to be especially useful to groups engaged in extension work, area planning industrial development, and other activties involving large numbers of people.

Director of the Institute is Dr. Thomas O. Wilkinson, associate professor of sociology at the University. Chief consultant to the program is Dr. John Blackmore, head, department of agricultural and food economics in the College of Agriculture. Assistant is also provided by graduate extension fellows, specialized personnel from various University departments, and the Agricultural Experiment Station.

The first publication, now in progress, is based on a detailed look at Massachusetts data in the 1960 U.S. Census. The paper considers growth and shifts in population in Massachusetts between 1950-1960.

The Institute's studies will include eight major categories: labor force, urban structure, family characteristics, education, migration, agricultural population, race and ethnic structure, and income.

Special topics under labor force will include data on the geographic and occupational distribution of the industrial work group in Massachusetts, the number of people over 65 who are still employed, and the size of the female work force. This study will also try to determine how many chidren are produced by mothers who hold jobs.

Urban studies will start with a breakdown of industrial and occupational characteristics of cities having more than 100,000 people. The papers under this category will deal with family size and income structure in metropolitan areas as well as among suburban populations in the state.

The education series will show various characteristics of the school-age population as related to occupation, income, and urban-suburban-or-rural location of parents.

Currently the Institute is working with materials of value to agricultural extension personnel. As the program develops, analysis of these materials will be directed toward other interested groups. The Institute's general objective is to produce useful current studies as well as to build a reference library of permanently available materials for population analysts.

Dr. Myers To Direct Psych. Grant

Presented with several alternatives, such as which stocks to buy, how does a person really make a decision?

This process is being studied under a National Science Foundation grant of $25,900 awarded to UMass. Dr. Jerome Myers, associate professor of psychology, is directing the research, concerned mainly with consequences of past decisions upon current decision-making behavior.

Given a number of possible events, subjects in the study are asked to predict which will occur. Not only do events differ in their probability of occurrence, but the associated risk, i.e., amount to be gained or lost through correct or incorrect prediction is different each time. Subjects make each prediction knowing the outcome of previous predictions and whether they gained or lost by their decision. Effects of "payoff" and probability variables upon prediction and the pattern of outcomes of previous trials are then analyzed.

These variables are major elements in real life decision-making, and it is hoped that knowledge gained in the laboratory will aid general understanding of decision-making behavior.

Dr. Myers will spend the next academic year at Stanford University's Institute of Mathematics in the Social Sciences. He will explore mathematical theories of decision-making using data presently being collected at UMass.

MEANDERING MIKE

Well, tomorrow night is the big night and, needless to say, we're all looking forward to it. At 7 p.m. Thursday night Dean Field will appear live on WMUA's special program, Ask the Administration. Questions may be submitted in writing either in the box in the S.U. lobby or at WMUA which is located in the Engineering Building. All questions must be signed but names will be withheld upon request. Here is the chance to ask about any phase of the university and its administration, so be sure to tune in.

And tonight at 8 p.m., WMUA will broadcast William O. Douglas, Associate Justice of the United States Supreme Court, direct from the S.U. Ballroom. Also tonight there will be a house cleaning party at the station; all station members are invited to attend in their grubbiest clothes. Even I'm going to help out (dungarees and a sweatshirt on a microphone are a pretty funny sight!)

Students in the infirmary will soon be able to contact the Language Lab for tapes they have missed or would like to hear, and from 9 a.m. to 3:30 p.m. these tapes will be broadcast over the WMUA infirmary channel. During scheduled broadcasting hours, the infirmary channel carries all regular programming.

There has been a new innovation here recently. We now have our own news staff composed of about 15 students whose job it is to write and edit all university news and take charge of the news broadcasts. Right now the staff is training new members for tape editing and rewriting news releases. They hope in the future to have on-the-spot telephone reports, commonly called "beepers."

WMUA always welcomes interested students. Drop by the station any time.

Bridge Tour. To Be Sponsored By Bridge Club

Saturday, April 14, the Bridge Club will sponsor a University Contract Bridge tournament in the Barnstable, Franklin, and Hampden rooms of the S.U.

The tournament will run from 1 to 6 p.m. with a half-hour break during which refreshments will be served.

It will be an open pair tournament with trophies awarded to the winners both N-S and E-W and a special trophy awarded to the dormitory, fraternity or sorority whose entrants place highest. In order to qualify for this trophy, both players must belong to the same one.

The tournament will be open to all students and faculty members, but trophy competition will be limited to students.

Anybody wishing to enter should give notice of the partnership to the following: James Fitzgerald, 129 Van Meter; Barbara Dubis, 101 Hamlin; Frank Higginbotham, 206 Wheeler.

These entries should be made no later than April 7, but late entries will be accepted providing they can be fitted into the accommodations.

R.D.'s Spring Production Needs Props

"Seaweed, anyone? Where is the nearest sand dune?"

If a green Chevrolet with a faded "Volpone is Coming" sticker on the back bumper screeches to a halt beside you, and the harried driver confronts you with this question, don't worry; you heard him correctly.

Or if two rather battered, though determined students knock on your door and ask if you have any fish-nets, seaweed, or lobster pots, don't call for help.

No, we're not thinking of stocking the campus pond. These hardy souls are merely looking for props for the Roister Doisters' spring production, "Invitation to a March."

Since the setting for the Author Laurent's fantasy, which will take place in Bowker Auditorium on April 27, 28, and 29, is in a beach house on Long Island, the props list resembles a "Moby Dick" leftover.

So if you do know the location of a nearby sand dune, do let us know. And if you're harboring any old nets, lobster pots, or skin-diving equipment (SCUBA Club, please take notice!), bring them to Bowker. They'll get tender loving care, and you'll get the gratitude of a group of theatrical land-lubbers.

Five New Courses Offered In UMass Dept. Of Home Ec.

Undergraduate women students at the University of Massachusetts next September should consider the new school of home economics.

Five new courses will open careers in fashions, foods and home furnishings. Students wishing to train for teaching dietetics and nursery school education will find these courses brought up-to-date to meet today's college needs.

"Five new undergraduate curricula will offer the all-university approach, stressing liberal arts with professional training," said Marion A. Neiderpreum, new dean of home economics. She made the first announcement at yesterday's meeting of the Women's Advisory Council at the Pioneer.

Dean Niederpreum added, "Jobs are abundant for home economics with sound training in liberal arts and sciences. There is a growing national need."

False Democracy Cited By Staebler

"Unmistakably undemocratic practices such as intimidation, bribery, and rigged elections," were cited by UMass Visiting Professor Neil Staebler as bringing pockets of totalitarianism into otherwise democratic countries.

In a major address last evening in the S.U. Ballroom, the former chairman of Michigan's Democratic State Central Committee said that among the undemocratic practices leading to confusion is "the denial of the right to vote, not on grounds of competence, but of race, in areas where democratic principles are otherwise observed."

Dictator Devices Used For Control

Staebler, who is serving as Distinguished Professor of Public Affairs under a Ford Foundation Grant made to the UMass department of government, pointed out that "there are areas in the country where local oligarchies use many of the devices of the dictator — intimidation, bribery, rigged elections — to maintain their control."

Five Basic Elements

Staebler cited five basic elements necessary in a true democracy: the ethical, psychological, legal, political, and economic.

Speaking of the ethical element, he said, "when discrimination is tied up with property values, as in the case of covenants barring sales of real estate to members of a minority group, a property owner and a community may face a choice between moral principles and profit. Many householders are wrong in thinking that integration hurts property values, but the fear of loss is nonetheless real."

Freedom Difficult To Explain

Referring to the political element, Staebler noted that political freedom in a pluralistic society is difficult to explain to those who have never really known it. He said that during a visit to Yugoslavia, he tried to tell a woman how the U.S. two-

U.S.-Red China Foreign Policy Aids Communism, Says Douglas

by MARCIA ANN VOIKOS '63

"Communism is the price we pay for not recognizing Red China — by removing ourselves from a country we let it go to the Communists."

Such was the opinion of Supreme Court Justice William O. Douglas in a lecture on Communism vs. Democracy in Asia sponsored by the UMass Distinguished Visitors Program at the S.U. Wednesday night.

"Disarmament conferences with Red China mean very little," he said. "We don't know much about the country because we don't send enough people there."

The drama in Asia today is the ideological struggle between India and Red China, Douglas stated, adding that India is ahead in consumer goods and civil rights. Nehru differed with Truman on fighting communism in India. Nehru proposed to fight communism through social reform; Truman sought to fight communism by seeking military agreements and commitments.

"By handing over power and guns, a U.S. military policy makes possible the liquidation of democratic forces in Asia," charged Douglas.

Douglas compared the advantages of the U.S. and Russia in winning the support of young nations. As the challenger of the status quo, Russia offers the image of an affluent society to the outside world; gives free medical aid to everyone; and has achieved language mastery. Moreover, Russia is making progress in underdeveloped countries by subsidizing them.

"The U.S. has equality of the law—we must take advantage of this and get organized, "Douglas stated. "The struggle of dark-skinned people is not so much for independence, as equality. We must help these countries build democracy by sitting in a white house surrounded by slums."

"The world issue today is not whether democracy will be saved, but whether it will be born," he continued. "Some of these countries have never even heard of it."

The Ford Foundation has organized village workers in India to form local governments at the grass-roots level, and the Crossroads: Africa Program has proven successful in sending teachers abroad, Douglas said.

"We're counting on you to build democracy — to teach, to guide, to counsel," he urged. "Because the problem of preventing war is the single most important problem of your generation."

Senators Debate Late; Defeat 2.0 Amendment

by ANN MILLER '64, News Assignment Editor

"We haven't had many exciting meetings, but that was one of them," Senate President "Tex" Tacelli ('62 Van Meter) said leaving the Council Chambers at midnight Wednesday night after a hectic Student Senate meeting. The meeting began at 6:30, was recessed from 8 until 9:15 and adjourned at 11:45.

A bill introduced by Senator Cournoyer ('64 Fraternities) caused a heated session throughout the meeting until its final defeat by narrow 16-12 vote. The bill read: Moved that the Student Senate amend the 2.0 Bill by deleting the words January 11, 1961 and inserting September 1961 in the last paragraph.

The 2.0 Bill, controversial issue of last spring, which passed the Senate on March 22, 1961 by an 18-13 voted, stated that all candidates for RSO offices must have a 2.0 cumulative average or a 2.4 the previous semester. Further, "this policy shall not pertain to officers holding office as of January 11, 1961 insofar as selection to that same office is concerned. This policy shall be in effect from September 1961."

The pertinent question brought out at this time was whether or not several prominent RSO officers, who do not have the required average but are incumbent, are actually eligible to run for office in the spring elections. An issue involved was just how the 2.0 Bill as it stood was meant, how it should be interpreted in the present situation.

Senator Abdul Samma ('63 Greenough) took the floor and read excerpts from a letter written by Dean of Students William Field to the RSO Committee, regarding the eligibility of these candidates. According to Dean Field, "I must admit that I bear a good measure of responsibility for perpetuating the misconception in that queries directed to me by the Junior Class President were answered incorrectly . . . While I personally regret my error in this matter, the possible correction of the situation that now exists certainly rests with the Student Senate and any action that they may choose to take and subsequently with the RSO Committee."

President Tacelli, who left the chair to speak on the floor, called the proposed amendment a "bad precedent" and called for a defeat of the amendment.

Senator Bob Brauer ('64 Butterfield) said, "The Dean of Students interpreted this law as it should be amended and we should pass the bill to amend it that way."

At this point Senator Dave Garber (64 Hills) took the floor and announced that he intended to introduce a bill next week to repeal the 2.0 Bill.

Said Senator Denny Patnaude ('64 Commuter), "It will be a sorry day for the Senate when they do not realize that they must be flexible during this transition period that the 2.0 Bill is now undergoing."

Senator Paul Donahue ('64 Van Meter) introduced an amendment to replace Cournoyer's: "Moved that the Student Senate amend the 2.0 Bill by adding the sentence, 'the 2.0 Bill shall not affect the incumbent class officers, as of September, 1961, of the Class of 1963.' " His proposal was defeated.

Discussion continued on Cournoyer's original amendment; at 11:45 the question was called to vote on the bill and it was defeated by a 16-12 vote.

Trustees Establish Microbiology Institute

A new Institute of Agricultural and Industrial Microbiology, an outgrowth of prior research in the life processes of microscopic organisms, has been established at the University of Massachusetts, Pres. John W. Lederle announced recently.

The founding of the institute by the University Board of Trustees at their last meeting, said President Lederle, was based to a great extent on the national and international recognition of research contributions by the microbiology section of the Agricultural Experiment Station.

Also helping to spur the formation of the new institute was the desire of industrial concerns and governmental agencies to support an expanded program of microbiological research through contracts and grants-in-aid.

Research in microbiology has been concerned with the use of microorganisms in the production and processing of agricultural and industrial products such as foods and fibers, and the control of microorganisms harmful to man and his environment.

A director to head the new institute will be appointed soon, President Lederle said. An advisory committee composed of university faculty and administration and representatives of industry also will be named. The institute also will function as an adjunct to departments requiring unique microbiological assistance.

The institute will be empowered to accept grants for fundamental and applied research, enter into contracts in support of the foregoing research, and enter into contracts for specific research purposes.

The Institute of Agricultural and Industrial Microbiology will be housed in Marshall Hall, the present home of the Experiment Station microbiology section.

Five Faculty To Examine Languages

Dean of Arts and Sciences I. Moyer Hunsberger has announced the appointment of five faculty members to an Ad Hoc Committee on African, Asian, and Oriental Languages.

The professors are: Cecil E. Cody, assistant professor of history, who will chair the committee; Edwin D. Driver, associate professor of sociology; Tsuan H. Feng, professor of civil engineering; John S. Harris, Commonwealth Head of Government; and H. Leland Varley, professor of English.

The Ad Hoc Committee has been asked to recommend both short-range and long-range policy for the College of Arts and Sciences in the area of Oriental, Asian, and African languages. The final report of the committee is not expected before next year.

"THE 2.0 ISSUE IS BACK AGAIN"

"Two-Oh" difficulties cropped up again at the last Senate meeting in an attempt to clarify what was meant by the original motion of the 1960-61 Senate.

Although the motion to clarify was deefated, the issue will soon be blown sky high with the added impetus of new information. Late yesterday afternoon Collegian staff members discovered that the wording of the original motion is in direct contradiction to the original 2.0 qualification.

As the wording now stands, the only criterion necessary for RSO organization officers is that the officer must have the ACCUMULATIVE AVERAGE OF HIS GRADUATING CLASS. The present wording actually negates the "2.0" requirement.

However the Senate member who was approached raised the point that this might simply be a typographical error. At any rate, there is no doubt that the original 2.0 bill will be, in one way or another, altered or repealed.

At least one Senator let be known that he would introduce a motion at the next Senate meeting to repeal the 2.0 legislation. At any rate the "Two-Oh" issue is back again.

—J.W.B. '64

2.0 Is Not 2.0

A year ago the notorious 2.0 motion rocked the Student Senate. It started in RSO and came to the Senate where it met stiff opposition, was defeated and sent back to RSO. The opponents of the bill were not to feel the fruits of victory long, however, for it was brought back to the Senate with a new face.

This time, instead of a 2.0 cum as the minimum requirement for holding office, the bill stipuiated a candidate for office must have attained the minimum required graduation average of his particular class. The quick moving proponents of the bill moved to amend it back to a 2.0 and some-how succeeded. The bill which some of the Senators thought they had killed had risen from the dead and come back to campus via what some affectionately called the Twohig railroad (Twohig was the Senate President and one of the leading proponents of the bill).

Not finished yet, the opponents collected enough signatures to bring the bill before the student body on a referendum. However, not enough people showed up at the polls so the final Senate vote prevailed.

It was thought to be a dead issue until recently. Just before the last vacation it was learned that one of the incumbent class officers who was thought to have been exempt from the requirement set by the bill, was to be effected after all.

Normally the fact that the class officer had had a misunderstanding would have meant little; but it was brought to light that the misunderstanding was the direct result of an erroneous interpretation of the bill by the Dean of Students and members of the Student Senate These officials have admitted their error in telling the particular officer that he would be able to run for re-election. However, their mistake was quite understandable as even the proponents of the bill have stated thattheir original intention was NOT to bar the present incumbents from re-running for office. Through some FLUKE the letter of the law was not consistent with the spirit of the law.

A move Wednesday night to amend the law was defeated in a confused meeting of the Student Senate.

Today RSO had a special meeting to see what could be done about the problem.

THEN IT HAPPENED. Collegian reporters, going over minutes of last year's Senate meetings discovered that the 2.0 Bill WAS NEVER PASSED BY THE STUDENT SENATE. The amendment to change the bill from the minimum graduating average to a 2.0 did NOT, in effect, accomplish that purpose, because of an error in wording. As it stands now, the Student Senate passed a bill requiring officers to have attained the minimum graduating average of their class and NOT a 2.0. Still, the fact is that now that Administration has adopted the 2.0 policy.

Nevertheless, on the basis of this new information, RSO has recommended that the Student Senate reconsider the bill. They'll do it Tuesday (we hope).

WOT'LL HAPPEN THEN IS ANYBODY'S GUESS.

— LETTERS —

An Open Letter from the Editors:

This year has certainly been a hectic one for the Collegian. We've had to fight the torrential monsoons pouring in from the leaking Student Union roof; we've been crowded out of our working space by all the unsigned letters that have been pouring in, and we've all developed eyestrain from reading copy typed without a ribbon. But despite it all—the pain, hardship and discomfort, we're still in business.

The newly elected officers of the Collegian wish to take this opportunity to thank last year's officers (and place all the blame for this mess on them.)

First is our jolly editor, Al Berman. Al certainly is jolly! In fact, he's so jolly that he laughs all the way to the bank after every issue.

Speaking of graft, we turn to our crafty business manager, Howie Frisch. Howie certainy is crafty. He's so crafty that he doesn't laugh all the way to the bank after every issue — he just sort of smirks.

And speaking of smirks, let us not forget sports editor Ben Gordon. He certainly is smirky. In fact, Ben's grin is so wide that he tickles his ear lobes with the corners of his lips.

Joe Bradley, Editorial Editor, doesn't laugh on the way to the bank. Nor does he smile. He just runs. Boy is he runny!

But seriously, we really do want to thank Al, Ben, Howie, and Joe for the time and guidance they have given us. Not many people realize the time that being an officer on the Collegian requires. Al, for instance, has to get up at 6:30 every Monday, Wednesday and Friday to proofread the Collegian (Next year's editor has promised that she will get up before 6:30 because she can't stand the traffic at that time of night.)

Rathr than ramble on like this, all of us sincerely wish to thank our past officers for everything they have done for us and for the Collegian. Good luck to all of you!

To the Editor:

On Wednesday night I had the rich pleasure of listening to, and in a sense, meeting, a rare and wonderful human being: Associate Justice William O. Douglas.

Justice Douglas is not a particularly good speaker, and his talk was far from being a work of great rhetoric, but the devotion of the man to deeply felt principles, and his success in communicating his conviction and sense of urgency about his topic had, at least for me, an electric effect.

Here stood a man who had faced life in every sense of the term, who had reached the pinnacle of personal success, and who was now engaged in all sorts of activities promoting international education, communication, and brotherhood. He stood before us and challenged us—as a nation, as an audience, as a university, and most importantly as individuals—to come out of our affluent-society shell, see the fantastic world around us, and set out on a great venture.

He painted a sober picture of a world full of people starving—for food and knowledge—amidst over-stuffed and self-serving "haves." He spelled out the methods the Communists are using to exploit these people and the advantages they have gained over the West in the contest. But he also pointed out the great advantages we have—Jefferson, Lincoln, Frost, Sandburg—if we would only use them.

Justice Douglas made a few controversial statements, took some jabs at some of our sacred cows. Perhaps some of his views are murky and even contradictory—he admitted being no expert. But if he has succeeded in stirring us up a little bit, if he has caused some of us to reassess our values, our opinions, and our objectives, both personal and collective, then he has done us a great human service.

Gary Holten, graduate student

To the Editor:

And Caesar spake one day and said, "Go out Pilate to Judea and rule." Is this what we have today, a representative of a power believing itself to be absolute in truth and aspiring to exercise absolute power that would be only in this manner justified? That this potentate from afar with "the truth" purports to be in truth what he is not, that he condescends to the rabble's level by virtue of the necessity that this is "part of the job". is only part of the dynamic complex of means by which this potentate represents his absolute counterpart.

What is a university for? Is its purpose to reduce the individual constituents, its students, to the level of mathmatical entities so that a simple formula can abstract their "essenials" which is that they are merely part of a functioning group so that they can be precisely controlled by working the "right" equation by the person who knows what "right" is? To do this is to say that the individual is of no consequence; that he is of importance only so far as he "functions" as part of the group. There are inherent in these beliefs assumptions, the validities or apparent truthfulness of which must be taken as unconscious or intuitive truths.

Perhaps it will be most beneficial to the "chain of things" that have occurred, that are occurring and that will occur, that man as the individual has as "the" abstractable essence the characteristic of the most divisibly small, yet functional, unit of the group complex. To believe this though would indicate that the notion of the individual per se is absurd; that the concept of the individual is a figment of a hypersensitive imagination, or that indiivduals, species human and the generalized other, were created and do exist only as th result of a faux pas by the forces which determined that we should exist. To believe this is to believe that the existance of man is only the tangible result of a logical absurdity, even though th term "logical absurdity" is considered to denote a non-existant construction.

On the other hand if groups and the functioning thereof are the ultimately and essentially real constituents of the social system, then why was man not created as a complex? That is to say, why is John Q. just John Q. and not the complex consisting of John Q. + Jack L. + Jane D. ad infinitum. It would seem then, that a system such as we believe we are part of; i.e., the universe as representative of an omniscient driving force, or nisus, has a use for the individual. It was and is thought by some though, Caesars gone by and some college presidents today, that the group is the essence of living beings. That this is thought, even though the opposite is said; is, that the individual is of prime importance, can be seen when the actual situation is viewed.

We can chance a guess and say that the disparity between "the group complex is all" belief and the "existance of the individual is important" belief is nothing but another vague imagining. Of course, too, within these "vague imaginings" will be the contradiction between saying one thing and doing another.

The next step to be expected from all this, as we are rationalizing you know, is to assert that there are no absolutes. Since there are no absolutes, then, of course, all means of measurement, moral and ethical at least, cannot be compared to an ultimate measurement, the "truth", thus making all conditions relative and so ultimately absurd.

Maybe this is the way we should look at the world, but then why President Lederle do you arise in the morning? But then maybe there are absolutes.

Frank Thomas

To the Editor:

Do the students feel that they have the power and the wisdom to judge and decree what other students should do? Isn't it up to each individual to decide for himself? Why should we feel ourselves superior to the Administration? We came to the University and placed our bodies and minds in her hands. The University can poison our bodies at the Commons and can mold our minds into whatever shape she desires. Why, therefore, should we also not trust her and her administrators and abide by their decision that a 1.8 cum. average is sufficient. If one may receive a degree with a 1.8 why shouldn't one be allowed to lead an activity with it? When the University decides that a 2.0 is a graduation requirement, then the students should abide by it—but not sooner.

Not all of us are or could be scholars and not all could be class officers or leaders of an organization. It is up to each individual to decide for himself what he is capable of and can strive for. A Dean's List student, in many instances, is not as intelligent or as clever as one with a much lower average. One should never be judged by a number but on his worth as an individual.

State Convention To Be Held Here; Carrigan Will Give Keynote Address

"The Changing Face of Education" will be the theme of this year's annual STEAM (Student Teachers Education Association of Massachusetts) Convention to be held at UMass on Saturday, April 7. This Convention will be attended by approximately 100 students from schools throughout the state.

Dr. Richard Carrigan, National Director of Student NEA, will give the keynote address which will be followed by three discussions. Topics to be discussed then are: Team Teaching, Programmed Learning, and Remedial Reading. Among those who will be consultants during these sessions are Mr. Royal Graves of the Wayland Public School System, and Mr. Byrne of the UMass Education Staff.

Immediately after lunch, a tour of the new Mark Meadow Elementary School will be conducted by student guides. On the agenda for the afternoon are constitutional amendments, election and installation of the state officers, and general business.

Those who have planned and organized this convention are: Miss Mary McManamy, Faculty advisor to the Education Club, Gail McCrensky, Lois Fleischman, Freda Estner, Agnes O'Neill, Catherine Romanson, Lois Tartarian, Ann Cohen, Priscilla Lincoln, Susan Colognesi, and Doris Hollis, President of STEAM.

Registration wil be held at the School of Education from 9 to 10 a.m., Saturday, April 7. Coffee and doughnuts will be served.

party system works. The woman interrupted suddenly and said, "Oh, we couldn't have anything like that here. If we had two parties, they would kill each other!"

Pointing out that political equality is not always achieved in a democracy because of "favoritism, ticket-fixing, and pay-offs," he added that such inequalities "exist in spite of the law, but in a democracy channels are almost always open to the citizen to wipe them out."

In a totalitarian society, on the other hand, "political inequality is built in," he said.

LESSON II - Where to watch girls

Although girl watching may be practiced in any place and at any time girls are encountered (see above), certain locations deserve special mention for their consistently high levels of both quality and quantity. The east side of Fifth Avenue between 51st and 59th Streets in New York City is perhaps the girl watching center of the world. Other such locations are: Via Veneto in Rome, Champs Elysees in Paris, Oude Zyds Achterburgwal in Amsterdam and Sugarbush, Vermont (January through March). Experienced girl watchers recommend these places with utter confidence (just as experienced smokers recommend Pall Mall for complete smoking pleasure).

Compare all three! Smoke "traveled" through fine tobacco tastes best. See the difference! With Pall Mall, you get that famous length of the finest tobaccos money can buy. Pall Mall's famous length travels and gentles the smoke naturally . . . over, under, around and through Pall Mall's fine, mellow tobaccos. Makes it mild . . . but does not filter out that satisfying flavor!

Pall Mall's natural mildness is so good to your taste!

So smooth, so satisfying, so downright smokeable!

SORORITY NEWS

LAMBDA DELTA PHI

Lambda Phi's hearty thanks go to Donna Achille, and to Doris Loessing, one of our new pledges, for their efforts in the cow milking contest.

Our pledge class has elected officers! They are: President: Doris Loessing; Social Chairman: Shiela Cooper; Pledge Activities: Bonita Goldman. Congratulations girls.

Two of our senior sisters, Merrilee Atkins and Sarah-Jean Carpenter, recently spent a very enjoyable evening at the home of Dr. and Mrs. Woodside when the Provost and his wife were entertaining Mortarboards.

The sisters were very pleased to entertain Mrs. Gerald Judge, patroness of Lambda Phi, at a formal dinner in her honor just before the spring recess.

We were also pleased to have Joe Nahil and Douglas Flaherty as dinner guests last Wednesday evening.

Two of our sisters took trips during the spring vacation: Kay Levin vacationed in Bermuda and Leslie-Ann Williams spent several days in Washington, D.C. on a study tour.

Sisters and pledges were delighted to find a new flag flying from our flag pole this week. A vote of thanks to Joan Marble for her time and talent.

ALPHA CHI OMEGA

Sheila Kablin, our newly installed president, completed her previous office as social chairman in arranging a beautiful pledge formal for all the Alpha Chi's. Boutonnieres, bongos, and the music of Tony Rivosa made this year's formal a memorable one for all. The spotlight was on the pledges with the presentation of: Mary Kathryn Dix, Margaret Maloney, Gretchen Shultis, Dianne Tyrrell, Maureen Lyons, Dorothy Margola, Pamela Salvati, Leah Shephardson, Carol Eggers, Carol Evans, Karen Hebert, Judy Hirchberg, Carolyn Howarth, Cornelia Jandris, Margaret McDonald, Elizabeth Peck, Linda Vander Werf, Irma Wheeler, Ann Williams, and Linda Willis. On Sunday our own Mrs. Potter arranged a very appetizing buffet for the Alpha Chi's and their dates. Now, that it is over, our new social chairman, Judy Hancock, can start to worry about next year.

A belated thanks to the brothers of Phi Mu for a wonderful exchange supper and the pertinent additions made to our composite. Your information was certainly up-to-date.

We hope that the Alpha Gam pledge enjoyed his visit here as much as we enjoyed having him. Come and see us again soon, Joe.

Our house may be bursting its seams, but the sisters are bursting with pride at the addition of fifteen girls pledged the Thursday night before vacation. Congratulations and welcome to: Diane Adamick, Barbara Ball, Christina Cady, Carol Chapman, Susan Fall, Barbara Godek, Ruth Johnson, Maureen Lavalette, Halina Lewantowicz, Jean Pezzoli, Judith Praskiewicz, Carolyn Sitkowski, Marjorie Ward, Mary Jane White, and Judith Winn.

Our sympathies are with our pledge trainer, Barbara McDonough, who now has her hands quite full with thirty enthusiastic pledges.

CHI OMEGA

After a wonderful Pledge Formal at the Wycoff Country Club on St. Patrick's Day, we're finally getting back to normal. Thank yous are in order to SAE, Theta Chi and Kappa Sig for the parties they gave for our pledges. We all enjoyed them and are looking forward to future get-togethers. We would also like to thank the brothers of TEP for the terrific exchange supper we had a few weeks ago.

Congratulations to Jan Reimer newly elected secretary of the Panhellenic Council and to Carol Madison who elected Co-Rush chairman.

We are very proud of one of our juniors, Joan Rubenstein who is one of the new Musigals. Nancy Ridill, who transferred to Jackson College in February was recently chosen to be Social and Civic chairman of Chi O there.

The house is now in full swing under the able leadership of our new officers: Judy Askew, President; Sara O'Reilly, Vice-President; Edie Leahy, Secretary; Marcia Mallette, Treasurer; Nancy Caryln, Assistant Treasurer; Paula Turco. Personnel Chairman; Rush Chairman, Bev DeMarco; Judy Fitts, Assistant Rush; Carol Madison, Senior Panhel; Jan Reimer, Junior Panhel; Ann Kelly, Social Chairman; Barbara Kelley, Pledge Trainer; Judy Clarke, Assistant pledge trainer; Joan Rubenstein, Chapter Correspondent; Anita Osper, Alumni Chairman; Marcia Policow, Assistant Alumni Chairman; Mimi Halper, Historian; Eileen Verrier, Social and Civic Chairman; Nancy Speight, Activities Chairman; Sheila Ryan, Regalia Chairman; Lucy Allen, Vocations; Kathy Connolly, Doris Sylvester and Lynne Pierce, Standards Committee; Ann Slattery, House Manager; and Ann Burns, Stewardess.

KAPPA KAPPA GAMMA

The Kappas extend their thanks to the brothers of QTV and of Phi Mu Delta for our two recent exchange suppers.

We're very proud of our own Jay Stevens, who has recently won a place on the cheering team, and of Ann Richards, who placed third in the Livestock Show's Milking Contest. And better luck to Berna, who stampeded the herd with her recitation of "Da Hoss" by Emily Smiff.

Congratulations are in order for the newly-elected officers of our wonderful pledge class: Nancy Palise, president; Linda Fisher, vice-president; Carol Viens, secretary; and Sally Kangas, treasurer.

We'd also like to add belated congratulations to our recently-installed Activities Chairman, Marty Adam.

PI BETA PHI

Pi Phi would like to congratulate its new officers who were installed on Monday, March 12. They are: President, Roben O'Brien; Vice-President, Barb Viera; Recording Secretary, Pris Hutchinson; Corresponding Secretary, Joanne Veale; Rush Captain, Sue Lemanis; Treasurer, Dottie Cialone; Pledge Trainer, Ann Barton; Senior Panhel Rep., Pam O'Donnell; Social Chairman, Bobbie Hanna; House Manager, Carol McDonough; Scholarship Chairman, Beth Stone; Activities Chairman; Ruth Ann Kirby; Pi Phi Times, Marcia Trimble; Program Chairman, Bobbie Beck; Music Chairman, Sue Lemanis; Assistant Music Chairman, Lynn Tanner; Settlement School Chairman, Jeanne Webb; Vice-President in Charge of Alumnae, Pat Chase; Bulletin Board Chairman, Sue Iossa; Magazine Chairman, Sue Herron; Athletic Chairman, Sandy Edmonds; Censors, Pat Chase, Ann Tibbetts, Lorrie Genari; Recommends Committee, Sue Herron, Joan Carey, Linda Schechterle; Assistant Treasurer, Carol Townsley; Assistant Pledge Trainer, Joan Chiminello; Assistant House Manager, Jan Crowell; Junior Panhel Rep., Marie Makinen; Assistant Social Chairman, Lee Wilcox.

Lambda Chi At UMass 50 Years Old

In 1776, a group of students at William and Mary College formed the first Greek-letter fraternity. Since then the fraternity movement in this country advanced slowly and deliberately between the founding of Phi Beta Kappa and the early years of the twentieth century. It was during this latter period that the demand for new fraternities asserted itself and would not be denied.

This condition led to the founding of several new fraternities, outstanding among which was Lambda Chi Alpha at Boston in 1909. Then in the union with Theta Kappa Nu in 1939, Lambda Chi became one of America's largest Greek-letter fraternities.

On May 12, 1962 Gamma Zeta of Lambda Chi at the University of Massachusetts celebrates its fifth anniversary. Gamma Zeta is the second chapter to be enrolled in this proud national, the first Boston University. Today Lambda Chi Alpha has a total membership of 79,381, of which over 800 members have come from this University over the past fifty years.

Pledge Activities At AEPi Initiation To Indoctrination

On Feb. 28, after Pledge Chapel, AEPi inducted fifteen new pledges in an initiation ceremony. Proudly presented with the blue and gold pledge pin were Roy Blitzer, Barton Brass, Ira Gorfinkle, Ted Jacobs, Mike Kaplan, Frank Nesvitt, Mike Paris, Mike Rose, Jason Rosenberg, Martin Rosendorf, Burton Rubin, David Segal, Howard Shapiro, Stephen Wassersug, and Ted Weinberg. After the ritual, an informal and very spirited celebration took place. Pledging indoctrination began the following night under the direction of the pledge committee, Irv "Horrible" Hurwitz, Lenny Castle, Bob Shamroth, and Larry Winokur, led by Bob Wallace, pledgemaster. The pledges have shown much spirit in their pledging activities so far.

Leading the pledge class are its officers, President Mike Paris, Vice Pres. Howie Shapiro, and Sec.-Treas. Ted Jacobs. Mike Rose, pledge sentinel, recently won the freshmen bowling tournament, and is now bowling for the house team with a consistent average in three figures. All the pledges will be taking part in the IFC sing during Greek Week, and we are fortunate to have in the bass section, Ted "Omar K" Weinberg, who has the lowest voice in the house. Other fine singers are Roy "Loie" Blitzer and Jay Rosenberg.

As Greek Week approaches, the pledges are eagerly awaiting the Chariot Races, and are formulating plans now for their speedy vehicle. During Greek Week the pledges will present a theme party for the brothers which should prove to be a lot of laughs. Later in the spring will be "I Hate Women Week" and pledge projects. Painting the house and the trim is the tentative plan for the project. Also, during Help Week, the pledges will be seen at the infirmary waxing and polishing, in their service effort for the university. It is already evident that our top pledge class is well on its way to upholding the fine name that is AEPi.

AEPi Places First In Scholarship For Fall Semester

Last semester, the total cumulative average of the brothers of AEPi was the highest of the fifteen fraternities on campus. This average of total averages was 2.32, a new record for Pi and one of the highest semester averages of any house in recent years. The 2.32 includes a 2.38 overall house average, and a 2.11 pledge average.

Pi is proud to announce its Dean's List scholars for last semester: Brothers Bill Shaevel, Barry Ravech, Howie Frisch, Howie Tempkir, Buddy Schultz, and Manny Smith. Congratulations to these top men! Congrats also go to Ed Davidson, winner of the annual Phi Chapter Scholarship Award with a total average last year of 3.6. Ed was recently honored at a dinner at Steuben's in Boston. We at 136 Sunset are all quite pleased with our academic achievements, and hope to keep up the record. Our goal is to remain on top, and surpass last year's average, which placed second, with a first place award this year.

UMass Will Have Largest Cage In Country

How the new Cage looks now as workmen begin clearing area for the foundation. It doesn't look like much now, but wait until next year.

Later

This is the architects rendering of what the new Men's Physical Education will look like, when completed in 1963. The three and half million dollar building will house many new facilities, including a remedial therapy laboratory for physically handicapped students.

The largest gymnasium in the country will be unveiled when the new Men's Physical Education Building at the University of Massachusetts is opened in 1963.

Dean Warren McGuirk of the School of Physical Education announced that the three-story building, scheduled for completion during the University's centennial year, will serve the freshman and sophomore physical education curriculum and the program for majors in recreation and physical education.

The new structure will have facilities for extensive intramural activities and certain phases of the intercollegiate athletic program. An important additional feature will be the corrective treatment area for physically handicapped students.

The main gymnasium, largest in the U.S., will be on the third floor and will have more than an acre of floor space. It will hoid six regulation basketball courts which, under a multiple use system, will be convertible to 12 volleyball courts or 24 badminton courts.

First floor of the building will have a swimming pool, physiotherapy area, weight-training and conditioning laboratories, a bowling alley, and utility rooms.

Facilities on the second floor will include an auxiliary gymnasium, a wrestling room, squash and handball courts, classrooms, laboratories, and seminar rooms.

Estimated cost of the facility, including equipment, is about three and one half million dollars.

Farewell Letter

As my duties, at least those in any official capacity, have terminated as of the publication of the last issue of the Collegian, I should like to express my appreciation and thanks to the men and women who have worked with me on the Collegian Sports Staff.

These students, through their conscientious and competent work, have made the Sports page of the Collegian what it is at this time, a comprehensive, intelligent and newsworthy section of a fine publication. The Sports Page has expanded with the rest of the Collegian in the past three years. Froms its one-page allotment in a predominantly 4-page issue it has become an interesting, and commendable 2-page section in an even finer 6-8 page publication. This could be made possible only by the concern and work of members of the Sports Staff.

But the work of Collegian members is only one part of the story. Special thanks to Dick Page and Dick Bresciani over at the Cage, and to all of the coaches and teams of the UMass Athletic Department. It would be impossible and unnecessary to explain or stress their assistance and understanding of me and my staff during the past year.

Finally, but certainly not least in importance, I extend my thanks to the student body of the University for its support of our teams and for its interest in the Collegian Sports Page.

I thank all of you, and sincerely hope that you will extend the same help and consideration to my successor and his saff. Most of all, I urge you to keep up your fine support of UMass athletic teams.

FOOTBALL NOTICE

Head Football Coach Vic Fusia announced today that there will be a meeting for all interested in playing varsity football Sunday evening at 8 o'clock in the Cage. The first day of Spring practice will be Monday afternoon with two sessions from 4:15 to 5:15 for one group and from 5:15 to 6:15 for the second group. The purpose of this is not to infringe upon the student-athlete's study time and also to provide more personalized coaching in smaller groups.

Coach Gladchuk's Golf Team Green, But Has Potential

The University of Massachusetts varsity golf team faces a 13-match schedule plus the Yankee Conference and New England Intercollegiate events with an inexperienced team that will have trouble equaling last season's stellar 11-1 record.

The Redmen, defending Yankee Conference champs, lost five of last year's first seven players through graduation. Then last fall letterman John Donasky of Westfield was recalled into active military duty along with his reserve unit and Coach Chet Gladchuk was left with only Capt. Barry Schmoyer (Pittsfield).

Gladchuk's golf teams have captured 29 of 34 matches the past three years. Despite the Frosh's 0-4-1 record, Gladchuck feels that there is enough potential among the underclassmen to be able to compile a respectable record.

The Redmen schedule: April 24 New Hampshire & Lowell Tech at Lowell; April 26 W.P.I. & Vermont at Amherst; April 30 A.I.C. & Connecticut at A.I.C.; May 2 Springfield & Rhode Island at Amherst; May 4 at Amherst College; May 8 New Hampshire & Boston College at Boston; May 11 & 12 New England Tourney and Yankee Conference Tourney at Manchester, N.H.; May 14 Brandeis at Amherst; May 16 at Trinity.

Vic Fusia Speaks At Football Clinic

Football Coach Vic Fusia was one of the featured speakers today (Friday) at the 3rd Annual Raleigh Football Clinic being held at Elmsford, N.Y. The clinic runs three days, through Sunday, and features some of the nation's top football men. Coach Fusia lectured this morning on "The Massachusetts Power Series," and "Protecting the Passer; Patterns and Cuts." Also on the program are Paul "Bear" Bryant, Alabama; Blanton Collier, Cleveland Browns; Dan Devine, Missouri; Ray Eliot, Illinois; and Tom Nugent, Maryland.

Four Varsity Squads Pick '62 Captains

The captains of several varsity squads for the 1962-63 seasons have already been chosen. As was previously reported, sophomores Pete Bernard and Rodger Twitchell have been elected co-captains of the UMass Basketball Team. Bernard, a 5'8" guard, and Twitchell, a 6'5" forward, led the Redmen in scoring this season and paced the team to UMass' first YanCon basketball title.

Coach Joe Rogers of the swimming team announced that James Coffey and Bruce Mortion have been elected swimming co-captains for next year.

Alan Israel and Thomas Best both juniors, were elected by their teammates to be co-captains of the varsity wrestling squad.

And last, but not least, two of this season's gymnastic stars. Dave Yates and Bruce McCracken have been chosen as next captains of the Gymnastic Squad.

Focus On Sports

The National Basketball Association has wound up another season, excluding the playoffs between Boston and the Lakers, and Mr. Basketball is sounding off once again.

Bob Cousy, the 6'1" backcourt wizzard of the world champion Boston Celtics who very seldom finds anything to gripe about, voiced his opinion that the increased length in the NBA season has turned basketball into "vaudeville."

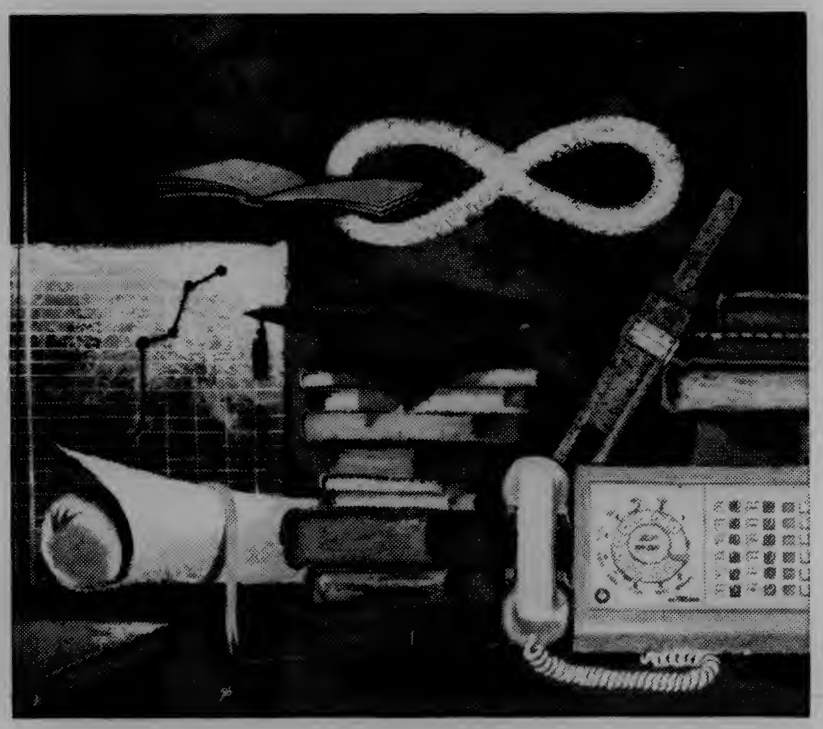
The NBA recently increased the number of playing dates from 72 to 80 games, and including the playoffs, a team would wind up by playing as many as 116 games. Cousy pointed out that fact that the 80-game schedule serves only to eliminate just three of the nine teams in the league for the playoffs.

The 12-year veteran of NBA play, six as player representative, said that "It is a physical impossibiilty to maintain an edge over so long and so tough a grind" and a fan who attends a game in March is litteraly "cheated" out of witnessing a game of true professional caliber.

Cousy feels that 60 games with good promotion and balance would gross as much as 80 games jammed together and weakly promoted and would result in a better overall performance from the players.

The Celtics and the Western Division-winning Los Angeles Lakers both got off to fast starts and after two months of play there was little doubt as to the final outcome of the standings. This resulted in a number of games that didn't mean anything and had no bearing on the final standings, making it difficult for players to "get up" for a game.

Play in the NBA is rough and the elongated season has produced a considerable amount of injuries. Cousy noted that 30% of the playing personnel was injured as the season progressed into March.



Learning never stops for engineers at Western Electric

There's no place at Western Electric for engineers who feel that college diplomas signify the end of their education. However, if a man can meet our quality standards and feels that he is really just beginning to learn . . . and if he is ready to launch his career where learning is an important part of the job and where graduate-level training on and off the job is encouraged — we want and need him.

At Western Electric, in addition to the normal learning-while-doing, engineers are encouraged to move ahead in their fields by several types of educational programs. Western maintains its own full-time graduate engineering training program, seven formal management courses, and a tuition refund plan for out-of-hours college study.

This learning atmosphere is just one reason why a career at Western Electric is so stimulating. Of equal importance, however, is the nature of the work we do. Our new engineers are taking part in projects that implement the whole art of modern telephony, from high-speed sound transmission and solar cells to electronic telephone offices and computer-controlled production techniques.

Should you join us now, you will be coming to Western Electric at one of the best times in the company's history. In the management area alone, several thousand supervisory jobs are expected to open up to W.E. people within the next 10 years. And our work of building communications equipment and systems becomes increasingly challenging and important as the communications needs of our nation and the world continue to increase.

Challenging opportunities exist now at Western Electric for electrical, mechanical, industrial, and chemical engineers, as well as physical science, liberal arts, and business majors. All qualified applicants will receive careful consideration for employment without regard to race, creed, color or national origin. For more information about Western Electric, write College Relations, Western Electric Company, Room 6206, 222 Broadway, New York 38, New York. And be sure to arrange for a Western Electric interview when our college representatives visit your campus.

ticipant in the show was Ann Cohen who did a wonderful job. Congratulations go also to Junior Naiad, Debby Lindburgh, for her fine performance.

The sisters are proud to welcome Pam Chace as a fine new addition to our pledge class. Added laurels go to Pam, who was also elected to the cheerleading squad. The pledges are now thickly in the swing of things, and working efficiently under the leadership of the newly-elected pledge class officers: President, Judy Zenos; Vice President, Ann Posner; Secretary, Paula Witovsky; Treasurer Carol Levine.

The sisters would like to offer rather belated thanks to the brothers of Phi Mu Delta for a very enjoyable exchange supper.

Fall Housing And Dining Arrangements Must Be Made Before Counseling Day

In advance of Counseling Day on May 2, all University students should have made arrangements for their housing and dining plans for the fall semester 1962-63. All special exceptions concerning class schedules, dormitory arrangements, or health excuses must be established prior to this day if students are to be able to complete correctly the forms necessary for fall semester billing and the preparation of the Student Directory.

For the convenience of all students and staff, a Student Directory has been planned for publication before students return for the fall semester. It is important that we be able to gather correct information at the time of Counseling Day and that any subsequent changes be made as soon as they occur, directly with the offices of the Dean of Men and Dean of Women.

The class schedules for all students will also be computed during the summer, arranging and distribution of class hours and balance of class sizes. This should reduce to an absolute minimum the necessity for early semester delays and schedule changes, and serve to make the fall registration a more efficient procedure for all concerned.

Billing

All University bills will be mailed during the last week in July for payment by August 20. It is important that the information concerning boarding and dining arrangements be exact on these bills so that again there will be a minimum of confusion and change, resulting in convenience of all concerned. Please read carefully the following instructions concerning residence and dining regulations and schedule exceptions and take the necessary steps to comply with these regualtions:

Residence and Dining Regulations

All undergraduate students are housed in dormitories except married students, members living in fraternities and sororities, and students commuting from their parents' homes.

All students residing in dormitories are required to board at the University Dining Commons except seniors, students over 21, members of fraternities and sororities having authorization within approved maximum capacities at their houses.

Special Problems

Any students who needs exemption not provided above may apply and must secure written permission every semester through the offices of the Deans of Men and Women. This must be done prior to May 9, 1962 for the 1962 fall semester. If no exemption permission has been obtained, the student will be billed for the appropriate charges.

In case of serious health handicap requiring restricted diet, secure written exemption from the Director of the University Health Services and file with the Dean of Men and Women.

Schedule Exceptions

Each year students find themselves faced with the problem of obtaining sufficient funds to continue their University education. One source of funds is part-time employment. Unfortunately, some excellent part-time jobs may conflict with class schedules.

The University feels an obligation to assist self-help students. Through the offices of the Dean of Men and Women, permission can be granted for special scheduling for bona fide reasons of employment.

Because of the numbers involved and the necessity for meticulous scheduling, it is necessary that any students who need a schedule exception request it prior to pre-registration. A letter from employer or parents substantiating the facts must accompany the request.

It is virtually impossible for a schedule exception to be granted at the time of registration so it is imcumbent upon all students to think ahead carefully about their plans for the future and to make their requests for schedule exceptions at the appropriate time.

"An interest in student activities can pay you dividends later on!"

Gibson F. Dailey, Asst. to the President
George A. Fuller Company

"Extracurricular activities never really interested me... architecture and construction always did. It's a paradox, though, because as it turned out student activities gave me a big jump on my career in construction.

"Studies educated me. But college activities provided the confidence I needed to approach the business world. Looking back, it was these activities that really gave me my first knowledge of people, administration, leadership.

"Working for the college newspaper, fun magazine, and engineering bulletin taught me writing—a gift I use today in the promotion and getting of new business. Student Council brought the chance to work with other men—a daily occurrence now. Penn's theatrical group and engineering shows helped me relax in front of an audience then—and help me find my voice when I'm talking to large groups now.

"True, today's heavy college curriculum doesn't allow much time for activities. There wasn't much time for them in my day either. I burned a lot of midnight oil on architectural studies, but difficult as they were I still found time for student activities.—I'm mighty happy that I did.

"If you have time during the rest of your years in school to take an interest in activities—do it! It's certain to pay big dividends in an inspiring future in the business of your choice."

UMass Autonomy Bill Means Less Red Tape

by NEAL ANDELMAN '63

On May 10, 1961 the Massachusetts legislature formed a resolve to create a special commission to study "laws relating to the budgetary powers of the trustees of the University of Massachusetts." The Committee consisted of three senators, five representatives (all from the Massachusetts legislature) and three members appointed by the governor. The legislation which this group has proposed is the "UMass Autonomy Bill" (H. 3350).

In a recent State House interview in Boston, Representative Sumner Z. Kaplan, vice-chairman of the committee, said that "the Bill is now in the Ways and Means Committee, but I expect it to be brought to the floor of the House in about three weeks."

Representative Kaplan was asked if he thought the Bill would be passed or defeated. He said that he knows there is opposition to the bill in both the House and the Senate, and he is sure that this opposition will make itself felt. However, Mr. Kaplan expressed confidence that the bill would be passed.

"Passing this bill," said Kaplan, "would enable the University to channel money where it will do the most good." He feels that at the present time UMass is being hindered by the financial restrictions placed upon it, and by unnecessary red tape. Passage of the "Autonomy Bill," feels Kaplan, would go a long way toward cutting this red tape.

What is the autonomy bill? Many students have asked this question, and since the Collegian feels that the contents of this document (3350) are of paramount importance to the University family, the first two articles in this series will be devoted to it and the proposed legislation that it contains.

The full report of the committee is entitled "Report of the Special Commission on Budgetary Powers of the University of Massachusetts and Certain Related Matters". This 54 page document contains the proposed legislation, a summary of present fiscal matters, recommendations, and a minority report.

The report emphasizes that the power to determine the level of state support that Massachusetts educational institutions are to receive still lies within the province of the General Court. The difficulties in question are those which arise after this "level of support" has been determined. "The problem is this: Should the specific use of appropriated funds be controlled in detail by the central control agencies of the State or should be specific use of State funds be left to the discretion of the educators and administrators responsible for the institution."

The state control agencies claim that they must have adequate financial information from all state supported educational institutions in order to operate efficiently. "The schools counter that without authority commensurate with responsibility they cannot do the job of providing first-class educations for the citizens of the Commonwealth."

The report stated that Massachusetts "has a national reputation for its exercise of state control over educational personnel." The committee feels that the system under which UMass now operates has faults which prevent us from doing an ade-

Phi Kappa Phi Fellowship Granted To UMass Senior

A high national honor has been granted to a Lynn, Mass., college senior studying at UMass.

The National Honor Society of Phi Kappa Phi this week announced that Miss Evelyn Aliferis, daughter of Mrs. Bessie Aliferis of 6 Sargents Court, Lynn, has been named one of five recipients of Phi Kappa Phi Fellowships granted annually to outstanding young scholars in the U. S.

Announcement of the award was made by R. C. Gibbs, fellowship supervisor in the society's headquarters in Washington, D.C.

A major in zoology, Miss Aliferis will receive a stipend of $2,500 for graduate study in neurophysiology and psychobiology at the California Institute of Technology.

In addition to the Phi Kappa Phi grant, Miss Aliferis has been awarded a full tuition scholarship by the Institute.

A high honor student at UMass, Miss Aliferis has held Commonwealth and University Scholarships during the past four years.

Elected to Alpha Lambda Delta, scholastic honor society for freshmen women, and to Phi Kappa Phi, recognizing high scholarship in any University field, she has also held a special scholarship for summer study at the Oceanographic Institute at Woods Hole, Mass. Last summer, Miss Aliferis was one of only five undergraduates admitted to advanced work in marine invertebate zoology at Woods Hole.

For the coming summer, the National Science Foundation has awarded Miss Aliferis a fellowship for additional work at the Oceanographic Institute. She also received honorable mention in the recent national competition for N.S.F. graduate fellowships.

The young scholar is a member of the Zoology Club, the German Coffee Hour, and the Eastern Orthodox Club at the University. A proficient dancer, she has taught Greek folk dancing and can perform Spanish and Israeli folk dances as well. Her hobbies are boating and cycling—and, she adds, "poetry and philosophy."

TKE Places First In Sing

The IFC held its annual sing yesterday at 3 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium. The M.C. was Jim Bradley, and the producer, Steve Israel. TKE took first place with "V'poot" conducted by Fran Lovejoy, followed by Lambda Chi, conducted by Jock Farrell, singing "South Coast". TEP took third place singing "Johnny I Hardly Knew You", conducted by Mike Buchman.

The final event of the afternoon was the crowning of the Greek Queen, Jan Hatcher, by the Special Assistant Attorney General of Massachusetts, George F. Cramer of Amherst.

To Err—2.0

The "2.0' Bill is a mistake, and a mistake that must be corrected.

To begin with, the Bill that was passed by last year's senate (and even the Bill's passage is now subject to question) was not the Bill that the Senators thought they were passing. The "spirit of the law" was certainly not captured in black and white. Even the Senators were confused and did not realize that members of the junior class who were supposed to be exempt from the 2.0 requirement were, in fact, not eligible to run for office.

Wednesday night Senator Cournoyer introduced an amendment to the bill that would have corrected the document so that the "spirit of the law" which was originally intended would be included.

President Tacelli called the amendment a "bad precedent."

Is it wrong to admit that you have made a mistake? It's far worse to know you have made a mistake and not to do anything about it.

But the mistake goes deeper than the errors made in the semantics of the Bill. Last year's Student Senate took it upon themselves to judge an entire group of students without any regard for the individual. It is quite obvious that no two students are the same, and that some students who have less than a 2.0 cum. may very well be capable of performing extra-curricular service as well as maintain or improve his academic average.

The 2.0 Bill, then, is unfair. The Senate was judging the capabilities of a large group without inspecting the individual. The Senate obviously can not interview every person who wants to run for an office but does not have a 2.0 cum. (nor would this be desirable.) Since the Senate does not have the right to judge the entire body of students affected, and since the Senate can not judge the individuals, then there is really no justification for the Bill and no insurance that the Bill will accomplish its intended purpose. "2.0" should be scrapped.

One of the original purposes of the 2.0 motion was to protect students who were (or wanted to be) officers in an RSO approved activity. Does an officer drop out of an organization because he is not allowed to run for office? Does the Student Senate assume that a person who was an officer but now can not run will put his extra time into studying? Does the Bill protect the students who put in many hours a week on extracurriculars but do not hold office? It would seem that the protection offered to the students by last year's Senate was something short of adequate.

And who are the Senators protecting us from? Why from ourselves, of course! We are in college now. Aren't we mature enough to decide what is best for ourselves?

As Senator Linda Achenbach said, "The Bill is idealistic, but not very realistic."

The Bill is unrealistic. And now this year's Student Senate has the opportunity to correct the mistake of last year's Senate. Let us hope they make full use of this opportunity, and that President Lederle will lead the University in its precedent of agreeing with the Senate in student matters.

IT'S SPRING AND A YOUNG MAN'S FANCY TURNS TO...

When life appeared so dark and grey,
And time dragged on from day to day,
When the world seemed to me,
Filled with animosity,
When all my friends exuded gladness,
And all that I could show was sadness,
When in sports I lacked condition,
The reason was not mal-nutrition.
When in the classroom during school,
I appeared to be a fool,
And when my quickly falling cum.,
Signaled my impending doom,
Do not think for one minute,
That my heart could have been in it.

Now the questions that arise,
About my rescue from demise,
And which should come as no surprise,
To anyone with eyes;
Are: why I no longer mind to trudge,
Through the slowly drying sludge,
Why resumption of R O T C,
No longer makes me queasy,
Why I suddenly want to fly,
Across the Amherst sky,
Like the birds and the bees,
Through coming leafs on campus trees;

Why on March the twenty first,
Did I suddenly gain thirst,
For the many forms of knowledge,
Available to me at college?
And why does this University,
Again appeal to me?
Why do I suddenly desire,
To work, to play, and to perspire,
Over sports, and over books,
And . . . girls with looks?

What's the constitutive factor,
That has changed my whole character?
You can probably guess the reason,
It's related to the season.
Yes, you know the very thing:
They call it SPRING.

Robert Aaron Freedman

In past and future weeks the weatherman and our calendar may differ in defining our present condition as Spring. The calendar may read April but the rains will fall, the winds will chill, and do not be surprised at snowflakes. But there is always one sure way by which we are able to tell whether or not Spring is here.

This is the way which brings a truce to the war of ideas between the young and the old, carries portable radios into gardens and onto beaches, gives Presidents sore arms, creates parking congestion from New York to California and from Texas to Minnesota, brings back hotdogs and peanuts just as surely as Spring brings back the swallows to Capistrano, and most important . . . it is the way that America uses to usher in Spring. That's baseball!

In the last ten years, our world and country have progressed at a rate of speed which now puts us 200 years ahead of our time. Society's only problem is in keeping up with the progress of science. And in this initial week of baseball 1962, we may take our hats off to that institution called Baseball for the flexibility and determination it has shown in keeping up with a growing America. Today with East and West (New York and Los Angeles) and North and South (Minnesota and Houston) encompassed, Baseball may honestly be proud of its acclaim as "our national pastime."

Yet, even with the migrations of teams and the changes in rules, the game has never lost an ounce of its originiality or popularity. Willie Mays does not play stick-ball in the streets of Harlem anymore and every kid knows that Joe DiMaggio is divorced from Marilyn Monroe, and by the time he is a teenaer, he read that Babe Ruth ate and drank himself off the Yankees. Nevertheless, on the hot asphalt streets of Harlem the kids still catch fly balls in Willie's "bread-basket" style, Little Leaguers continue to argue over who is going to wear Joltin' Joe's number "5", and America still speaks awesomely of the day the Babe pointed to centerfield.

So, if for no other reason than that it brings back baseball, thank God for Spring!

— LETTERS —

Eight o'clock classes are barbaric, uncivilized, and pagan. They are obviously a manifestation of an agriculturally based society which has not yet released itself from the bonds of the farm. De we have chickens to feed or cows to milk that necessitates our getting up in the dawning hours of the morning? Moreover, this rising at an outrageous time is obviously a holdover from our paganistic backgrounds. For some reason man still insists on worshipping the Sun god. This action could be condoned if He (he?) were of a more benevolent nature and abstained from glaring his ever-present brilliance off the already gleaming white snows into our tender and baby blue eyes. Since the invention of the light bulb there has been no good reason for our early awakening. What man used to arise to can be duplicated by a flick of a switch. Finally, it must be remembered that the rest of the world does not deem it necessary to start its work day before the more civilized hour of nine o'clock. Therefore it must be said that the University is failing its students. What happens to the happy graduate of this institution on the morning after commencement when he gets up bright and early and finds nobody to talk to. He will in all probability become a neurotic, a manic depressive, or perhaps as the last alternative a graduate student.

"The Student Senate And The 2.0"

Tonight at 7:30 radio station WMUA will present a documentary entitled "The Student Senate and the 2.0".

Last year, after the Senate passed the motion, a referendum was held to determine if the student body was in favor of the motion. 50% of the student population had to vote if the referendum was to be official, but only 42% did vote. Of the 42% who did vote, nearly two out of three voted against the motion.

Both the Collegian and WMUA are concerned with the 2.0 motion, and feel that the students should be made aware of all the details of this controversy.

To the Editor:

I was appalled to read the following news item recently: "The Student Committee, working with the University Store and the Philip Morris Tobacco Company, have arranged for 'Centennial Scholarships' to be given to worthy students. The amount of the scholarship to be donated by the cigarette company will be determined by the number of cigarette packs that are collected and redeemed at the Bookstore."

I see no reason why Centennial Scholarships must be tied in with a promotional "gimmick" apparently concocted by a Madison Avenue grey suiter hired by a cigarette company. If the company wishes to promote the sales of cigarettes among the college youth (a dubious practice in the light of recent surveys linking smoking to cancer), then let there be no tie-in with the Centennial Year. More respectable ways ought to be found to raise money for the worthy purpose of increasing the number of scholarships to our students.

Peabody To Appear Here For Major Policy Speech

Former Governor's Councillor, Endicott Peabody, will appear here on April 24 to deliver what has been termed "A major policy address", according to reports received from the Young Democrats Club.

In a written statement to Ned Martin, Student Chairman of the Peabody for Governor Committee, Kevin Boyle, President of the Boston College Young Democrats Club, reported Peabody was favored in a student poll by a two-to-one margin lead ahead of Lieutenant Governor Edward F. McLaughlin.

In addition to Peabody and McLaughlin, the names of both announced and potential Gubernatorial candidates listed in the pol were Registrar of Motor Vehicles Clement Riley, and Congressman Thomas P. O'Neil of Cambridge

CRAM COURSE NO. 1: MODERN EUROPEAN HISTORY

The school year draws rapidly to a close, and it's been a fun year, what with learning the twist, attending public executions, and walking our cheetahs—but are we ready for final exams? Some of us, I fear, are not. Therefore, in these few remaining columns, I propose to forego levity and instead offer a series of cram courses so that we may all be prepared at exam time.

We will start with Modern European History. Strictly defined, Modern European History covers the history of Europe from January 1, 1962, to the present. However, in order to provide employment for more teachers, the course has been moved back to the Age of Pericles, or the Renaissance, as it is jocularly called.

The single most important fact to remember about Modern European History is the emergence of Prussia. As we all know, Prussia was originally called Russia. The "P" was purchased from Persia in 1874 for $24 and Manhattan Island. This later became known as Guy Fawkes Day.

Persia, without a "P" was, of course, called Ersia. This so embarrassed the natives that they changed the name of the country to Iran. This led to a rash of name changing. Mesopotamia became Iraq, Schleswig-Holstein became Saxe-Coburg, Bosnia-Herzegovina became Cleveland. There was even talk in stable old England about changing the name of the country, but it was forgotten when the little princes escaped from the Tower and set fire to Pitt, the Elder.

Meanwhile Johannes Gutenberg was quietly inventing the printing press, for which we may all be grateful, believe you me! Why grateful? I'll tell you why grateful. Because without Gutenberg's invention, there would be no printing on cigarette packs. You would not know when you bought cigarettes whether you were getting good Marlboros or some horrid imitation. You could never be sure that you were buying a full-flavored smoke with a pure white filter, a cigarette that lets you settle back and get comfortable—in short, a Marlboro. It is a prospect to chill the bones and turn the blood to sorghum—so if you are ever in Frank-furt am Main, drop in and say thanks to Mr. Gutenberg. He is elderly—408 years old last birthday—but still quite active in his laboratory. In fact, only last Tuesday he invented the German short-haired pointer.

But I digress. Back to Modern European History. Let us turn now to that ever popular favorite, France.

France, as we all know, is divided into several departments.

He invented the German short-haired pointer

There is the Police Department, the Fire Department, the Gas and Water Department, and the Bureau of Weights and Measures. There is also Madame Pompadour, but that need not concern us because it is a dirty story and is only taught to graduate students.

Finally, let us take up Italy—the newest European nation. Italy did not become a unified state until 1848 when Garibaldi, Cavour, and Victor Emmanuel threw three coins in the Trevi Fountain. This lovely gesture so enchanted all of Europe that William of Orange married Mary Stuart and caused a potato famine in Ireland. This, in turn, resulted in Pitt, the Younger.

All of this may seem a bit complicated, but be of good cheer. Everything was happily resolved at the Congress of Vienna where Metternich traded Parma to Talleyrand for Mad Ludwig of Bavaria. Then everybody waltzed till dawn and then, tired but content, they started the Thirty Years' War. © 1962 Max Shulman

Today you can buy Marlboros all over Europe, but you might have to pay a premium. In all 50 of these United States, however, you get that fine Marlboro flavor, that excellent Marlboro filter, in flip-top box or soft pack at regulation popular prices.

Burlin's Art At Mem. Hall Thru April 15

A retrospective exhibition of work executed from 1912 to 1961 by the American painter, Paul Burlin, will be shown at UMass through April 15 in Memorial Hall.

The exhibition will be open from 8 a.m. to 9 p.m. on weekdays, 8 a.m. to 5 pm on Saturdays, and will be closed on Sunday, April 15.

Organized by the American Federation of Arts under a grant from the Ford Foundation, the exhibition represents part of the Foundation's program in the humanities and the arts.

Mr. Burlin has held various teaching posts throughout his career. In 1949 he was Visiting Artist at the University of Washington. From 1949 through 1954 he was Artist in Residence at Washington University, St. Louis; from 1954 through 1955 he was the John Hay Whitney Foundation Professor at Union College, Schenectady, New York and in 1960 held the post of Visiting Professor at the School of the Art Institute of Chicago.

It will be held in Adams House on Wednesday, April 11, from 7 to 8:30 p.m. The girls now living on the French Corridor will answer all questions. Among the plans for next year to be discussed will be the arrival of a young Frenchwomen to the corridor to help the girls perfect their knowledge of French. Applications for the French Corridor will be available at that time.

The deadline for contributions to the Literary Magazine is April 9; Late contributions will be accepted throughout this week.

Dr. Scheffey To Head Resource Development

Dr. Andrew J. W. Scheffey, a natural resources authority in this country and abroad, has joined the UMass faculty, Pres. John W. Lederle has announced.

Dr. Scheffey was appointed as resources development specialist with the rank of associate professor. As a member of the College of Agriculture staff, he will be responsible for its new educational program dealing with the conservation and use of the state's land and water resources.

Dr. Scheffey served with the American Friends Service Committee, Finnish Lapland in 1952, and from 1953-55 was with the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions in Mexico in connection with the Mexican Soil Conservation Service.

He was an instructor in the University of Michigan School of Natural Resources in 1955, a research associate with the Mexican Institute of Natural Resources in Mexico City from 1956-57, and from 1958-60 served as agricultural economics research adviser with the ICA in Seoul, Korea. During the past year he was with the programs and policies staff of the Outdoor Recreation Resources Review Commission, Washington, D.C.

Land and water resources of Massachusetts are limited in relation to the varied and growing demands for their use, said Dean of Agriculture Arless A. Spielman in commenting on the new statewide resource development program.

Many agencies and groups in the state have separate interests in these resources as they pertain to agriculture, industrial and urban development, water supplies, recreational facilities and other services.

Dr. Scheffey will work closely with these agencies in planning and developing an overall program designed to result in the conservation and wise use of the state's land and water resources. This program will involve both the research and extension facilities of the College of Agriculture.

Dr. Scheffey obtained his B.A. from Haverford College and his M.S. and Ph.D. degrees from the University of Michigan, the latter in 1958.

Concert Band Presents Annual Spring Concert

The sixty-piece UMass Concert Band presented its annual spring concert under the direction of Professor Joseph Contino Friday evening in Bowker Auditorium.

Highlighting the evening's program was featured soloist Alan Blustine's performance of von Weber's Second Concerto for Clarinet. Blustine, a sophomore mathematics major, has performed with such area musical groups as the Amherst Community Opera Orchestra, the Smith College Orchestra, and the Springfield Symphony.

Included in the program of modern and classical works for band were Felix Mendelssohn's Overture in C, Op. 24, Gilbert Vinter's New Lamps for Old, a suite based on folk tunes of the British Isles, Guadalcanal March, taken from Richard Rodgers' Victory at Sea, Youth Triumphant, an overture by Henry Hadley, and Variations On a Shaker Melody, from Aaron Copland's Appalachain Spring.

The Dover Coach, a three trumpet novelty by Gilbert Vinter, featured the second half of the concert. Soloists were Richard Kmon '64, Dennis Morrisey '64, and Esther Eisenberg '65.

The concert concluded with the Italian march Fiume by E. Boccalari, Vincent Persichetti's contemporary work, Pageant, Op. 59, and Roland Seitz's March Grandioso.

Professor Contino, who is completing his twelfth year as head of University Bands, received several curtain-calls and lead the band in an encore.

Friday's concert was the second of three scheduled campus performances and followed the group's mid-winter tour through areas of Massachusetts and Connecticut. Next local performance of the band will be the Pops Concert slated for 7 p.m. Sunday, May 13, on the South terrace of the S.U.

The NFBA Foundation scholarship will be awarded to an undergraduate or graduate student in the School of Business Administration who is interested in making a career in the food industry. Scholastic ability, character, and financial need of applicants will be considered in making the award.

The teaching staff of the marketing department will select the scholarship recipient.

Autonomy Bill . . .

quate job of recruiting new teachers, and holding the old ones.

The report went on to explain that the present tenure policy at the University is not good. Since UMass is under the State's control, the University has to abide by the State's mandatory granting of tenure to veterans after three years of service. The committee feels that this injures the veteran more than it helps him, because three years is too short a time in which to judge a man's ability (the decision is actually made after two years) and offering tenure to an unproven instructor is considered too great an investment risk. The report indicated that if the University were operating under autonomy, its own tenure policies could be established.

The committeemen said that, "The entire fiscal system shows a lack of confidence in the trustees to control their own funds." They listed only four limitations which they felt should be place on the trustees:

(1) the General Court still has the ultimate authority to determine general public policy for the University,

(2) budget requests should be submitted to the Governor and the Legislature,

(3) management and financial reporting should be made to the control agencies so that the public will know how their money is being spent, and

(4) a post audit of all accounts should be made to account for public funds. The actual channeling of all funds allocated to the University, however, would be left up to the board of trustees.

Monday's article will contain excerpts from the proposed legislation and some general recommendations which this study group have made.)

Speech Dept. Shows Sets Of Oenslager

The Department of Speech at UMass has announced an exhibition of the original stage designs of the prominent scene designer, Mr. Donald Oenslager. The exhibition wil consist of original water colors, collages, elevation drawings, ground plans and light plots.

Photographs of the actual settings are also included and the whole exhibition is designed to illustrate the artistic as well as technical processes a scene designer goes through when creating settings in the theatre. The exhibition has been assembled and arranged by the Department of Speech.

The exhibit will be shown in Bartlett Hall from April 9 through April 21.

Mennen Williams To Talk On Kennedy Admin. And Africa

G. Mennen Williams, Assistant Secretary of State for African Affairs, will speak at UMass on Wednesday, April 11 at 4 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium.

Fourth in a series of national figures speaking at the University under a Sperry and Hutchinson Lectureship Grant awarded to the government department, Williams will discuss "The Kennedy Administration and the New Nations of Africa."

Governor of Michigan for an unprecedented six terms, Williams was appointed to the State Department post in December 1960 by President Kennedy.

A graduate of Princeton University, Williams went on to Michigan Law School where he earned a doctor of jurisprudence degree. He immediately began his governmental career by accepting a post as attorney for the Social Security Board in Washington, D.C.

In the late 1930's he held posts as assistant attorney general in Michigan and as assistant to the U.S. attorney general's office. Commissioned a lieutenant junior grade in the U.S. Naval Reserve in 1942, Williams received a number of battle citations. He was separated from the service in 1946 as a lieutenant commander.

Elected Governor of Michigan in November 1948, he retained his post through successive re-elections until 1960 when he was appointed to his present position.

Gov. Williams, who was elected to Phi Beta Kappa at Princeton, has received honorary degrees from eight institutions of higher learning.

AGR Donates Pints Of Blood To Uncle Wiggily

Last Monday evening the phone rang at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Roger Garis, 279 Amity Street. Mrs. Garis answered.

"Hello," said a male voice, "is this where Uncle Wiggily lives?" He was told it was—Howard R. Garis makes his home with his son and daughter-in-law.

"This is Alpha Gamma Rho fraternity at UMass. We understand Uncle Wiggily has been in the hospital and needed blood transfusions. There are fifteen of us around the phone now and we want to replace the blood."

There is little one can respond to an offer like that Mrs. Garis tried to say "Thank you," but it seemed inadequate.

"We're glad to do it," said the caller. "We all loved the Uncle Wiggily stories when we were kids. We figure it's little enough to give some blood for them."

So the blood bank at Cooley Dickinson hospital will receive donations of six pints of blood from the brothers of Alpha Gamma Rho.

Two approaches to the "man's deodorant" problem

If a man doesn't mind shaving under his arms, he will probably find a woman's roll-on satisfactory. Most men, however, find it simpler and surer to use Mennen Spray Deodorant. Mennen Spray was made to get through to the skin, where perspiration starts. And made to work all day. More men use Mennen Spray than any other deodorant. How about you? 64¢ and $1.00 plus tax

Outdoor Track Squad Shooting For Yankee Conference Title

by ABE SHEINKER '62

The Yankee Conference championship is the goal of the UMass spring track squad as it prepares for the outdoor season. The team has considerable depth and a number of outstanding men, but its chances in the Conference will depend as usual on several "if's."

Among the 18 returning lettermen are YanCon champions Dick Ward and Loren Flagg. Ward won the high jump last year and took fourth in the hammer throw. He also did 6'4" in the high jump in another meet and is expected to be greatly improved in the hammer event because of his great gains in the indoor weight throw this winter. Flagg won the YanCon 100 yard title and was at close second in the 220. He wasn't at his peak in indoor competition this year, so it remains to be seen what this 9.9 man will do this spring.

The fine crew of distance runners on the team will be one of its biggest assets. Bob Brouillet, record-breaking sophomore in cross-country and indoor track, could walk away with both the mile and two-mile titles in the Conference meet. Dave Balch, who also had times under the old indoor records, will be right up with Brouillet in both events. Also helping out in the two-mile run will be Bob Avery and Dick Blomstrom, whose road running and marathon racing have greatly improved their track performances.

The middle distance events are well-stocked with the talents of Ken O'Brien and Ron Young. O'Brien was second in the 1961 YanCon half-mile by only two seconds and is a very capable 440 man also. Young's steady improvement in the 440 indicates a possible place for him in the big meets. The other middle distance stalwarts are Joe LaMarre, Jack Harrington, and Bob Carpenter.

Joe Cassidy, Charlie LaPier, and Al Garsys are the UMass high jumping trio, who along with Ward, usually take most of the places in this event. LaPier is also the team's best high hurdler, having set a school record while placing third at the Yankee Conference meet last year. Garsys is the team's number one broad jumper with several 22-footers to his credit. Mike Salem is his capable teammate in this event.

The quality of UMass pole-vaulting rises with Jim Lumley aiming skyward. This sophomore cleared 13 feet indoor and is hoping to go even higher this spring.

The team's weakest event have usually been the high and low hurdles but the improvement of John Harrington and Jim Bradley, as well as LaPier, could end this. Bradley set a school record in the lows, in indoor competition, and Harrington was a consistent scorer in both races.

Lastly, the weight events could turn out to be the Redmen's strongest. Ward is a good shot-putter as well as hammer thrower. Ernie Karshick is a capable man with the hammer, shot, and discus. George Giddings and Paul Pisinski are two of the team's best with the shot.

The toughest fight for places on the team is in the discus throw. Six men are competing for the four places: Charlie Romeo and Al Obue, the aces of last year's team, Red Karshick inconsistent but unbeatable when at his best, newcomers Don Black and Bud Smith, who may be this year's stars; and powerful Tony Kraskauskas. Charlie Fohlin and Hank Kelsey take care of the javelin throwing.

Coach Bill Footrick, who guided the team to a 3-2 record last year with exactly the same schedule, has been out of action for a few weeks because of an operation, but fresh mentor Bud Cobb promises to have the squad in shape for the first meet against Springfield on April 28. Judging from recent workouts, he undoubtedly will.

The schedule:

Apr. 28	Springfield	Home	1:00 p.m.
May 1	Connecticut	Away	3:00 p.m.
May 5	NU & Tufts	Home	1:00 p.m.
May 8	Holy Cross	Home	2:00 p.m.
May 12	Y C Orono, Me.		10:00 a.m.
May 15	Brandeis	Home	2:00 p.m.

Esquire's CLUB & CAMPUS FASHIONS

BY O. E. SCHOEFFLER, ESQUIRE'S Fashion Director

With Easter vacation already flashing the "Walk" sign, why not decide before you go home on your number one suit and the rest of your wardrobe. Aside from the traditional dress-up holiday, there may be decisive interviews for either a summer job or a permanent one if you're a graduating senior—and the clothes you wear—plus the way that you wear them—make the pivotal first impression. You want it to be right at first sight, so, let's take a run-down on what you might well select this Spring in fashion.

YOUR NUMBER ONE SUIT for warmer weather is next to weightless in the new lighter-than-ever flannels and polyester/wool blends. Color-wise, consider the more definite blues, the new lighter greys; see the classic Glen Urquhart or 'glen' plaids.

THE GIFT OF 'GAB' you get with the return of natural tan gabardine. Its fine diagonal twill weave and surface sheen make it an excellent choice for your Number One Suit. Today's gabardines also come in lighter weight wools and new polyester/wool blends.

STILL THE FAVORED SILHOUETTE is the Natural Shoulder three-button, straight-hanging jacket with center vent and flap pockets. The First Executive Look, epitomized by President Kennedy, may be Two-Button . . . but the Campus Look, coast to coast, remains devotedly Three-Button with slim, pleatless trousers with cuffs.

PRIDE OF THE OUTFIT: REGIMENTAL STRIPES . . . the resurgence noted by ESQUIRE last fall is gaining momentum for Regimental Stripes—the traditional colors of the historic British regiments. With scores of these famed regiments—like the Grenadier Guards, the Royal Fusiliers, the Inskilling Dragoons—there's quite a roll-call of striking color combinations in pure silk repps for your selection.

DRESS SHIRTS—SHOES—BELT . . . white Button Down Oxfords are still very much de rigeur, and there are handsome variations in narrow tape stripes of blue, grey, olive. Also, although you 'can't go wrong' with a white broadcloth tab collar dress shirt, why not dress up with the newest pale tones of blue, olive or cream. With suits in Blue or Grey, wear BLACK SHOES or the VERY DARKEST BROWNS . . . and RIB SOCKS are always smart and correct. Your DRESS BELT is LEATHER with an important harness-type buckle in polished metal.

AT THE SUMMIT—YOUR HAT . . . where the decisions are made, it's the narrow snap-brim felt in brown or olive—welt edge, raw edge or grosgrain-bound.

BIG SWEATER ON CAMPUS—THE CARDIGAN . . . the button-front coat-sweater is tops in campus popularity. Tops in favor are the lofty Shetland and the open-knit Alpaca wool or wool blends in solid colors or stripes.

BEACH-BOUND? Should your vacation find you beached around Ft. Lauderdale or Bermuda, say, then sportswear moves into number one spot. Here you'll see a lot of TIGER—the bold, tawny color that's getting the roar of approval from campus men everywhere. They pick it up in sportshirts like this, sweaters, ties, socks. Find it in sharp, solid tones or mixed—for example, a houndstooth sportcoat checked in Black and Tiger . . . and let them see you "burning bright" in fashion.

—NOTICE—

Its that time of year again when the Collegian sends out one of its many pleas for people who are interested in writing for the Sports Department. There are still openings on the staff for writers of Spring sports. Anyone interested in serving their fellow man, becoming deeply embroiled in the sports world, or merely looking for fascinating adventure should apply. Sane applicants will also be considered.

Student-athletes at the University of Massachusetts compiled better grades than the male average of their respective classes last semester. Moreover, athletes who participate in two sports compiled better averages than those who play but one sport.

Norman Rothstein To Direct RD's "Invitation To A March"

Norman Rothstein, director of the Roister Doisters' spring production, "Invitation to a March", has quite a history as an RD member.

NORMAN ROTHSTEIN

A UMass graduate, class of '56, Norman was on the Roister Doister' Executive Board for three years. In that time he participated in over thirty shows in Bowker, including the 1954 Roister Doisters' one-acts, which he directed. During this time, he was the three-time recipient of the Best Actor Award.

Following his graduation from UMass, Norman served two years in the Army, during which time he served as the director for the U.S. Army Playhouse for the 3rd Army, and also as Field Director for the U.S. Army T.V. station in Fort Gordon, Georgia.

His ten years of stock experience as an actor, technician, stage manager, technical director and director include three years at Mt. Park as technical director and director, and two years as technical director and resident director at Ivoryton Playhouse, the original stock playhouse.

Following the '62 season at the Ivoryton Playhouse, Norman plans to go to the Vanguard Theatre in Detroit, as one of four resident directors.

Dr. Willard Thorp Will Speak Here Tomorrow Night

On Tuesday, April 10, at 8 p.m., in the Middlesex Room of the S.U., the University Economics Association will present Dr. Willard Thorp of Amherst College. His topic will be "Special Problems the U.S. will face with the Coming Impact of the Common Market."

Dr. Thorp is an expert in the field of international trade and policy. He has written many books on this subject. At the present time he is director of the Merrill Center for Economics at Amherst College.

The lecture is open to the public and will be followed by a coffee hour.

4 Scientists To Discuss Space Life

An outstanding team of "Space detectives" will appear at UMass on Tuesday, April 10, at 8 p.m. in Peters Auditorium of the Goessmann Chemistry Laboratory to present evidence for their belief that forms of life exist in outer space.

The special adventure in exploration of worlds beyond the earth's atmosphere will be discussed by four of America's top scientists at a seminar sponsored by the UMass Chemistry Department.

The four scientists are Drs. Bartholomew Nagy and Douglas Hennessy of Fordham University, Dr. George Claus of the New York University Medical Center, and Dr. Warren G. Meinschein of Esso Research and Engineering Company.

The team of scholars will tell how they isolated substances from certain meteorites which they believe are associated only with living matter. They will also show fossil remains of what appear to be certain kinds of living materials in these meteorites.

First speaker on the program will be Dr. Nagy who will talk on "The Environment of the Parent Body." He will be followed by Dr. Meinschein who will tell about "The Spectroscopic Analysis of Meteorite Extracts."

Dr. Claus will give an analysis of "The Microscopic Examination of the Meteorites," and Dr. Hennessy will conclude with "An Evaluation of the Evidente."

Lan. Lab Piped To Infirmary

For the benefit of the students confined in the Infirmary, WMUA has set up an experimental connection between the Infirmary speaker channel 5 and the Language Laboratories. Utilizing existing telephone lines which would normally be unused when WMUA is off the air, it is now possible for a student to call the Language Lab extension 670 between 9 a.m. and 3 p.m. and request any tape which he may desire. Students may call at any time except during the ten-minute interval between classes. The use of this service is strictly voluntary and done purely as a public service of WMUA and with the cooperation of Dr. Gage and Language Lab personnel. Regularly scheduled tapes will be played on the hour but not to the Infirmary unless requested. Persons wishing to hear scheduled tapes should call in advance to help to avoid conflicts between special requests and class tapes.

During the time when the language tapes are not being played, FM music will be supplied through the channel.

Suggestions for further improvements should be sent to the technical department of WMUA.

Commission Reports Autonomy Step Ahead

by NEAL ANDELMAN '63

The committee report on the "UMass Autonomy Bill" pointed out that the people of Massachusetts are sensitive to the need for higher education. This interest has been reflected in the mounting enrollment in both the public and private institutions of Massachusetts, and in the amount of fiscal support these institutions are granted.

"The University must be equipped with a statutory frame work that recognizes and takes full advantage of its maturity and potential," stated the report of the study committee. They went on to point out that UMass is a growing institution, and that the purposes of the University need to be stated in more "up-to-date" terms.

"We are firmly convinced that unless appropriate provisions are made now for promoting the orderly and effective growth of our educational system, the state will be in default to its citizens and youth." The committee believes that their proposed legislation will be a step forward towards meeting the responsibilities that the state faces.

Will the House and Senate accept the Bill as it now stands? No one really knows yet, but Representative Sumner Kaplan of Boston said that he expects the matter to be brought onto the House floor very soon. If the Bill is accepted, then in part it will read:

This proposed legislation also states the purpose of the University. "The major purpose . . . is to provide without discrimination educational opportunity in such fields of higher education as the trustees may determine . . ." The Bill designates the University to be the major center in the state for research, graduate and professional education, and for the dissemination of knowledge.

Under the proposed Bill the board of trustees would be able to establish any rules and penalties regarding UMass provided that they did not conflict with the restrictions placed upon them (and mentioned in the first article in this series—April 9).

The original appropriation to the University will continue to be determined by the general court of Massachusetts. This is "the level of support" on which the University must operate. Under the proposed Bill what UMass does with the money after the "level of support" has been determined is up to the trustees. It must be remembered, however, that the trustees are at all times responsible to the people of the State and must account for how the money is being spent.

The Bill also provides for the establishment of commonwealth scholarships. The money for these scholarships would be included in the lump sum determined by the general court, and would be available to Massachusetts residents at UMass who are in need of financial assistance.

House Kills Law School Delay Effort

An attempt to kill a resolve for a study of the advisability of establishing a law school at UMass failed in the House of Representatives. Rejection, by referring the matter to the next annual session of the Legislature, failed by a rising vote, 26 to 40.

The resolve then was referred to the House Ways and Means Committee. It was Rep. John J. Fitzgerald, Springfield Democrat, who opposed the recommendation of the rules committee.

Western Massachusetts residents are more desirous of establishment of such a law school, Rep. Fitzgerald said, adding that the proposed study could be made without cost.

Rep. Dave N. Vigneault (D-Springfield) supported the study. He said it would be worthwhile as the liberal arts school and the library could be used for a law school and the cost would not be great. The vote followed.

First Ballet Staged At UM To Perform Thurs. In Cage

America's oldest ballet company, the American Ballet Theatre, will perform at UMass on Thursday evening, April 12 at 8 p.m. in Curry Hicks Physical Education building. This is the first time a ballet company has appeared at UMass.

LUPE SERRANO

Boasting a repertoire of 110 classical and contemporary ballets, the ballet company has added four new works for this tour.

The troupe, which danced for Premier Khrushchev and more than a million Russians during a 1960 tour, is directed by Lucia Chase and Oliver Smith.

Featured dancers include prima ballerina Lupe Serrano, Royes Fernandez, John Kriza, Ruth Ann Koesun, Ivan Allen, Sallie Wilson, and Bruce Marks. They are joined by Mariane Orlando and Caj Selling, principal dancers of the Royal Swedish Ballet.

The ballet company has made four State Department sponsored tours and has travelled to 48 states and 7 countries.

Among the works included in the American Ballet Theatre's repertoire are Les Patineurs, Moon Reindeer, Gala Performance, Caprichos and Billy the Kid.

Performance of the troupe is sponsored by the UMass Concert Association. The performance is open to the public. Tickets may be purchased at the door.

Greek Ball Will Feature Dorsey Band

The Tommy Dorsey Orchestra starring Sam Donahue will recreate the never-to-be-forgotten music of "The Sentimental Gentleman" on Friday, April 13, at the Greek Ball in the S.U. Ballroom.

Two of Tommy's most famous recordings for Victor were "Marie" and the "Song of India". These two records were historic because they started records back on the road to big-time business and set two distinctive trends in popular arrangements that last to this day.

Dorsey Innovations Soar Bands

In "Marie", Tommy took an old Irving Berlin tune and revived it into a bigger hit than it had been on its first appearance. This record also introduced, for the first time, the choral background, chanting a series of song titles in response to the vocalist who did the lyrics to the number. The amazing success of this record was followed by others in the same vein, including another "oldie" brought up-to-date, Jerome Kern's "Who?". "Song of India" was another Dorsey special—a sweet-swing arrangement of a classic featuring Tommy's mellow trombone. The great demand for more of this elegant music brought forth, "Barcarolle," "Humoresque", "Going Home" (Dvorak's New World Symphony) and many others in equally fine arrangements.

No story of the Tommy Dorsey music would be complete without a mention of the musicians and vocalists who got their start on the road to fame with TD. These musicians include Bunny Berigan, Glenn Tacelli Makes Senate Quorum; Collegian, WMUA Budgets OK'd.

by ANN MILLER '64, News Assignment Editor

In true Hollywood manner, Senate President 'Tex' Tacelli arrived in the nick of time to make a quorum and pass $40,000 worth of budgets.

For 40 minutes the Senate sought high and low for enough Senators to make the required 26. At 7:41 the quorum was met when a surprised President Tacelli walked into a meeting he hadn't called.

In an unprecedented and unpresidented move yesterday afternoon, Senate Vice President Linda Achenbach, because of the large amount of important business at hand, called a meeting for 7 p.m. last night.

It had been decided last week that the Senate would meet this week on Tuesday, Wednesday, and Thursday nights. Last night's meeting had been canceled at a Senate Executive meeting Monday night. Yesterday, in the absence of President Tacelli, Vice President Achenbach rescheduled it.

According to rules, it was a special meeting called for budgets. As such, any business passed, other than that included under the Budget Act, would have to be ratified at a regular meeting. This meant that no action was taken on the controversial 2.0 Bill.

The WMUA budget act encountered opposition on first hitting the floor due to proposed increase of some $2,200 over last year's budget.

The increase arises mainly from increased appropriations for operating costs and operating equipment. These are up largely because of the increased educational programming of the station and increased amount of hours in operation. Sports costs are up because of increased scheduling for next year.

A motion of Senator Buck's to cut about $150 for publicity for next year was the only major cut in the budget.

Senator Barry Jaye, speaking for the budget, said "WMUA is one of the few organizations on campus that is constantly trying to improve itself. They are constantly creating an image of responsibility to the University and for the University . . . The budget has already been cut $1600."

A question arose concerning the legality of planned converters in the dorms next year, in place of the one presently operating at WMUA. But it was pointed out that FCC regulations, while they can illegalize converters at the station or operating under the auspices of the station, have no jurisdiction over dormitory activities.

The budget passed by a resounding majority.

Earlier in the meeting, the Collegian budget had been passed. A suggestion proposed by Senator Bob Brauer to decrease the number of Collegians distributed to the student body and give complimentary copies to faculty members . . . to show the faculty that the students are more desirous of their becoming aware of student activities . . . was defeated.

According to Senator Don Cournoyer, there was a "principle involve. Students shouldn't be paying for extra faculty copies while being, themselves, deprived."

PART II—THE PURCHASING PROBLEM

By MITCHEL MILLER '63 and ELWIN McNAMARA '64

The University, any university, cannot function with teachers alone. There must be proper teaching aids available at all times. Laboratory equipment must be available when it is needed, not months later. It is for this reason that the Donahue commission (the "UMass Autonomy Bill" study group) proposed a more liberal policy of purchasing, one that still has the watchful eye of Beacon Hill over it, yet allows the University to solve supply shortage with the least delay.

EXPERIENCE SHOWS NEED

Time after time, the University has been impeded in performing its purpose by unrealistic controls over purchasing. All too many orders have been held up, snarled in Boston's red tape. No problem, outside of the excessive controls over personnel, has burdened the University more than that created by the cumbersome system of centralized purchasing as it is presently applied to us. Although the commission recommends purchase allowances of $500 or less exemption from buying restrictions, the commission on administration and finance has lowered this to the paltry sum of $20. In the light of the high prices so prevalent today, the expense of processing the forms for these minor orders, and the fact that the University has its own experienced purchasing staff, it is ridiculous to observe this $20 limit. Delays fatal to educational projects are a consequence of this excessive control.

DELAY CHARACTERIZES PRESENT SYSTEM

When speaking of purchasing procedure, we must distinguish between those purchases amounting to less than $20 and those of greater amounts. The time elapsed between order and receipt of the order by the vendor on a below $20 purchase averages about one week. On purchases over this sum, the average time is on the order of about six weeks. This system creates a mountain of red tape which has sabotaged many an educational or research project. Consider the case of one researcher: a federal grant was awarded for work in public health, but this required a special piece of equipment not available here. The request for the equipment was put in when the grant was received. The equipment was received approximately ten months later. Ordinarily this would not have been too bad, but in this case, the grant was good only for one year, ten months of which had already been wasted by the inefficient practices now prevalent.

But this delay does not lie completely with the time taken to receive the goods. Often times, a state official, who incidently knows nothing about the needs of a university, will change the content of a request. This action often ends in our receiving material completely useless to the staff member who mad the original request.

Finally, a third delay is often found in the necessity to test the goods received in order to ascertain that they conform to specifications. In other words, the state makes the university use the central purchasing, but gives no guarantee that the goods received will conform to specification.

LIBRARY PURCHASES POSE PROBLEMS

The problems involved in the renewal of periodicals is almost unbelievable. Under the present system, the library compiles a list of the periodicals that it wishes for the following year. This list is put out for bids, then the purchase order is sent to Boston for processing. Last year the list was compiled in July, the bids were closed in September, and the purchase order was not processed in Boston until November. This left the subscription agency with about one month to renew all periodicals in a forty-two page list.

Although we do not use the bid system with regular books and communicate directly with the publisher, trade and university press publications pose great difficulties. With this type of publication, we could achieve a 33% discount using a qualified and responsible jobber. This would increase the fund for current books by this same 33%. And this would not cost the taxpayers one cent.

EFFECT OF 3350 ON PURCHASING

Perhaps the major effect of the bill is to lift the present unrealistic $20 ceiling on University purchasing to $500. Although this in itself is an achievement, the bill goes further and exempts "library books and periodicals, educational and scientific supplies, ... emergency repairs and replacement parts ..."

Truly this is a great step forward for public education in Massachusetts. No longer will a class have to be canceled due to material delayed by Boston's red tape. No longer will our researchers have to waste their time waiting for some state official to approve their requests for supplies. Not only will this be a result of the bill, but also the University may expect business firms to do business with it who otherwise would have nothing to do with the usual delay in payment that they experience with the state. The library will be able to order its periodicals earlier, and will be assured of continuity of the subscription. No longer will the library staff be snowed under by the thousands of invoices they now receive. The task can be taken by a jobber who will send two or three large invoices instead of thousands of small ones.

MORE FOR DOLLARS SPENT

This system, when examined, is found to be a great saving to the Commonwealth, therefore a saving to the taxpayer. The time consumed in processing many of the University's requests could be spent elsewhere, this saving considerable money. Through its use of a reputable jobber, the library will be able to save money in its periodical subscriptions.

As has been said before, this bill does not hand the University a "carte blanche;" it is a bill that will give flexibility with real control. It is a bill that will give through this flexibility more education for every dollar spent.

Harry Golden:

The insistence that a college degree is a must has substantially disturbed education. Teachers tell me how the insistence on high marks has led to cheating in the third grade. Rather than encouraging education, the prospect of college has denied it: the kids do not think of what they are reading, but how to get a good mark from reading it. In college fewer people are studying the humanities than ever before. College has become a training place of dental assistants, food testers and salesmen.

Why all the fuss? Are we trying to disguise certain professions? A car salesman keeps his job and supports his family not because he went to college, but because he sells cars.

Knowledge On Loan

To the Editor:

As every student knows, money is the staff of life. If one's financial obligations become too burdensome, there exist at least four sources from which he may obtain a loan; his friends, his dorm-counsellor, his housemother and lastly the Dean of Men. Of course, all these sources are the legal sources, but what of the "easiest" of them all—theft?

The case in point is a student of this University who, without fully exhausting the above possibilities (partly due to a lack of perseverance and partly due to a lack of knowledge), walked out of the Student Book Store with a book under his arm, as well as his jacket. He was risking a minimum of a run-in with the Dean and the Men's Judiciary, and a maximum of suspension. He was risking the thousand dollar investment he had already made in this school. He was risking his entire future for a few dollars. He was caught. After being caught, he met the Dean: and soon after that he met the Men's Judiciary.

Why does the bookstore lose over $6,000.00 a year when money for student loans is so available? Doesn't every student know that the bookstore is under constant surveillance by at least four individuals at all times? Doesn't every student know that the mirrors on the rear wall of the bookstore make every foot of the bookshelves open to inspection by the watchers on duty from any position in the store? Doesn't every student know that new shipments of expensive textbooks are especially well guarded? And finally, doesn't every student have the character to know that stealing is morally wrong? Every student is supposed to know these things, but obviously some do not.

Since any one is apt to make a mistake, and since most people learn from their mistakes, the Men's Judiciary decided to put the student on Disciplinary Probations for the remainder of this semester and all of next year. During this time he is to demonstrate that he can be trusted. Any infractions of the rules will multiply his troubles in a geometric progression.

So take heed you who have either stolen or are contemplating it. Ask yourself two questions before you try stealing from the bookstore—"Have I fully exhausted all my loan possibilities?" and "Am I willing to risk my future for just a few dollars?". If you answer "Yes' and "No" respectively I suggest you either make an appointment with the University Psychiatrist or brace yourself for the disgrace you will bear when you are eventually caught.

One Who Was Caught

OF BARD AND BALM

To the Editor:

I wish to thank and give credit to the staff of the Collegian for its help and encouragement. It was gratifying indeed to have won first prize in a contest of such national renown as J.D.'s Corner. I hope this will be the beginning of my literary career and that my friends will be able to read and enjoy my efforts in the future as they have in the past.

Again with deep appreciation and affection, I thank those who, although they will never achieve literary prominence as I have, will always be known, respected, acknowledged by me.

Steve H. Curtis

P.S. For those fans who are eagerly awaiting my next book, I have included one of my better poems from it:

Oh spring's here, and therefore winter's gone,
And summer soon'll be here.
Oh August'll come, and soon'll be done,
And winter'll again be near.

FIRE-UP FOR SCHOLARSHIPS

To the Editor of the Collegian and the Student Body:

As a part of the Student Centennial Committee's planned yearlong observance of the Hundredth Anniversary of the University of Massachusetts, the Committee is providing scholarships to deserving students. These scholarship funds are being raised by means of a campus-wide cigarette contest, now in progress. The Phillip Morris Tobacco Company has agreed to donate the money for the scholarships in return for their empty cigarette packages.

In order to be a success, this scholarship drive needs the help of the entire student body. The University of Massachusetts Centennial is being aided by the students; however, by the nature of the Centennial there is not room on the Student Centennial Committee for every student, and every student can not, because of other commitments, be a member of the Student Committee. In this scholarship drive there is room for every single student to participate.

The funds raised by this effort will be given as Centennial Scholarships to deserving University students The awarding of these scholarships will be done in the same manner as the awarding of any University Scholarship.

To reach the goal of 200,000 packages by the May 4 deadline an all-out effort is needed. Every student is asked to help. Collection boxes have been placed in every dormitory, fraternity, and sorority house, as well as at various other places throughout the campus. We sincerely hope that you will help us to make this scholarship drive a success.

Sincerely,
Fred Smith '63

Redmen Baseball Starts Saturday; Pitching Still A Big Question Mark

by STEVE HEWEY '63

UMass baseball opens its 1962 schedule Saturday afternoon at New London, Conn., when the Earl Lorden-coached varsity takes the field against the Coast Guard Academy. According to Coach Lorden, this year's varsity nine, bolstered by the return of ten lettermen, is one of the stronger diamond teams in recent years, but the key to success will be the Redmen pitching staff.

Pre-season analysis shows the UMass infield as shaping up as the strongest segment of the team. Beginning with first base, the probable starting nod will go to Ed Forbush, veteran of two seasons on the Redmen varsity. The second base spot is being hotly contested by two experienced juniors, Corky Schmoyer and Pete Larkin. Letterman Frank Pisiewski will tend to duties at short and Tony Williams will probably take over at third. Sophomore infielder Joe Apicella, showing great promise in preseason drills, is also expected to see action this season.

LOU PIA, the mainstay of UMass' pitching staff.

The Redmen seem well-off in the catching department. Two experienced juniors have returned this season to share duties there. They are Dave Krukonis and Ted Osetek.

Coach Lorden has some talented personnel to fill out his outfield lineup. These players returning from last year's nine include Bob Hughes and Bill DelVecchio. Last year Hughes saw service in left while DelVecchio handled the work in right. Other top choices are Ken Clark, who hit for a .420 clip on the Redmen Dixie tour and Neil Harris, who also hit hard on the Southern swing. Neil slugged two triples and a home run while in the batter's box during the trip.

The key to Redmen success most likely depends on the pitching staff. According to Lorden, "If pitching holds up we could have a good season." Three seniors head the mound crew this season. Lew Pia probably will open up against the Coast Guard. He is the only returning pitcher from last year's great pitching which compiled as a staff average a 1.85 E.R.A. Pia saw a lot of action on the hill for the Redmen last year and has come along fine in spring practice.

Coach EARL LORDEN

The other two seniors behind Pia are Cliff Bullock and Carl Elmstrom.

Other possible starters for the Redmen are junior Rod Carey, who saw occasional duty last season, but was bothered by wildness on several outings, and transfer student Dick Wilson. Four sophs are up from last year's freshman squad. They are John Awdycki, Mike Buta, Rick Farrell, and John Mastone.

During the spring vacation the Redmen swung through the South on their annual Dixie tour and finished with a 2 and 4 record. Camp Leigh and Michigan State fell victim to UMass, while Randolph-Macon, Camp Leign, and Camp Lejoune with two wins accounted for the losses.

Garber's Snakebeaters Aim For Third Season Victory

The University of Massachusetts lacrosse team aims for its third consecutive win of the season Wednesday afternoon when the Redmen travel to meet Wesleyan University at Middletown, Connecticut for a 3 p.m. game.

Coach Dick Garber's snakebeaters won their opening games over Washington & Lee and the University of Delaware during the recent vacation-week Southern trip. The Redmen were idle the past week, but played several scrimmages and will be in top form for Wednesday's game.

The goal-tending work of junior Doug Cole has been impressive enough to blend nicely with the team's strong offense and give promise of an outstanding season. Sophomore attackman Steve Harrington is pacing the scoring with four goals and four assists and is closely followed by senior midfielder Jim Ellingwood with four goals and three assists.

Coach Garber indicated that his probable starting lineup will be composed of Cole at goalie, Co-Capt. Walt Glinski, Bowen "Dutch" Dieterle and Jon Kallio (Westboro) at defense, Ken Ekberg, Ellingwood and Frank Gilliatt at the midfield positions and Harrington, Co-Capt. John Bamberry and Bob Glew at the attack spots.

The Redmen play their first home game Saturday afternoon against Holy Cross at 2 p.m. This will be a big test for the Redmen since the two teams battled to a 9-9 tie last year and UMass is the only "B" Division team to defeat Holy Cross in the past four seasons.

Yankees And Dodgers: Players' Favorites

With the major league baseball in its opening days (The Red Sox disappointingly and typically losing their first game 4-0 at the hands of The Cleveland Indians) it has been announced that Mickey Mantle of the New York Yankees has been named the favorite to win the American League home-run title, the Most Valuable Player award and the batting title in a polling of his fellow athletes. The 290 managers, players and coaches who forecasted the 1962 season also picked the Yankees and Los Angeles Dodgers as pennant winners.

Results of the poll, appearing in Sports Magazine's May issue, reveal that Mantle drew 177 votes for home-run champion, Roger Maris, 55, Baltimore Oriole's Jim Gentile, 17, and Detroit Tigers' Rocky Colavito, 16.

In balloting for Most Valuable Player, Mantle received 205 of 279 votes cast while Maris drew only five. This placed last year's home-run leader in a tie for seventh place with teammate Elston Howard. Detroit's Al Kaline was second to Mantle in MVP voting with 18 votes and second in the balloting for leading hitter with 87 votes to Mantle's 91.

Sports editors attribute some of Mantle's vote appeal to his new status as "the underdog." An emotional pull for him was evident in several of the ballots, such as one on which a National League rookie wrote, "Hoping for Mantle."

In the final category, pitching leader, the Yankees' Whitey Ford received 149½ of 264 votes. Frank Lary of the Tigers was runnerup with 63 votes.

National League winners (by pluralities) were: Most Valuable Player, Willie Mays, San Francisco Giants; leading hitter, Hank Aaron, Milwaukee Braves, and home-run leader, Orlando Cepeda, Giants. Mays received 87 of 273 votes cast for MVP. Cepeda finished second with 61 and Aaron next with 40. Last year's MVP winner, Frank Robinson of the Cincinnati Reds, gathered only 12 votes.

Fusia's Football Squad Begins Spring Practice

by JIM TRELEASE '63

While a large portion of the nation was welcoming back baseball to the national scene, UMass Head Football Coach Vic Fusia was welcoming back his fourteen returning lettermen along with 68 additional candidates as Spring Football practice got under way Monday afternoon at Alumni Field.

Greeted by gray skies and a steady drizzle, the Redmen went through a workout session for 55 minutes before heading for the showers. Practice, which is expected to stretch through the month of April, will be limited to less than 60 minute workouts each day, reported Coach Fusia, now in his second year as head mentor at the University. Missing from the day's trials were several standout frosh gridsters who have not yet attained a safe scholastic average to allow for gridiron activities. This policy, along with the shortened daily workouts, is included in the now famous "student-athlete" thesis being adhered to by the Fusia staff.

Pictured above are Redmen football stars PAUL MAJESKI and SAM LUSSIER. Majeski along with Tom Kirby is this year's co-captain. Lussier figures to repeat his excellent performances of last season again in his backfield position.

Among those in session were co-captains Paul Majeski and Tom Kirby who led their fellow lettermen through the afternoon. Lettermen include: Paul Graham, Don Hagberg, Sam Tombarelli, Bob Tedoldi, Matt Collins, Sam Lussier, Ken Kezer, Loren Flagg, Ken Palm, Art Perdigao, and Dick Warren.

Between now and early May, when Fusia hopes to engage his "A" and "B" teams in a practice scrimmage, the Redman Chief must reconstruct the quarterback position which will be demolished come June and graduation by John McCormick, Pete Sullivan, and Len LaBella. Also on the agenda for Line Coaches Chet Gladchuck and Ted Schmitt will be the patching-up job needed in the forward wall due to the loss of seven lettermen up front. End Coach Fred Glatz's headache appears to be in finding replacements for Forbush, Harrington, and Roger DeMinico. Aside from the quarterback slot, Coach Jack Delaney appears to have salvaged the nucleus for a good "backyard" next season in Lussier, Kezer, Palm, Flagg, Perdigao, and Warren after losing Jim Hickman and Fred Lewis.

"We are going to have to learn our football from now on in the Spring," said Coach Fusia this week." The fundamentals and groundwork must be laid in April; in September, we key on our opposition." For the Redman staff, the next few weeks will mean going over the 81 candidates with a microscope in hopes of coming up with not only the necessary eleven man first team but also the strong second team one needs in combating the likes of Boston University, Villanova, and Bucknell—all listed on the 1962 football schedule. Also slated in the opposition are Maine, Connecticut, Rhode Island, Vermont, and New Hampshire.

PLAN AHEAD

UMass sports fans will have a tough job deciding which one of the Redmen sports events they will take in this coming weekend. Both the Varsity Tennis Team and the Lacrosse Squad will be playing on their own home fields. And the more ambitious of the Redmen Rooters can even travel down to the Coast Guard Academy for the varsity baseball game.

High School Math Exam To Be Held At UMass

Secondary school students throughout the state will compete in the twelfth annual High School Prize Examination in Mathematics to be held Saturday, April 28, under the auspices of the UMass Mathematics Club.

Stephen I. Allen, assistant professor of mathematics at UMass and contest director, announced today that the examination this year will be held at 11 centers comprising 10 distinct regions throughout the Commonwealth. These include: Amherst, Boston, Brockton, Brookline, Cambridge, Lawrence-Andover, New Bedford, Pittsfield, Springfield, and two separate centers in Worcester: the Burncoat Street and the Chandler Street Junior High Schools.

Cash prizes totalling $1,000 and appropriate gold and silver medals will be awarded for the four best papers in the state and to 10 regional winners. First prize is a cash award of $150 and a gold medal. Scrolls and certificates of merit will also be awarded for other creditable papers. Contestants take a two-hour examination covering elementary and intermediate algebra, plane geometry, and plane trigonometry.

Second school undergraduates may register for the examination by applying to their school principals for necessary forms, or they may register directly with the Contest Director, Mathematics Department, University of Massachusetts, Amherst, Mass. Registration in both categories must be postmarked not later than midnight, April 18. Last year, 1500 students from more than 200 secondary schools participated. Approximately 300 awards were made to students representing more than 100 of the schools.

As in previous years, the contest is being sponsored by life insurance companies interested in encouraging outstanding young people to enter the actuarial profession.

Assistant Secretary of State for African Affairs, G. Mennen Williams, speaks to students during the question period following his lecture Wednesday in Bowker.

Williams Describes Changes In Africa

by MARY ROCHE '64

Assistant Secretary of State for African Affairs, G. Mennen Williams, spoke on "American Foreign Policy and the Emerging Nations in Africa" Wednesday afternoon in Bowker Auditorium. He emphasized the drastic new changes and the major forces affecting African nations today in their struggles for independence.

Unity and Diversity

There is unity but also great diversity within Africa Williams said. Speaking of the diversity within Africa, he noted that "there are today twenty-nine separate sovereign nations in Africa." Spread out among these sections there are many different peoples with different habits, cultures and traditions—people who speak nearly one thousand different languages.

"Whatever the disparities, almost all of Africa is affected by six major forces—aspirations for freedom, for dignity, for a more abundant life, for education, for African unity and a policy of non-alignment. These are cohesive factors that tend to draw the nations of Africa closer together," Williams stated.

Communist Successes Small

As might be expected, said Williams, the Communists have been hard to work in Africa but have thus far had very little success. This is due in part to the particular conditions existing within Africa, conditions which the Communists have been unable to adjust to and also in large measure to African devotion to a policy of non-alignment, according to Williams. "The Communists, if they are to be successful," must have some kind of commitment to their ideology or power system." This the African people are unwilling to give.

"In this neutral situation, Williams said. "we can compete with the Communists on equal terms." "In ariving at an African policy, we have been guided by a long standing American belief in self-determination for peoples everywhere." In our attitudes here, we respect their policy of non-alignment which America followed in its younger days under the name, "no entangling alliances."

"To Africa, non-elignment does not mean non-commitment. It may mean anything from friendly preference without ties to one side and non-engagement with the other side to seemingly friendly association with both sides with a more-or-less equal engagement." "In the long run, I believe this philosophy will work to the advantage of the free world."

U.S. Personality Important

"Although a powerful military posture in the world today and a moral obligation to help developing countries in their nation-building aspirations are important I have a strong personal feelings that in Africa there is another essential ingredient without which all the rest may fail of complete achievement. This ingredient is the ability to communicate the American personality to the African personality." This can be done through a number of programs and is something that American should look into and work for.

THE LIMELITERS

(l. to r.) Alex Hassilev, Glenn Yarbrough, and Lew Gottlieb, the Limeliters, will be appearing on campus this weekend as part of the Greek Week festivities. Tickets will be on sale at the Student Union until Saturday noon and at the performance, Sunday, April 15th, at the cage.

Senate Repeals 2.0 Bill, 38-4; Lederle's Approval Necessary

by JOE BRADLEY '64

The 2.0 bill was repealed Wednesday night, and proposed "graduating average" countermeasure was defeated when Senate President Tacelli exercised the chair's vote to break a 17-17 tie.

"Gross immaturity. Hasty action, Ill-conceived," asserted Tacelli later regarding the Senate's action.

Tacelli continued: "If I had had an opportunity to speak on the motion to repeal the 2.0, I would have opposed it. Last year I was an opponent of the 2.0 motion since I feel there is no connection between acedemic achievement and leadership ability."

Tacelli's action was unexpected as he exercised his voting power for the first time in his term of office after fighting hard to keep the 2.0 question off the floor in order to clear up the remaining budgets.

Senator D'Avanzo brought the question to the floor by moving to suspend rules and bring up special business. Tacelli ruled D'Avanzo out of order and was subsequently defeated by an overwhelming vote when D'Avanzo appealed the ruling of the chair.

Garber Kills 2.0

The floor was now open for Senator Garber to introduce a motion to repeal S-38, 1960-61, the 2.0 Bill.

"My intentions are to repeal the old bill to make a graduation average the requirement", declared Garber. Garber reminded the Senate that the purpose of the 2.0 was to "minimize the disruption" caused by an officer leaving his office.

Said Garber, the 2.0 is "in effect the same as a student flunking out. I don't think the 2.0 solved anything."

Senator Paul Donahue maintained that the quality point average was a "convenience." Continued Donahue, "The student has been crucified upon a cross of convenience."

The question was called and the controversial S-38 was defeated by a better than 2-0 vote.

Senator Abdul Samma, moving to table indefinitely any further action on any type of average requirement, cautioned, "Let's not be hasty. Let's think." Samma's motion was defeated.

2.0 Still In Effect

Senator D'Avanzo had already made clear that although the Senate had killed the 2.0 Bill, it would remain in effect until President Lederle had signed the bill.

Senator Cass then introduced a counterproposal based on the old S-38 which would have required the graduating average of an officer's class as the minimum to hold office. D'Avanzo then called for amendment adding a 2.4 stipulation for the previous semester in hte case of a student being below his graduating requirement.

The question was called with a 17-17 tie vote resulting.

The vote was then in the hands of President Tacelli. Tacelli then said simply, "The chair votes against the motion." Thus leaving the question of the 2.0 policy in the hands of President Lederle.

At the Senate meeting last night, called to review the election rules, it was decided that nominations would not close until Wednesday, April 18, at 5 p.m.

Primaries will be held Thursday, April 26, and finals elections will be on Monday, April 30.

Since the Senate's move Wednesday night to recend the 2.0 Bill has not yet been approved by an RSO Committee meeting and signed by President Lederle, candidates need a 2.0 cum to file papers.

If, between the 18th and the 26th, the Senate's recension of the 2.0 Bill is approved by RSO and signed by the President, candidates who were unable to file papers because they did not have a 2.0 can run on a write-in ballot.

Candidates for RSO offices were reminded of Section IV D, paragraphs 3 and 5, under the Election Rules Act of 1961.

Paragraph 3: No. signs may be placed on University buildings except on authorized bulletin boards.

Paragraph 5: No campaign matter is to be attached to trees.

H.S. Honor Students Will Inspect UMass

On Monday, April 16, the first High School Day for Honor Students will be held on the UMass campus.

Approximately 110 juniors, representing twenty-five high schools in the state, will participate in the all-day affair. A guidance director from each of the schools involved will accompany the student delegates; a separate program has been planned for them.

Highlights of the student program include personal visits with faculty members, a two-hour program in the department of their choice, and a panel discussion among the representative high school students and UMass undergraduates at 3 p.m.

The idea for the event was conceived by Adelphia, whose members have planned the entire affair. The groundwork set up by the senior men's honor society will be used for future High School Honor Student Days. Plans call for the eventual visit to UMass by all high schools in the state.

Provost Woodside and Dr. Clarence Shute have provided support for the program as has the Student Senate, which appropriated $600 toward the expenses of the High School Honor Students Day.

Critic Ulanov At Newman Breakfast

Dr. Bary Ulanov, jazz critic, author, editor, translator, and teacher will be the keynote speaker at the annual Newman Club Communion Breakfast, April 29 at 9:1 a.m. in the Commons.

Dr. Ulanov, presently professor of English at Barnard College, will follow UMass football coach Vic Fusia who will serve as toastmaster for the event which will be held the Sunday of Open House Weekend.

An author of literary criticism, Dr. Ulanov has written Sources and Resources of Christian humanism in literature from Boethius to Dostoyevsky.

Dr. Ulanov is also a major figure in jazz, having written A History of Jazz in America, A Handbook of Jazz, and editing such specialized jazz magazines as Swing, Listen, and Metronome.

Tickets for students, parents, and faculty are available now at dormitories and the Newman Club office in the Student Union at 99 cents each. Students are reminded to make arrangements now for themselves and for their parents before leaving for the Easter Vacation.

SENATE A OK, BUT...

After a slow start the Student Senate has finally grown up. Last Wednesday night they proved to the campus that they are truly a mature governing body.

Reason: the Senate repealed the "2.0 Bill." In taking this action the Senate has shown us all that they consider the students at the University of Massachusetts mature enough to decide for themselves what is best.

To prove their intent the Senate also refused to accept another motion which would have required a minimum of the class graduating average for a person to run for office. It is true that this motion was defeated by only one vote, because some of the Senators felt that something had to replace the old Bill to pacify the administration.

There is no need to molly-coddle the administration. The Senate has shown the entire University that they do not want any restrictions placed on candidates for office, and they have placed the issue squarely up to the RSO Committee and to the administration.

Dean Field has stated that he will try to get the RSO Committee together as soon as possible (hopefully before the Easter vacation) to consider the Senate's action.

When the RSO Committee does meet, they could accept the motion and send it on to the President, or they could advise the President that they do not approve of the Senate's rejecting the Bill.

In the final analysis, then, the decision rests with President Lederle. It is obvious that the President was in favor of the original motion. Not only did he sign the Bill into law, but he also sent a congratulatory note to the Senate President commending him for the Senate's fine action.

There are many reasons the President could use for not signing the Bill. (We are not trying to infer in any way that the President does not intend to sign the Bill). But no matter what is said, he is either going to agree with the student body's elected representatives and sign the Bill, or he is going to disregard the student government and refuse to sign the Bill.

If the latter is the case, then student government will suffer a humiliating disgrace at the University. Therefore we appeal to President Lederle, and to the RSO Committee, to remember that the fate of student government is in their hands.

The "2.0 Bill" has proven itself to be a mistake. This is why the Senate saw fit to repeal it. Now the issue is up to RSO and the President. Will they see fit help the Senate correct their mistake, or will they refuse to accept the repeal?

The campus awaits.

What's News?

It has come to the attention of the editors of the Collegian, that many individuals on campus are unaware of the difference between a "news" item, and a "publicity" release. In particular, we hope that all publicity chairman will take note of this policy statement.

It is the obligation of publicity chairman to make releases available to the Collegian which include the schedule of events, press releases, glossy photos and other pertinent information well in advance of the event. Major events such as winter carnival and HER weekend are of concern to the entire campus, and as such may be considered as NEWS and will receive ample coverage. It must be rememberd, however, that the final decision as to what constitutes "news" and what constitutes "publicity" rests with the editor.

As the Connecticut Daily Campus pointed out in a recent editorial, "it is not our obligation to make a sucess of a given event. It is the obligation of the chairman of that event to make it a success."

It is our firm belief tha "news" should be the primary staple on news pages. This does not mean that publicity items will never be used. The "Club Directory" has been a very effective method of consolidating publicity notices for on campus organizations, and it is strongly recommended that every student read the "Directory" for news of his organization.

If we receive co-operation from publicity chairman and individuals who are seeking publicity for themselves or their organizations, then the editors of the Collegian will be able to provide a better quality "NEWSpaper."

—LETTERS—

An open letter to the clas of 1965:

On Saturday, April 28th, at 1:30 P.M. in the Student Union, the Student-Faculty Committee will sponsor the second of the Freshman Leadership Workshops. This program is designed to teach all interested members of the Class of '65 the various leadership skills.

Dean Field was the key-note speaker at the first workshop which was attended by 45 freshman, the Deans, and many staff members of the University. The general consensus of this group was that "we are at a definite disadvantage without such a program." Because of the excellent response to this pioneer session, the student-faculty committee has announced the continuation of the workshops. It has been decided that those topics discussed at the first session will be presented in greater detail, and many new subjects will be introduced.

The benefits of such a program are many——not only can this experience aid you in your college career, but it can be of great advantage in the social community.

We have much to offer you, but you have so much more to offer us. Remember this——each of you is the nucleus of our class. Our class is a great one, and together we can make it even greater.

We heartily urge all interested freshmen to make application to the second Freshman Leadership Workshop in the RSO office before 5:00 P.M. on Thursday, April 26th. A representitive in the RSO office will welcome any questions you may have concerning this program.

We are looking forward to meeting with you.
The Student-Faculty Committee

To the Editor:

I think it quite appropriate at this time to mention a particular poet by the name of Steve Curtis. After reading many issues of the Collegian, I have come to the firm conclusion that either Steve Curtis is being ridiculous, the columnist in whose column Mr. Curtis's poem first appeared is being ridiculous, or the editorial editor is a nut.

Because I have seen many fine editorials appear on the pages of the Collegian, I must reach the conclusion that the editorial editor must not be a nut. Rather, he gives the impression of being quite intelligent and the possessor of many wonderful articles on University affairs. That leaves only two. I feel it best not to discern between the two. Rather, I would suggest to the editor that he make every attempt to be more selective in his choice of letters for the editorial page.

I feel it would be more advantageous to all concerned if Mr. Curtis would give up the honorable art of writing and leave it to those who know what they are doing.

F.F.

Honest, I didn't write this.—Ed.

REVIEW REVIEWED

by PAUL THEROUX

Imagine, if you can, a lotus blossom (or, better yet, a poppy) that blooms four times a year—each time bigger, more pleasing, more fragrant than the last. It would be difficult to ignore a thing of such beauty. And so it is with The Massachusetts Review. For the past two and a half years the reading public has been presented with this thing of beauty and each issue has been more overwhelming, more diverse with a precision and artistry not equalled anywhere in any magazine.

How does a magazine manage to assemble between two covers the best of literature (Dahlberg, Frost, Levertov, Oppen, Humphries) with the superior artistry of Ben Shahn Callot, Posada, and the critical skill of men like Henry Nash Smith, Newton Arvin, et alii? How does a magazine staff improve on greatness, sharpen keen-ness, square and cube what was noticed as an Ultima Thule with their first issue? It is work, but it is also more than work. It is courage, it is daring, it is the now-attained goal of being first and best.

Devotion accounts for its brilliance. Devotion on the part of the Editors, Advisers, and on the part of the Editorial Board. But it is not a blind devotion which produces this magazine, for the persons connected with the Massachusetts Review are not devoted to this magazine so much as they are devoted to art, to learning, and to the creative bud which they are willing to watch and nurture. These minds—the minds which create the Massachusetts Review—demonstrate the best kind of original genius in their devotion and in their quarterly prayers offered to the muses in the form of Fiction, Poetry, Criticism, Reviews.

"Great" is a word that is used too much these days. It is probably most effective when describing obesity. But I should like to apply it to the Massachusetts Review, especially, the latest and certainly the greatest issue—the Winter Issue; keeping in mind the poems of Robert Frost, Kirstein, Levertov; the excellent special section on William Carlos Williams; the art work of José Posada; the conversation on the dance between Seymour Rudin and Ed Villela, the best if not the most articulate male dancer since Nijinsky (the Massachusetts Review steps into the field of dance—a necessary and bold step taken by no other magazine); book reviews which range from a study of Greek Tragedy to an explication of Joyce's Ulysses, and others—many others.

The Massachusetts Review prints avant-garde fiction, but it is not striving to be the Evergreen Review or Yugen; it prints superb critical material, but is not emulating Yale Review or Sewanee; it prints articles on political subjects, but does not care to be a Foreign Affairs Quarterly.

It is displaying the uniqueness of being faithful to a high code of publishing; of being diverse without being patchwork. It is the Massachusetts Review—there can be no comparisons or compromises with anyone else. It stands above all others and gleams with a brilliance which excites but does not blind or obscure.

ATTENTION: "The Splended Splinter"

Eleanor Roosevelt in You Learn by Living:

If you approach each new person you meet in a spirit of adventure, you will find that you become increasingly interested in them and endlessly fascinated by the new channels of thought and experience and personality that you encounter. I do not mean simply the famous of the world, but people from every walk and condition of life.

If such an encounter is to be successful, however, you will need two qualities that you can develop by practice. One is the ability to be a good listener. The other is the imaginative ability to put yourself in the other person's place; to try to discover what he is thinking and feeling; to understand as far as you can the background from which he comes, the soil in which his roots have grown, the customs and beliefs and ideas which have shaped his thinking. If you care enough to make the effort, you can establish an understanding relationship with people who are entirely outside your own orbit.

More Money To Be Sought For Dorm Social Functions

Dormitory social functions are in for an added impetus according to Dean of Students William F. Field.

Field noted that social functions of the type recently sponsored by Wheeler Dormitory are necessary for a type of small group entertainment and relaxation which is presently lacking in an overall campus setup.

Dean Field also said that the University is seeking extra funds for dormitory functions of this scope. He noted that the two new dormitories were constructed with the idea in mind of making small, informal social functions possible, for even as low a unit as the dormitory section.

Wheeler achieved a first in dorm social activity with a successful dinner-dance attended by 68 people at the Weldon Hotel in Greenfield. The party was entirely financed by the participating residents of Wheeler.

Wheeler dorm president, Jerry Tuttle commented, "This is the first time a dormitory has planned and executed a function of this type; we are hopefully setting a precedent for years to come."

Tuttle and Jerry Anderson, Social Chairman of Wheeler, prepared the event which was chaperoned by Mrs. Emily Raymond, housemother at Wheeler, and Mrs. Frances Pennington, housemother at Mary Lyons, and Mrs. Louella Cowles, also a housemother at the University. They were assisted by Mrs. Sewall Dunton of Greenfield, a member of the Women's Advisory Council of the University.

A retrospective exhibition of the work of American painter Balcomb Greene will open at UMass on April 15 in the Commonwealth Room of the S.U. and will continue through May 5.

The exhibition will be open daily until 10 p.m. except on April 19, 21 and 22 and from April 26-29.

The 38 works to be exhibited have been borrowed from numerous public and private collectinos such as the Solomon R. Guggenheim Museum and the Whitney Museum of American Art.

Organized by the American Federation of Arts under a grant from the Ford Foundation, the retrospective exhibition represents a part of the Foundation's program in the Humanities and the Arts. The program is devoted to increasing opportunities for the American public to view works of established artists. The artists were recommended by a panel of consultants to the Ford Foundation from a list of candidates sent in by several hundred invited nominators throughout the country.

Dean Field Featured On WMUA Special

In an unrehearsed question and answer session last Thursday night, William Field, Dean of Students, appeared on the first of what may develop into a series of WMUA specials.

At the kick-off of "Ask the Administration" Field, was asked questions that had been submitted in writing either to the WMUA box on the S.U. lobby desk or to the station.

Dean Field was asked why women students, especially seniors and older undergraduates, were not allowed to live off campus. He replied that women students were required to live in dormitories because of the educational advantage, for the student, in such an arrangement—except when it is clearly in the best interests of the student to do otherwise.

Field was asked to comment on the current "publish or perish" controversy.

Said he, "I will begin by denying there is a publish or perish policy . . . No university grows painlessly . . . We are not going to abandon our major job of teaching . . . (but) as we move to major university status, it is important that we have a staff of creative scholars as well as teachers . . . The important thing is not who leaves, but the kind of staff we build up over the years."

When asked his opinion about the chances of a 5-day school week Field said, "Not a chance . . . I would be surprised if the majority of students in this country are attending on a 5-day basis . . . Saturday class time is too valuable to waste."

On the subject of a wet campus, the Dean replied, "This campus is not a wet campus because, in essence, state law prohibits those under 21 from drinking . . . and we have no choice but to comply to that law."

"But wouldn't it be just as effective to forget the university law and enforce the state law?"

"When it comes to fraternities and residence hall," Field went on, "where the vast majority of students are clearly under age . . . the basic rule has been that no alcohol will be permitted."

The subject of increased housing costs was brought up—whether or not the new dorms costing $100 more a semester would set a trend for higher housing costs in the future. Answer: Dorms being planned for the future will be the same price as the ones that will open in September. Whether or not the old dorms will go up — there is no immediate plan to do so.

"Dean Field, do the professors and the instructors at the University flunk out a certain percentage of their class?"

"I honestly think that the vast majority of instructors do not have any built-in number of students that they fail . . . Most of our instructors have some kind of internal yardstick against which they measure student performance . . . I would not deny that there are on campus some instructors who do start by distributing marks on a curve and cut off the lower end to fail. I feel this is a minority approach and frankly I feel this is an indefensible approach."

On the subject of the Dining Commons, Field was asked, "Why should the students be required to pay for meals they don't eat?"

"If you are an average student missing an average number of meals, you come out even. The basic board rate is calculated on the basis of a certain number of people attending each meal . . . If everyone attended every meal the board rate would have to be raised . . . The Dining Commons is, I assure you, not a profit-making organization."

ALPHA CHI OMEGA

Thanks to all the Zeta Nu's from all the Alpha Chi's for a wonderful exchange supper. Seeing the milk served in our house colors made the girls who ate at Zeta Nu feel right at home. However, someone should have thought of bringing a bottle of tranquilizers for Tom.

At about six a.m. Saturday morning, big sisters rolled some thirty very surprised little sisters out of bed and brought them blindfolded back to the house for, of all things, breakfast. A few of our lazier sisters were still asleep as late as 6:30 a.m., but some very enthusiastic and NOISY pledges fixed that in short order by literally storming those poor, groggy, unsuspecting souls. I don't think that some of them are quite aware of what went on yet.

Everything was back to normal by Saturday afternoon. The sisters were recuperating from the early morning activity, and the whole house practically ship shape, when a catastrophe occurred. One tiny window pane, about six by ten inches in size, accidentally got knocked out. Naturally, they wouldn't think of fixing it themselves, so they called no less than three fraternities to send some pledges and some putty to fix it. However, the last laugh is on them, for the fraternities wanted reciprocity. Our pledges ended up doing, not only AXO's spring cleaning, but Alpha Gam's, Alpha Sig's, and TKE's as well.

On Sunday, we all enjoyed a tea arranged by Judy Hancock for the actives and alums of Province One.

KAPPA KAPPA GAMMA

314 Lincoln Ave. hasn't yet recovered from the long awaited news that there soon will be a new chapter house. The fall of '62 is the tentative completion date, and we just can't give enough thanks to our hard working House Board.

KKG and especially our new pledges would like to belatedly thank the sisters of Chi O for their hospitality at the pledge luncheon. Everyone agreed that even pledges deserve a good time once in a while.

Pinnings

Irma Barron, SDT, to Jerry Orlen, AEPi.

Susan Iossa, Pi Phi, to Tom Borrelli, AKPsi, Babson College.

Kathy Rafferty, SK, to Jack Prior, SAE.

The Kappas would also like to thank the brothers of Sig Ep for the good time had at our exchange last week.

We are all so proud of our past president Carol Veno who has just recently learned of her acceptance to Stanford, but kind of sad that she'll be so far away.

Kappa is very proud of Betty Nurmi, recently elected Vice President of Pan Hel, and Linda Fisher, elected as freshman representative to Women's Judiciary.

We had a very enjoyable time last week when our dinner guests were Mr. and Mrs. Kamys, and we would like to thank them for attending.

Travel Advice Offered By Mrs. Jean Churchill

by LAURA GOLDMAN '63

Mrs. Jean Churchill, head of residence at Arnold House, has toured much of the world visiting her four children and their families. She recommends travelling in small groups in order to see what the countries are really like outside the usual tourist spots. Travellers must develop a symmpathetic point of view and realize that one is asked not to take pictures of picturesque slums because the more progressive areas are taken for granted without fair consideration. "Furthermore," Mrs. Churchill added, "womem wearing shorts and slacks are highly offensive to native peoples in most lands. One must also be careful to wear dresses with sleeves or jackets in holy places."

A graduate of Mt. Holyoke College with a major in German and English, Mrs. Churchill has taught junior high school and has been a housemother here since Lewis was a men's dorm.

She has found students all across the world eager for education. In Hong Kong the poverty of the refugees from Red China was appalling. An intelligent guide whom Mrs. Churchill met had escaped from Communist China leaving behind older children who were highly indoctrinated into Communism. He dared not go back to rescue his children because as an engineer he would never be allowed to leave again. His hope was in his youngest son whom he was teaching to swim in the hopes of winning a scholarship.

In Turkey Mrs. Churchill visited her foster child. Under the Foster Parent Plan she has been sending a child a certain amount of money each month for support and has been exchanging letters.

Wherever she went, Mrs. Churchill found people friendly, and she is looking forward to her next trip to some new part of the globe.

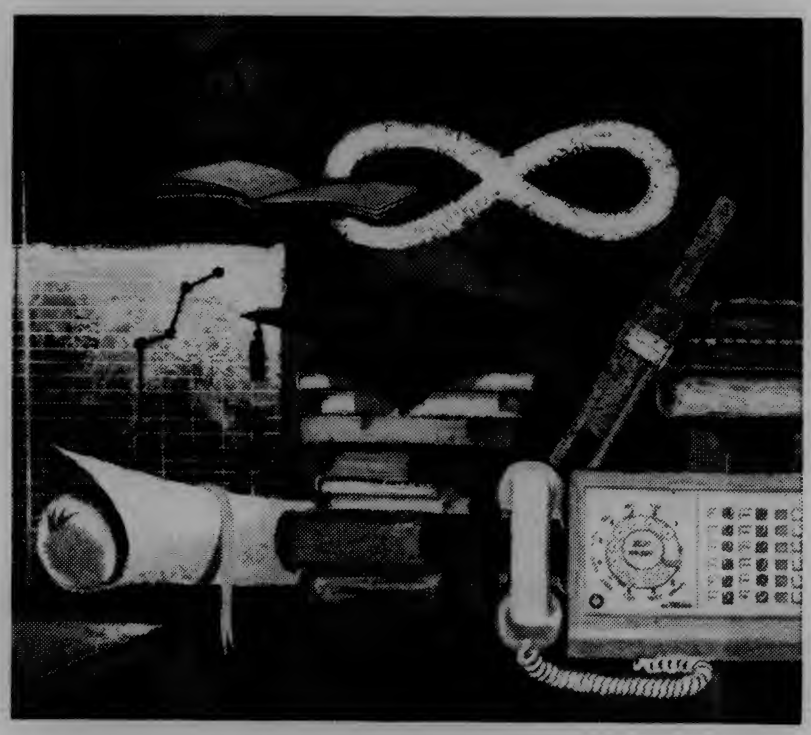
MEANDERING MIKE

We have been extremely busy here lately. On Sunday afternoon a broadcaster from a Holyoke radio station was here to interview the winners of the Science Fair; Monday night we broadcast an interview with the Student Senate leaders on the controversial 2.0 bil; and Tuesday night at 7:00 we introduced a brand new series entitled As Others Read Us, a critical analysis of American authors. Next week a tape on William Falkner will officially open the series.

As I look around the stations, I see that there are many students here who are strictly behind the scenes characters. Bill Johnson is our new News Director who heads the following staff: Brewster Harding, Barbara Gery, Beverly Trull, Bill Mahony, Joe Turowsky, Jack Soraghan, Eliot Cohen, Norman Ryan, and Ralph Hawkins. Our record librarians, Sue Fijux, Sue Fitzgerald, Marge Fardy, Doreen Demitropolous, Ginny Carlson, Jackie LaPointe, and Kat Timpson are ably led by Marty Nason. All these people have done a wonderful job and certainly deserve much praise for without them the station could not continue to exist, and I wouldn't want to lose my job.



Learning never stops for engineers at Western Electric

There's no place at Western Electric for engineers who feel that college diplomas signify the end of their education. However, if a man can meet our quality standards and feels that he is really just beginning to learn . . . and if he is ready to launch his career where learning is an important part of the job and where graduate-level training on and off the job is encouraged — we want and need him.

At Western Electric, in addition to the normal learning-while-doing, engineers are encouraged to move ahead in their fields by several types of educational programs. Western maintains its own full-time graduate engineering training program, seven formal management courses, and a tuition refund plan for out-of-hours college study.

This learning atmosphere is just one reason why a career at Western Electric is so stimulating. Of equal importance, however, is the nature of the work we do. Our new engineers are taking part in projects that implement the whole art of modern telephony, from high-speed sound transmission and solar cells to electronic telephone offices and computer-controlled production techniques.

Should you join us now, you will be coming to Western Electric at one of the best times in the company's history. In the management area alone, several thousand supervisory jobs are expected to open up to W.E. people within the next 10 years. And our work of building communications equipment and systems becomes increasingly challenging and important as the communications needs of our nation and the world continue to increase.

Challenging opportunities exist now at Western Electric for electrical, mechanical, industrial, and chemical engineers, as well as physical science, liberal arts, and business majors. All qualified applicants will receive careful consideration for employment without regard to race, creed, color or national origin. For more information about Western Electric, write College Relations, Western Electric Company, Room 6206, 222 Broadway, New York 38, New York. And be sure to arrange for a Western Electric interview when our college representatives visit your campus.

Snakebeaters Whip Wesleyan; To Face Rough H.C. Squad

by JEFF DAVIDOW '65

Coach Garber's Varsity La-Crosse Squad mopped up its third opponent of the current season, Wesleyan, with a score of 9-3. However, the final team totals are misleading for it was not a simple polishing off job on the part of the Redmen. The game was hotly contested through much of the afternoon, with UMass only breaking through in the closing period in which they tallied three goals and held the Wesleyan squad scoreless.

Wesleyan drew first blood early in the opening period when one got by Redmen goalie Doug Cole. The Redmen quickly struck back scoring two goals in succession before the first stanza ended. The first was an unassisted one by Jim Ellingwood, the first of four Jim was to put in Wednesday afternoon. This was followed by a throw in on the part of John Bamberry, assisted in his efforts by Bob Glew. Thus the first period ended with Redmen leading 2-1.

The men from Wesleyan soon struck back and tied the score at two all. But this knotting of the match was short lived as Ellingwood with the aid of Ken Ekberg, struck again, Jim's second of the afternoon. The Redmen were then leading by one goal and Wesleyan was never again to regain the initiative. Ellingwood's tally was followed closely by attackman Steve Harrington's first of the afternoon with the assist going to Gordie Wallace.

Harrington was the last to score in the second period but he was also the first to break into the scoring column in the third segment of the afternoon's proceedings. Steve was assisted in this goaling effort by the Redmen's Frank Gilliat.

The Redmen were to strike once more during the course of the third period but not before the Wesleyan squad threw one more in, their last of the game. The final Redmen tally of the third stanza came from the hands of Jim Ellingwood, the assist going to teammate Harrington.

The third period ended with the Redmen comfortably ahead by a score of 6-3, but it was in the final period of the game that UMass put the proverbial icing on the cake as it walloped Wesleyan with three goals. Ellingwood started off the final proceedings much in the same way that he had begun the contest, by scoring an unassisted goal. Ellingwood then assisted teammate Gilliat in a scoring attack. The final goal of the match was shot in by Ken Ekberg assisted by Harrington. Special note must be paid to the superlative game played by rookie goalie Doug Cole, who made well over twenty saves many of them highly difficult ones.

The Redmen are fortunate in having two defense lines that can operate against any team. The first line composed of Bowen "Dutch" Dieterle, Jon Kallio, and co-captain Walt Glinski, can be easily relieved by the no less formidable line of Tom Kirby, Paul Majeski, and Bob Woodbury.

The Redmen Snakebeater award for penalties goes to midfielder Bernie Barrett with a high for the afternoon of three penalties followed closely by teammate Wallace. It is estimated that Barrett was out and back in the penalty box in a record time of five seconds. Bernie, being the enthusiastic player that he is, was so excited about being released from the penalty box after serving time for one of his fouls resumed his position and out of pure elation clubbed an opposing player on the head.

Barrett, Wallace, and the rest of the UMass team which is not lacking in muscle will feel right at home on the field when they face rough and tumble Holy Cross this Saturday on the Lacrosse field at 2:00 o'clock here at the University. Perhaps rough and tumble are words too often used to be taken seriously but the Holy Cross squad is TOUGH. Since Holy Cross has no Spring football practice, this allows much of its football squad to go out for lacrosse, the resultant being a lacrosse team that is big and tough. However, UMass does not fear Holy Cross' muscle for there is no doubt, if past seasons are any indication, that the Redmen can throw their weight around on the playing field if the need arises, and in all probability it will. When UMass and Holy Cross get together it inevitably results in a close game. The Redmen won the donnybrook in 1959 by a tight score of 6-5, Holy Cross came back in 1960 to beat the Redmen in another one-goal-difference match as they squeaked by the Redmen with a score of 8-7. Last season the two teams battled to a 9-9 tie with the game extending into a double overtime.

UMass rooters can expect to see the type of game that makes lacrosse the rugged sport that it is, when the Redmen take on Holy Cross at two 2:00 o'clock on the lacrosse playing field.

Lambda Chi Wins IFC Swim Meet, Volleyball Crown

Lambda Chi Alpha had a busy night last Wednesday as it took the IFC Swimming Championship and the Intramural League Volleyball Crown. The "Club" was led to its volleyball victory over the independent champs, the Jokers, by the fine playing of "Smooth" Al Garsys.

In the swimming contest Lambda Chi, with 23 points, beat out a field of nine other fraternities with TKE, 22 points, Sig Ep, 14 points, and AGR, 13 points, finishing in the other berths. In was a very close meet all the way to the finals in the 25 yard freestyle in which both TKE and Lambda Chi had two entries, all four of which came in no more than a yard apart. The times in this year's meet bettered all of last year's records in every event except the backstroke.

The event winners ran as follows:

100 yard medley relay—The TKE team—1 min.
50 yard freestyle—Lablanc, Sig Ep—27.3
25 yard freestyle—Grace, Lambda Chi—11.5
Diving—Coyne, Lambda Chi
100 yard freestyle—Osterhaut, AGR—102.7
50 yard butterfly—Aksionczyk, TKE—31.6
50 yard backstroke — Wallace, TKE—36.0
200 Freestyle Relay—The Lambda Chi Team—1:50.3

—NOTICE—

Applications are still being accepted for positions on The Collegian Sports Staff. Opporunities are open for those wishing to cover freshmen, intramural, or IFC sports.

PLAN AHEAD

UMass sports fans will have a tough job deciding which one of the Redmen sports events they will take in this coming weekend. Both the Varsity Tennis Team and the Lacrosse Squad will be playing on their own home fields. And the more ambitious of the Redmen Rooters can even travel down to the Coast Guard Academy for the varsity baseball game.

Bergquist Trims Frosh Squad For Season Opener On Monday

by DAVE WILLARD '64

Freshman baseball coach Dick Bergquist has a perplexing but enviable problem of cutting his squad. From an initial turnout of 56 he has chopped and whittled it down to 27. Seven more must go, however, and this is where the going gets rough, for the remaining men, all appear to be talented and all come with glittering high school records in hand.

Starting with the pitchers there are only two who have a permanent position nailed down. They are George Waller a right-hander and Tom Linneham a portsider. Bergquist plans to keep three more hurlers and there are five vying for the spots. Dave Whelin, Steve Graham, Jim Hurston, Willis Thayer, and Jim Ritchie round out the mounds corps candidates.

This season saw eight catching prospects report from which four remain. This is the most catchers coach Bergquist has seen in his there year tenure as freshman baseball coach. The four who are going to be kept are Karl Kamena, Mike Smith, John Farley, and Bob Windheim. The report is that they all handle themselves quite well behind the plate.

Two men are battling it out for first base, Ron Kelly and Dick Stuart. Bergquist is hoping the latter performs batting feats like the Pirate star with the same name.

The first practice saw nine men standing on the keystone sack and they all looked pretty good. The field has been narrowed down to four now. Jim Neary and Rod Noris have the inside track. However Jim Flaherty and Jerry Tesini are in there fighting. Whether they are kept or not depends on their hitting and the hitting of several outfield candidates. If one of the outer garden prospects comes up with a hot bat Bergquist will not hesitate to move him to the infield.

At shortstop it is a toss up between Steve Palmieri and Paul Caisse, with both men being kept. Third base is perhaps the biggest question mark on the club. Al Russo has been working out around the hot corner but there is the possibility that one of the other infielders will be moved over if necessary.

Freshman Baseball Coach RICHARD BERGQUIST

Turning to the outfield, there are only two fixtures as of the moment. Dick Feen who looks like a real good prospect and Steve Wojnar are sure of starting slots. Four more are fighting over the other position and two will be kept. They include Ralph Moore, Bob Lyonnaise, Bill Irving, and Steve Winslow.

The squad will be down to twenty by Saturday if all goes as scheduled. Things could change by then and there is the possibility of a lot of shuffling around as none of these talented boys are leaving without a fight.

The first game is at home against Mount Hermon next Wednesday. The boys play on the field down across the road behind the cowbarns.

Tennis Team Starts Season With Coast Guard Match

by DAVE PODBROS '65

On Saturday, at 2:00 P.M., the UMass varsity tennis team meets Coast Guard Academy, here at the University, for the opening match of the 1962 season. Captained by Thomas Simons, a junior, and sparked by Rodger Twitchell, Tom Mendel, and Fred Murray, all sophomores, the team is hopefully looking forward to a winning season.

In past years the tennis team has been outstanding. It has posted a streak of 23 wins in 25 matches, and in Yankee Conference competition, Coach Kosakowski's racket men have not lost a dual meet since 1954. However, with only one returning senior, Sam Levy, and only three returning juniors, Captain Simons, Everett Sherman, and Eric Shully, this year could turn out to be a rough one for the netmen. This year might be considered a building year with sophomores Doug Piersal, Bob Austin, Bob Leete, andw Al Gehring, along with Twitchell, Mendel, and Murray, as the hope of the future.

Nevertheless, as Coach Kosakowski says, "The team has been working very hard, and after the first couple of matches, we could go on to post a remarkable record. Right now, we're not conceding anything to anybody. We may surprise a few teams before the season is over."

Although all the teams the squad meets this season will be tough, the two teams that must be "surprised" are Rhode Island and Vermont. These will be the teams to beat before any conference title hopes can be realized.

Student Leaders Honored April 24

Dr. William Field, Dean of Students, will deliver the opening address at Student Leaders Night, Tuesday, April 24.

Dean Field's address will immediately follow the welcome speech given by Bernie Murphy, President of the Senior Class, and will formally start the evening.

Student Leaders Night, which begins at 7 p.m. in the Curry Hicks Building, is dedicated to recognizing outstanding achievement in extracurricular activities, scholarship, and selecting leaders for next year.

The evening will begin with a reading of the seniors who have been selected to appear in the 1962 edition of Who's Who Among Students in American Colleges and Universities. Albert Madeira, instructor in the UMass English Department, will assume this responsibility for the second consecutive year.

Excitement is expected to mount steadily with the tapping of new Maroon Keys, Scrolls, and Revelers.

Next on the program is the tapping of the new junior members of Mortar Board and Adelphia, who will wear the jackets next year.

Included in the other events of the night will be the announcement of scholarship presentations by the Pan Hellenic Council, the Interfraternity Council, and the Campus Chest. Also on the program is the presentation of awards for Women's Inter-Dormitory competition, and the announcement of women's dormitory counselors.

As an added attraction to round out the evening, the Musigals will sing several selections.

SWAP Conference Planned For Fall' 62

Tentative dates set for the next SWAP conference by the Ad Hoc Planning Committee are September 7, 8, and 9, 1962. This is the weekend prior to registration, which is set for September 11, 1962.

Over 70 delegates from UMass organizations attended the fourth annual SWAP, Student Workshop on Activities Problems, conference at the Oak 'n Spruce Country Club at South Lee, Mass. last May. Objectives of the meeting were to solve campus problems in various areas, to allow student leaders to mix and meet each other, and to allow the student leaders to meet the faculty.

It was decided by delegates to the last conference in May, 1961, that future conferences should be held in the fall rather than the spring, since much of the enthusiasm developed at the meeting was lost during the intervening summer. The fall scheduling of the conference would leave no gap between the development of ideas at SWAP and the opportunity for their enactment.

In order to legalize the decision made by the last SWAP conference, the Student Senate passed a motion (S26: resolved D'Avanzo) last Wednesday, forming an Ad Hoc Committee to lay the groundwork for the fall meeting. Appointed to the committee by the Senate were Jerry Anderson '64 (Chairman) of Wheeler Dorm, Andy D'Avanzo '63 of Wheeler, and Barbara Cushing '63 of Knowlton Dorm. Further appointees will be selected by the Senate appointees.

Anyone who wishes to serve on the committee is asked to contact any of the above. Positions are open, not only on the planning committee itself, but also for typists and people to do secretarial work on the clerical staff.

Endicott Peabody To Appear At UMass Pol. Sci. Assn.

Endicott (Chub) Peabody, candidate for Democratic Party nominee for governor, will appear on Tuesday, April 24, at 4 p.m., in the Commonwealth Room of the S.U. Peabody's talk is being sponsored by the UMass Political Science Association.

Peabody, age 42, is presently an attorney-at-law (Harvard Law, Class of 1948) and an active member of the American, Massachusetts, and Boston Bar Associations, as well as founder and partner in a Boston law firm. His legal career includes service in the Office of Price Stabilization (O.P.S.) and counsel to the Small Defense Plants Administration.

He was elected to the Governor's Council from the Third District in 1954, the first Democrat to do so, remaining there until 1956. In 1956 he became a candidate for Attorney General of Massachusetts; he was a candidate for the same office in 1958. In 1960 he was a delegate to the Democratic National Convention, serving on its Liaison Committee. In the same year Peabody was runner-up to Ward in the seven-man Democratic gubernatorial primary battle.

Publisher - Author Bennett Cerf Next Distinguished Visitor Here

Publisher, humorist, author, columnist, and television panelist, Bennett Cerf will speak in the S.U. Ballroom Wednesday night, April 25, at 8 p.m., under the auspices of the Distinguished Visitor's Program.

Graduate of Columbia University and Pulitzer School of Journalism and a member of Phi Beta Kappa, Cerf is recognized for his outstanding contributions in the publishing field through his well-known Random House.

HUMORIST BENNETT CERF

Cerf started his career by purchasing The Modern Library Series in 1925. Commenting on this venture, Life Magazine said: "Cerf's attractively bound Modern Library Series has probably done more to make literary clasics available to the U.S. public than any other enterprise in the history of U.S. publishing."

Random House came into being in 1925, under Bennett Cerf and his partner Donald Klopfer. Included on its author list are Eugene O'Neill, Sinclair Lewis, John O'Hara, William Faulkner, James Michener, Truman Capote, Robert Penn Warren, and Dr. Seuss.

Bennett Cerf has also distinguished himself as an author of ten collections of humorous stories, including: Out On A Limerick, The Laugh's On Me, Try and Stop Me, The Encyclopedia of Modern American Humor, and Reading for Pleasure.

Cerf's lecture will deal with the publishing field. Admission is free to students. There will be a reception in the Colonial Lounge following his speech.

Exchange Program Unique At UMass

For three years UMass has been participating in a unique exchange program sponsored by the Experiment in International Living — the Junior Executive Training Program or JET for short. The program began 4 years ago at Syracuse University and a year later was shifted to UMass, which is presently the only college in the country working on this program.

Now on campus are 21 students under this program. They were selected by the Experiment, which makes its headquarters at Putney, Vermont, on the basis of education, business experience, and age. Most of them are college graduates of the country from which they come. All of them are young business executives or supervisors.

The purpose of the program is to give them some idea of American education and business administration and as broad a view of American management as possible.

Of the group now at the University, 14 are from Switzerland, 3 from Germany, one each from Belgium, Sweden, Italy, and Holland; only 2 are women. Here for 6 weeks, from April 2 until May 12, they are living in the dorms and eating at the Student Dining Commons.

For 4 weeks, after being brought to this country by the Experiment, they were divided in to groups, each group sent to a different city. This year the students went to Philadelphia and Syracuse, where they lived in the homes of American business families. At the end of 4 weeks, they came to the University for a 6

Finkelstein To Lecture On Economy

"The Problem of Abundance and Freedom" is the subject of a synthesis-sponsored talk tomorrow evening. David Finklestein, a professor of theoretical physics at Yeshiva University, New York, will speak in the Barnstable-Franklin Rooms Tuesday, April 17, at 8 p.m.

The speaker will discuss the immense economic potentials created by modern technology and how U.S. economy can be channeled in a constructive direction. He will also point out the mechanisms which generate waste in the economy, noting the conflicts between the function of profit-making and the function of production-for-use under our economic system.

The problem of centralized controls over the economy and its implications for freedom will also be included in the talk.

Finkelstein is a member of a New York City group, composed mainly of physical scientists and mathematicians, known as "Cornucopia." The major attempt of this group is to point up the implications of the operation of our economic system. Under the group's auspices, Finkelstein presented a series of lectures on the mathematical theory of economics last summer.

Active in the field of plasma physics and general relativity and the quantum theory of fields, Finkelstein will speak to members of the University physics department Tuesday afternoon on the subject of "Electro-magnetics and Fermi Interactions."

A Pat On The Back

Today there are 120 High School honor students and 25 guidance counselors on campus. They come from High Schools all over the state and are participating in the University's first High School Honor Student's Day program.

This program represents an intelligent and realistic method of showing the top students of Massachusetts that UMass is no longer an "I'll-go-there-if-I-can't-get-in-any-place-else" school. The University is striving for greatness, and to achieve these ends the top students must be attracted as well as the top faculty.

Originated by SCOPE (Special Committee On Promising Entrants), the program is sponsored by a $600 appropriation from the Student Senate (S17), and an equal amount supplied by the University. SCOPE delegated to Adelphia the task of carrying out the arrangements for the special program.

The agenda, as arranged by the Adelphians, reflects a mature approach to the problem. Visiting students have been divided into small groups, and a good deal of their time is being spent talking with people in the departments of their choice. All of the literature in the world doesn't have the impact on a future biologist as one look at an electron microscope.

The guidance counselors have a program of their own. They are attending a series of talks with admissions officers, deans, and department heads to learn first hand about the University. These 25 High School guidance counselors will now go back to their own schools and be able to guide all of their advisees with a greater understanding of UMass. This is not to say that every student is qualified for UMass, but qualified students will now consider UMass whereas they might otherwise have passed over the University when deciding what school of higher education to attend.

The final goal of the SCOPE program is to have every high school in the state have an opportunity for its honor students to visit the University. The Adelphians and SCOPE hope to learn a great deal from this year's relatively small program so that future Honors Days will be even more successful.

Today's visit by high school scholars and guidance counselors represents a part of the University's growth which has not been emphasized as much as the growth of the physical plant. In the final analysis, the value of the University of Massachusetts to the State and to society in general will be a measure of the students it graduates. The full impact of this Honors Day program may not be felt for many years to come, but it does represent a growth of the University which will, in the long run, improve the academic quality of the entire University, and thus improve our stature in the eyes of the educational world.

Curtain Call At The Cage

by ANN FURTADO

The American Ballet Theatre presented a very interesting and varied performance in the Cage, Thursday night, April 12. It is unfortunate that there are not adequate facilities on campus for such a performance; however, the difficulties were minimized. The simple dark backdrops were used wisely on an elevated stage, not elevated quite high enough, however, for the ground level audience.

The program included:

Les Sylphides: Music by Chopin, Ballet by Michael Fokine.

Caprichos: Music by Bartok, Ballet by Herbert Ross.

Pas de Deux: Music by Minkus, Choreography after Marius Petipa.

Billy the Kid: Music by Copland, Ballet by Eugene Loring.

Les Sylphides, the very enjoyable music by Chopin, was thematically appropriate for the traditional, expected type of ballet. Indeed, it was most delightfully done, featuring Sallie Wilson and Ivan Allen.

The second piece was to say the least, extremely strange and apparently symbolic. Two fair damsels in shorty pajamas danced madly about the stage with chairs upon their heads, supposedly because they had "nothing better to do with them." Another scene featured John Kriza and Ruth Ann Keosun the latter as a dead body, who executed an excellent and memorable performance in that bizarre role. The final scene presents a sacrificial then with a young woman, played by Sarah Reed, symbolically burned at the stake. The lighting on the burning body was extremely well done considering the working conditions. The strangeness of this performance made it rather fascinating, but at times it verged on the grotesque.

The Pas de Deux, danced to the Grand Pas de Deux from Don Quixote, was expectedly one of the finer and most skillfully done parts of the performance, danced by Lupe Serrano and Scott Douglas.

The final piece was Copland's Billy The Kid which was especially orchestrated for the American Ballet Theatre by the composer. This was skillfully and at times amusingly well done.

The American Ballet Theatre gave a very enjoyable performance, and in general the dancing was rather good. There was no attempt at anything especially difficult or challenging, however, much of the ballet had a popular appeal. The performance was indeed successful at the University, and more performances of this calibre warrant consideration.

AND "GLADLY" TEACH

We recognize the need for academic discussion of communism in such a manner that its aims speak for themselves, but in no way do we support the idea that a state should dictate that a certain course be taught or that it should dictate the contents and procedures to be used.

A bill has passed the Massachusetts Senate requiring that the "dangers, evils, fallacies, and false doctrines of communism" be taught in Massachusetts' public schools. This bill proposes to dictate not only that a subject be taught, but also how it should be presented.

This is clearly indoctrination of the sort that would undermine the principle of democratic education.

By proposing that facts be presented objectively in any course about communism, we do not mean to advocate communism. Rather, we feel that freedom of thought should prevail and the student should be allowed to make his own judgment once the facts have been accurately presented.

The proper authorities to determine the necessity of any course to be taught are to be found in each local school system. This is in accordance with traditional American educational practices.

Dr. Franklin Pattern, direcor of the Lincoln Filene Center for Civic Education, expressed his concern over the bill in the Boston Sunday Herald because he feels that decisions about how to teach any subject "properly belong in the hands of superintendents, principals and teachers."

LETTERS TO

To Mr. Paul Theroux,

I have just read your contribution to the "New Yahoo" and I am writing this letter because I think more of your writing than what your contribution seems to be. If your play is meant to be more than a perverted medical journal, please explain it. In the past you have been radical in your writings and this is your prerogative. However, this latest piece of writing is neither radical not seemingly appropriate in a humor magazine. I ask again why have you written it and what is its purpose.

21 Years Later

The editorial reprinted below is from the November 6, 1941 edition of the Collegian. Despite the admonishment of the 1941 editor, 21 years later the problem is still with us.

Occasionally it becomes the painful duty of a college editor to retrogress to the grade school era and sermonize. An occasion for this has arisen. Goodell Library, as most people know, is where we keep our books, our librarian, and where we should study. Lately it has been nearly impossible to do the last. Instead of quiet conducive to study, most of the time there is a sewing circle buzz. Frequently disturbances have occurred which one would not suspect of men and women over the mental age of 12.

In fact, conditions have become so bad that students are actually complaining that they cannot study in the reading rooms. It is granted that most of the noise is not premeditated interference with the peace of others, but nevertheless the reading rooms of Goodell are not places for social gatherings.

This is offered as a reminder to all to be a little more considerate. At time and a place for everything, and Goodell Library is not the place for noise.

Yahoo Review

The New Ya-Hoo is out, and we are glad to say that we think the quality of the UMass undergraduate humor magazine has vastly improved.

The main issues disliked and disapproved of by the campus have been omitted, and the type of good humor and campus coverage which they had endorsed has been included.

The definition of a humor magazine is varied. We have always, held, however, that the funniest and the most pertinent kind was satire. The New Ya-Hoo is rampant with the satire of campus events and campus figures, which should be evident and therefore humorous to all but the worst closet cases in the UMass community.

The parody of the New Yorker, one of the most widely read magazines of its type in the country, provided an excellent means by which to convey a raised level of jokes, a more artistic sense of cartoons, and the satire of generally known campus issues.

With the exception of the article (technically, we don't know quite what to call it—certainly it isn't worthy of the title play) by Theroux, the literature of the mag has improved also. We read very good New Yorker type stories which might indeed have taken place in a Playboy Penthouse kind of atmosphere prevalent in the younger-upper-class sets of The Big City.

We read an almost slapstick Letter from Revere Beach—the more interesting and amusing to UMass students in view of the large percentage of Bostonians who attend the university. We read subtle and not-so-subtle Goings On About Town and Talk of the Town. We laughed hilariously at cartoons, jokes, advertisements—all well-covered, discrete, but there.

We can say, then, that the Ya-Hoo has really gone all out this time, and has provided a humorous satirical issue, certainly satisfying those with complaints on almost any score. So we are glad to present the Editors, Wes Honey, Joe Patten, Tracy Wilson, with a Blue Ribbon for the Best Ya-Hoo of the Year and one of the better Ya-Hoo's of the past three or four years.

Ed. note—Mr. Honey has expressed his appreciation to persons unknown and unnamed who contributed three unsigned articles to the Ya-Hoo, and regret that their names were not discovered in time for publication.

THE EDITOR

In our effort to bring to the readers of the Collegian the most informative coverage of the "UMass Autonomy Bill" (House 3350), the Collegian has written to several members of the Massachusetts Legislature for their opinions concerning the Bill. We are particularly indebted to Representative James R. Nolen for his interpretations and comments on the Bill. —Ed.

To the Editor:

During the recess of the General Court last year I had the privilege of serving on the recess commission to study the budgetary and management powers of the University of Massachusetts. On this commission were five members of the House of Representatives, three members of the State Senate, and three public members appointed by the governor. The three public members consisted of Mrs. Bruce B. Benson, President of the Massachusetts League of Women Voters, Dr. Mary I. Bunting, President of Radcliffe College, and Dr. George H. Ellis, President of the Federal Reserve Board of Boston. The chairman of the commission was Senator Maurice A. Donahue of Holyoke, majority leader of the State Senate.

It is the report and recommended legislation of this recess commission, submitted in January of this year, which is presently being considered by the General Court in House Document #3350. This report and appended legislation has been praised by Dr. Frank L. Boyden, chairman of the Board of Trustees of the University of Massachusetts, and Dr. John W. Lederle, President of the University of Massachusetts. It has also received the support of numerous presidents of private colleges and universities in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts and of many other respected leaders in the field of higher education. The report was unanimously favored by the eleven members of the commission, though Senator Philip A. Graham of Hamilton dissented in part, failing to support autonomy in several areas recommended by the commission.

Basically, the recess commission is asking the general court, in house bill #3350, to grant fiscal autonomy to the University of Massachusetts. This autonomy, however, would be subject to three important checks, which everyone agrees should be retained. First, would be submittance of a detailed budget by the Board of Trustees, in such form and manner as the governor and General Court may direct. Second, a complete financial report covering all receipts and expenditures would be made annually to the governor and the General Court. Also, monthly statements of receipts and expenditures would be made to the state comptroller. Finally, there would be an annual audit of all accounts of the University by the state auditor.

Under the proposed legislation, the Board of Trustees and their designated officers would have the authority to transfer and allocate funds among accounts, without prior approval by any state agency, so long as they stayed within their total appropriation. The total appropriation would continue to be determined by the General Court on an annual basis.

This type of fiscal freedom would allow the University to act forthwith when changes occur in curriculum, when there are unforeseen changes in enrollment, or when other changes occur which it is oftentimes difficult to foresee six or twelve months ahead in the fast moving pace of an university. This freedom of allocation of funds would also afford the University a much greater opportunity in recruiting and retaining the best possible faculty members: It is in this area of participating in a most competitive market for its professional staff that the University would probably benefit most from the recommended fiscal autonomy.

In addition to fiscal autonomy, the recess commission has also asked that the University be given greater freedom in management and administration. In this regard, the proposed legislation would give the board of trustees complete authority over the appointment and classification of the professional staff, both faculty members and administrative personnel. This complete freedom in the handling of its faculty is felt to be most important in the development of the University.

The recess commission's report further asked that the University trustees be allowed to set the number of years desired for its professional staff to obtain tenure. The proposed legislation grants the trustees the right to allow faculty members to travel to meetings, conventions, or other gatherings that serve a purpose. It is felt that administrative freedom in these two areas are important in academic life.

House Bill #3350 would also grant the University the right to do its own purchasing on items costing less than five hundred dollars and to purchase, without limitation, items of an educational or scientific nature. Here again, the members of the recess commission felt this to be an important area of autonomy in academic life.

The commission recommended no changes in the status of non-professional personnel. Employees in this area, such as clerical, custodial, security, labor, maintenance and the like, will remain as state employees with their classification continuing to be determined by the state division of personnel and standardization. Hiring of permanent non-professional personnel will still be subject to prior approval by the same state division. Only in the filling of temporary, part-time and seasonal positions will the University receive the right to hire without prior approval.

Finally, the proposed legislation provides that all employees of the University, both professional and non-professional continue to hold their vested rights as state employees, such as state retirement, group insurance, industrial accident coverage, and other coverage enjoyed now and in the future by all state employees.

House Document #3350, which I have discussed in detail above, has already passed its first hurdle in the Legislature by being approved by the Legislative Committee on Education, without any amendments or dissenters. The measure is now before the House Ways and Means Committee and is not expected to be reported into the House of Representatives until after the annual budget is passed by the House. This may be a matter of several weeks.

I am hopeful that with the support of all of those who have expressed their desire to see the continuing development of our state university we will have the backing of a majority of the members of the House of Representatives and the Senate for the passage of the autonomy bill in its entirely. I feel that it is important to the growth of the University that all the areas of fiscal and management freedom as recommended by the recess commission be granted. This will mean giving up of some controls by the Legislature and some state agencies, especially in fiscal matters, but I am sertain that this loss of control will turn out to be a gain in that it will allow the progressive development of our state university.

Representative James R. Nolen

To the Editor:

I appreciate very much your interest in House 3350.

I was on the Recess Commission that drafted this Bill nd have every hope for its success in the Legislature. It will be reported favorably by the Committee on Educaion Monday and will go directly to the Committee on Ways and Means. (This Bill now has passed the Committee on Education and is in the Committee on Ways and Means. —Ed.) In response to your query about how this will affect the quality of the education, may I say that I support House 3350, Appendix A, in the belief that it will result in an improvement by permitting more direct control by the administrators who are on the scene.

On the other hand, may I point out that the Massachusetts Legislature has in the past done a great deal to improve conditions at the University during the time when its status was changed from an agricultural college to a state college and then to its present standing as a University. I am confident that this interest in the University by the Legislature will continue.

Representative Sidney Q. Curtiss

To the Editor:

Governor Volpe has personally requested that I thank you and acknowledge your recent letter regarding his position on House Bill 3350 establishing fiscal autonomy for the University of Massachusetts.

I am happy to inform you that the Governor supports the principle of fiscal autonomy for the University. However, because this bill is presently before the Legislature, I am unable at this time to give you the Governor's opinion on the various aspects of the pending legislation.

Legislative Secretary

A REVIEW OF THE LITERARY MAGAZINE

by JUDY DICKSTEIN '63

Like chefs, the staff of the literary magazine works with ingredients and a recipe, and three times a year presents the results to the campus community. In packs of twenty, the latest delicacies were dumped in the centers of the men's dormitories, where they were reportedly left untouched. Several days later, the magazine still had not appeared in the women's dorms or on other parts of the campus. Some people are still anticipating the magazine curiously; the majority are indifferent. This is due in part to the reputation of past issues of the magazine, and strengthened by the comments of those who have sampled the contents of the current issue. Instead of attractive morsels, the readers find themselves presented with a diet of ugliness and filth; with portions of tastelessly bland or indigestible items. No wonder the campus has lost its appetite for the literary magazine!

Congruously, the cover design of the spring issue is meaningless and unattractive. James Gabriel's well-executed sketch on an inside page would have made an infinitely more pleasant cover design than the actual one, which has the appearance of a careless, sloppy bit of doodling.

As for the contents, the fiction leaves itself open to the greatest criticism. Of the eight stories, only one was written on a healthy or "normal" note. This one, by Rosemary Hussey, still misses its mark by having a dangling "let-down" ending. Of the other stories, two deal with suicides, three with outright (and often multiple) murders, and most of them center around decidedly squalid if not downright revolting topics. Excretion and mutilation are the by-words, and the language of both narrative and dialogue tends to be deliberately coarse and abusive. The stories of Paul Theroux and William Parry are more or less (the former, more and the latter, less) esoteric allegories, of little significance to 99% of the campus readers; for spice, they include extensive episodes of regurgitation, excretion, perversion, apparent insanity, and a generous dash of vividly drawn gory description. These and the other writers seem to be vying to see who can present the most repugnant descriptions of split skulls, gushing blood, spilled brains, and oozing entrails.

This is not to say, however, that the magazine is completely without merit. Howard Shainheit's story ends with the delightful image of an insensitive army officer "marching himself off to supper," and Gerald Goldman ends his story on a note of incongruously charming whimsy.

Among the high points of the literary magazine are the fine photographs by Don Simon and the first three poems by H. Peter Gezork ("To a Love Lost," "It All Comes Down in the End," and "The World Is a Wonderful Place in Which to Live") and the first one by Leslie Williams ("Starlight.") Jere Berger, Richard Morril, and Karen Tucker have contributed poems of some merit; the others do not merit comment.

Commendably, the essays in this issue were minimized to two, Robert Finlay's review of The Phenomenon of Man by Teilhard de Chardin, and an article on Ionesco by Elizabeth Schneck. Written in complex technical language, these two essasys would be very likely commended and appreciated by anyone who was interested in the respective subjects.

Must a writer's genius warp his mind? I hesitate to accept this view.

Student comment on this issue of the literary magazine has been similar to remarks about the dining commons, namely,—couldn't we have a healthier diet?

Local A.A. Members Tell Newman Club Alcoholism Third Greatest Killer Today

"A man takes a drink
The drink takes a drink,
The drink takes the man."

"Alcoholism? They might give fancy names for it, but what it really means is—a regular movement from bar to bar."

"I want to live, really live. I thought it was fun to drink hard and fast—to be one of the crowd."

These were some of the opinions and experiences of three members of the local A.A. who spoke at a UMass Newman Club meeting Tuesday night. The program was conducted similar to an A.A. meeting.

"You have a couple of drinks, and you're proud as a peacock. Have a couple more, and you roar like a lion. Have more than that—and you make a monkey out of yourself," quipped the first speaker.

"Alcoholism is the third greatest killer today. Better known as the "cocktail animation," it's a depressant and it's the only narcotic known to science that's hypnotic at the same time. In fact, the historic meaning of alcohol mean's 'contact with the devil'," he continued.

The second speaker told how he acquired a taste for beer at college during prohibition—"One of the things I was proudest of was how I could handle my liquor."

He said that he and his friends learned how to build a still and would mix turpentine with hot-buttered rum. "We'd just float through the weekend—it seemed that everywhere we went there was booze," he said. Then he began having blackouts and would go for days not remembering what happened or what was going on.

"But I got my thirst back again at a UMass Winter Carnival. I chaperoned a fraternity party, and when the Dean called me in the next day—I couldn't remember a thing," he added.

A quart of dry sherry wine and a pint of rum was the daily bread for this member or "I'd get the shakes, the D.T.'s," he said. He was told that he came from a town (Amherst) that had more trouble with liquor than any other town in the Connecticut Valley.

"I started drinking at 15—for fun. My first drink was scotch at a party. I drank heavy in college, but it didn't bother me then," began the third speaker.

She said that she started drinking, like many other people, as a moderate social drinker. But she found that she couldn't stop drinking even when she wanted to, and tried suicide twice. "The longest I could go was three days without a drink—it was a living hell," she recalled.

The members, although having different experiences with liquor, agreed that alcoholism is an incurable disease—a progressive paralysis of the central nervous system. They maintained that alcoholism isn't hereditary or contagious, but they knew they were alcoholics when "you really don't want to get drunk, but you do—you start having blackouts and think you're going insane," they said.

They said that A.A. tells them:

1. never take a pledge
2. never go on the wagon
3. never do it for anyone but yourself
4. stay away from drinking companions
5. carry the message to those who still need help.

"The A.A. teaches the alcoholic about himself and how to cope with his problems," they concluded. "We've found a whole new way of life."

Rahars Has Financial Difficulties

A local bank has instituted mortgage foreclosure proceedings against Rahar's Inn, nationally famous as a college student gathering spot.

Charles J. McCarthy, owner of the drinking and eating establishment, said last week the financial action will not mean any change in management or location of the business, which is operated in a riverboat-like building atop Old South St. in Northampton.

The foreclosure notice, posted last week through legal advertising in a local paper, culminated nearly two months of rumors indicating that the business has been experiencing financial difficulty.

McCarthy emphasized that the action by the Florence Savings Bank will not interrupt the weekend stops for a dime beer at Rahar's, which have become almost an integral part of the education of many college students.

The third annual Chariot Races on Saturday and a concert by the Limeliters on Sunday wound up activities for Greek Week 1962.

Preceding the Chariot Race was the Greek parade which began at 1:15 p.m. in the Cage parking lot and proceeded down Ellis Drive through the horseshoe driveway in front of the S.U. where the participants were judged on appearance and pageantry for IFC points.

Lambda Chi Alpha won first place in the parade competition while Tau Kappa Epsilon and Alpha Sigma Phi placed second and third respectively.

Kappa Sigma Wins Race

Kappa Sigma won the race. Runners for Kappa Sigma were Mike Deneen, Ken O'Brien, Ronny Young, and John Harrington. Theta Chi placed second and Tau Kappa Epsilon ran third.

Thirteen fraternities participated in the race between the East Experiment Station and the S.U. Five qualifying heats were run to narrow down the field to the three teams with the best times before about 700 spectators.

Following the race, the three winning teams were presented with trophies by Jan Hatcher, Greek Week Queen.

Queen and Court Honored

During the intermission of the Limeliters concert on Sunday, the Queen and her court were honored. Janet Hatcher, Greek Queen, was presented with a silver goblet inscribed, "University of Massachusetts Queen, Greek Week 1962".

After her crowning last Sunday at the IFC Sing by George F. Cramer, Special Assistant Attorney General of Massachusetts, she exclaimed happily, "I'm more surprised than anybody else, I think."

Jean Mullaney, Marcia Lockhart, Gail Benvie, and Carol Esonis, members of the Queen's Court, were presented with silver candy dishes inscribed, "University of Massachusetts Queen's Court, Greek Week 1962".

Other Greek Week activities included the Greek Ball on Friday night. About 1,000 couples danced to the music of the Tommy Dorsey Orchestra starring Sam Donahue in the S.U. Ballroom.

Choral Work Of Schwartz Performed

UMass Baseball Club Romps Over Coast Guard Academy

A thirteen hit barrage paced by Frank Pisiewski, Ed Forbush, Corky Schmoyer, and Bob Hughes brought the Redmen their first victory of the season. The win which came on the squad's first outing of the year was an 11-4 romp over the Coast Guard Academy at New London, Connecticut.

UMass starting pitcher, Carl Elmstrom, was on the mound for five innings and was credited with the win. The Coast Guard club could not score off Carl, although they came dangerously close to doing so on at least one occasion. Elmstrom was saved from serious trouble when the Redmen's thirdsacker, Tony Williams, executed a beautiful backhand stab in the hot corner and turned it into a double play.

Neil Harris pinch hit for Elmstrom in the top of the sixth inning and Carl was relieved in the bottom of that inning by UMass' Rod Corey. Rod pitched well in the final four stanzas, but because of an error on his own part which set up four Academy runs in the seventh UMass might have had a shutout against the Coast Guard team.

The big inning for the Redmen was the seventh in which they scored seven runs, three of them coming from a long bases-loaded double off the bat of second baseman Corky Schmoyer. Corky got two more hits for the Redmen, one of them a double. Other big hitters for the Redmen were the aforementioned Pisiewski, Forbush, and Hughes. Pisiewski got three hits, Forbush chipped in a pair of doubles and Hughes contributed two base hits. Coast Guard had to use three pitchers and even then they still could not cope with the Redmen powerhouse.

The upcoming week might prove to be a busy one for the Redmen if the weather holds out. Coach Lorden's team has four scheduled contests. The first is the game today against UConn, the UMass ballclub's first Yankee Conference game of the season. The Redmen pitcher for the UConn game will be Lou Pia, who is expected to be the strong boy on this year's pitching staff. His mound opponent will be UConn's ace Ed Jones. Jones, like Pia, is expected to carry the major portion of his team's pitching work load. Jonesy, as he is called on the UConn campus, is a right-hander who has already won one game this year and can be counted on for giving the Redmen a lot of trouble this afternoon. Coach Lorden's team will again be at home on Tuesday when it faces the men from A.I.C. The game begins at 2:30 and the team is hoping for a big turnout from the student body. On the following day, Wednesday, UMass fans will have their best opportunity to see an away ball game when the Redmen make the short trip over to Amherst College to play our town rivals. The final Redmen game of the week will be played in the old Braves' Field as the club travels to Boston on Saturday to play the Terriers of Boston University.

Is This Baseball?

With the baseball season just getting under way and everybody talking about averages, records, and past performances the Collegian thought it would be interesting, and hopefully entertaining if we took a look at some of the old anecdotes about baseball; stories that made the sport the colorful one it was. We say "was" because we along with many others think that baseball is losing much of the color it once had, and the game is becoming just a sporting event and nothing more. So here they are, some of baseball's daffiest stories.

Speaking of color brings to mind one of the few players still in the big leagues that retains some, that is Yogi Berra. There are many stories about Yogi, but this one dates back to the time when he was just breaking into the majors.

In his early big-league days, pitchers could get Berra to bite on the very first pitch no matter how bad it was.

Once when Berra was about to take his turn at bat the Yankee manager, then Bucky Harris, drew him aside and cautioned: "Now look, Yogi, don't always take your cut at the first one. Wait for a good one and think before you swing. The idea is to think! Now get in there and do what I tell you."

Yogi picked up his bat, pulled down his cap, and took his place in the batter's box. He didn't bite at the first one. The umpire called it a strike. The second one split the plate. Yogi never moved. The third pitch, too, was a sweet one, but Berra just watched it pass by.

Berra dragged his bat back to the dugout and dropped it on the pile. He walked over to Harris. "It's your own fault," he said bitterly. "What do you expect? How can a guy think and hit at the same time."

It makes one wonder that if in all his years in the majors Yogi has been able to play without thinking? We tend to doubt it.

A rookie once approached Manager Billy Southworth and asked complainingly why he was kept on the bench. "What have you got against me?" said the kid. "You saw me yesterday rap out two doubles and a triple. How can you keep a .400 hitter on the bench. "The trouble," answered Billy the Kid. "is that you're also a .400 fielder." Thus ending any questions anybody had.

Lacrosse Squad Beats Holy Cross In Rugged Contest

by JEFF DAVIDOW '65, Sports Editor

A large crowd of Redmen rooters braved wintry and drizzly weather to watch their own varsity lacrosse team win its fourth game of the current season as the Crusaders from Holy Cross fell victim to the UMass Snakebeaters.

The defeat, by a score of 6-3, was the second in as many starts for Holy Cross. The Redmen took the lead early in the first period and never relinquished it to the Purplemen from Worcester. Coach Garber's squad scored three times before the Crusaders could muster one tally late in the period by Jim Kenny. The Redmen goals came from the hands of Bob Glew, John Bamberry, and Ken Ekberg. Holy Cross star Dick Glimm was the first to score in the second period, making the score 3-2 and bring the H.C. total the closest it was to UMass during the contest.

The Redmen attack ace Jim Ellingwood struck back with an unassisted goal, again giving UMass a two-goal margin, and closing out the first half with the score UMass four and Holy Cross two. The third period was an exciting but scoreless one for both teams. However the famine of goals was not to continue for the rest of the game, as the Redmen tallied two and the Crusaders chalked up one more during the course of the fourth period. Holy Cross' Dick Glimm shot in his second of the afternoon, but not before the Redmen's Gordy Wallace got one by the Purplemen's goalie. Tom Furey finished out the scoring for the afternoon by throwing in the last of UMass' tallies, thus ending the match with the Redmen winning 6-3.

The fact that each one of the Redmen tallies was scored by a different player is a good indication that the game was played as a team effort with many of the members of the squad sharing in the credit for the victory.

As could be expected the game was a rough one, with Holy Cross' football and lacrosse co-captain Jack Wayland leading the beef attack for the Crusaders. The Redmen, however, were not deficient in the muscle department and gave the Purplemen the battle they were looking for. The play got especially rough around the goalie's crease when on a number of occasions there were six or seven men chasing after and slugging it out for the ball.

The UMass assault force kept the ball down in purple territory through much of the game. When at times, the Crusaders did manage to bring the ball upfield they found the Redmen defenses in top form, and found it difficult to get by the Redmen's safety wall. Paul Majeski performed exceptionally well in clearing the ball out for the Redmen and at one point Paul even advanced into H.C. territory to take a shot. Speaking of Majeski, it was interesting to learn that both Paul and teammate Tom Kirby had played football in the morning preceeding the game, and yet both were in good shape for the afternoon lacrosse match.

In this game as in others of this season the squad's goalie Doug Cole performed admirably making a good number of saves for the Redmen. During the last minute of the contest the UMass squad had two men in the penalty box, and even with this in their favor the Crusaders could not get by the Redmen defenses.

This game was the fourth and the rubber one in the UMass-H.C. series. In the past three years each team has won once and the two clubs battled to a tie on one occasion, therefore this win puts the Redmen ahead in the series.

The next Redmen game will be on April 25 against M.I.T. at Cambridge, and the next home game will be with Tufts on April 28.

The goings get rough as UMass brings the ball into Crusader territory and pushes for a goal.

Tennis Team Downs Coast Guard In Opening Contest

by DAVID PODBROS '65

In the first match of the 1962 tennis season, the UMass varsity tennis team defeated Coast Guard Academy here at the University. On a day that should have been used for playing hockey instead of tennis, the squad battled against the bitter cold wind, and won their tennis meet 6½ to 2½.

In the individual matches, Roger Twitchell, known for his ability in basketball, easily defeated R. Shrum of Coast Guard 6-2, 6-2. Captain Simons followed up with a 6-3, 6-1 win over his opponent, and Tom Mendel won his match with a score of 6-1, 6-4.

It was then that disaster struck as Fred Murray, having difficulty in his match, lost a 6-0, 6-0. Things continued badly as Eric Shully fell to his opponent in a long match 3-6, 6-8. Doug Piersall, however, in his first match at the University, somewhat turned the tide by defeating Academy's R. E. Rune 6-2, 6-3.

The match was cinched in the doubles competition when Mendel teamed up with Twitchell and Murray with Simons to win their respective matched. Dick Leete and Doug Piersall teamed up for a split, one set for UMass and one for Coast Guard.

If the net men continue this type of play Coach Kosakowski's hopeful prediction of a "respectable" season may come true.

The next match for the squad is 2 p.m. on Monday, Apr. 26, at Brandeis.

Student Volunteers Needed For Massachusetts Review

You can put a few hours of your time to good use, and do a service to a very fine publication. The publication is the Massachusetts Review, and they need help at simple jobs like addressing envelopes. Some students have already volunteered their time, but many more are needed.

The Massachusetts Review office is in the basement of Memorial Hall, right across from Bartlett Hall. So when you find yourself with a free hour between classes and it doesn't pay to walk all the way back to the dorm, stop into the office and offer your services for an hour.

And while you're at it, why not bring a friend?

CRAM COURSE NO. 2: BIOLOGY

The grisly shadow of final exams looms over us, so today in this column instead of merry quips and homely saws, you will find hard facts—quick cram courses to help you through the ordeal ahead.

Last week I gave you a rapid survey of Modern European History. Now let us turn to Biology.

Biology is divided into several phyla, or classes. First is the protozoa, or one-celled animal. All life stems from the one-celled animal. Over a space of millions of years, life slowly evolved until today we have animals with as many as 12 cells. Some larger mammals claim they have 14 to 16 cells, but you know how larger mammals lie.

The second class of animals is the periphera—a shadowy category that borders often on the vegetable. Take, for example, the sponge. The sponge is definitely an animal. The washcloth, on the other hand, is definitely not.

Next we come to the arthropoda, or insects. Most people, of course, find insects fairly repulsive—and yet, if one will but look, there is exquisite beauty in the insect world. Who does not remember the lovely insect poems of William Cullen Sigafoos—such enchanting lyrics as Tumbling Along with the Tumbling Tumblebug, Fly Gently, Sweet Aphid, and Gnats My Mother Taught Me. Mr. Sigafoos has been inactive since the invention of DDT.

Our next category is the mollusca—lobsters, shrimp, and the like. Lobsters are generally found under rocky projections on the ocean bottom. Shrimp are generally found in a circle around a small bowl containing cocktail sauce. Marlboro Cigarettes are generally found at any tobacco counter or vending machine.

What have Marlboro Cigarettes got to do with biology? Well, actually, not very much. It must be remembered, however, that the makers of Marlboro pay me for writing this column, and they are inclined to get surly if I fail to mention their product.

Mind you, I enjoy singing the praises of Marlboro—and so will you once you try that flavorful tobacco, that fine filter which lets the flavor come through undiminished. It is a great pleasure to smoke Marlboros and a great pleasure to write about them, but sometimes, I must confess, I find it a bit difficult to work the commercial into the column. Some years ago, for example, I did a piece about Alexander the Great, and, believe you me, it took a heap of stretching to drop in a plug for Marlboro. The way I finally managed it was to have Alexander go to the Oracle at Delphi and say, "Oracle, I have conquered the world and tasted all its pleasures, but somehow I am not content. I know that somewhere there must be a joy I have not yet experienced." To which the Oracle replied,

There is no great difficulty distinguishing the two

"Yes, Alexander, there is such a joy, but, alas, the time is not yet. I refer to Marlboro Cigarettes which will not be invented for another 2500 years." Whereupon Alexander fell into a sulk from which he never recovered . . . Well sir, there is no question I sold a lot of cigarettes with this ingenious commercial, but the gang down at the American Academy of Arts and Letters gave me a mighty good razzing, you may be sure.

But I digress. Back to biology, and the most advanced phylum of all—the chordata, or vertebrates. There are two kinds of vertebrates—those whose backbones run horizontally and those whose backbones run vertically. Generally, there is no great difficulty in distinguishing the two varieties. A fish, for instance, has a horizontal backbone, and a man has a vertical backbone. Occasionally, however, you run into a problem—like a fish who swims upright and a man who spends most of his time in the sack. How, in such a case, do you tell one from another? Science struggled with this sticky question for centuries, but finally Sigafoos of M.I.T. came up with a brilliantly simple answer. Offer the creature a Marlboro. If it is a fish, it will refuse. If it is Homo sapiens, it will accept. In fact, the more sapient, the quicker the acceptance.

The makers of Marlboro, upright vertebrates all, remind you that their fine cigarettes are available in pack or box wherever cigarettes are sold in any of the 50 states.

(a) An immediate cue-bid, forcing to game.

(b) North is trying to push the bidding up forcing the opponents to bid their suits at a high level and giving them less chance to exchange information.

(c) East must still bid even with his puny hand since they are not yet in game.

(d) West should not try to bid a higher contract since he can be reasonably certain that his partner does not have a very good hand because of his failure to bid.

This hand was selected because it illustrates the effective use of the immediate cue-bid and how a difficult hand can be analysed. West has a hand the equivalent of an opening two bid, and his distribution is excellent with the void in the opponents' suit. However, the tendency was to get over ambitious with this hand and forego a makeable game for an unmakeable slam, namely six diamonds.

A suggested line of play would be the four of spades lead. What declarer must do to make this bid is to figure out who must hold what. If he does not get a 3-2 trump split, the bid is almost hopeless. With this trump split he can make the bid unless diamonds split 6-0, even if he loses the queen of diamonds, providing South holds the ace of clubs.

With this in mind declarer ruffs the opening lead in the dummy and plays the ace and king of trumps. He then plays the ace and a low diamond from the dummy, sluffing the five of spades when North ducks. Another low diamond comes from the dummy, and North goes up with his queen, as it is futile for him to duck again. Declarer trumps and is over ruffed by South. South can do no better than to lead back a spade which is ruffed in dummy. The remaining diamonds are run. Declarer now gives up two clubs and claims his trump for ten tricks.

The results of last Monday's game were:

1. Higginbotham-Smart 26
2. Emond-Fitzgerald 24
3. Goldhaber-Smart 21½

System Causes Corruption In Massachusetts—Peabody

Endicott (Chub) Peabody yesterday in the Commonwealth Room. His talk was sponsored by the Political Science Association.

by JOE BRADLEY '64

"Its sometimes the system, stated Endicott "Chub" Peabody, candidate for the Democratic gubernatorial nomination, as he commented on corruption in Massachusetts. Peabody placed partial blame on the constitutional and legislative system of the Commonwealth.

Peabody addressed 70 persons for the Political Science Association yesterday in the S.U. Commonwealth room.

The people often blame the officials involved in the scandal, when actually "little governments such as the various authorities not responsible to the chief executive", are to blame, Peabody explained.

"No body is the boss", Peabody emphasized, "Thus the wheelers and dealers can operate for their own interests," Peabody added.

"We need a four year term for the governor, and the Lt. Governor should be elected on the vote of the Governor."

Peabody reached the conclusion that a constitutional convention is needed.

He also blamed the parties, and especially the Democratic Party, for what he called "Tong wars," or in-fighting which results in control of the government by small groups rather than control of the government by the elected party.

Impressive Ceremonies Mark Tapping Of Campus Leaders

by AUDREY RAYNER '63
Editor-in-Chief

The Student Leaders of UMass for the year 1962-1963 were tapped last night in the annual suspense-filled Student Leaders Night at the Cage.

Accompanied by several time-consuming antics to keep the audience on its toes with its necks craned, the present Adelphians, led by President Fran Lovejoy, tapped over twenty members of the faculty and student body for the various divisions of the society.

Adelphians Tapped

Juniors tapped were Paul Chalmers, Andy D'Avanzo, Jim Trelease, Don Cournoyer, Mike Rosenthal, Steve Israel, and Al Savat. This year's group of junior Adelphians is unique as the first initiated under the requirement of an average in the top third of the class.

Seniors tapped into the organization were Jack Wylde, Neal Scott, Ben Gordon, Joe Patten, Ed Hazlett, Dick Greene, Fred Karshick, Paul Sibley, George McKenna, and Howie Frisch.

Five Honorary members of the faculty were also named: Clarence Shelnutt, George Goodwin,

Plans Start Now For SWAP-1962

Newly elected officers and campus leaders will have every opportunity to develop and exercise dynamic campus leadership if plans for next year's early SWAP conference are fully realized.

For the first time, the SWAP (Student Workshop on Activities Problems) conference will be held before classes begin. The reason for the change, according to SWAP chairman Gerry Anderson, is "to get our leaders to attack problems early in the year so that significant strides can be made in overcoming them."

In the past, SWAP conferences have generated a number of ideas that have now been adopted by the administration. The new late Libe hours, for example, are a direct result of suggestions made to Provost Woodside at last year's conference.

According to Dean of Students William Field, "The SWAP conference keeps the administration in touch with the ideas of top students. By holding the conference early in the fall, we can develop and maintain enthusiasm and ideas throughout the academic year."

Key executives of all student organizations are being asked to prepare a list of prospective representatives for consideration by the SWAP committee.

Plans for the September conference are now being made and the agenda will be completed as soon as the list of names has been received by the Committee.

Neil Staebler To Present 2nd Lecture

Neil Staebler, Visiting Distinguished Professor of Public Affairs and candidate for, Congressman-at-large in Michigan in the November elections, will give the second in his series of talks on The Dynamics of Democracy tomorrow, April 26, at 8 p.m., in the Council Chambers of the S.U. The subject of his lecture will be "People, Ideas, and Society—Where Democracy and Communism Make a Difference."

Staebler is a Visiting Professor under the Ford Foundation sponsored program on public affairs and practical politics.

He was Chairman of the Democratic State Central Committee of Michigan for a ten year period, 1951-1961, and is recognized throughout the country as one of the Democratic Party's leading authorities on political party organization. He is currently a member of the Democratic National Committee. Since 1955 he has served as chairman of the Democratic National Advisory Committee on Political Organization.

Prof. Hughes Will Speak At Amherst

Professor H. Stuart Hughes of Harvard University is to speak in the Octagon Building at Amherst College at 8 p.m. on Friday night, April 27. Hughes, a candidate for the United States Senate seat from Massachusetts, is currently Professor of History and chairman of the interdepartmental progra in History and Literature at Harvard.

Although a registered Democrat, Hughes feels that both major parties in this state "have disillusioned the voters by their tolerance of corruption and their resistance to reform, bringing disgrace and ridicule upon the Commonwealth.

After teaching at Harvard until 1952 Hughes became full professor and Chairman of the Department of History at Stanford University. He returned to Harvard in 1957. He has written six books, including "The United States and Italy," a study of modern Italy and its relations with the United States, and "Contemporary Europe," a history since 1914. "...Just The Facts Ma'm"

At approximately 10:15 P.M. on Tuesday, April 15, a group of three or four male pranksters left their calling card in front of Memorial Hall. Their calling card was the tombstone of Mrs. Frances W. Cundall (see below) which was stolen from a Pelham Cemetery.

Campus police chief, "Red" Blasko, pointed out that the criminals involved were not necessarily UMass students, even though the tombstone was left on our campus.

Chief Blasko wishes to enlist the aid of anyone who saw this group carrying the tombstone from South Lot to the front of Memorial Hall. Let's face it, A heavy tombstone carried by a group of men stands out like a sore thumb! Someone must have seen them. If you saw them, please get in touch with the Campus Police, the State Police at Northampton, or the Pelham Police.

And now on to prank number two. At 3:00 A.M. the next Wednesday morning a group (probably the same one) of pranksters had a housepainting party on the Woman's Physical Education Building. There is no need to reprint the vulgarities that appeared on the WPE Building, but the reader can imagine what the authors had in mind.

The paint used, a mixture of white and red, mixed to a light pink. From evidence gathered at the scene, it is apparent that the pranksters spilled paint on themselves and on their car.

Again—if you saw the "artists" at work, please contact the police. If you know of someone who has some unexplained pink, red, or white paint on his clothing or vehicle, see the authorities.

Chief Blasko reports that the cost of removing the paint from the WPE Building will be about $500.

If you have any information that might aid the police but are reluctant to speak out, just remember—these people cared little about the damage they did to the University. Why should you feel duty-bound to them?

In addition to the moral and legal obligations that one has to report any information about criminal actions, keep this in mind—the acts these immature pranksters have performed are disgustingly beyond reasonable limits. The only way to see that this type of "artistry" and tombstone moving does not occur again (at least by the hands of this group) is to report them to the police.

As long as the sermon has kept your attention this far, we might as well add that the annual paintings of Metawampe rate in the same catagory as painting the WPE Building. Let's hope that this spring the "legendary spirit of the Redmen" will not be blue—or green or yellow.

CONGRATULATIONS

Congratulations to President Lederle and the RSO Committee for their prompt actions on the "2.0 Bill."

Yesterday afternoon, by a 6-4 vote, the RSO Committee voted to rescind the "2.0 Bill." The action was in full harmony with last week's 38-4 vote of the Student Senate to repeal the motion.

President Lederle, who obviously has kept right up to date on the proceedings, signed the repeal motion the same evening.

President Lederle's signing of the Bill demonstrates the administration's support of student government on our campus. Dr. Lederle signed the Bill even though he noted that he was disappointed that the Bill was "nullified prior to the experience and study which might have resulted in necessary improvements or modifications of this action."

The administration has cooperated with the Student Senate in this matter, and they deserve congratulations. Let us hope that this cooperation will continue to exist.

RSO SOS

What is student government on this campus today? It is not a government in the full sense of the word for it rests under the ultimate control of the President of the University and the Trustees, as such it is not a government conducted by the consent of the governed but upon the consent of the governors. When this is realized it then becomes a question of just what actually is this thing called Student Government. It has no law enforcement agency, it is not the final authority as to what shall be the law; in fact it has no real authority at all, for it can in essence only recommend. Therefore it is not a true legislature. This is what it is not. There is, however, one important thing that it is. As we all know, at the beginning of each year we pay a bill called the Student Activities Tax. Where does it go and who levies it? The Student Senate decides that tax and also where it shall go; through the Senate the campus has the Collegian, WMUA, Literary Magazine, Distinguished Visitors Program, Concert Association and a host of others not to mention Yahoo. On the face of things this looks like quite a job and from an administrative angle it is, but the Senate does not decide the policy of any of these organizations (nor should it.) It merely receives requests for money from them and does the best it can to give them what they want within the present tax structure (considered on a proportional basis). In short, the Student Senate is an overgrown budgets committee performing a function that could be handled just as well by the University Administration, or as it stands now, by that dangerously efficient bureaucracy better known as RSO.

Outside of budgets all other aspects of student government are handled by this slippery thing called RSO which is an organization that is not run by students, yet is supported directly and indirectly by them. It is a small but powerful agency that is slowly but steadily eclipsing the sinking Senate. RSO is behind the scene everywhere and at all times. It has become so efficient and effective that it can subtly (through purse strings) direct the majority of student organizations on campus. It recommends actions to the Senate, advises them on how to handle their affairs, lectures them when they do not conform and generally takes it into their own hands to interpret and even to create actions of their own which legally and rightfully belong in the hands of Student Government.

Student Government thus has no direct contact with the student body. If a student wishes to find out something concerning campus welfare he goes to RSO, if an organization wishes to become recognized by the Student Government it does not go the the Senate directly—it does to RSO. If a treasurer wishes to withdraw some money from his allocations (regardless of whether or not they are from Tax funds) he has to go to RSO. If the administration has a gripe about a particular action of the Senate it goes to RSO. Most of these things have to be handled by an office that is staffed 8 hours a day so that there will be some tangible place where information can be obtained and passed on—this is the good function of RSO. But RSO has become too entrenched; it has grown too powerful and influential. Student Government could cease to function immediately and yet there would be no discernible differerence concerning the administration of student welfare. RSO already has the ball, the only difference would be that it would then be brought into the open.

How did things get this way? Is it the fault of RSO? No, it is entirely the fault of the students and particularly the Student Senate. Its reflects a strain of irresponsibility somewhere along the line which allowed RSO to fill in the gap so that student government could at least hold up a facade of responsibility. It has now reached the point where the Student Senate appears to be helpless and hopeless and where student government in general seems to be on the verge of insignificance.

The time for a change has arrived. The time to act is upon us; it is now or never. The Senate is going to have to wrest the powers of RSO out of their second floor headquarters in the Student Union and put them back in the council Chambers. The Senate is going to have to step on a few toes. It will have to be cold, hard, and determined, and it will even have to take an unpopular stand on a few issues (as those who lead rather than follow public opinion occasionally have to do). The first practical thing that has to be done is to clear up the backlog of budgets and organization constitutions that are sittign idle in the Senate office. The second thing is to rename RSO—Student Government Administrative Office—or if that is not possible, the Student Senate should put such an office into existence which would clearly be under the supervision of the Senate. The third thing (which depends on the second) is to assume the salaries of all RSO employees (we now pay for 2 of the 3 employed) thus making them employees of Student Government, the fourth thing is to create a joint Faculty-Student Senate Committee which would have the power to introduce motions on either floor by their own volition or on request of one or the other body. The fifth is to create a Senate Journal to be printed each year by the Student Senate which would include all acts, resolves, and explanations thereof; and the sixth is to increase the terms of Senators to a year and a half and to stagger the terms so as always to have experienced Senators in office.

Beyond this we need to recreate the necessary spirit; we need to revamp ourselves from within. These suggestions are only physical remedies for a mental illness, but perhaps by getting into the motion of doing something real and concrete—by consciously and actually trying to regain our rightful power and status we will be able to put Senate Government on this campus in a leading position.

Richard D. Buck, Student Senator

To the Editor

As Judy Dickstein has given her views against the contents of the Literary Magazine, I feel someone should speak in defense of them.

Being the author of one of the stories dealing with suicide and murder, I would like to answer Miss Dickstein's question, "Must a writer's genius warp his mind", in the negative. Murder, suicide, and "let-down endings" are just as much a part of life as the perfect love story and "they lived happily ever after." Because a story is depressing or revolting does not mean that it lacks literary value.

Or should Dostoyevsky's Crime and Punishment be dropped from English 26?

The fact is, the "rotten side" of life is just as susceptible to the pen of an author as the "good side."

The only criticism that I would make concerning the Literary Magazine, and this may be what Miss Dickstein is actually opposed to, is that so many stories concerning the "rotten side" were included in this issue. It was, perhaps, too big a dose. But this should have no reflection on the articles themselves or the individual value of them.

To the Editor

The purpose of this letter is to inform the unconcious officials of this school that quite unknown to them there is a main thoroughfare running right through the middle of this heavily populated campus. The name of this dragstrip is North Pleasant Street.

The stretch that is the most fun or the most nazardous depending on whether you are walking or driving is the "flying quarter-mile" between the lights by the campus entrance and set of lights by Knowlton house. Many classes are held in Morrill, Clark, Fernald Halls. During class hours there is much pedestrian traffic. Of course, we would imagine that everyone knows this. Apparently, they don't or else there would have been some positive action take before this.

It is quite conceivable that these officials responsible are waiting for concrete proof of this area's danger. I can only say at this point that they are either completely ineffectual or totally unaware of this farcical situation.

Great Decisions Program Closes With Discussions On U.S. And U.N. Policy

The Great Decisions Program 1962, after arousing much public interest, has come to a formal close with a discussion of U. S. policies around the world. The area program was conducted under the auspices of the World Affairs Council of the Connecticut Valley in cooperation with the Foreign Policy Association.

Dr. Gerard Braunthal, assistant professor of government at UMass has been chairman of the area program and, with the assistance of Mr. Sunki Choe, a graduate student at the University, has compiled and tabulated the opinion ballots.

Most appropriately the last two topics discussed were the U.N. and the U. S. Two broad questions raised about the U.N. were: what general policies should the U. S. follow in relation to the future of the U.N. in world affairs and what specific course should the U. S. follow within the U.N.

In response to the former, 227 participants applauded our effort to strengthen U.N. influence in world affairs. An overwhelming majority of 198 favored an independent Secretary-General and Secretariat staff, while seven insisted on limiting the Secretary-General's independence on the basis of a compromise arrangement. One hundred eighty-seven voters wanted to see the U.N. as the embryo for a world community as compared to 30 that urged constructing an international community of like-minded nations outside the U.N. in the event of Red China's admission, while three demands outright withdrawal from the U.N.

As to the question of the U. S. stand in the U.N., 151 votes favored channelling more U. S. aid and technical assistance through the U.N. and a smaller number voted for an increase in U. S. contributions to U. N. social and economic programs. Of the same people, 129 thought that the U. S. should deal with disarmament through the U.N., while 45 refused to involve the U.N. in issues that are vital to our national interest.

U. S. Should Negotiate

An impressive bloc of votes, 105, said that we must be willing to negotiate differences with the Communist bloc, but not under threat or ultimatum. An insignificant 21 respondents urged making the defeat of communism and victory in the cold war our primary national goal. Of this number, six recommended making our future commitments only to proven allies and 12 wanted to devote our resources to developing the economic and military strength of the U. S.

The second question raised was: what broad economic policies should the U. S. follow to achieve its aims in world affairs. Commenting on this, 131 participants called for a reduction in trade barriers among the industrialized free world nations, while 119 noted the need of helping U. S. industries to adjust, retool and retrain for more effective competition with foreign exporters.

CRAM COURSE No. 3: ENGLISH POETRY

Final exams will soon be upon us. This is no time for fun and games. Let us instead study hard, cram fiercely, prepare assiduously.

In this column today let us make a quick survey of English poetry. When we speak of English poetry, we are, of course, speaking of Byron, Shelley, and Keats. Some say that of the three, Keats was the most talented. It is true that he displayed his gifts earlier than the others. While still a schoolboy at St. Swithin's he wrote his epic lines:

If I am good, I get an apple,
So I don't whistle in the chapel.

From this distinguished beginning, he went on to write another 40,000 poems in his lifetime—which is all the more remarkable when you consider that he was only five feet tall!

I mention this fact only to show that physical problems never keep the true artist from creating. Byron, for example, was lame. Shelley had an ingrown hair. Nonetheless, these three titans of literature turned out a veritable torrent of romantic poetry.

Nor did they neglect their personal lives. Byron, a devil with the ladies, was expelled from Oxford for dipping Elizabeth Barrett's pigtails in an inkwell. He thereupon left England to fight in the Greek war of independence. He fought bravely and well, but women were never far from his mind, as evidenced by this immortal poem:

How splendid it is to fight for the Greek,
But I don't enjoy it half as much as dancing cheek to cheek.

While Byron fought in Greece, Shelley remained in England, where he became court poet to the Duke of Marlborough. (It is interesting to note in passing that Marlborough was the original spelling of Marlboro Cigarettes, but the makers were unable to get the entire word on the package. With characteristic ingenuity they cleverly lopped off the final "gh". This, of course, left them with a "gh" lying around the factory. They looked for some place to put it and finally decided to give it to the Director of Sales, Mr. Vincent Van Go. This had a rather curious result. As plain Van Go, he had been a crackerjack director of sales, but once he became Van Gogh, he felt a mysterious, irresistible urge to paint. He resigned from the Company and became an artist. It did not work out too well. When Van Gogh learned what a great success Marlboro Cigarettes quickly became—as, of course, they had to with such a flavorful flavor, such a filterful filter, such a flip-top box, such a soft pack—he was so upset about leaving the firm that he cut off his ear in a fit of chagrin.)

But I digress. Byron, I say, was in Italy and Shelley in England. Meanwhile Keats went to Rome to try to grow. Who does not remember his wistful lyric:

Although I am only five feet high,
Some day I will look in an elephant's eye.

But Keats did not grow. His friends, Shelley and Byron, touched to the heart, rushed to Rome to stretch him. This too failed. Then Byron, ever the ladies' man, took up with Lucrezia Borgia, Catherine of Aragon, and Annie Oakley. Shelley, a more domestic type, stayed home with his wife Mary, and wrote his famous poem:

I love to stay home with the missus and write,
And hug her and kiss her and give her a bite.

Mary Shelley finally got so tired of being bitten that she went into another room and wrote Frankenstein. Upon reading the manuscript, Shelley and Byron got so scared they immediately booked passage home to England. Keats tried to go too, but he was so small that the clerk at the steamship office couldn't see him over the top of the counter. So Keats remained in Rome and died of a broken heart.

Byron and Shelley cried a lot and then together composed this immortal epitaph:

Good old Keats, he might have been short,
But he was a great American and a heck of a good sport.

Army Plans To Compress Its Programs

The Army proposed last week that the college ROTC program be compressed into two years with more extensive summer training and less classroom work.

An announcement said the present four-year program has been sound, but requires modification "due to a changing pattern of higher education and the anticipated annual increase in college enrollment over the next ten years."

The proposal, made to the Defense Department, would permit colleges to continue the four-year ROTC course if they wish.

A total of 180,500 cadets now are enrolled in Army ROTC programs in 247 colleges.

Annual R.D. Production Unfolds This Weekend

Cast members of the Roister Doisters enact a scene from their forthcoming production, "Invitation to a March," which is being presented Friday and Saturday evenings and Sunday afternoon. Tickets for the performance are on sale at the ticket window in the Student Union from 11 to 12 and from 1 to 4 p.m. today, tomorrow, and Friday.

"Invitation to a March" was written by Arthur Laurents, who also wrote the story for "West Side Story," the Broadway and movie hit.

Zero hour is approaching for the Roister Doisters' spring production, "Invitation to a March" which is being presented this weekend, April 27, 28 and 29 in Bowker Auditorium.

Not since the RD production of "Auntie Mame" has the Bowker stage been subjected to such frenzied activity. Sand dunes; modern music; miracles in the moonlight; a cast that wanders around ralking to the audiences—the show has all these and more.

"Invitation," written by Arthur Laurents, author of the book for "West Side Story", was first presented by The Theatre Guild at the Music Box Theatre, New York City, on October 29, 1960, with a cast that included Celeste Holm, Jane Fonda and James MacArthur.

When asked for information, Celeste Holm put forth her views on both the play and the author.

"Arthur Laurents pays his audience the highest compliment: he shows what he thinks is important — for each person to evaluate on his own terms Laurents dares to deal truly with today's deepest problems in comedic terms in order to evoke an intense subjective experience. This play occurs on so many levels and with one's sympathies moving so constantly that it gives a bursting sense of life not often encountered in today's theatre.

"As the lights go down, the audience becomes aware of music and as it rises, so does the curtain. There is Camilla! Is she the heroine? As is life, Laurents allows each woman in the play to consider herself the heroine. When Camilla greets the audience openly, it is jarred into realizing that a more active role is going to be demanded of it. Laurents reveals his characters as he found them, with all their vulnerabilities and pretenses. Fantasy and reality weave back and forth exactly as they do in each and every one of us.

"In Camilla's acceptance of herself and her own life, she dares to let her son grow his own way. But it is this very joyful acceptance that makes her the arch enemy of the corsetted conformists—even those in the audience. Laurents makes no moral judgment; he merely presents his evidence."

Redmen Ballclub Now 5-0, Plays Rhody And Maine This Week In Three Big YanCon Games

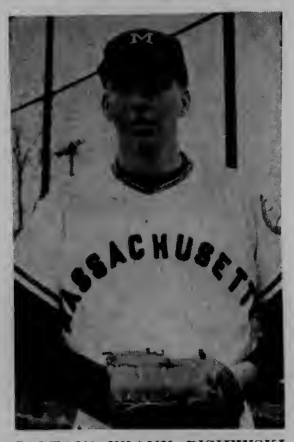
The University of Massachusetts baseball team faces three crucial Yankee Conference games this week in the Redmen drive for the league title and a berth in the District One playoffs.

The Redmen, 5-0 for the season and 1-0 in the Conference, travel to meet Rhode Island this afternoon and then journey to Orono for games with the University of Maine on Friday and Saturday.

Coach Earl Lorden has indicated that junior left hander Dick Wilson will get the nod for the Rhody game, while veteran Lew Pia will pitch the Friday Maine game. Wilson stopped A.I.C. on three hits in his only start. Pia owns wins over Connecticut and Boston University.

Coach Lorden's main pre-season worry centered on his inexperienced mound staff. But the Redmen hurlers have surrendered just three earned runs in the first five games and have issued just 20 bases on balls. Senior right hander Carl Elmstrom notched wins over Coast Guard and Amherst College without allowing any earned runs and junior Rod Corey pitched four good innings in the Coast Guard contest.

As a team, the Redmen have demonstrated a solid batting attack with good defensive play. Junior secondbaseman Jim "Corkey" Schmoyer leads the hitters with a .471 average. Centerfielder Bob Hughes batted .400 for the first three games but has been idle with a pulled leg muscle. Other good averages are Capt. Frank Pisiewski .381, third baseman Tony Williams .333, right fielder Bill DelVecchio .313 and catcher Ted Osetek of Chicopee .294.



CAPTAIN FRANK PISIEWSKI

The UMass infield is shaping up as one of the best all-around units in New England. All-Yankee Conference first baseman Ed Forbush (E. Longmeadow) has been outstanding around the initial sack while hitting .250. Schmoyer at second, Pisiewski at shortstop and Williams at third base have been strong in all departments.

Frosh Trackmen Run Over Andover, 80-46

by ABE SHEINKER '62

The UMass freshman track team gave up a day of their Easter vacation to roll over Phillips Andover Academy 80-46 last Thursday in Andover. Although Coach Bud Cobb has been skeptical about his charges this year, the results of this meet indicate that this will be one of his better teams.

Two frosh marks were set in the meet. As expected, Greek import Costas "Gus" Anagnostopoulos broke the UMass freshman hammer record with a toss of 158' 7", five feet over Dick Ward's old mark. Actually, the 12-pound hammer was used in the meet but Gus threw the 16-pounder anyway and still had 30 feet on his closest rival. He came back to take a third in the discus throw also.

The other record broken was in the mile, where long-striding Tom Panke just nipped Bob Brouillet's frosh mark by one-tenth of a second, running 4:32.3. The two mile run was not contested as prep-schools do not run this event, Panke did well in the half mile, taking a second with a 2:08.

The Redmen won eleven of the 14 events and Burt Kline and Paul Forand accounted for six of those eleven victories, each winning three. This is his third triple victory this year. Forand's wins came in the 100 at 11.0, the 220 at 22.8, and the broad jump at 19'10".

The other UMass winners were Phil Read, who pole vaulted 11 feet, Armand Millette, who ran the half mile in 2:04.3, and Al Richardson, who put the 12-pound shot 47' 1½".

Lacrosse Squad Seeks Fifth Win

The varsity lacrosse squad will seek its fifth consecutive win Wednesday afternoon at M.I.T. The team has been idle since April 14, and Coach is hoping that the long layoff won't dull the UMass offense and defense which was in high gear during the first four games Saturday afternoon the Snakebeaters host Tufts.

SPORT NOTES

The UMass Spring sports season steps into high gear this week with sixteen varsity and freshman events on the agenda.

Coach Chet Gladchuk's golf team opened its season Tuesday with a tri-match with Lowell Tech and the University of New Hampshire at Lowell. Thursday, the Redmen golfers will host Worcester Ploytech and Vermont at Amherst. (See Friday's Collegian for the results of these two matches.)

Coach Bill Footrick unveils the 1962 Redmen track team Saturday afternoon in a home meet against Springfield College. The Redmen have the potential to have one of the best UMass outdoor track campaigns.

The freshman events for the week show the baseball club hosting Amherst and the lacrosse team traveling to Holy Cross this afternoon. Friday frosh golf plays Amherst College, and Saturday afternoon the baseball team journeys to Springfield and the track men reciprocate by playing host to Springfield, and lacrosse entertains Trinity.

The annual Softball Nose Bowl classic will played on Open House Weekend at 2:00 P.M. on the lower field. The TEP team is lead by player-coach Sol Yas, and AEPi by player-coach Howie Temkin. A good crowd is expected to turn out for what promises to be a close contest.

by BARRY JAYE '65

What a week for sports! Some of the headlines: Oksanen wins Marathon, Carlos Ortiz beats Joe Brown for lightweight championship; Celtics win fourth successive Championship; Toronto wins NHL Playoff, Mets win first game.

Have you noticed that Dean Stone, who was traded to the Red Sox in 1957 and turned out to be a complete flop in the 1957 and 1958 seasons, has pitched two shutouts for the Houston Colts? This may end up being one of the greatest comebacks in baseball history. Stone, who had a fine season for the Senators in his rookie year (1954), hasn't had a winning season since. He has been in the minors the last two or three years.

And how about Eddie Bressoud! The shortstop hit .211 last year. This season he has hit safely in his first nine games and hasn't made an error yet. Did Don Buddin ever go nine games without making an error?

Much baseball talk has been about Roger Maris' 61 home run record as one of baseball's greatest feats, but perhaps the greatest was performed in 1930 when Hack Wilson drove in 190 runs for the Chicago Cubs—or it might have been Chief Wilson hitting 30 triples in 1912. Nobody else has come closer than 10 triples to that mark, and last year Jake Wood's 14 triples topped the majors.

Those who have been to Fenway Park this year have been pleased by a new addition to the park's scoreboard. The new section gives the numbers, positions and batting order of each team.

How many people remember back to the year the Celtics won their first NBA Championship? The year was 1957. Members of the team were: Tom Heinshon, Jack Nichols, Jim Luscatoff, Frank Ramsey, Bill Russell, Arnie Rusin, Bill Sharmon, Bob Cousy, Andy Phillip, Dick Henric and Lou Tsioropolous. The final game was won by the Celtics 125-123 in double overtime as Tom Heinshon scored 37 points.

At the Boston Marathon it was amazing to see John A. Kelley, the 55-year-old marathoner come in 25th place, a great feat for the former Marathan champion who still looked fresh at the finish line. John J. Kelley finished fourth and another John Kelley finished fourtieth.

Latest report has it that featherweight champ Davey Moore is intent on moving upward into the Lightweight Division hoping to get a shot at Carlos Ortiz, the new 135-pound champ. One reason is that Davey has to journey to South America, Europe, or the Orient for a respectable payday.

Redman Bob Avery Places 18th In Boston Marathon

by ABE SHEINKER '62

Bob Avery, a UMass senior from Dedham, surprised a lot of veteran long-distance runners last Thursday by placing 18th in the 66th annual Boston A.A. marathon.

This was Avery's first marathon, and in finishing with the top 20, he beat some well-known marathoners including Al Confalone, John Kelley (The Elder), and John DiComandrea. Of the 181 starters, 108 runners finished the 26 mile, 385 yard grind. Eino Oksanen of Helsinki, Finland, was the winner in two hours, 23 minutes, and 48 seconds. Avery's time was 2:39:40, an outstanding performance for a veteran or a novice.

The UMass honor student forsook regular track training for the roads after the cross country season last fall. His road running improved his track performances as he ran his fastest two mile race indoors last winter. However, he kept at his road training even in the snow, and ran a good 5th in a 20-miler last January. This was the longest distance he had run until last week's race.

His training consists of running 12 miles nearly every day along the country roads near the campus. Bob plans to continue his distance training although he'll run the 2 mile in the UMass track team's dual meets.

Most marathoners reach their peak in their late 20's and run well through their 30's and even 40's and 50's. At 22, Avery appears to have a good future ahead of him.

Netsters Lose To Brandeis Will Host UNH And AIC

by DAVE PODBROS '65

The University of Massachusetts varsity tennis team suffered its first loss of the season at the hands of Brandeis University, at the Brandeis campus in Waltham on April 16. The closeness of the match is not evident from the final team scores, 7 for Brandeis and 2 for UMass.

In singles competition Rodger Twitchell and Tom Mendel were the sole Redmen winners. Everett Sherman put out a tremendous effort but nevertheless lost his match 7-5, 7-5. The rest of the team fared poorly ending the singles competition with the score standing 4-2 in Brandeis' favor. A few members of the team were not able to make this match because of exams, and it is assumed that their presence might have changed the outcome of the contest.

It was in the first two doubles matches that the closeness of the meet was most evident. Twitchell and Mendel teamed together and the other twosome was composed of Simons and Murray. But these matches went three sets, with Brandeis again emerging victorious. The scores for the Twitchell-Mendel match were 3-6, 7-5, 2-6, and for the Murray-Simons combination the totals were 5-7, 8-6, 6-4. The loss of these squeakers sewed up the win for Brandeis.

The duo of Murray and Simons did however look strong and could prove to be a strong asset for the team.

The next match is with New Hampshire at 2:00 today, April 25, here at the University. Coach Kosakowski's team will be at home again this Friday, the 27th, as it hosts American International College.

Some things are pretty hard to believe, even when they're staring you right in the face. I came across such a thing the other day, and it's right here on my desk now. Mr. Arnold House

Dear Mr. House:
Thank you for your letter of Apil 1, 1962, requesting summer employment. I am sorry to inform you that all appointments have been made for the summer of 1962. If we have any cancellations from those already appointed, we shall be happy to contact you.

A lot of people argue that it just isn't necessary to spell correctly and use proper grammar, saying that as long as they are understood, it doesn't make any difference. I must admit that they do have a good argument, even though I'm pedantic enough to not accept it. My argument is that poorly constructed sentences are likely to result in double entendre. Now I've heard that double entendre is the basis of the funniest kind of humor, which seems credible enough; but it also tends to result in confusion, absurdity, and often embarrassment to the parties concerned. Take, for instance, the classic example of the woman who placed the following want—ad:

FOR SALE — Table by lady with hepplewhite legs.

Well, yesterday I came across a more modern instance of this sort of thing in one of the New York City newspapers. Here's the first line of a notice run as a small news item:

The American Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals will sponsor two 8-week obedience courses for all New York dog owners.

Funny . . . I always thought they sent the dogs to obedience school. Or perhaps the ASPCA is trying to put some truth into that old adage that "it's a dog's world."

Professor Hughes' newest book is "An Approach to Peace," a study of issues relating to the Cold War. Hughes is a national sponsor of the Committee for a Sane Nuclear Policy. He is also a member of the American Civil Liberties Union, the Urban League, and the N.A.A.C.P. As can be seen, a primary concern of Mr. Hughes is the spiraling arms race and the need for a resolution of many Cold War problems.

The Hughes talk at Amherst will be sponsored by Synthesis, the four college organization. Following the talk, on Saturday morning at 10 a.m. the Synthesis group will host an informal meeting of those who are interested in the Hughes candidacy. Following the meeting in the morning, there will be a luncheon in the S.U. at 1:15 for those who are interested in speaking with Professor Hughes.

To get on the ballot, Hughes will need approximately 72,000 certified signatures.

Peabody System . . .

For the University, Peabody said, "I feel very strongly that the bill which would provide autonomy, should be passed."

He held little hope that the bill would be passed this year, but more probably next year.

Peabody stated: "Strong lead-continue to press for programs under which under which students will be trained for government service by working at the State House and receiving course credit."

He also stressed programs for study and research by departmental administrators who come out here on sabbatical leave from their work within the state government.

Peabody stated: "Strong leadership by a governor would quickly result in a compact between the State House and the colleges led by this University—a compact under which the state does a great deal of education, but education serves the state by being a great reservoir of skills, disciplined knowledge and responsible citizenry."

Peabody said the university should be the place to which the state government turns for trained personnel and future leadership.

Courses In Portuguese To Be Offered Next Fall

Courses in Portuguese will become part of the regular curriculum at the University starting in September, Provost Gilbert L. Woodside announced early this week.

Students will be able to sign up for the new course offerings on Counseling Day, May 1.

The Provost said that the University's action has been taken "because Portuguese is a high-priority language, particularly in view of this country's growing relations with South America where Portuguese is the language of one-third of the contintent's entire population."

A recent study conducted by the American Council of Learned Societies under Title VI of the National Defense Education Act called for increased course work in Portuguese as a means of meeting immediate national needs and of enriching college-level language offerings generally.

NORMAN ARAUJO

Dr. Woodside announced that Norman Araujo, presently a teaching fellow at Harvard University, will join the UMass faculty in September to teach the new courses. Elementary and intermediate work in the language will be offered, as well as an introductory course in Portuguese literature.

Araujo, a native of New Bedford, Mass., received A.B. and A.M. degrees from Harvard University, where he is now completing work for his doctorate in Romance Languages.

A member of Phi Beta Kappa, he was awarded a Fulbright Scholarship for study at the Universite d'Aix-Marseilla in France in 1955-56 and a National Defense Education Act grant for work in Portugal and the Cape Verde Islands in 1960-61. He has also held Harvard University scholarships and a special fellowship awarded by the Portuguese government.

Soph Class Has Unique Exec Council

The Executive Council of the Class of '64 is unique among class representative governing bodies at UMass.

Taking the lead from the Class of '63, the sophomore class, under its president, Kim Wallace, elected a 42 member governing body comprised of representatives from sororities, fraternities, men's and women's dormitories, Scrolls, Maroon Keys, and commuters in the class of '64.

Wallace pointed out that unlike the councils of the classes of '63 and '65, the sophomore Executive Council is elected by members of the sophomore class.

"It works very well, since it eliminates the work load on one person, or on one small group of people. The council provides for active participation for all the members of the class, because everybody is invited to serve on committees for class events," Wallace said.

Wallace noted: "Participation is the reason for our council. Our class is the first class of UMass' new century, and every members of the class ought to be able to take part in the activities of his class."

A constitution for the council is presently in the works. The constitution was drawn up by a committee headed by Brian Peffer, and including Bob Coffin, Sue Mollison, Marcia Tremble, and Diane Smith.

The Executive Council has also done extensive work on Soph-Frosh Night, Winter Carnival, Soph-Frosh Track Meet, the Soph Banquet, and Centennial work. In recognition of this work, members of the council were able to purchase their own recognition pins.

Korean Class Now Offered At UMass

Are you seriously thinking of going abroad to work in an underdeveloped country, joining the Peace Corps, or working abroad in government service, when you graduate?

Justice William O. Douglas noted the grave danger to our free society as the spread of Communism takes its momentum in newly emerging countries in Asia and Africa. Pointing out the supreme importance of the mastery of world languages, Douglas called upon the young folk of the nation to train themselves in different foreign languages as one of the most effective means of withstanding the onward march of Communism in the world tdoay.

Those who are interested in taking the initial step in the way of language preparation with the above views in mind are invited to sit in on a non-credit Korean language class which will be conducted by Mr. Sunki Choe of the Government Dept. The course is not connected with University curricula and will meet at a time to be arranged. Those interested are invited to a meeting tomorrow night in the Government office in Machmer at 8 p.m., or are asked to contact Mr. Choe at some other time, through the Government Dept.

UMass Prepares For Welcome As 8th Open House Begins

UMass begins preparations for the eighth annual university Open House, to be held tomorrow and Sunday, April 28 and 29. The program is set up for the purpose of acquainting the public with the state educational facilities on the college level.

Departments and organizations of the university have prepared exhibits of professional and student work, demonstrations of teaching techniques, and entertainment for the visitors. Exhibits will be displayed in the S.U. Ballroom and in the individual academic buildings.

Political Cartoons

"The World of the Political Cartoonist" will be one of some 50 exhibits to be presented at the University Open House Saturday and Sunday, April 28 and 29.

Original political cartoons from the country's top metropolitan newspapers will be on display in the Student Union Ballroom. Under sponsorship of the UM Department of Government, the exhibit will feature each cartoonist's most popular gibes at the world's problems.

Showmanship Contest

A special event of the Open House will be the annual Dairy Cattle Showmanship Contest to be held all day Saturday in Grinnell Arena.

Precision Drill

The University's ROTC units will present precision drill exhibitions on both Saturday and Sunday. The Naiads, co-ed swimming group, will offer a colorful water ballet entitled "If the Shoe Fits." Each number will feature a different type of footwear from skis to ballet slippers.

Therapy Demonstration

Techniques being used in treating speech and hearing defects will be demonstrated at the University Speech and Hearing Center on Sunday, April 29 as a part of Open House activities.

Under the direction of Dr. Inez Hegarty, four 30-minute student demonstrations of speech and hearing therapy will be presented at 2 p.m. in Bartlett Hall. At the same time, Clarence Angell, assistant professor of Speech, will show equipment and techniques used in recording public speaking and reading performances. Visitors will be given an opportunity to make recordings of their voices.

Home Ec. Exhibit

On Saturday and Sunday, the School of Home Economics will feature a "three-fold exhibit." The exhibit is designed to show the new home economics curricula being offered next fall. Representatives of the teaching, research and extension staffs of the School of Home Economics will be on hand to explain the new program, career opportunities, and to answer questions.

Music Hour

"Open House Music Hour," a presentation of ensemble music sponsored by the Student Union Arts and Music Committee, will be given on Sunday, April 29, at 3 p.m. in the Colonial Lounge of the Student Union.

"The Big Book"

"The Big Book," a half ton of exhibits telling the story of earth sciences in Canada, will highlight the geology department's displays at the Open House.

Captioned in both French and English, the 30 four-by-five foot aluminum pages tell the story of Canadian mining and geological activities. Demonstrations of geophysical prospecting, mapping of bedrock and surface deposits, coal research using microscopic methods, geodesy, land management, oceanography, hydrology, and ice distribution are also included.

A large part of the exhibit will be devoted to new techniques of geochemical exploration for minerals in the far north. In addition there will be information on mining explosives and engineering, surveys of mineral resources, extraction metallurgy, fuels and mining practice and stellar physics.

On loan from the Department of Mines and Technical Surveys of Ottawa, the display sometimes poses handling problems. In Halifax the exhibit was too large to clear the doors of a large hotel. The "book" had to be take through kitchens, between mounds of potatoes and roasts of beef to get to the exhibit room. At the University, the Canadian display will be shown in the Student Union ballroom.

"A New Dimension in Beauty

"A new dimension in beauty," as seen through the eye of the scientist, will be revealed in a display offered by the School of Engineering at Open House.

Bennett Cerf Advises— Stick To The Light Side

"The way to live with the times we're in . . . the civilization of exasperation . . is to roll with a punch and laugh once in a while", commented Bennett Cerf in his lecture here Wednesday night before a capacity crowd in the S.U. ballroom. His talk was sponsored by the Distinguished Visitors Program.

"It's not the happy eventless, smooth-running days you remember", he went on. "It's the accidents, the mishaps . . . If you're like me, you add something new every time you tell it . . . by the tenth telling there's not a word of truth it."

On politics: "I cannot see how anyone, in these times, can join the far left or the lunatic right . . . You cannot escape realism by radicalism—learn to live with it. I'm astounded by the people who build fall-out shelters. What good will it do them?"

On censorship: "The American public doesn't need censorship; it can take care of itself . . . If we let people take away our liberties, the day will come when we can't tell the difference between an American citizen with his rights and a Soviet citizen without his rights."

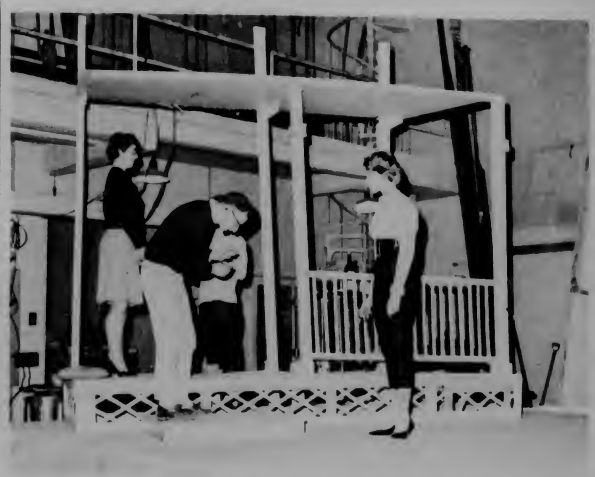
COUNSELING DAY

Wednesday, May 2nd, has been set aside as Counseling Day. "No Holiday," this day is specifically designed to allow Adviser and student adequate time for consultation and pre-registration for the next semester. Thought and care on this date promote an effortless and speedy registration in September.

Many schools and departments are making special arrangements. Students are advised to check departmental bulletin boards for particulars prior to that date.



Director Norman Rothstein runs through a scene from "Invitation to a March" with Sandra Segel while Evelyn Carlson waits for a cue. The Roister Doisters' production by Arthur Laurents will be presented this weekend in Bowker Auditorium. Tickets will be sold at the door for both evening performances and the matinee Sunday at 2:30.

ELECTION DISTRACTIONS

With elections now in full swing, the campus is beginning to look like one oversized campaign poster. The winds have raised havoc with many of the more elaborate signs, and even an unobservant student can find his favorite candidate represented in the thick of at least one hedge. This leads to an interesting suggestion. "Wouldn't it be loverly" if these devoted civil servants (politicians) would pick up the litter that they have so eagerly strewn about the campus. Wouldn't that be good eh?—save money and everything!

Anyway, fellows and gals, as prospective office holders do remember the bill your forerunners (in the Student Senate) passed—"NO CAMPAIGN MATTER IS TO BE ATTACHED TO TREES."

Another well known item —no signs for John in the john, or in the hall, or in any other spot except authorized bulletin boards. By the by, don't the election rules demand purification of our campus by all those who tape, glue, chewing-gum or otherwise erect signs?

Typical example of illegal campaign sign (censored).

So here's more than a luke warm tip for you rhyming meemees who are out to serve the campus—make your slogan: "Vote for me and I'll tote for you."

Final elections will be held this Monday (April 30) and the Collegian urges every student to know the candidates and to cast his ballot in the Student Union.

Welcome

Citizens of the Commonwealth —Welcome.

We at the University of Massachusetts open our doors to you, the taxpayers, on this Open House Weekend. Despite the overtones of hasty room cleaning, Open House is an excellent chance for parents and friends to become better acquainted with all aspects of university living.

Many of the departments will present displays of interest and information varying from a 30,000 volt linear accelerator in Hasbrouck (Physics) Laboratory, to political cartoons from the Government Department.

An event not to be missed is the repeat performance of the Naiads—"If the shoe fits." The new infirmary will be open to inspection, and guided tours will be available. Almost every organization on campus will have some sort of exhibit.

We urge you to take this once-a-year opportunity to visit out University. (This includes UMass students.) The red carpet is out, and we are expecting you.

Invitation To A March

by PAUL THEROUX

Last night the housemothers and I were presented with a strange, at times fantastic and bewildering, at other times screechingly obscene "modern comedy," Invitation To A March, at Bowker Auditorium. This Arthur Laurent's play is the second and last Roister Doiste production of this year.

Invitation To A March is not any easy play to describe in terms of its effects and in terms of its structure. The play is a love story and also a bursting of the husks of pretention, stupidity, and especially the psychosis which certain members of a certain stratum in our society develop. That is, a psychosis which permits all appetites license, but which cannot supply the all proper nutrients for that appetite. I'm talking, of course, about sex and its various social overtones, masks, and fugues. Now, don't get the idea that Invitation To A March is a sex play—I mean, it's not. At least, I don't think so. With symbolic activity being what it is nowadays it's hard to tell whether someone is washing his hands because they're dirty or because of ... something else.

The play is also a fairy story (in the Grimm sense), for halfway through the first act a plumber, Aaron Jablonski (Bob Stanton) masquerading as a prince kisses and awakens a princess, Norma Brown (Meredith Halstead), who is unconsciously dulled and withdrawn by a society that, in spite of all its neon madness, has a soporific effect on those true Children of Nature. But it is not all easy going. Norma has been bethrothed to Schuyler Grogan (David Manley), a slick Sloan Wilson feral child who has been weaned on witticism and alcohol by his painted and, usually, plastered mother, Deedee (Sandra Segal). His father is sensible, worldly Tucker Grogan (Mick Broadhurst), who returns to the dunes he knew as a young and licentious husband. In the dunes lives the Earth Mother Jablonski (Ellen Snyder), mother of Aaron, who is renting a house to Norma and her mother for the summer. This reunion comes as somewhat of a shock to Tucker, because he discovers that he is actually the father of Aaron (the young and licentious days of husbandry come back to hunt and surprise him ...) and the ex-lover of Camilla (Earth Mother) Jablonski. You see, when his wife was great with Schuyler he (Tucker) stalked the dunes like a hungry lemming ...

In a flash, Tucker discovers that his son, Schuyler, is a creep and that his illegitimate son, plumber Aaron, is the American Dream (fathered by him and mothered by earth). The persistant whines of Norma's mother, Lily (Evelyn Carlson, are to no avail and niether are the alcoholic admonitions of Deedee—both want a match which will bind their children. But just as airplane glue will not stick plastic to a rose petal, so are the mothers unsuccessful in sticking the dried Schuyler to the lubricious Norma (who, after all, has been irrigated by Aaron).

The play ends with the liberated Norma leaping and frolicing into the sunset with Aaron, while Schuyler weeps into Norma's discarded shoe (the last frippery of civilization).

Ellen Snyder begins rather weakly as Camilla, but develops into a real character, "sailing her own ship" etc. Evelyn Carlson has an accent that is straight from the Catawba marshes, but sometimes she lapses into a sort of Southern Esperanto that is in character, although tough to translate. Mick Broadhurst was cast very well as the ex-lecher, Tucker, as was Sandra Segel, Deedee, who stole the show more than once with her Auntie Mame philosophy and her own pulchritude.

David Manley was more than adequate as the jilted lover. Meredith Halstead, a freshman, in her first significant role charmed the audience with her social funk and finally her newly awakened desire for Aaron. Her part was particularly demanding, but she handled it professionally and with a genuine determination to find her libido. Bob Stanton was princely and charming with a certain natural grace that comes from living with Earth Mothers. He came across very easily and displayed a thorough acquaintance in articulating well and moving about on the stage.

With few lines and many expressions, Robert Goodrich, was tremendously funny as the drumbeating, toilet-discovering, gawky brother of Norma.

Norm Rothstein deserves credit for his imaginative blocking—his stylized use of stage positions (often the actors speak directly to the audience) which fit in with the uniform maddness and gilded sterility from which Norma escapes. The night mare is complete on slick, fantastic, and humorous levels. This play is enjoyable as comedy, and even the social point, which is aimed primarily at the tuned-in New York audience, can be recognized easily in Amherst.

Scenes from the noisy and impressive Student Leaders' Night ceremonies. Above, a surprised Barb Viera is congratulated upon being tapped into Mortar Board. Below Wes Honey taps Andy D'Avanzo, while Don Cournoyer (who was also tapped two Adelphians later) looks on.

Rabbi Kaplan To Speak At Breakfast

He graduated form the Jewish Theological Seminary in 1954. He was an U.S. Army Chaplain for 2 years and served at a congregation in New Jersey for 3 years. He has been in Holyoke since 1959.

CAMPUS NEWSCAST

WMUA will give a news broadcast tonight at 6:45 from the Collegian office in the S.U. Fifteen minutes of the latest campus and four-college news will be presented.

Turner Day To Be Held On May 6

President David Dodds Henry of the University of Illinois will be the main speaker at special ceremonies to be held at Templeton, Massachusetts on May 6 in honor of Jonahan Baldwin Turner, father of the Land-Grant movement.

Turner Day, a joint undertaking of UMass and the town of Templeton, will bring together distinguished citizens from many parts of the country. The program is part of the Templeton Bicentennial celebration and the UMass Centennial observance.

Jonathan Turner, born in Templeton in 1805, moved to Illinois in 1833 after attending Yale Universiy. As a teacher at Illinois College, he became an advocate of education for "the industrial classes." His call to the Illinois legislature to "take immediate steps for the establishment of a University in the state of Illinois" constituted the beginning of the Land-Grant movement under which some seventy state colleges and universities were founded.

Turner's work inspired Justin S. Morrill of Vermont to introduce the now-famous piece of national legislature which bears Morrill's name. In 1870 Jonathan Turner saw the partial fruition of his vision when he laid the cornerstone for the first building of the University of Illinois

President Henry, an outspoken champion of the modern Land-Grant movement, is a distinguished educator whose recent book, What Priority for Education?, has provoked a great deal of discussion of the critical issues confronting American higher education today.

About 600 persons are expected to attend the Templeton ceremonies, which are scheduled to begin at 2 p.m. in the town's Narragansett Regional High School.

J. D.'s CORNER

About half a century ago, well before your time, you could buy any kind of car you wanted as long as it was a Ford, and Haldeman-Julius Publications was turning out millions of Little Blue Books on every conceivable topic. It was inevitable that the paths of the two companies would eventually cross, and the result was a book of "Best Ford Jokes," which, surprisingly enough, is still in print. The following is a sample of its con-

The Ford is my auto, I shall not want another.
It maketh me to lie down in mud puddles.
It destroyeth my soul.
It leadeth me into the paths of ridicule for its name sake.
Yea, though I ride through the valleys,
I am toweth up the hills.
It anointeth my face with oil.
My radiator runneth over.
Surely if this thing followeth me all the days of my life.
I will dwell in the poor house forever.

Sound familiar, any of you Ford owners? (I know; I used to drive one.)

Little Blue Books are still being published and sold by the thousands. The price is now 15 cents instead of a nickel, but the titles are about the same as ever. In addition to almost all the works of Shakespeare, Mark Twain, Upton Sinclair, Oscar Wilde, and Voltaire, some of the currently available titles include "The Truth About American Yokels," "How to be a Gatecrasher," "Confessions of a Minister's Daughter," and "How to Write Little Blue Books."

For a free catalogue listing over 1000 titles, write to Little Blue Books, Box 31, Girard, Kansas.

Since the Collegian staff is small this year, many of us have to double up on some of the work. And so it happens that I am also the exchange editor around here. One of the things I've gleaned from the exchange papers is a small but significant paragraph attributed to one S. Kierkegaard, which is herewith reprinted, with special thoughts to our friends in Synthesis:

"It happened that a fire broke out backstage in a theatre. The clown came out to inform the public. They thought it was a jest and applauded. He repeated his warning; they shouted even louder. So I think the world will come to an end amid general applause from all the wits who believe that it is a joke."

Speaking of "Little Blue Books," I read one yesterday called "Examination Booklet."

The thing which disturbed me most about it was that it was mine. HO, HO, IT IS TO LAUGH!

New Art Technique Exhibited At Clarke Sch., Northampton

The paintings of Guy Gosselin, a former student at the Clarke School for the Deaf, Northampton, will be shown in an exhibition to be held at the School from April 29th through May 6th. Mr. Gosselin, who now lives in Montreal, will introduce a comparatively new technique to this area, a technique which he uses to give his paintings a three-dimensional effect. The blonde, thirty year old artist paints in oils on transparent plexiglass which he, in turn, mounts over a related painted canvas background, providing an unusually interesting "shadow box" effect.

Born in Belgium, he and his parents moved to Canada when he was six years old. Deafened in infancy, he obtained his early education in schools for the deaf in Belgium and Canada and at the Clarke School. He then received further training in Montreal at the Fashion Art Academy, Sir George William College of Fine Arts and at the Valentine School of Commercial Art. For the past eight years he has been employed in the Graphic Arts Department of the Canadian Broadcasting Company. He received first prize and a certificate of merit in Latham Foundation International Poster Contests in 1951 and 1952, in addition to receiving an award for Television Graphics at the eighth annual Exhibition of Advertising and Editorial Art of the Art Directors Club in Montreal. His work has been shown at the Ecole des Beaux Arts and the Museum of Fine Arts in Montreal, at the Selected Artists Galleries in New York City and at the Van Leeuwen Boomkamp Galleries in Ottawa. His work is also represented in several private Canadian collections.

The eight day exhibition, sponsored by the parent and alumni associations of the Clarke School, will begin with a "Meet the Artist" reception and tea on Sunday afternoon, April 29th. His paintings will be exhibited from 1 to 4 p.m. daily, Monday through Saturday. On Sunday, May 6th, the final day of the show, an auction of all unsold paintings will be held at 6:30 p.m. with the proceeds of the sale going to the school's development fund. The public is invited to all events which are to be held in the Coolidge Building on the campus.

Those serving on the sponsoring committee are: Mrs. Katherine Ducharme, Holyoke; Mrs. John Eadie, Jr., Dracut; Mr. A. J. Benjamin, Springfield; Mrs. Ronald Schuster, Florence; and Mrs. Mark Layne, Northampton.

Methodist Businessman To Give Taik

Allen G. Erdman, General Manager of Monsanto Chemical Company in Springfield, will be the guest speaker at the Wesley Foundation this Sunday evening, April 29, at 7 p.m. The topic of the talk, to be given at the Wesley Methodist Church, will be "Ethics in Modern Industry."

Erdman is a churchman from the Trinity Methodist Church in Springfield and brings the concerns of a Christian to the business world. His approach is one of search and conviction, together with a background of experience in modern industry with one of our nation's leading chemicals manufacturers.

The talk will follow a supper at 6 p.m. at the Wesley Methodist Church. Tickets for the supper may be obtained by contacting Donald E. Bossart, Associate Director of the Foundation. All interested are invited to attend.

Speech Dep't. Will Present "A Summer In The Country"

The cast for David L. Wright's A Summer in the Country has been announced by director Doris Abramson of the Speech Dept. The play will be presented May 11th at 8:15 p.m. in Bowker auditorium.

In the cast are five students and one faculty member: Frances Castine '64, a psychology major, has the part of a simple-minded girl, Gloria Glenn. Janet Parisi '62, history major, is Mrs. Laura Simmons, the mother in this story about a family in the country in 1935. Her husband, Carl Simmons, will be portrayed by Mr. Robert Tucker of the English Department. Steven Orlen '64, seen in one of last year's experimental plays by Ray Kennedy, is one of the Simmons' sons, Rich. The other son, Alvin, is played by Paul Acres '63, a psychology major. Pamela O'Donnell '63, an English major, completes the cast in the role of Rich's girl friend Jean Richards.

Assistant to the director is Beverly DeMarco '63, a speech major who is remembered for her portrayal of the harlot Canina in the R.D. production of Volpone last fall. She and members of the cast are all in Miss Abramson's oral interpretation classes this semester.

A Summer in the Country was originally a short story. It appeared last year in Mutiny magazine and has since won several awards. The story has been adapted for stage presentation in a production that falls somewhere between a staged reading and a fully produced play.

Technical adviser for this Speech Department production is Mr. Terry Wells of that department. Assisting him will be Christian Hosford '62 and Marilyn Fulton '63, plus members of Prof. Orville K. Larson's lighting class. Musical background will be furnished by Buffy St. Marie '62.

Food Tech Prof. Is Awarded Grant By Federal Gov't

One of the largest individual grants ever received by the College of Agriculture, a $103,504 U.S. Public Health Service grant to study the heat breakdown of edible fats has been awarded to Dr. Irving S. Fagerson of the food technology department at UMass.

Recent studies on the role of fat in the diet have indicated its importance in relation to disease, according to Dr. Fagerson, who will be seeking basic information on the breakdown of fats during the heating and preparation of fat containing foods.

Dr. Fagerson's research will involve application of radioactive tracer techniques and gas chromatography as well as ultra-violet and infrared spectrophotometric techniques.

The grant, being conducted as part of the Agricultural Experiment Station research, is for a seven year period. Coupled with a $122,000 grant by the U.S. Public Health Service recently to Dr. Hamed El-Bisi for a continuation of his research on the use of chemical vapors for sterilization, the food technology department has received a combined grant of $225,504 from this source since the first of the year.

Dr. Fagerson was the recipient of a previous U.S. Public Health Service grant to do research on the deterioration of foods as a first phase of this newest study.

Known internationally for his work in the field of gas chromatography—a method of determining off-flavors and spoilage of food through analysis of food vapors — he was co-editor of a book on the proceedings and discussions of the International Symposium of Gas Chromatography published in 1958. During a five-month sabbatical leave last summer, he worked with gas chromatography research groups at the U.S. Department of Agriculture's Western Regional Laboratory in Albany, Calif.; and the U.S. Army Quartermaster Research and Development Center in NATICK.

Zeta Nu, Newest Fraternity, Growing Fast This Year

Starting as nothing more than an idea at the beginning of this school year, Zeta Nu has since materialized into a well-organized fraternity. Initiated through the efforts of the I.F.C., this young fraternity was soon functioning alone. On November 26, 1961 Zeta Nu was formally ushered into existence at its founding banquet.

Eager to participate in campus activities, Zeta Nu has already established an impressive record. In this year's blood drive, the brothers not only volunteered blood but also aided the Red Cross on each of the three days. At the Interfraternity skit competition, Zeta Nu captured second place and its first IFC points. She has also entered into athletic competition both in the fields of basketball and bowling.

Although Zeta Nu does not have a house as yet, the brothers have been eating together and holding their house functions at the Mt. Pleasant Inn. Here they enjoy not only the experience of brotherhood and fraternity life, but also the delicious cooking of their cook, Clyte Forston.

Behind its elected officers: Tom Antonucci '63, president; Mike Belanger '63, vie president; George Bejian '63, treasurer; Bob Small '63, secretary; and Dave Burnett '65, historian, Zeta Nu has grown at a fantastic rate of speed. You can expect an excellent showing from this thriving young fraternity in the near future.

Campus Queens Eligible For Festival Scholarship

The Eastern States Exposition has announced plans to award a $500 scholarship at a "Festival of College Queens" during the 41st annual Exposition, September 15-23.

College students who have been selected as "queens" of various campus events at New England colleges during the 1961-62 college year are eligible to apply for the scholarship.

The winner will be selected by a panel of educators and distinguished citizens at the Exposition on Tuesday, Sept. 18.

To be eligible, a girl must be single, a New England resident, enrolled in an accredited New England ollege for undergraduate or graduate study for the 1962-63 college year, and she must be in good standing academically.

A preliminary screening of applicants will take place at the Exposition on Saturday, May 26, and the finalists will be invited to return to the Exposition for a ceremony selecting the winner on September 18.

"This scholarship program will augment the Governors' Scholarships now awarded each year at the Exposition by governors of the six New England states," according to Exposition officials. "The Festival of College Queens winner will be free to use the cash scholarship at the college of her choice anywhere in New England."

Girls interested in applying for the Exposition Festival of Queens Scholarship should write to the Scholarship Dept., Eastern States Exposition, West Springfield, Mass. for further information and an application form.

SORORITY NEWS

ALPHA CHI OMEGA

All of us at 813 want to thank the brothers of Theta Chi for an enjoyable exchange supper. We were amazed at Bob's "smashing" business venture, but who's complaining?

Four Alpha Chi's are finding that with honors come various small sacrifices. Cary O'Connell will be rising and shining fifteen minutes earlier this spring to be sure her new mortarboard pin is shined and on straight, but right now she's counting the days till initiation. Our three new scrolls, Chris Cady, Ann Williams, and Mary Jane White are fast discovering that about half of their wardrobes clash with maroon. All that the rest of us can say is congratulations to these four, but somewhow the word doesn't seem adequate to express the deep pride and happiness we feel.

"Congrats" also to Halina Lewantowicz who was a recipient of one of the Campus Chest Scholarships.

KAPPA ALPHA THETA

All Thetas were proud Tuesday night as we saw our sisters tapped. Scrolls are Lynda Carlo, Nancy Stack, Ann Ruthel, Nancy Downing, and Joy Kerr. Who could be more full of spirit than our two new Revelers Bonnie Hunter and Barbie Farrell. Elected to Mortar Board was Pat Valiton.

Good luck to Barbie Lavalette in her new position as president of Panhellenic Council. With such a fine council we're sure you'll do a splendid job.

Judy Wilkinson is busily at work planning next year's budget as our newly elected treasurer.

We certainly enjoyed welcoming President and Mrs. Lederle to dinner Thursday evening.

Thanks to Phi Mu for the great exchange before vacation.

Congratulations to lovely Jan Hatcher who reigned over the Greek Week activities.

LAMBDA DELTA PHI

On April 15th the sisters were very proud to initiate nine alumnae (of our former local, Phi Delta Nu) and two advisors into Lambda Phi.

Congratulations are out to Dellie Mathews and Maddie Marsella, who were appointed as dormitory counselors for next year.

The date and place of our second national convention has been announced. The delegates will meet on this campus from June 20 to the 24th.

PI BETA PHI

Pi Phi would like to welcome its eight new members who were recently initiated. The new sisters are: Linda Myers, Joan Carey, Joan Chiminello, Janet Crowell, Susan Herron, Linda Schecterle, Janice Smith and Lynne Tanner. A banquet in honor of the new initiates followed the ceremonies.

Congratulations are sent to Karen Kober who has been chosen House Chairman at Crabtree for next year and to the other sisters selected as House Counselors: Linda Schecterle, Joan Carey, Marie Makinen, Linda Myers, Susan Herron and Marcia Trimble.

The Pi Phi's want to congratulate their sisters who were tapped during Student Leaders' Night. Bobbie Hanna was tapped by Revelers; new Scrolls are Merry Holstead and Kathy Osterberg; and Mortar Boards are Pat Chase, Barb Viera and Carol McDonough.

The sisters would like to thank Theta Chi for a wonderful time at their recent exchange supper.

SIGMA DELTA TAU

As we find ourselves on the last stretch of this semester, we are thinking ahead to finals. This year studying will be made easier with the help of a wonderful new basement study room prepared and decorated for us by the pledges as part of their pledge project. The pledges moved into the house April 14 and 15 and did some wonderfully constructive things despite the 6 o'clock raids.

We are beaming with pride over the honors bestowed on four of our sisters and pledges who were tapped on Student Leaders Night. They are Scrolls: Debby Lindbergh and Judy Zenis; Reveler: Linda Lederman; and Mortar Board: Rochelle Simons.

Congratulations go also to Marsha Katseff who was elected to Phi Kappa Phi, Honorary Society.

News From New England Greeks

The hallowed halls of the Northeastern Dining Commons rang with discord one morning last month when pledges from five fraternities openly revolted by forming the Inter-fraternity Pledge Council and invading the first three tables.

Although the pledges stuffed cotton in their ears so they could not hear orders to disband issued from various brothers, the rebellion was put down quickly, as many fraternity paddles, some six feet in length, appeared on the scene.

"It was intended as no more than an expression of dynamic spirit of the pledges," a spokesman for the "rebels" said, after the revolt.

The Committee on Discipline at the University of Maine has voted to place that campus' chapter of Tau Kappa Epsilon on social probation. It also informed the chapter that its charter at the University is in question unless its officers can give positive evidence by May 15 to comply with University regulations concerning the use of intoxicating beverages.

There was a resolution adopted by the Tufts University Student Council earlier this month "that Theta Delta Chi suspend its raffle until such time as it obtains the approval of the Council." The question concerned the legality of a liquor raffle; it was charged that the fraternity was in strict violation of university and state liquor laws.

"The Interfraternity Council should undertake more overall campus activities," said the IFC faculty advisor at the University of Vermont. IFC is a well organized student leading body that is capable of organizing more activities that will benefit the entire university.

Redmen Edged By URI, 5-4; Meet Maine For Two Games

by STEVE HEWEY '63

The Universtiy of Rhode Island put together a two-run rally in the bottom of the ninth inning to edge the University of Massachusetts Redmen 5-4 in a Yankee Conference game at Kingston, Rhode Island Wednesday afternoon. The Rams victory put a halt to the UMass winning streak of five games including a Confernce win. The Redmen now stand five and one for the season and have a 1-1 slate in Yan Con competition.

UMass came up with their first run of the game in the third inning when Ed Forbush reached on a single, advanced when Corky Schmoyer hit a single and was pushed home when Bill Delecchio and Ken Clark were issued walks.

The Redmen added another pair in the fifth inning on base hits by DelVecchio, and Frank Pisiewski, a Ram error and a booming triple off the bat of Ed Forbush, his third hit of the afternoon.

Rhode Island had come up with a pair of runs in the first inning and added another in the fourth, but trailed 4-3 going into the bottom of he ninth. With one man out, shortstop Fred Ayatte singled. Chuck Scaepulla was issued a base on balls to give U.R.I. two men on base and one out. Then two men got up off the Ram bench and combined their talents in clutch pinchhitting performances to give their team the win. Jim Cairo, batting for Cronin, saerificed to move Scarpulla and Ayatte to second and third. Pinchhitter number two, Tom Wragg, slammed the game-winning single into left, Ayatte scoring the tying run and Scarpulla the winning run.

Both pitchers went the distance in Wednesday's game. Lefty Dick Wilson of the Redmen gave up seven hits and five runs. All five were earned. Dick struck out seven Rams while issuing three bases on balls. For Rhode Island Bill Cronin put together a neat six hit performance, giving up four runs three of which were earned. Cronin gave up six walks and fanned four.

Coach Earl Lorden now takes his Redmen team on a two day trip to play U. of Maine today and Saturday in two very important Yankee Conference games. The Redmen then travel to UConn for another Yan Con game on May 1. UMass is at home again on Wednesday, May 2, when we play host to Williams College at 3:00.

Track Team Opens Season Saturday

by ABE SHEINKER '62

The UMass track team opens its outdoor season with a meet against springfield College at home tomorrow. Field eevnts will get underway at 1:00, with the hammer throw being held on the new athletic field beyond the tennis courts and the broadjump being staged on Alumni Field. The other field events will follow, with the running events going concurrently and beginning at 2:00.

This is a big one for Coach Bill Footrick and his charges, as his teams have never beaten his alma mater in his seven years here. This looks like the year, however, as the Maroons have suffered heavy losses through graduation while the Redmen have been bolstered by some outstanding sophomores.

Last year Springfield won the meet 77-58 on their home grounds, but the UMass freshmen won their meet by an identical score. An indication of the Maroon's weakness this season is ther recent loss to Wesleyan.

Most of the times and distances recorded by Springfield in this early season meet are well below the capabilities of UMass' big guns. Bob Brouillet and Dave Balch should be able to dominate the mile and two mile races, and Ron Young and Ken O'Brien can outrun their opponents in the 440 and 880.

Charlie LaPier proved superior to the Maroon hurdlers last year and should repeat this year. The man to watch in the hammer is Dick Ward, whose improvement could mean a new school record. The other Redmen to keep an eye on are sprinter Loren Flagg, discus thrower Charlie Romeo, and pole vaulter Jim Lumley.

The freshmen will meet the Maroon frosh in a simultaneous contest, with their events following each respective varsity event.

It's open house to all track fans at Alumni Field tomorrow.

Snakebeaters Win Fifth; To Play Tufts And Valley Club

by JEFF DAVIDOW '65, Sports Editor

Overcoming a 4-0 deficit at the end of the first period the UMass varsity lacrosse squad sparked by John "Bumps" Bamberry sprang back to beat the lacrossemen from M.I.T. by a score of 8-7.

The first period was a gloomy one for the Redmen, with nothing going right for them. M.I.T. threw in four goals, two spaced only fifteen seconds apart, before the whistle ended the first stanza, giving the dazed Redmen time to think.

When the second period began the time of thinking was at an end and the time of action was about to begin. Before two minutes of the second period had elapsed John Bamberry, assisted by Steve Harrington, had put his first goal of the day by the M.I.T. goalie. It was only the beginning for Harrington and for the Redmen. Bamberry was to strike twice more later in the second quarter. The goals came one right after another as John threw in one at 11:58 and another at 12:51, less than a minute later. The M.I.T. squad was held scoreless by Redmen goalie Doug Cole and by the work of the Redmen defensemen, and the half ended with the score 4-3 still in favor of M.I.T.

The half-time break didn't cool Bamberry or the Redmen down. John came right back and put in the first Redmen tally of the second half after approximatetly seven minutes of the third period had gone by. It was John's fourth of the afternoon and it tied the score up to fou: all. Just a few seconds afterwards Steve Harrington with the aid of Jim Ellingwood struck paydirt for the Redmen and pushed the Garbermen into the lead for the first time in the contest.

However, the Redmen's lead was short lived as the Techmen's Dreiss got one by goalie Cole. This knotted he score up once more, and the third period ended with the Redmen and M.I.T. squad each having five goals.

With six minutes and fourty seconds of the fourth period used up John Bamberry threw in his fifth goal of the game; a fantastic feat. However, the Tech crew wasn't done yet, and they soon put another one in the Redmen cage ,tying the game up for the fourth time. The score of 6-6 was to stand until the end of the fourth quarter, thus throwing the game into a ten minute overtime period.

The extra period was a highly exciting one with the Redmen taking the lead, on a goal by Ellingwood, losing it a little more han a minute later, and finally wrestling it from the Techmen by a tally by Harrington, assisted by Gordie Wallace.

All in all, it was a hard fought contest, with much team play on the part of the Redmen, but there can be no hesitation in calling John Bamberry the outstanding player of the game. This win gives the Redmen a record of five wins and no losses.

The squad will play two games tomorrow. The first is an intercollegiate contest with Tufts on the lacrosse field behind the Cage at 2:00. The second will be a really rugged contest with the Connecticut Valley Lacrosse Club under the lights at 8:00 also here at the University.

It will be a big day for the Redmen and great day for anyone who likes to see a fine sport played well.

Kosakowski's Crew Whips UNH In First YanCon Win

In the first match of Yankee Conference competition last Wednesday afternoon, the UMass varsity tennis team soundly defeated that of the University of New Hampshire, 9-0.

In the single matches Rodger Twitchell, Tom Mendel, Doug Pearsall, and Dick Leete made easy work of their opponents. Twitchell won his sets 6-1, 6-2; Mendell 6-1, 6-3; Pearsall 6-0, 6-4; and Leete 6-0, 6-0.

Captain Simons and Fred Murray, however, had more difficulty; both matches going three sets. In a brilliantly played third set by both men, the singles maches ended with complete team victories.

With the match already won, Mendell teamed with Pearsall, Shule with Sherman, and Levy with Austin, to win the doubles and make the afternoon a complete UMass victory.

The next match is today at 3 p.m., as the Redmen team hosts A.I.C. from Springfield.

Frosh Baseball Club Trounces Mt. Hermon, Amherst Squads

by DAVE WILLARD '64

The Freshmen baseball team has started off the season on the right foot, winning their first two games by impressive margins.

When most of the campus had left last Wednesday before vacation. Coach Bergquist's squad was taking out its frustration on a helpless Mount Hermon team. The Hermonmen wished they had never shown up before the afternoon was over, for as long as UMass had to stay they were going to make it worth their while.

UMass held themselves in check until the third inning when the erupted for five runs. From then on it was all over as UMass could do no wrong. Before it was over the Redmen had choked up a total of 13 runs while the Hermon obys were able to sneak across a single tally, thus averting a shutout.

The Redmen made their hits count, pounding out thirteen to go with their equal number of runs.

The winning pitcher was George Waller who allowed a paltry two hits while striking out eight in five innings. Tom Linnehan finished up and was reached for only one hit.

Upon their return from vacation the boys were well rested and ready to take on the Jeffs from Amherst, Wednesday. This cross town rivalry has always been spirited and a certain amount of added prestige always goes to the winner.

Once again the Redmen jumped out to a quick lead and were never behind, winning 10-5. They tallied three in the first, offsetting the one Amherst had pushed across in the top of the inning. Over the next eight innings the Redmen added seven more to their total while the Lord Jeffs could muster but four.

This was a big day all around for UMass as the whole team sparkled. Again they got the most out of their hits, as they collected eight and managed to score ten runs.

Jim Ritchie pitched the first five innings giving up three hits and striking out four. Ritchie, the winning pitcher, was followed by George Waller who did a good job for the remaining four innings.

In the offensive department Steve Wojnar collected two singles, a double, and a 380 foot sacrifice fly to gain honors for the day. Dick Feen scored three runs and Jim Neary teased the opposing pitchers for three walks and came around twice.

Paul Caisse at shortstop and Rod Norris covering the keystone sack turned in some fine fielding plays to spark the infield.

All in all it was a great day for the Redmen and gave Coach Bergquist something to smile about. These two performances served notice to the Redmen's remaining foes to watch out.

Williams draws the unenviable assignment of providing the opposition for the next home game, Wed., May 2.

Sports Notes

In an issue of the Collegian a few weeks ago we printed an article recounting some of the anecdotes that help make baseball colorful. Well, in answer to a steadily decreasing amount of requests (as the Limlighters say) we again present to the readers of the Collegian some more of these hopefully interesting stories.

When Mel Ott was piloting the Giants, he bound his pitchers by an inflexible rule. They were never—but never—to put across a plate-splitter when the count was two strikes and no balls against the batter. For violating that edict, Ott once fined pitcher Bill Voiselle $500. Atfer that, the Giant twirlers observed Ott's rule religiously.

Shortly after the Voiselle episode, a newcomer fresh from a Giant farm club, was sent in as a relief pitcher. There were men on second and third, and a .350 hitter was at the plate.

The first two deliveries went for strikes. Heedful of Ott's rule, the rookie then prepared to waste one. But things can happen to the most careful pitcher, and the youngster's third one clipped the plate.

"Strike three!" announced the ump.

The kid pitcher grew pale. "No!" he yelled as he left the hill and rushed toward the umpire. "That was a ball! What are you trying to do, ruin me?"

Not so funny, but nevertheless the truth.

Here's another story about a different rookie and umpire that seems farfetched but is however purported to be true.

The Pirates and the Giants were locked in a decisive series. Calling them behind the plate was Bill Klem, an umpire who demanded — and commanded— plenty of respect. It was a close contest. Nerves were on edge. The Pirates were giving tough Bill Klem as much guff as they dared.

Klem warned the Pirate bench twice and declared that the next person who gave him any trouble would be kicked out of the ballgame. The next Pittsburgh player to the plate was a nervous young rookie who could only muster enough voice to mumble his name to Klem.

"Speak up!" barked Klem, and the kid hoarsely yelled back at the top of his lungs "Boo!"

Klem blew his top and kicked the rookie out of the game.

The bewildered kid went back to the bench and explained what had happened to Manager Fred Clarke who immediately dashed out onto the field and explained to Klem that the youngster had meant no offense. His name simply happened to be Everett Booe!

Nomination papers are now available in the RSO office for the position of senator representing Plymouth dorm, and are due in the RSO office on Friday, May 4, by 3 p.m.

WHERE WILL YOU BE AT AGE 30?

Will You Be Earning $15,000 A Year Or More?
Will You Have A Capital Fund of $30,000 Or More?

These are realistic goals for you in the field of investment analysis if you have brains and are willing to use them.

INVESTMENT ANALYSIS must fascinate any thinking man. Whatever happens in any part of the world is related to the value of securities – a new upheaval in Africa, development of the European Common Market, Communist economic policies, military aggression in the Far East – all have an influence upon the value of securities on the New York Stock Exchange and the Over-the-Counter markets. In no other field of investigation – not even journalism – can a man find such quick identification with world-wide affairs as in the stock market.

To a small number of men who are about to graduate from college and who have proved by their scholastic records that they are capable of doing hard, intelligent work, the Value Line Investment Survey, one of the world's foremost investment advisory services, offers the following:

(1) a six-months course of training in security analysis, taught by the head of the Value Line organization and its top editor-analysts.

(2) the following minimum salary schedules:

For three months during the tuition period from July 15th to October 15th – $300.00 per month.

For the next three months – from October 15th to January 15th – $400.00 per month. And for . . .

the first year following	$6,000.00
the second year	7,000.00
the third year	8,000.00
the fourth year	9,000.00
the fifth year	10,000.00
the sixth year	12,000.00
the seventh year	13,000.00
the eighth year	14,000.00
the ninth year	15,000.00
the tenth year	16,000.00
the eleventh year	17,000.00

The increases in pay are, of course, accompanied by promotions in title and responsibility as well. In perhaps no other securities research organization can the exceptionally able analyst advance so rapidly to a position of meaningful responsibility and stature.

If an analyst fails to receive the minimum advance indicated by this schedule, he will be on notice that his resignation is desired. It is probable that of those who are accepted most can and will go ahead faster than shown in this schedule.

In addition to the salary, the company provides a profit sharing plan which, under the minimum salary schedules, should result in providing a capital fund of around $35,000 to $50,000 (as a long term capital gain) at the end of the twelfth year of employment.

In addition, the company provides, entirely at company expense, the following insurance benefits: hospitalization, accident, major medical and life.

Only a few men will be selected for these positions. They will be selected from the tops of their classes, after testing that confirms our own investigation of their aptitude for the work.

This is a challenging offer to men who seek security as well as fortune in the relatively near future.

A security analyst with the Value Line Survey is not precluded from investing for his own account, provided his investments are bought or sold in a manner that is not in conflict with the interests of the service's subscribers or its clients.

Not only will the candidates receive careful instruction, enjoy the opportunity to meet top corporate executives of the companies whose securities they study, and have access to all current reports and news-articles in our library, but they will also have the benefit of exchanging ideas with experienced and stimulating analysts within the organization.

Those students, men or women, who feel that they may be qualified for the positions described above and who are interested in careers in securities research, increasingly the heart of the whole investment business, are requested to forward brief resumes of their college records including marks, class standing, etc., and of any revelant work experience to the address below.

Prepared by scientists of General Motors, the exhibit is called "Art in Science," and will be on display in the School of Engineering on both Saturday and Sunday.

The 24 pictures in the exhibit include some of the world's first and most spectacular micrographs of etched pits in cadmium sulfide semiconductors, blue-gold stress patters of polymer films, photographs of crystals fluorescing at 320 degrees below zero, cavitation in thin films of oil, and electron micrographs that reveal the unusual structure and order found in single-crystal iron research.

The Electrical Engineering Department has rescheduled its undergraduate laboratories for Saturday and Sunday afternoon. This will give visitors a chance to see students conducting experiments as part of their regular class work. The laboratories will be conducted from 1 to 4 p.m. on both days in the Electrical Engineering Building.

Linear Accelerator

A 30,000-volt Hasbrouck Linear Accelerator will be the feature of the Physics Department display. Sponsored by the Physics Club, the linear accelerator will be available for inspection on both afternoons. The complex piece of machinery was designed and constructed under the supervision of Dr. Phillips Jones.

On both Saturday and Sunday there will be lecture-demonstrations of physics experiments at 1:30 and 3:30 p.m. Two films, "High Energy Particle Accelerators," showing tools of the nuclear physicist, and "Frames of Reference," a high school physics film on principles of mechanics, will also be shown.

Sunday dinner will be served in the University Dining Commons at 12:30 and 1:30 p.m. Tickets for the meal may be purchased at the Student Union on Saturday.

The remaining 20 points are for time and penalties.

The teams are judged(in part on their ability in such things as facing movements, right and left step, column movements and in the case of the Flying Redmen and other armed teams, the Manual of Arms.

The general chairman for the event is Col. John C. Marchant P.A.S. at the University. In its capacity as co-host Westover will feature a display of all the current aircraft that are used by 8th Air Force and other branches of the Air Force.

Poet Richard Wilbur To Present Reading

Pulitzer prizewinning poet Richard Wilbur will give a public reading with commentary at UMass on Wednesday, May 2.

Wilbur, one of America's major young poets, will speak under auspices of the War Memorial Lectureship established two years ago by the Associate Alumni to commemorate the University's war dead.

The reading will be given at 8 p.m. in the S.U. Ballroom. The public is invited to attend. There is no charge for admission.

Wilbur received the Pulitzer Prize in Poetry in 1957 for his book, Things of This World. Earlier he was granted a Guggenheim Fellowship and won the Harriet Monroe Prize and the Oscar Blumenthal Prize, both awarded by Poetry Magazine.

In addition to writing a number of books of poetry, Wilbur collaborated with Leonard Bernstein and Lillian Hellman on the 1957 comic operetta Candide, based on Voltaire's satire. He has also been represented in an off-Broadway production of Moliere's The Misanthrope, for which he supplied a new verse translation.

Early this year Wilbur was named the first recipient of the Melville Cane Award, given by the Poetry Society of America for his latest book, Advice to a Prophet.

After receiving an M.A. from Harvard, the young poet taught at that institution until 1954 when he was given the $3,000 Prix de Rome Fellowship of the American Academy of Arts and Letters. On his return from study and writing in Europe, Wilbur joined the faculty of Wellesley College, where he taught until being appointed to the Wesleyan University faculty in 1957. He is now Professor of English at the latter institution.

The Wilbur lecture is one in a continuing series sponsored by the UM Associate Alumni. Previous lecturers have included Robert Frost, W. W. Rostow, Samuel Eliot Morison and Oscar Handlin.

UMass AGR Goes Local Now BKP

The UMass chapter of Alpha Gamma Rho has disaffiliated from the national fraternity due to the national's requirement that membership be completely agricultural. In recent years, this policy had not been adhered to by the University's chapter of AGR and men have been taken with complete disregard of their major courses of study, thus making termination with the national necessary. The action was taken Tuesday night, April 17.

In going local, the house takes the name it had used before becoming national. Beta Kappa Phi was established on this campus as a local fraternity in 1913 and became a chapter of Alpha Gamma Rho in 1917.

Although not yet chartered with the University as a local organization, this action is expected to be accomplished within the next week. New ritual, pins, emblems, and constitution are already prepared.

The 20 men in the present pledge class will become the first brothers in the newly established Beta Kappa Phi when they are initiated to membership on May 12. Present members will become associate members of Beta Kappa Phi.

COUNSELING DAY

Wednesday, May 2, is Counseling Day. Students are advised to make their plans early and to check department bulletin boards for special arrangements.

WMUA To Broadcast During Finals

WMUA will continue its policy of broadcasting classical music continuously during the final examination period. The special exam programming will begin on Thursday, May 24.

Unlike past years, requests will not be accepted during the week of finals. For the convenience of students and WMUA staff members, requests for particular pieces must be submitted by noon on May 18. Requests made during finals cannot be honored and students are urged to make them within the next two weeks.

Requests will be incorporated into the programming schedule as close to the time asked as is possible.

WMUA has followed a policy of broadcasting classical music 24 hours a day during finals for the past several years. This has been done to provide students with music to study by and no interruptions other than those required by law.

H. S. Hughes Gives Talk At Amherst

by BRUCE SCHLASBERG '65

The United States has an alternative of continuing the arms race or continuing the human race, H. Stuart Hughes, independent candidate for the U.S. Senate, and Professor of History at Harvard University, told a capacity crowd Friday night at Amherst College. His talk, "Nuclear Testing—the Act of Folly," was sponsored by Synthesis, the four-college organization.

Hughes compared the present to 1936, saying that the country has progressed in other fields but not in the peace field.

He called "shaky" President Kennedy's statement that "we have no recourse but to go on with nuclear testing in the atmosphere." His first reason for this point was that "The Russians need testing more than we do because their weapons are inferior to ours."

If the present testing series continues, he said, the Russians will gain more than we will. Even after last September's Russian blast, the U.S. was far ahead. Russia was advanced in missiles which were vulnerable and which the U-2 found out about. He quoted Representative Albert from Oklahoma: "We have five times the number of weapons of the Soviet Union and it will be doubled in ten years." He also agreed with English scientist Blackett that ... "the Russian capability in the arms race was a second-hand capability."

"What do we have to gain by our present tests?" he asked.

We would gain advancement in making lighter weapons with greater yields. To oppose this he brought out a point made by three M.I.T. and Harvard scientists—"Future tests will not produce any more in this field. Both sides have reached their capacity."

We would gain knowledge of how structures in cities could survive a nuclear attack. But, he said, "the administration is embarrassed by Civil Defense. These structures do not have to be tested."

For marginal military gains, he emphasized, we are running the

The Perfect Course

Wednesday at counseling would be a good time to think seriously about auditing one or two courses next semester. We at the University are allowed to audit as many courses as we want. It is an ideal way to learn about those things which have always interested you or which you have wanted to find out about, but which you will not be able to fit into your course schedule because of an already overloaded program of major and distribution requirements. You can audit anything from Criminal Psychology to Marriage and the Family, Political Philosophy or Ethics. And it's FREE!

To audit a course is simply to take it without credit. After securing the permission of the person giving the course (permission is al most always given without hesitation), you can do as little as attend lecture as often as you wish or do as much as read all the course material and, depending on the professor, take the exams to see what you have learned and find out what points are most important. Most instructors are even quite willing to let an interested student participate in class discussion.

During counseling and pre-registration it is a good idea to pick tentatively three to five courses you might like to audit; then browse through the catalogue using the pre-registration booklet to discover which courses are actually going to be given and which will be taught at hours that will fit in with the rest of your schedule. When you get your schedule back from the jaws of the IBM next fall, check again, this time with the registration booklet, too see which courses you can fit into your hour plan.

Now the most important element of auditing is to get a good lecturer and the only way to find out whom you personally would enjoy is to sit in on as many different courses and l[illegible]rers as is possible. If two different courses are taught at the same time, go to one on the first day of classes and the other on the next day the class will meet. You can always read or copy the notes for one pe[illegible]m one of the students in the class once you have decided which of the courses you want to take; but do not take the word of one or two students on who is an interesting or inspiring lecturer or who is dull. While this is a fair indication, you can only decide for yourself what sort of delivery appeals to you most. Once you decide on your audit, have the lecturer sign a course card and bring it to the registrar's office.

There is a wonderful opportunity for an education at this University if you are willing to work a little for it. The best instructors (and incidentally students) at this school are as good as the best anywhere. The only difference is the percentage of top men. Here is your chance to learn from the best.

"Every Litter Bit..."

The recent warm weather seems to have brought all the litterbugs on campus out into the open. The front of almost every dormitory on campus is covered with empty coke cups, milk bottles, beer cans, and other assorted junk.

Coupled with the warm weather trash are the hundreds of campaign posters lying around campus (most of which were placed in illegal places to begin with).

And now to put the lid on the whole barrel of trash we have the refuse left from Open House.

Recently, Amherst residents have complained that litter from our campus has been blowing onto the lawns of some Amherst homes. There is no need for all this excess trash. Campaigners are responsible for cleaning up their election materials; dorms, fraternities and sororities should see that their grounds are neat.

But most important of all, it is up to you to make sure that no trash is thrown out of windows or any place other than where it belongs—in the circular file.

The Nights Of The Round Table

by MIKE PALTER

The time for moralizing upon the effects of atmospheric nuclear testing by the United States has passed. Most of those who have been engaged in the Peace Movement have become reconciled to the fact that the tests are to be carried out despite further demonstrations.

This is not to say, however, that the principles upon which the Peace Movement is based have been discarded. On the contrary, it appears that more intensive self-education and overall consolidation of strategies are in progress.

Yet, although expecting the inevitable, nobody expected the outbreak of rationalization which has of late dominated the American press. And the principal offender in this case is unquestionably the New York Times, if for no other reason than the fact that they should have known better.

In an editorial entitled "The Approaching Tests," the Times states:

"We have all, in a real sense, become the hapless protagonists in a Greek tragedy, in which our destiny is determined by forces beyond our control."

Thus, the nation's leading newspaper absolves the United States of any significant degree of blame, apparently feeling that our action has been governed by some mysterious set of mechanisms within a vacuous Twilight zone. In effect, the sophisticated journal sounds like an African witch doctor who has predicted the end of civilization.

This in itself is not a crime. In fact it can be extremely helpful if one reflects upon it for a long enough time from the proper vantage point. The tragic sense which the editorial manifests is not unknown to the man in the street. It is a feeling which has clouded the thoughts of many since 1945. Indeed, it is essentially the same feeling which rapidly developed in the minds of those who were responsible for the atomic bomb. Perhaps it is a by-product of the mental mixture of man's capacity to destroy himself and his seeming lack of a moral conscience throughout much of his history, and, more specifically, his utter lack of this conscience throughout the twentieth century.

The disquieting element in the Times editorial, however, is in its overall attitude toward the current position of the United States in world affairs. It states:

"As the United States approaches the tests it does so with a heavy heart, but with the realization that we must accept our destiny as the defender of the free world and the future of all mankind."

This grandiose attitude (to say the least) carries over to the editorial of the following day, April 25th wherein the Times states:

"In the pursuit of peace, and at the risk of losing Laos to the Communist world, we are pressing for a neutralist Laos in which even the Army and the police would be in neutralist hands."

The Times has finally gone out on the limb; it has become specific. Yet, it is common knowledge that the United States has attempted to install a reactionary regime within Laos. In every corner of the world, this country has defended (at the very least) the status quo, and (at the very most) the most shameful despots of this century. This is not to say that there is not a politically justifiable rationale behind this position. Our rationale has been that it is unfortunate that we must support unpopular regimes, but nevertheless a necessity because of the dangers of Communist expansionism.

Unfortunately, this is not a valid position. It is rather a fact that the United States has worked vigorously against the establishment of leftist regimes. It is rather a fact that the United States, through the far-reaching arm of the C.I.A. has tended to support rightist rather than neutralist regimes. This is shown lucidly by our actions in South East Asia and in Latin America. The political consequences of this position are being assimilated by the present administration, but all too slowly to facilitate a significant change of policy. In business, political, and nilitary circles, it appears that this position has intrenched itself firmly.

The Times editorial goes on to say that the United States has "poured out more than $8 billion since the war to help other, including Communist dominated, nations, and are still doing so at the rate of nearly $5 billion a year."

Whereas on the surface this appears to be a noble process, it has been in reality a method by which many living under the yoke of tyrannical dictatorships have been suppressed. This was certainly the situation in Cuba and is at present the situation in Vietnam.

The rationale of maintaining evil in its microcosm in order to prevent evil in its macrocosm has not been substantiated. Whatever the good intentions of the United States appear to be, it is obvious that this policy has not paid off in the past and cannot pay off in the future. This is daily shown in Formosa, in Iran, in Spain.

But we need not become specific in our conclusion. In general the United States has been saying one thing and doing another. In general, the American people have swallowed the myth of The United States as the champion of morality throughout the world. This is why the Russians must take the blame, the entire blame for the failure of the Geneva negotiations.

Super-heated chauvinism has become the standard in both East and West. It may take a few mutants to change this situation.

To the Editor:

Apathetic Student Senate = Apathetic Student Body

Last Wednesday night another meeting had to be adjourned from lack of a quorum. Out of forty senators—fifteen were present or about 35%. A good percentage of your Student Senators are truly apathetic. To be blunt many are irresponsible, disinterested, and unworthy. They truly do not deserve to be representatives of a student body. What you have in your Senate is a great deal of deadwood—apathetic individuals.

However, all in all, they are true representatives of our student body. Our student body does not deserve any better representation The Senate and other bodies of student government represent, to a tee, the apathy on campus. Our attendance at Senate meetings is as good as the interest taken by the students themselves at elections. Where are all those students who sit by and complain about the inefficiency in their student government—where are they on election day? Either they don't have the interest in what happens to their student tax money of about $120,000.00, or they feel they don't have the intelligence to vote.

When you have a complaint about any of your student representatives—ask yourself where you were on election day! Remember it is not only your privilege to vote—it is your duty. If you don't care that your student government is corroding before your eyes, keep up your present attitude. Who knows, in time, we may be able to join that elite corps—like the University of Conn.—no student government.

STUDENTS—KEEP UP THE FINE WORK!! At the next election day—have a good SLEEP.

More Power Is Shared In Democracy Says Staebler In Second Series Lecture

"In a democracy, more people share power than in any other system," stated Neil Staebler, Michigan State Democratic Chairman, in a lecture Thursday night in the S.U.

"But few have any large proportion of this power—and few hold it permanently," he added. "This is what gives democracy its great vitality."

Staebler maintained that a large body of people in a democratic society scarcely know that democracy exists. Many individuals live their entire lives without voting or participating in any way in government. He said that extreme ideas about government are concentrated among those who are least acquainted with it.

"Democracy is elastic and pliable — dictatorships are unstable especially when modifications creep in," Staebler said. "Yet democracy is often charged with weaknesses, such as growth of centralization, inefficiency, and lack of a sense of purpose."

He held that all societies have weaknesses. But it is a healthy sign that in a democracy, these weaknesses are openly discussed.

"It was the democracies who led in education and scientific development," Staebler continued. "We in the democracies have expended a high proportion of our national income on education, chiefly because this investment promises immediate returns—in the form of increased earning power for students and inceased profits for business."

Many people believe, however, that centralization is taking control out of the hands of the people—that true democracy is disappearing, Staebler said.

"The point of all this is that democracy is not incompatible with limits on pure 'free enterprise," he concluded. "On the contrary — democracy requires the kind of balance of economic forces in the country which will make these forces be equal politically."

Neil Staebler is presently a candidate for Congressman-at-large for the state of Michigan. His lecture was the second in a series of four sponsored by the UMass Government Department. His next lecture will be Tuesday night at 8 p.m. in the S.U.

CRAM COURSE NO. 4: BATHYMETRY

Continuing our series of pre-final exam cram courses, today we take up bathymetry—the study of ocean depths.

Admittedly, this is not a terribly popular course on most campuses. And small wonder. In the whole world there is only one bathyscape, and only two people can get into it.

Nevertheless, the study of ocean depths is of great importance. Why, do you realize that the ocean is by far the world's largest biological environment? The ocean has more than three hundred times as much living room as all the continents and islands combined! Unfortunately, only fishes live in it.

And small wonder. Who'd want to live some place where he couldn't smoke? Surely not I! I wouldn't give up my good Marlboro Cigarettes for the Atlantic and the Pacific put together. Nothing could induce me to forego Marlboro's fine mellow flavor, Marlboro's clean white filter, Marlboro's flip-top box that really flips, Marlboro's soft pack that's really soft. Let others repair to the spacious deeps. Me, I will stick with my Marlboros and the tiny garret I share with a tympanist.

But I digress. Back to the oceans. The largest, as we know, is the Pacific, which was discovered by Balboa, a Spaniard of great vision. To give you an idea of Balboa's vision, he first saw the Pacific while standing on a peak in Darien, which is in Connecticut.

Even more astounding, when Balboa reached San Francisco, he clearly saw the Hawaiian Islands! Being, as we know, a friendly cuss, Balboa waved merrily to the Hawaiians and shouted, "Great little ocean you got here, kids!" The Hawaiians, also, as we know, friendly cusses, waved back, declared a half holiday, organized a luau, built a cheery fire over which they prepared several gallons of poi, a suckling pig, and Captain Cook. This, of course, was the origin of Cooking.

Who'd want to live there?

But I digress. The Pacific, I say, is the largest ocean and also the deepest. The Mindanao Trench, off the Philippines, measures more than 5,000 fathoms in depth. (It should be pointed out here that ocean depths are measured in fathoms—lengths of six feet—after Sir Walter Fathom, a noted British sea measurer of the seventeenth century who, upon his twenty-first birthday, was given a string six feet long with which he used to go scampering all over England measuring sea water until he was arrested for loitering. A passion for measuring seems to have run in the family; Fathom's cousin, Sir Sol Furlong, spent all his waking hours measuring race tracks until Charles II had him beheaded in honor of the opening of the London School of Economics.)

But I digress. Let us, as the poet Masefield said, go down to the seas again. (The seas, incidentally, have ever been a favorite subject for poets and composers.) Who does not remember Tennyson's "Break, break, break"? Or Byron's "Roll on, thou dark and deep blue ocean, roll"? Or the many hearty sea chanties that have enriched our folk music—songs like "Sailing Through Kansas" and "I'll Swab Your Deck If You'll Swab Mine" and "The Artificial Respiration Polka." My own favorite sea chanty goes like this:

A girl loved a sailor and he did jilt her,
And she did weep and roar-ho!
Until she found a perfect filter,
And a perfect smoke—Marlboro!
Sing hey, sing ho, sing ring-a-ding-ding,
Sing tars and spars and patches,
Sing pack and box and lots to like,
And don't forget the matches!

Mass. Fruit Growers Ass'n Purchases Belchertown Farm To Give To UMass

"A positive demonstration of faith in the fruit industry and confidence in further important scientific contributions in agriculture," Pres. John W. Lederle said today in regard to the Massachusetts Fruit Growers' Association's purchase of a Belchertown farm to be given to UMass for use as a horticultural research center.

The gift, described by fruit growers as "a case of an agricultural organization giving something to the government instead of vice versa," was announced by the association in January.

The farm, 215 acres of land and buildings on Sabin St., owned by Peter Hanifan and operated as an apple and dairy farm until last fall, was deeded recently to a fruit growers' facilities committee as an interim step in the transaction.

Actual transfer of the property to the university will be made—possibly in May—after additional money needed for the purchase is obtained. About 60% of the purchase price has been raised from contributions by growers, horticultural associations, agricultural societies and commercial concerns. The facilities committee is spearheading a drive to raise the additional money needed.

A 30-acre area formerly used for experimental fruit orchards on the university campus is being taken for dormitory construction.

The department of horticulture will operate the new research center with priority being given to the scientific study of tree and small fruits. As available, surplus land will then be used for experimental plantings of vegetable, flower and nursery crops for research and teaching purposes.

Research is planned in the areas of nutrition, new methods of insect and disease control, fertilization, new varieties and strains, pruning, plant breeding and the harvesting-handling-packaging of crops.

Tennis Team Trounces AIC; Will Face UConn And URI

by DAVE PODBROS '65

For the second straight time the UMass varsity tennis team made a clean sweep victory, winning all matches played. This time the victim was American International College.

The whole match consisted of seven singles. In spot number one was Captain Don Simons, who although having trouble with his serve, defeated his opponent 6-3, 6-4. Dick Leete played in the second spot, and in a three set match won 6-4, 3-6, 6-1. Fred Murray, following Leete, also went three sets to victory, 6-4, 2-6, 6-4. Pearsal and Shuhle, in spots four and five, respectively, won 6-0, 6-3, 6-2 and 6-2, and rounding out the afternoon Sherman in spot six won 6-1, 6-0, and Levy won 6-3, 6-2.

It is evident that the team which at the beginning of the season was labeled as inexperienced and which promised dim hopes of continuing past year's winnings, has through hard work, dedication, and excellent coaching by Steve Kosakowski, greatly improved. Winning three of their first four matches, the team now seems to be a definite contestant for victory in future matches.

It will be up to the next two matches to demonstrate the team's chances in the Yankee Conference. This Monday, April 30, the squad travels to Connecticut for a three Match, and on May 4, the Rhode Island netmen come to the University. These matches will probably present the answers to the Yankee Conference question.

Redmen Sweep Two Games From UMaine's Black Bears

by STEVE HEWEY '63

The UMass varsity baseball team dealt the University of Maine nine a one-two punch this past weekend en route to sweeping a double header from the Black Bears on their Orono campus field. The victories, a 7-6 decision on Friday afternoon and Saturday's 5-4 win, boost the UMass seasonal record to 7 wins and 1 loss. These were two important Yankee Conference wins for the Earl Lorden-coached Redmen and their Conference mark now stands at 3 and 1.

In the Friday afternoon contest the Redmen were provided the margin of victory when Maine hurler Bill Linesey uncorked a wild throw to first in a pickoff attempt in the top of the ninth, enabling Bill Del Vecchio to score. Del Vecchio had reached base on a walk earlier in the inning and his run gave the Redmen a 7-5 command.

Maine came back in their half of the inning to add one more run but UMass hurler Carl Elmstron, appearing in relief for Lew Pia, bore down for the remainder of the inning and put down the Maine attempt.

The Redmen had several big innings in the ball game. In the third, second baseman Corky Schmoyer boomed a triple to center field producing two runs. Schmoyer later crossed the plate on a wild pitch by Henderson. In the seventh a double by Tony Williams brought two more Redmen across the plate.

Batting stars in the Friday win for UMass were Schmoyer and Captain Frank Pisiewski who collected three hits each.

Lew Pia started on the mound for the Redmen and gave way to Elmstrom in the sixth. Pia was touched for 5 runs and 5 hits. Only 2 of the runs were earned. Lou gave up 5 bases on balls and fanned 6. Elmstrom, finishing up in relief for UMass, picked up his third win of the season against no losses.

Saturday's 5-4 win saw southpaw hurler Dick Wilson go the distance on a fine 6 hit performance. The win was his second of the season but it was a big Redmen sixth inning that told the story of the game. UMass third baseman Tony Williams started off the inning on a walk. Ted Osetek stepped up to the plate and singled, Williams moving to second. Wilson reached on a bunt to load the bases.

Frank Pisiewski produced a run scoring single and a forceout by Neil Harris provided another run. Corky Schmoyer drew a walk to fill the sacks again and Bill Del Vecchio hit into a force play, another run scoring.

Dick Wilson had the Bears handcuffed on a one hitter until they found him good for three runs in the seventh. In that inning he issued a pair of walks and three singles one of which produced 2 Maine runs.

Once again the Redmen bats were hot and for the second straight day as they found Maine pitching good for 11 hits. Frank Pisiewski continued where he left off the day before collecting a pair of hits. Ted Osetek was a perfect 3 for 3 for the afternoon. Center fielder Nel Harris contributed a double to the Redmen efforts and also had a pair of stolen bases.

Wilson's mound performance was superb. The sophomore lefty went the distance giving up 4 runs on 6 hits. He set down 1 batters via strikeouts and gave up 1 free passes.

Batting Around

By dropping two games to the Redmen, Maine now stands 2 and 4 in Conference ratings and 6-7 for the season.

Three Redmen are currently pacing their teammates with averages above the .400 mark. Second baseman Corky Schmoyer is Coach Lorden's top hitter thus far this season. Schmoyer has been to the plate 29 times and has collected 12 hits for a .414 average. He has scored 4 runs and has knocked in 7. In the extra base hit department Corky has a pair of doubles and a triple. Captain Frank Pisiewski is 14 for 34 and is hitting at a .412 clip. Franks has 3 RBI's and has scored on ten occasions. Catcher Ted Osetek had a good Maine series and upped his average by about 50 points. He has appeared at the plate 25 times and has 10 hits and 6 RBI's for a .400 average.

Two Redmen regulars have been sidelined with injuries and still are not ready to see action. Centerfielder Bob Hughes has missed the last 5 games due to pulled thigh muscles. Catcher Dave Krukonis is suffering from a reoccurence of an old high school football injury. When Krukonis recovers he will find it hard to budge Osetek from the starting lineup.

Tuesday the Redmen go after Yan Con win number four in an away contest at UConn. The probable starting hurler for UMass will be Lew Pia. Pia has appeared in three games for the Redmen this season and has two victories against no losses. In 23 innings he has faced 83 batters, given up 8 runs (4 earned), 17 hits. He has issued only 12 walks and has set down 21 batters on strike outs.

UMass Trackmen Upset By Springfield; Freshmen Win

by ABE SHEINKER '62

Springfield College continues to be the jinx of the UMass track team as the Maroons took Saturday's meet, 70-65, at Alumni Field. A large Open House weekend crowd saw Springfield pull out the victory in the last three events after a close battle all afternoon.

Although the Redmen won nine of the fifteen events, the fine Springfield depth made the difference. UMass was down by two points with the low hurdles, high jump, and javelin remaining. Then the Maroons swept the three places in the low hurdles and took seconds in the high jump and javelin to win the meet.

The afternoon featured many outstanding performances by the Redmen. Loren Flagg won the 100 yard dash and then, giving his all, came from behind in the last few yards with a lunging, falling finish to win the 220.

Dick Ward had a very good day. The big junior won a close contest in the hammer throw, tossing the 16-pound ball and handle 170' 7¾" to 165' 9" for Ken Peterson of Springfield who was second. Wards distance, his best ever, is a new school record, the old mark being set at 164' 10" by Roger Kindred in 1959. Ernie Karshick's 154' 9" distance for third place was his best by seventeen feet, as the first four placers recorded personal highs.

Ward then won the high jump at 6' 3" to tie the field record and took a third in the shotput at over 43 feet.

Bob Brouillet set a UMass record in winning the two mile run at 7:34.7. The old record was 9:39.4 set by "Squeaky" Horn in 1956. His time also lowered the field record. Brouillet took a second place in the mile, with a fast pace bringing Springfield's Merritt into first place with 4:19.7 for another field record.

Other fine UMass marks were recorded by Jim Lumley, who won the pole vault at 12 feet, Charlie Fohlin who won the javelin at 179' 10", and Bud Smith and Charlie Romeo who threw the discus 138 and 137 feet respectively, to place second and third. These discus records are personal bests and are close to one of the oldest school records, 139', set in 1947.

The other UMass winners were Charlie LaPier in the high hurdles and Jim Reilly in the broad jump.

Freshmen Win Again

The UMass frosh trackmen won their second meet of the season downing the Springfield frosh, 79-56.

Three freshmen records were broken by the Redmen who won eleven of the fifteen events. Tom Panke lowered his recently set mile record, winning in 4:31.4. Panke also won the two mile in 10:17.4. Al Richardson broke the frosh shotput record with a 44' 10 2/5" heave, and also took a second in the hammer throw with a best ever 124' 9", and a third in the discus, for a nine point total. Gus Anagnostopulous had the other record, a fine 177' 4" toss in the hammer throw for an easy win.

The freshmen had two more double winners. Dave Sadowsky won the pole vault at twelve feet and was first in the broad jump. Sprinter Bill Forand was victorious in the 100 and 220.

The three other UMass winners were Burt Kline in the high hurdles, Armand Millette in the half mile, and Clarence Hill in the high jump at six feet.

Both track squads travel to Storrs, Conn., Tuesday for the meets with Yankee Conference rival, UConn. Next Saturday they will be home again, with Tufts and Northeastern furnishing the opposition.

Lacrosse Squad Beats Tufts; Edged By Conn. Valley Club

by JEFF DAVIDOW '65, Sports Editor

Redmen sports fans were treated to two excellently played lacrosse games Saturday, when the UMass varsity lacrosse squad played Tufts University in the afternoon and then came back that same evening to battle it out with the Connecticut Valley Lacrosse Club.

The afternoon contest with Tufts was a show of strength for the Redmen as they ran all over the men from Medford, clobbering them 8-2.

The game got off to a slow start with the contest remaining scoreless until fully eight minutes had gone by the boards. It was then that the Redmen exploded and stayed hot for the rest of the game. Bob Glew was the first to break into the scoring column, when he threw one by the Jumbo's goalie, Titus, on a pass from John "Bumps" Bamberry, the star of the Redmen's recent victory over M.I.T.

The Redmen put three more in the Tufts goal during the course of the first period with tallies by Jim Ellingwood, Gordie Wallace, and an unassisted throw-in on the part of Ken Ekberg. The Tufts squad failed to get one tally by goalie Doug Cole and the first period ended with the score standing at UMass four and Tufts zero.

The second quarter was also a scoreless one for the Tufts men but the Redmen were only able to score one goal in this stanza. This came from the stick of Ellingwood making it two goals in as many periods that Jim had scored.

It was in the third period, after the half-time break that the Tufts squad managed to break through the Redmen defenses and score twice. However, the Redmen also chalked up one, again off the stick of Ellingwood, giving Jim a hat-trick for the afternoon.

The fourth period saw the Tufts men relapse into the scorelessness that had plagued them during the first two quarters. The Redmen kept on scoring, however, and put two more in the Tufts cage before the final whistle sounded the end of the contest. The first of the last period's goals came from Bamberry, his first of the afternoon, and the second from Ken Prior, his first of the season.

After polishing off Tufts in the afternoon, the Redmen returned later in the evening to do combat with the Conn. Valley Lacrosse Club. A large crowd of Redmen rooters turned out on a beautiful evening to watch the tired Redmen squad fight neck and neck with their opponent through most of the contest and finally be defeated only by a one goal margin.

JOHN "BUMPS" BAMBERRY

Because of the free-wheeling and exciting type of lacrosse that the UMass club plays there was a large amount of penalties committed on the part of Redmen players in both games, especially in the latter of the contests were the play got noticeably rough.

The Redmen who are now 6-0 will be at home again on Wednesday, May 2, when UMass plays host to Brown in what promises to be the Redmen toughest game to date.

This hand was played in the recent campus bridge tournament. The reason behind its selection is the bidding problems it presented. After North opens the bidding with a diamond, East should not simply make a preemptive single jump overcall, but make a double jump, the reason being that his hand is so lacking in defensive strength that he must bid as high as he can afford to immediately. When South hears East's bid he should not cue-bid the ace of hearts because this means that diamonds is the agreed trump suit. Instead, he should make a jump shift to indicate his strength.

As the second round of bidding begins, both sides are aware of the distinct slam possibilities of this hand. North knows that small slam depends upon whether South holds one or two aces, and grand slam should make if he holds three. He therefore goes into Blackwood Convention. It is now East's turn to bid. From his standpoint, N-S can make a grand slam, and since the maximum he can possibly go down is 7 tricks, he should bid six hearts as this bid when doubled and down seven will cost him 200 points less than the value of the grand slam. South is now in a tough position. I feel that he should go on to grand slam for these reasons. He feels that North has accepted spades as the trump suit since he bid 4NT immediately after the jump shift. In addition, South has three points more than is necessary for a jump shift giving the combined hands a minimum of 35 points. He can also figure that his partner has a better than even chance of having an ace and the king of spades which is about all that is necessary to make the grand slam with adequate trump support. Taking these things into consideration, South responds with his aces (7C = 3 aces) giving North the chance to choose the final contract.

On Friday, April 27, a group of AFROTC Cadets, accompanied by Lt. Col. George Vinsky of the 370th Detachment, AFROTC, flew to Langley (Va.) Air Force Base for a two day base visit.

Cadets left from Westover Field at 7 p.m.. They arrived at Langley and were housed at the visiting officers quarters. On Saturday, the Cadets viewed various movies dealing with the NCO Academy and TAC's Air Strike Forces. For the rest of the day the Cadets toured the Shellbank Area which includes the Base Exchange. The Cadets then saw how Tactical Air Command aircraft are refueled. The rest of the tour included the NASA headquarters which are part of the Mercury Astronaut Program. This area is also part of our satellite program.

The Cadets departed for home at 5 p.m. Saturday afternoon.

Good accommodations for young men, groups at $2.60-$2.75 single, $4.20-$4.40 double — Membership included. Cafeteria, laundry, barber shop, newsstand, laundromat, and tailor in building. Free programs. Tours arranged.

Six Students Will Recite Own Poetry

Two UMass students will join one Smith College and three Amherst College students in reading their original poetry on a program at the Jones Library Tuesday, May 1, at 7:30 p.m.

Public attendance is cordially invited and refreshments will be served.

The UMass students are Charles Dean, graduate student in English, and H. Peter Gezork, a senior majoring in English.

Other readers will be Judith Kroll, Smith sophomoe; Steven Ablon, Amherst College junior, Robert C. Fulton, III, and James A. Guest, Jr., Amherst College seniors.

Dr. Robert G. Tucker of UMass and Prof. Rolfe Humphries of Amherst will introduce the student poets. The program is sponsored by the Amherst Art Center, headed by Mr. Stephan L. Hamilton, and the poetry programs have been directed in the 1961-1962 season by Prof. Joseph Langland of UMass.

Demonstration Will Be Held In Baltimore

The UMass Committee for Social Action, a newly formed group on campus, will participate in a sit-in in Baltimore, Maryland on May 12. The demonstration will involve entering the restaurant in an integrated group and asking for service. If it is refused, the group will remain until it is "read out", i.e., in Baltimore the trespass law cannot be enforced until it is read to the group by a police officer. After the bill is read, the group will be asked to leave again at which point it does so and pickets the restaurant before moving to another one. There have been no involuntary arrests to date; if they do occur the NAACP will provide immediate bail fees and legal aid.

A limited amount of transportation has been found to take any students interested. A car will leave the University Friday evening to take students to Yale. From there, busses will leave on Saturday morning to Baltimore. Sleeping accomodations at Yale will be arranged for Friday and also for Saturday night at no cost to the student. Transportation costs will run approximately $8.00 round-trip. If you are interested in paticipating in the demonstration, please contact either Linda Comras or Linda Muldoon in Mary Lyon Dorm.

risk of more Soviet tests and the consequences this would involve.

About the test ban talks in Geneva he said: "Neither side has advanced a proposal acceptable to the other side. Both are trying to build up an image of themselves to the neutral world. The United States is balking on one point—that there must be inspection on a test ban and on disarmament. The Russians only want a disarmament inspection." He brought up a point made by Professor Leeds of Harvard that it is possible, by observing a country from the outside (even one the size of the Soviet Union), to tell if it has unloaded a bomb.

Concluding, Hughes said that the ideal of international community is a higher loyalty than national unity. The Soviet and American scientists would tell on their respective countries if that country tried anything drastic. Under no circumstances should the U.S. be the first to use nuclear weapons. This country has the alternative of going on with the arms race or going on to save the human race.

Four UMass Professors Will Discuss Conservatism

"Since every person has a stake in politics, it would be well for all of us to clarify our attitude towards conservatism, one of the most pervasive and, it seems to me, dangerous moods of our time." This statement was made by Prof. Arnold J. Silver of the English Department, one of a panel of four University professors who will discuss this "mood" called "conservatism" Thursday evening at 7:30 p.m. in the Middlesex and Nantucket Rooms of the S.U.

The forum, entitled "Conservatism: Pro and Con", will be sponsored by the UMass Young Republican Club. The two major segments of the political spectrum will be represented by the panel—the "liberal" side will be upheld by Prof. Felix E. Oppenheim of the Government Dept. and by Prof. Silver, who will critique the theory and practise of "conservatism" as expounded by Prof. Harold J. Gordon of the History Dept. and Prof. Eugene C. Putala of the Botany Dept.

Prof. Oppenheim, whose specialty is political theory and philosophy, has published extensively and is a contributor to such journals as The American Political Science Review, The Journal of Philosophy, Current History, and The Journal of Politics. Last fall he published a major work, Dimensions of Freedom: an Analysis. Previous to his work at the University, he taught at the University of Delaware, and at Yale, Princeton, and Stanford Universities.

Prof. Silver received his B.A. from New York University, and his M.A. and Ph.D. from Columbia University. This May he will publish an edition of the Samuel Butler letters. Prior to coming to the University, he taught at N.Y.U. and Ohio State.

Prof. Gordon, whose specialty is German history and affairs studied at the University of Richmond, Johns Hopkins University, and Yale. From 1951 to 1955 he was a government employee, working for the Dept. of the Army. From this he went on to the University of Pittsburgh, where he taught from 1955 to 1959. His publications include The Reichswehr and the German Republic 1919-1926, published in 1957, and a contribution to B. H. Liddell-Hart's famous work, The Red Army.

Prof. Putala received his B.S. and M.S from UMass, and has done advanced study at the University of Illinois. He has published in the journals of his field, Botany. For the past two years Prof. Putala has served as faculty advisor to the Young Republicans Club.

The discussion is open to the public: refreshments will be served.

UMass Research Results In Control Of Chick Disease

A live virus vaccine—the first effective means of control for a disease affecting the nervous systems of chicks called epidemic tremor—is now on the market as the result of continuing research by the department of veterinary science at UMass.

A major break-through in poultry disease control, the live virus vaccine was developed by Dr. Bruce W. Calnek and coworkers. Their discovery followed many years of investigation by the Massachusetts Agricultural Experiment Station and other stations in the country. Commercial poultrymen in Massachusetts and other states cooperated in the field testing of the vaccine.

Flying Redmen First In Drill Competition

Drill Commander Cadet Lt. Col. Babaian is lifted victoriously to the shoulders of the Flying Redmen. The team placed first in New England Drill Competition at Westover Air Force Base.

The University's AFROTC drill team, The Flying Redmen, placed first in the tenth annual New England Drill Competition held at Westover Air Force Base last Sunday, April 29.

The day long event got under way at 8:30 a.m. with the Redmen the first competing team in the armed group. The morning was spent in an elimination drill and the top four teams in armed and unarmed divisions competed in the afternoon.

In the morning competitions, the Redmen scored 80.8 out of a possible score of 100, highest in the armed division. Boston University was second with a score of 80.2. Holy Cross and Tufts placed third and fourth, respectively. In the unarmed competitions St. Michaels' took the top position.

According to Cadet Lt. Col. Babaian, "The fact that B.U. came so close to our score was one reason that were able to do better in the afternoon. B.U. was the team to beat."

After the welcoming address by Base Commander Col. Ralph C. Embrey and the program introduction by UMass' Prof. of Air Science Col. John C. Marchant, Cadet Col. Paul J. Cassidy led the competing teams in the drill review. At 2 p.m. the competition got under way, B.U. the first team to compete in the armed division.

The Redmen's final score was 85.7; Boston University was second with 74.2. Holy Cross, Tufts and St. Michaels' finished in their morning positions. Presenting the awards was Col. Timothy Dacey of the 4050 Air Refueling Wing, Westover Field.

Lederle Blasts Public For Governmental Corruption

Corrupt private citizens are to blame for corruption in government, President John Lederle told a Boston College conference on Communications and Government Tuesday.

"Politicians don't bribe each other," he said, "Private citizens do the bribing and deserve some of the stigma."

Lederle blasted the "negative attitude" of citizens who "turn away from corruption and chicanery in government."

"This evasion of responsibility," he said, causes young people to look on politics as a "dirty business".

"It is a paradox that at the same time that government is becoming more pervasive and its services more widespread, with a consequent premium on recruitment of a share of the ablest personnel, there is a corresponding attitude on the part of youth of antagonism toward government employment," he said.

Lederle also criticized private citizens for their failure "to talk back to the government."

Calling for greater increase in dissemination of government information, the UMass president said, "Citizens need more than a ballot box for a chance to criticize, to protest and to object whenever they feel something is wrong in government."

Other speakers included Louis M. Lyons, curator of the Nieman Foundation for Journalism at Harvard; Lincoln White, U.S. State Department press chief; Hyman H. Bookbinder, assistant to Commerce Secretary Luther Hodges and former chief Washington representative for the AFL-CIO; and Robert K. Gray, vice president of Hilland Knowlton C. and secretary to the cabinet under former President Eisenhower.

State House Passes Bill On Education

Without debate Friday the House of Representatives on voice vote passed to be engrossed a bill, sponsored by its Ways and Means committee, to let educators decide what proportion of the state educational dollar will be allocated to the state institutions of higher learning. The measure now goes to the Senate for its readings.

The bill sets up an advisory board of higher educational policy, composed of the state commissioner of education, who would be chairman, the presidents of UMass and Lowell Technological Institute, chairman of the trustees of the Southeastern Massachusetts Technological Institute, director of the division of state colleges, chairman of the board of regional community colleges, and five appointees of the Governor.

The board would review the total higher education program supported by the state and submit by December 1 of each year to the Governor and the Legislature its reommendations for allocations of funds appropriated by the Legislature and approved by the Governor.

Lodge Urges Closer Ties Between U.S. And Europe

George Cabot Lodge addressed students in the Commonwealth Room of the S.U. yesterday. The candidate for the U.S. Senate spoke on the economic aspects of world crisis.

"There is today a heightened realization that—as never before—the interests of government, business, and labor must work closer together than ever before", declared George Cabot Lodge, candidate for the Republican nomination for the United States Senate.

Lodge addressed about 60 persons in the Commonwealth Room of the U.S. in a talk sponsored by the Political Science Association yesterday.

Lodge said that closer cooperation would be necessary to meet the challenge of an "emerging United States of Europe" which will provide economic unity and independence and a bargaining position for European leaders to chose between United States and Soviet trade offers.

Maintain Committments

"We must maintain our commitments. We cannot concede what is held to be unconcedeable", Lodge said.

He then offered three points by which the United States could maintain commitments and at the same time take advantage of the new markets which the European Economic Community will open up.

First, Lodge stated, American salesmanship must take advantage of the "huge, unsaturated market"; secondly, labor and management must recognize "the third chair—the national interest"; thirdly, the United States' educational system must turn out more highly skilled technicians and engineers.

"We rest on rotton laurels," maintained Lodge. We must recognize the need for intensive high quality technical trainign to meet a new form of unemployment caused by automation, he stated.

Lodge warned, "We must set priorities: the richest country in

...And Into The Barrel

Every election of every year, it seems to us, consists of a poster campaign backed up by a popularity contest. And the most recent election, held two days ago, has proved to be the most flagrant example of this fact.

In spite of the extremely explicit, specific rules in the Elections Rules Act of 1961 of the Student Senate, which forbids posting signs on any university property except authorized bulletin boards, and expressly forbids posting matter on trees, this semester's candidates have gone all out to disobey the rules.

Ignorance cannot, we feel, be used as an excuse in this matter Any person interested in campus affairs and procedures to the extent that he is running for an elected position to represent his class, had better not admit, at least in our presence, that he "did not know" that posted matter in these places was forbidden. Certainly he has looked up the Election Rules to run for elective office!

The candidates, then, to our way of seeing things, have been way out of line in refusing to follow the Elections procedure. Perhaps, however, we should concede that they might not be entirely at fault. Perhaps we should take a look into the very heart of the matter, and discover why the election rules are flagrantly disobeyed.

The fact is that there is no way for the Student Senate, which passed this Elections Act, to enforce the rule. The best (and worst) they can do is to "urge that the candidates not use forbidden territory" to blow their horns. This, it can be seen from the start, is not a very effective measure.

The problem, then, lies in the execution of disciplinary measures, perhaps strong disciplinary measures, toward those who refuse to conform to the rules passed by the most important student governing body. Perhaps those whose signs are found in forbidden places should have been, and should be in the future, disqualified from running for their respective offices.

This ruling might also be taken into consideration for those candidates who, having won an election, refuse to take the responsibility of getting their campaigning signs out of the public eye and into the trash barrel. Not only are the posters illegally placed, but they aren't even picked up after elections. We know; we walked over to Bartlett this morning without having our feet touch the sidewalks. Reason—not because we walked across the lawn instead, but because said walk was plastered with campaign posters, which should have been burned Monday night after results of the elections were known. In the dormitories, this isn't too much of a problem — we all notice the mad scramble, made as soon as is feasible, by the inhabitants of the dorms, to tear down all the propaganda which has been such an unsightly part of their lives for a week. This is definitely a poor policy, especially during Open House Weekend, for people running for a responsible position.

It's too bad the student body votes according to the number, color, and wording of posters, but it doesn't exonerate illegally-campaigning candidates.

In conclusion, we want to suggest to those in charge (Attention, Elections Committee of the Student Senate!) that they go about finding a way to enforce these rules, which were passed wisely and should be made effective.

HELP WANTED

YAHOO is pleased to announce the forthcoming graduations of a distinct pseudo-intellectual segment of the campus—namely, most of its staff. While we bow our heads in tribute to these brave few who have for the past few years withstood the unjust persecutions of the Administration, faculty, ROTC Dept., religious fanatics, and the Student Senate, we must turn our thoughts to the future. We therefore issue an invitation to all students to rally 'round the banner of honor and decency which YAHOO has upheld against these dangerous groups for years.

At the present time we are in desperate need of people who can type, write, draw, or pick Yahoo Queens. Even the names of those who have none of these talents but who feel they might be able to come up with an idea or two that our artists and writers can use will be appreciated. There are also openings for anyone willing to do leg work and for thugs to intimidate the Student Senate.

At this time, only two editorial positions have been filled. The literary editor, art editor, and others will probably be chosen from those joining the staff now.

All interested, please leave their names with the Collegian secretary.

PRONOUNCED RENOUNCING

To the Editor:

Farce . . . Farce . . . Farce

The Student Senate elections committee has recently completed a disgraceful exhibition of faulty organization and procedure when it stumbled through the motions of conducting a student government election. This committee has completely neglected its responsibilities as an important part of our campus government, by: 1) placing unauthorized names on the ballots; 2) neglecting to place authorized names on the ballots; 3) failing to open the polls at the final election for the class of '65 without verification of the primary results by the Senate; 4) posting the latest results in view of the polls while the polls were open, which may have had considerable influence on the results by creating a "limited secrecy" ballot. The entire Senate is at fault by allowing the mistakes of the primaries to be repeated and magnified in the finals. The sponsors of this letter hope the Senate will correct the mistakes made and in the future conduct responsible and democratic elections.

INGRATIATED'S GRATITUDE

To the Editor:

We are deeply grateful to you for your kind contribution to the work of World University Service.

Assistance continues to uprooted and homeless students in many parts of the world. In the rapidly developing areas of Asia and Africa a new and expanding interest in Cooperative Projects adds new dimensions to our help for self-help program.

The university students of the world are an increasingly strategic group in the peace and stability of the new nations.

Your generous gift helps to build constructively for the future and today eases the handicaps and sufferings of those students who are less fortunate than ourselves.

THE POSTER AND THE PASSION

To the Editor:

The irresponsibility of our esteemed student leaders is truly unbelievable! This campus, ordinarily beautiful even in rainy spring weather, looks like Coney Island on a Monday morning. Litterbugs! At least a litterbug is careless; our busy politicians lie awake nights deliberately plotting the design and illegal placing of their campaign posters so as to most distract and annoy the constituents they court. It is excusable, I suppose, for Senators to ignore the Senate, for Class Presidents to do less than a minimum for their class, for Class Secretaries to feel they deserve a Bronze Cross when the minutes are done—this, I suppose is excusable. But HOW CAN YOU EXPECT TO HAVE THE STUDENT BODY'S RESPECT when you do everything in your power to make of this campus a mass circular file for the shattered hopes of every aspiring politician on campus?

WITH YA-HOOS AND LIT MAGS FOR ALL WHO WANT THEM

After heated debates last night, the Student Senate decided to accept and pass the budgets of the Literary Magazine and Ya-Hoo.

The opponents of the Ya-Hoo budget argued that the student tax should not support the humor magazine because humor was like religion—each person has his own preference. Therefore, the opponents concluded, the tax of the entire student body should not support humor which appeals to only part (even though it appears to be the greater art) of the student body.

As more than one proponent of the bill argued, the Ya-Hoo provides an outlet for those students who want to write humorous material. There are outlets for those students who are interested in activities ranging from playing chess to Student Government. Why should humor be excluded? Fortunately for the campus, the majority of the Senate saw fit to pass the budget thus insuring the students an outlet to write humor, and some genuine belly-laughs for at least the majority of the students.

The Literary Magazine, proposed one senator, should be cut to two issues instead of the three they now publish. Cooler heads prevailed, however, as the Senate decided to simply decrease the number of copies available to the students from 6000 to 4285 copies. This represents about a 70% reduction to the campus. It seems quite likely, however, that any student who wants a Literary Magazine will still be able to obtain one as there are at least 30% of this issue's Magazine still lying around.

There is a definite need on a college campus to have literary outlets of all types. The majority of the Student Senate agrees.

Long live the Ya-Hoo and the Literary Magazine.

Crisis In College Enrollment Called "A Statistical Illusion"

A Prudential Insurance Co. survey shows there is no shortage of room for qualified students in American colleges. It called the present crisis in college enrollment "a statistical illusion."

The insurance firm said it based its finding on a survey made at its request by college admission experts.

"Somewhere in the nation," the firm said, "there is a college for every qualified high school student with a purpose."

It also reported these findings:

"Of the more than 2,000 colleges in this country, only 100 to 150 are really hard to get into.

"Half of all college applications are sent to fewer than 10 per cent of the colleges.

"There are 25,000 to 30,000 empty seats in good colleges."

Prudential said the survey also indicated: Many students should not have been directed to the overcrowded colleges in the first place. Half of the students entering college never finish and the student transfer rate is high.

Lederle Announces Addition of Deubler, Morin To College of Agriculture Staff

Two new staff appointments in the College of Agriculture have been announced by Pres. John W. Lederle at UMass following recent action by the board of trustees.

Earl E. Deubler, Jr., now an associate professor of biology at Hartwick College, Oneonta, N.Y., has been appointed to a similar rank in the department of forestry and wildlife management, effective September 1.

Dr. Deubler obtained his B.S. at Moravian College, Bethlehem, Penn. in 1950 and his Ph.D. at Cornell University in 1955. He will be engaged in both teaching and research in fisheries biology and management.

From 1950 to 1955 Dr. Deubler served successively at Cornell University as a graduate teaching assistant in zoology, research assistant and associate in oceanography and a graduate research and teaching assistant. He was a fishery research biology with the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, Beaufort, N.C. from 1955-56; and from 1956-61 an assistant professor and associate professor of zoology at the University of North Carolina, Chapel Hill.

Ernest W. Morin, now doing graduate work at Ontario Veterinary College, Guelph, Ont., will join the Experiment Station staff in the department of veterinary science as an instructor on July 1. He will be concerned with research and poultry diseases.

Dr. Morin received B.A. from the University of Montreal and his D.V.M. degree from St. Hyacinthe Veterinary College at Montreal in 1958. He spent two years as an employee of the Canadian Federal Government before starting graduate work in 1960.

Dr. Litsky Named Director of New Microbiology Inst.

Dr. Warren Litsky, Commonwealth professor of microbiology in the Agricultural Experiment Station at UMass, has been appointed director of the new Institute of Agricultural and Industrial Microbiology established here last month.

Establishment of the Institute was due primarily to the national recognition of Dr. Litsky's research in bacteriology and public health.

He is currently conducting research to obtain scientific data to assist in the production of high quality precooked frozen foods through development of standard methods of testing, under a three-year U.S. Public Health Service grant.

One of the younger and more outstanding scientists at UMass, Dr. Litsky is a recipient of the Distinguished Service Award from the U.S. Junior Chamber of Commerce and the Sayer Award in Bacteriology. He is a fellow in Great Britain's Royal Society of Health and the American Public Health Association, and is listed in Who's Who in the East and American Men of Science.

Dr. Litsky received his B.S. from Clark University, his M.S. from UMass and his doctorate from Michigan State University. He is the author of more than 70 scientific articles.

UMass Squeaks By UConn 3-2; Hosts Williams Today At 3

The potent bat of junior right-fielder Bill DelVecchio led the University of Massachusetts baseball team to an important 3-2 Yankee Conference victory over the University of Connecticut yesterday afternoon at Storrs.

DelVecchio slammed a single, double and 375-foot home run over the left centerfield fence to pace the Redmen to their fourth Conference win in five starts. Overall the Redmen now stand 8-1. Connecticut is 2-3-1 in the Conference and 5-4-1 overall.

Righthander Lew Pia went the distance pitching a six-hitter to notch his third win of the season. Pia struck out six and walked only two. However, the Huskies threatened more than once and Pia had to pitch his way out of several jams Connecticut righthander Ed Jones, who lost for the second time this spring to Pia, blanked the Redmen until the fifth. Ken Clark opened the inning with a line single to right field and moved to second on a sacrifice bunt by Tony Williams. After Ted Osetek flied to right, Pia was hit in the ribs by an errant pitch.

Capt. Frank Pisiewski then hit an infield single, and Clark scored when the UConn shortstop threw wildly to second on the play. In the sixth DelVecchio blasted a two-strike pitch far over the left center field fence and the Redmen had a 2-0 lead.

Connecticut finally tied the game in the seventh on four singles. And in the eighth UConn had a runner on third with two outs but failed to score.

DelVecchio opened the ninth by lining a double off the left field fence and moved to third on a passed ball. He scored when Williams lifted a sacrifice fly to left field. Pia finished off UConn in the bottom of the ninth by striking out the final two batters.

It was the first time since 1951 that UMass has whipped Connecticut twice in the same baseball season.

Redmen hitting star
BILL DELVECCHIO

7th Inning Stretch

by BARRY JAYE '65

Every year people ask the same question, "What wrong with the Red Sox?" The answer is that they are stupid. Why doesn't Mike Higgins use the sacrifice more? In the game they lost 7-6 in ten innings to Chicago, the leadoff man for the Sox in the tenth inning got a base hit, yet the second man did not sacrifice him over to second. Why not? Higgins keeps saying that the Red Sox are going to have to play for every run yet he refuses to follow his objectives.

Also, doesn't Mike know when to take a pitcher out? Bill Monbouquette loses games because of his bad temper. Either Monbo's got it or he doesn't, and if he doesn't, get him out of there. Higgins was always too patient.

In the first game of the Chicago doubleheader, Dave Philley was put in to hit for Chuck Shilling. Why? Philley hasn't made a base hit this season and he cannot run as he once used to. Higgins will never build up Shilling's confidence by yanking him. Anyway, Philley popped out. If the Sox are going to win games this year, it will be due to pitching and defense. So far the Bosox are leading the league in fielding.

Carroll Hardy, who is playing pretty well, will live in baseball history forever. The outfielder holds the distinction of being the only player to ever pinch hit for Ted Williams in the major leagues. The incident occured a few years ago when Ted crashed a foul tip off his foot. He was unable to continue his turn at bat and Hardy replaced him.

This year, Early Wynn has tied a major league record for the most years pitched—22. He is now 42 and needs only seven more wins to reach 300 victories.

Everyone knows that Jackie Robinson was the first Negro player in major league baseball, but how many sports experts knew Larry Doby was the first Negro to play in the American League, when he joined the Cleveland Indians in 1947?

Remember Von McDaniel who had a great rookie year as a pitcher for the St. Louis Cardinals a few years ago? Well, Von is now playing 3rd base for the Oklahoma City 89ers in the American Association.

Late Scores

The UMass Varsity and Freshmen Track teams defeated their UConn counterparts by identical scores, 76-58 and 76-58. This is the first time since 1936 that UMass has beaten UConn in outdoor track competition. See Friday's paper for complete story.

Redmen Football Squad To Scrimmage Saturday

by DAVE WILLARD '64

Saturday, May 5 — remember that date! For on this date football coach Vic Fusia and his aids will be able to take a look a look at what they have been building up for months. This will be the first chance to see the "new look" club in action.

Saturday afternoon, at the tentative time of 2:30, the Redmen are going to stage an intrasquad scrimmage. The club will be divided up evenly and will play under game conditions. Coaches Delaney and Gladchuck will handle one team while the other squad will be piloted by coaches Schmidt and Glatz. As of now the coaches haven't been assigned their protégés, and the mystery will remain until Friday nignt when each coach will be allowed a thirty minute practice with his respective squad.

This scrimmage will be the culmination of the fifteen day spring practice period allowed under intercollegiate rules. Coach Fusia, looking back over this period had this to say;

"I am personally satisfied with the progress made. There have been several highlights and surprises."

Upon probing further it was learned what was meant by these "highlights" and "surprises." First of all, the fine showing of sophomore quarterbacks Jerry Whelchel and John Schroeder most certainly has been a pleasant surprise, for perhaps the Redmen's most pressing need is to fill the slot left by the graduating John McCormick. If one or both of these boys could come through, it would make coach Fusia's task a wee bit easier, to say the least. Sophomore guards Pete Pietz and Charley Scialdone have also been impressive.

The highlight of the spring training period, to coach Fusia's mind has been the fine performance of the veterans. This doesn't mean just their football prowess and improvement, but something just as important to the new coach-leadership, hard work, and those certain intangibles that Mr. Fusia looks for and demands in a football player.

This year's club is a predominantly sophomore production, with twenty-seven men from the class of '65, who will be sophomore next fall when the football campaign gets underway. These younger players need someone to look up to, a model to pattern themselves after, on and off the field. Mr. Fusia is greatly impressed by the way the returning men have carried out this role.

JOHN KOZAKA
Ailing lineman is hopeful that he will be ready to play for the Redmen next fall.

Frosh Baseball Club Trounces Springfield

The UMass freshman baseball team kept up their torrid hitting last Saturday afternoon while battering Springfield into submission 14-3.

The boys banged out a total of seventeen hits including four doubles and four triples.

Tom Linnehan pitched seven innings giving up six hits but only one run. He struck out six. George Waller mopped up the last two innings.

The boys, who had their hitting clothes on, were led by several men at the plate. Neary had two doubles and a triple. Wojnar collected three hits while Steve Winslow chipped in with two. Ralph Moore, tall and lean outfielder subbing for Winslow came through with a prodigious triple driving in two runs. All in all twelve different men broke into the hit column.

The Redmen didn't let up in the field either, as they committed but one error. Rod Norris, Caisse and Neary looked especially slick.

The Bergquistmen now sport a 3-0 record with an awesome display of offensive fireworks. They have amassed a total of thirty-seven runs to the opposition's nine. It is with this enviable record that they entertain Williams today.

Esquire's CLUB & CAMPUS FASHIONS

BY O. E. SCHOEFFLER, ESQUIRE'S Fashion Director

A few early heat waves have triggered the rush to find something cool to get into, and your wisest buy is the seersucker suit. As with buying all summer clothes, select it with the thought of also wearing it to work. Seersucker weaves, made by alternating stripes of creped and plain weave, are growing favorites on Campus. Today's seersuckers are new in two ways: blending polyester with cotton has ended that former slept-in look . . . and a handsome new range of colors and patterns is making news beside the traditional pale stripings. Here are some highlights, plus a few other warm-weather wearables—all top choice among university men.

SEERSUCKER SEASON STARTS WITH A SUIT . . . now in bold, bright-color stripes, very wide to pinstripes—also unusual plaids, checks and new patterns. With the crisp, assertive colors and the new shape retention, they're perfect for dress-up as well as casual occasions. Added bonus: the suit jacket doubles as a sport jacket . . . ideal with a pair of dark, solid color slacks.

THE SHIRTS THAT SHOULD always and only be worn with your seersucker suits: solid color oxford or batiste button-downs. And let the shirt pick up a color in the jacket . . . YELLOW, for example—great! Then choose a solid or neat print silk foulard TIE, or a cotton paisley.

ONE STRAW MAKES ALL THE DIFFERENCE—to complete the junior executive look, the finished elegance of the well-chosen HAT IS A MUST. Most popular: soft, flexible RAFFIA STRAW in OLIVE . . . NATURAL COLOR, rough-textured COCOANUT PALM—jaunty telescope crown, not too narrow brim, banded with batik or madras prints . . . or with the 3-pleat, colorful band called a PUGGREE, borrowed from India—originally the light scarf around the pith helmets that used to 'go out in the noonday sun.'

YES, MISTER—CLEAN WHITE BUCKS are far and away the most suitable shoes we've ever seen with seersucker suits.

SEERSUCKER PLAYS ALL SUMMER in sportswear, too . . . mostly shirts and shorts . . . you'll see the characteristic stripings combining white with hot, bright colors, especially olive, blue, black, tiger, tan, red and yellow.

SLACKS—THE LOW RISE IN HIGH FAVOR . . . (preferably not in suits, but only slacks) cut to ride the hipbones rather than the waist —excellent for the lithe, rangy figure.

Guild Presents Workshop

The UMass Operetta Guild presented last night its Workshop semester production, "Scenes From Musical Theatre" at the Schine Inn, Chicopee, Mass., sponsored by the Springfield Alumni Club.

Nearly 200 Alumni members enjoyed The Guild's musical variety show. The program included musical scenes from such shows as "Oklahoma", "Bells are Ringing", "South Pacific", "Carousel", "Porgy and Bess", "Paint Your Wagon", and many other Broadway musicals which the Operetta Guild has produced during its fifteen years on the University campus.

Featured soloists included Arlaine Anderson, Kenneth Goodman, Jeanne Cronje, Jane Abbiati, Janet Fortin, Beth Crosby, and several other members who performed in The Guild tradition.

In the more dramatic vein Edward A. Rodding presented a reading from Diserata. The chorus provided a musical background for Paul A. Cwiklik's reading of the farewell speech from "Abe Lincoln in Illinois" by Robert Sherwood.

The entire musical production was directed by Guild Advisor-Director Doric J. Alviani. Technical staffs were under the supervision of Tim J. Donehy, student technical advisor.

Senate Deals With Dining Commons

Recommends Free Milk

by RUTH KOBS '64

As the outcome of a Services Committee resolution passed by the Student Senate, students next year at the Dining Commons will be allowed to have as much milk as wanted, at no cost.

At the February 14 meeting of the Student Senate, four bills introduced by the Services Committee and concerning the Dining Commons, were passed. These motions were then sent on to Dr. Field, the Faculty Senate, and the Board of Trustees, for consideration.

S 13 asked that milk be obtained at reduced rates for the students eating at the Commons. S 10 asked that Juniors need not eat at the Commons unless they desire to do so.

Dr. Field is meeting with President Lederle to request that Juniors not be exempted. The reasons behind his action are that more seniors are eating off-campus next year, simply because there will be more seniors next year, and the St. Regis Diner will not be opened to accommodate them in the Fall because of the University's acquisition of the property. The Hatch is expected to absorb the 400 more seniors.

In the Fall of 1963, a new Dining Hall in the vicinity of Butterfield Dorm will be available to accommodate approximately 2000 students; it is hoped that one line will be a la carte style. An addition to the S.U., expected to be completed in the fall of 1964, will take care of the increased numbers of off-campus eaters. On the second floor of the addition, there is going to be a banquet hall, similar to the Commonwealth Room, which can be adjusted to accommodate the increase in students each year.

A compromise-proposal under consideration would call for a subcommittee of students to work along with Mr. Martin and Dr. Field to produce a more favorable menu, which would contain more appealing meals for students.

It is strongly urged by the Senate that if students are in favor of this compromise plan or if they do not favor it, they contact one of the senators and express their opinion.

Class Of 1962 Invests Funds For School's Use At Maturity

The Class of '62 has assigned $3000 of the class treasury to an investment in the Mass. Investment Growth Fund, it was announced today by Bernie Murphy, president of the Class of '62. At the twenty-fifth class reunion, the funds will be turned over to the school as part of the class gift.

Ed Hazlett, chairman of the committee to look into the investment fund, reported that there were several bids for the fund, but that B.C. Morton and Co. raised the best offer.

"If you view it from the current economic growth concept," said Murphy, "this fund should be worth approximately $25,000 in 1987 when it is given to the University."

The fund was a precept which was introduced by the Class of '60 and followed by the Class of '61. Both these classes also plan to turn the fund over to the school at their twenty fifth reunions. Already, these investments have increased strikingly over the original amount investment.

The decision to invest the money in this way was made by the Class of '62 executive council. Although it will eventually become a part of the senior class gift, it is not itself the gift. Announcements concerning the class gift will be made later this month by the executive council.

It is the hope of the present senior executive council that this precedent, once set, will be continued by every graduating class from now on. "In this way," commented Bernie Murphy, "the University will be recipient of an award annually, starting in twenty-three years, which will be quite sizable with respect to its original size. We feel this is excellent tradition to sponsor and hope that succeeding classes feel the same way."

Education Implements Democratic Principles

by DIANA D'INDIA '64

"Education is both a great element of power and an enormous source of motivation for the implementation of democratic principles," stated Neil Staebler last Tuesday night in the Commonwealth Room of the S.U.

Uneducated people, he said, tend to think, for example, of taxes and government services as unrelated. "Education supplies the connecting facts between the two, but it also does more: it sets up in educated people a sense of intellectual responsibility for not thinking disjunctively of related facts," Staebler added.

He cited political parties as "great educational agencies" which bring diverse interests together.

Physical power, the interaction of social forces, cultural background, economic power, and interpersonal relations, he said, are sources of power in a democracy.

"Political power," he observed," is the cutting edge of all other kinds of power," Any changes in government must pass through political power, he said.

Among the chief conditions necessary for a democratic society, he cited "a degree of common experience in the population." Common experience enables the people to understand each other, he said.

De Gustibus Non Disputandum

Editors note:

For the past two years Wes Honey has been a co-editor of Ya-Hoo, the campus humor magazine. Although Mr. Honey is not a member of the Collegian staff, the editors of the Collegian are in full agreement with Mr. Honey's editorial, and so it appears below.

We might also add that this editorial will be of interest not only to those connected with any student publication, but also to every student who has ever read Ya-Hoo, the Literary Magazine, or the Collegian—and then sat down to think about what they read. The student publications are yours, students. Here is what they represent and what you can expect of them.

A publication is, in many respects, an individual. Just as the personality of a person is the sum total result of the various past experiences and physiological traits of that person, the personality of a publication is the sum total of its contents, format, and the editorial direction it receives. For a publication to be successful, its personality must be complimentary to the personality of the community in which it is to exist. There has, in the past, been a great deal of personality conflict between the publications and the student body of the University of Massachusetts.

No publication can expect to survive if it refuses to recognize the public which it serves. Only when the public is recognized, and recognized its intellectual mean understood, can a publication hope to be understood and appreciated.

Student editors have a habit of either misunderstanding or misjudging the level of taste of their readers. This is a mistake easily made. As the personality of the publication is the composite of editorial direction and content, the personality of a Student body is the composite of the personalities of many people.

There are, in any body of persons, those whose tastes are finely developed and those with little or no taste. There are those who appreciate Vivaldi and those, whose convictions are as equally strong, who think Elvis Presley to be the epitome of musical perfection. De gustibus non disputandum. There is no arguing with taste.

It is the duty of every Student editor to realize that such divergence of taste exists. This realized, the Student editor can understand the out-cry that follows every stepping-on-of-toes.

There should be this toe stepping because it is the duty of every editor to draw value judgments. The Student editor must realize that there is a difference in the tastes of his readers; but the Student editor cannot be convinced that because there is this wide spectrum of tastes that he must accept as correct every item that falls in this range. While there is no arguing with tastes there is certainly room for argument with the sets of values that underly those tastes. Student editors should never lack the courage to defend what they think to be right and, after serious study and appraisal, to attack what they consider to be wrong.

The drawing of value judgments calls for responsibility. This is not the responsibility of the type wherein one is responsible to a superior, but the much more difficult kind of being responsible to ones' self and to the public. In being responsible to ones' self it is necessary to be honest. To print only what is correct by a set of well throught out values. In being responsible to the public this same basic honesty prevails, and there is the further consideration of service to this public.

Service to the public is impossible when the attempt to render the service is made esoteric. This happens when the editor fails to consider the intellectual mean of the public. Service fails when it it attempted at a basic level. This happens when the editor fails to consider the intellectual mean. Student publications, moreso, perhaps, because of their financial backing, than other types of publications, must pay heed to the wants and needs of their public.

On this Campus, with its three major Student publications, the wants and needs of the students, as they pertain to the Student publications, are quite obvious. The students want, and need, from the Collegian the best news coverage possible; from the Literary Magazine the best student created art and literature possible; from the Ya-Hoo the best humor possible. This is not a simple editorial task—but it is a task that must be undertaken if these publications are to survive.

It would be patently foolish to say that the Campus publications have lived up to this charge—and it is a charge to them—at all times in the past. There have been instances, and flagrant instances, when these wants and needs of the student body were dismissed as inconsequential. In the same vein, it would be as foolish to say that there has never been an attempt, on the past of the Student editors, to live up to this challenge.

Challenge! That is what such a charge is. It is a challenge for the simple reason that as a Student editor all too often an attempt to live up to the charge of answering the wants and needs of the public is excoriated as violently as the disregard of the whole matter.

One manner in which this problem may be attacked is to enlarge the base of the various publications. This is, in many ways, a very difficult method. Difficult because response to calls to the Student body for help, from the various publications, is entirely inadequate. However, just because results of attempts to enlarge the participating body of students in the publications is disheartening is no reason for these same publications to consider themselves as "closed" concerns. The base of the publications may be effectively widened by ascertaining the intellectual mean of the Student body, and then writing, not below it, but at and above it.

Clicque is a bad word, but for the want of a better word it must be applied to the people who run Student publications. Banded together, as they are, by the common desire to accomplish one thing, in this case to publish a magazine or a newspaper, these people have a common denominator. Quite often this common denominator is further intensified by personality similarities which brought these people together in the first place. All too often there is a common message.

The Student publication ceases to function in the manner in which it was intended, when this "in" group begins to use the publication as a private vehicle for the circulation of personal messages. Every Campus publication has suffered from this at one time or another in its history.

These "messages" are, all too often, written to please the rest of the people who run the publication, with no thought to the public which is ultimately responsible for the existance of any particular publication. This public, the Student body cannot be expected to support something that refuses to honor at least a minimum of their demands. The demands of the Student body are not, except in a few isolated and horrifying cases, demands which would compromise the integrity of the Student editor or the Student contributor. The demands are that that which is printed in the various Student publications be intelligable to the educated layman, and, aside from that be artistically meritorious.

So long as Student publications make an honest effort to produce good material, so long as there is an effort to maintain a quality of artistic merit there shall be Student publications. So long as the Student editors realize that it is their position to lead, and lead sensibly, so long as they refuse to submit to rampant esotericism or rudimentary grovelling, in an artistic sense, then there shall be Student publications. The Students should expect that editors will often shatter, or at least attempt to break, their most precious ikons. This is, in effect, part of the charge the Students have given to the editors. But the Students should never expect that they should be disregarded.

WHY THE PEACE WALK?

Yesterday, this campus witnessed a peace walk on the part of students and faculty of the University as well as Amherst. The walkers accompanied a group from the Committee for Non-Violent Action, an organization which espouses unilateral disarmament.

Essentially, the philosophy of the C.N.V.A. differs with other peace groups such as Sane and Tocsin in that it does not accept the multilateral or, in an absolute sense, the unilateral initiative approach to disarmament. The philosophy of the committee is based upon "passive resistance" as outlined by Ghandi and others.

In walking through various campuses on their way to Washington, D.C., the group attempts to elucidate upon the ideological basis of their actions as well as appeal for aid in these endeavors. The University of Massachusetts' campus was seeleted as a stopover because of the growing interest, on the part of students and faculty alike in the Peace Movement.

When questioned as to their beliefs, many walkers from C.N.V.A. exhibited a remarkable grasp of antecedent historical events which they used well in explaining their movement. Specifically, they alluded to "passive resistance" as shown in India under the British and in Norway under the Germans during the Second World War. The integration in the South, it was pointed out, utilized the tactic of "passive resistance."

One is hard-pressed to belittle the significance of the University-Amherst peace walk, for it does not merely represent an isolated instance of peace activity in this area but rather is a manifestation of growing interest of all in the problems of the Cold War and the armaments race.

Whatever one's opinions as to the philosophy behind the walk, it is to be admitted that it was a breath of fresh air to a campus which has been bogged down in petty discussion and apathy. Yet, the atmosphere has changed. The political organizations of this campus have reactivated themselves. Within the last two weeks, the Young Republicans, the Young Democrats, The Young Americans for Freedom, and Synthesis have taken significant steps forward in political discussion and action.

The peace walkers symbolize a key to the elusive doors of open discussion and debate. Only in an atmosphere such as this can one grasp the purpose of the University. Apathy and unconcern are but the handmaids of ignorance.

— LETTERS —

To the Editor:

Last Wednesday evening the Student Senate passed a Budget Act totalling $139,333.25, with a $2.25 increase in the Student Activities Tax. This increase is due mainly to the fact that, while student enrollment for the coming year will increase by less than 7%, the Budget Act called for an increase of over 11%, this causing the S.A. Tax rise. Furthermore, next year being Centennial year, appropriations to various organizations were made accordingly.

In passing a class tax of $1.75 for the first semester and $.75 for the second, (as opposed to last year's class tax of $1.25 per semester), the classes will realize a total of approximately $300 over that of last year.

It is the hope of the Student Senate that the students will take advantage of the benefits offered them by the passage of the 1962-63 Budget Act. While I have only had room to explain some of the significant details of the new Budget Act, I shall be happy to speak to any interested member of the student body in this regard if he or she would leave a note in my box in the Senate Office.

Sincerely,
Bob Brauer
Budget Chairman

Career Cues

"Cure for job boredom: I made my favorite pastime my career!"

Richard Bertram, President
Bertram Yacht Co., Division of Nautec Corp.

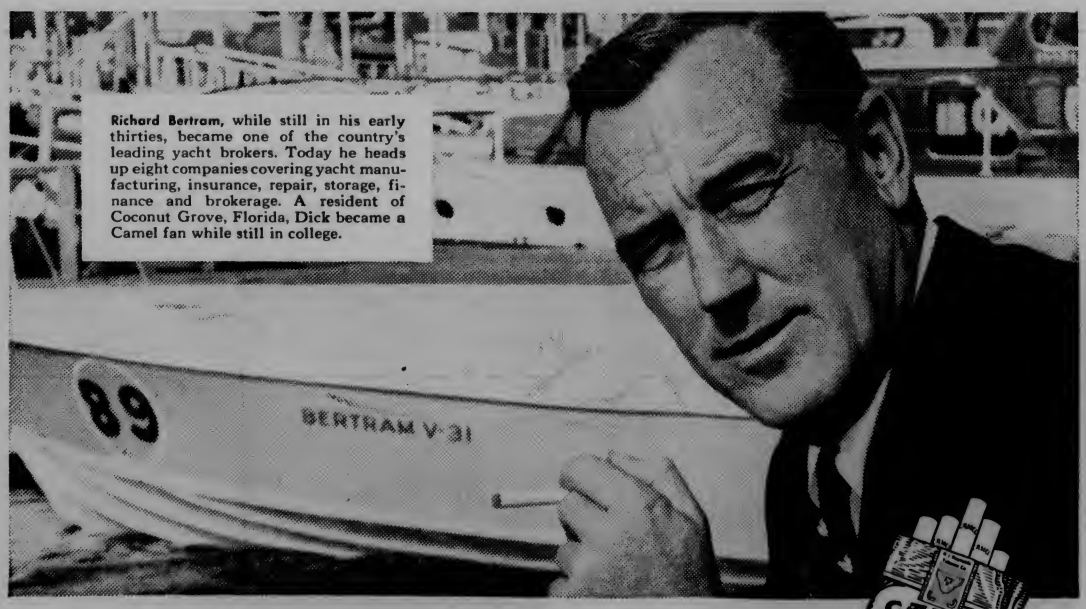
"When you stop to think what percent of our total waking hours is spent bread-winning, you realize how tragic it is for any man to work at an occupation he doesn't enjoy. Besides frittering away life, it reduces chances of success to just about zero. I know . . . because it almost happened to me!

After college, I did what I thought was expected of me and joined a solid, Manhattan-based insurance firm. I soon found office routine wasn't for me. I lived only for lunch hour when I could walk to the Battery and mentally sail with the ships that stood out in the Narrows . . . and for the summer weekends when I could go sailing. Fortunately, the company I worked for is one of the leading insurers of yachts and after two years I was transferred to their Yacht Underwriting Department. Enjoyment and interest in my work improved immediately 100%.

After World War II, I started my own yacht brokerage firm and yacht insurance agency in Miami, combining my marine insurance background with an even closer relationship with boats.

My only problem ever since has been a feeling of guilt that my work was too easy. I love boats and boating people. That affection has paid me rewards way beyond the financial security it has also provided.

The moral's obvious. You have an odds-on chance for success and happiness working at what you enjoy most — what comes naturally! And if it's not just frivolous, your life's work could well be what you now consider just a pastime. It's certainly worth thinking about, anyway!"



Richard Bertram, while still in his early thirties, became one of the country's leading yacht brokers. Today he heads up eight companies covering yacht manufacturing, insurance, repair, storage, finance and brokerage. A resident of Coconut Grove, Florida, Dick became a Camel fan while still in college.

Snakebeaters Win Over Brown In Fiery Contest

by JEFF DAVIDOW '65, Sports Editor

A well balanced attack and a good defense brought the UMass varsity lacrosse team its seventh win of the season, bringing the Redmen record to 7-0.

The match which saw a lot of the physical contact that typifies lacrosse throughout the first three periods nearly exploded in to a slugfest in the fourth period when the Brown team started to foul like referee's whistles were going out of style. The men from Providence disputed every one of the refs calls and at one point when a penalty was called against a Brown attackman, Fuller, for hitting Redmen goalie Dougie Cole on the hand and knocking off his helmet. Fuller whipped around and took a shot at the ref.

The Brown team started off the afternoon's proceedings by putting two in the Redmen cage early in the first period. UMass came back strong and before the quarter ended, tied up the score two all, on goals by John "Bumps" Bamberry and Steve Harrington.

The Redmen drew first blood in the second stanza when Bob Glew with the assistance of Gordie Wallace put one by the Brown goalie. Brown soon struck back with another goal but the home team tallied once more before the end of the quarter on an unassisted goal by Jim Ellingwood.

It was in the third period that the Redmen opened the throttle all he way and outscored their opponents three to one. The UMass goal-getters in this period were Ellingwood and Bamberry, the second tally for each of them, and Goalie Wallace. In the aforementioned rough fourth period, the Redmen's Ken Ekberg provided his team with two tallies, while the Brownmen only were able to manage one more. The final score; UMass 9—Brown 5.

The Snakebeaters travel to Worcester Polytech tomorrow.

Trackmen Overcome Jinx; Down UConn

by ABE SHEINKER '62

Sophomore Bob Brouillet won the mile and two mile to lead the UMass track team to victory over UConn at Storrs on Tuesday. On a cold overcast day, the Redmen rolled up a 76-59 score to end a 19-meet domination by the Huskies. UMass had not won the outdoor meet since 1936, although the Redmen usually have won the indoor meet.

Brouillet won the two mile in 9:49.2, good time for the weather conditions. Teammate Dick Blomstrom adapted well to the cold also, as he took second in the race at 9:58, one of his best times.

In the mile, Brouillet nearly finished in a dead heat with Ken O'Brien, formerly a 440-880 man. Both were clocking 4:29.4.

The star of the meet turned out to be Connecticut's Mel Parsons, who scored 20½ points. He won the 100, 220, high hurdles, and low hurdles, and tied for third in the high jump. His four wins in the sprints and hurdles are quite an achievement, since this requires sprinting a total of 660 yards.

The Redmen came through well to win the meet which was closer than the score indicated. On the track, Ron Young won the 440 with Jack Harrington second. In the field events, Dick Ward and Charlie LaPier tied for first in the high jump with six-footers. Ward also took the hammer at 155' 3" and placed third in the shotput. LaPier totaled nine points, with a second in the high hurdles and a third in the lows.

Jim Lumley tied for first in the pole vault with a consistent 12 foot effort. They only sweep in the meet was recorded by Redmen Charlie Fohlin, Mike Dineen, and Hank Kelsey in the javelin with big Charlies toss measuring 172'7". Bud Smith and Charlie Romeo sewed up the victory for UMass with a one-two finish in the discus, the final event.

Frosh Score Identical

By coincidence, the UMass Freshmen defeated UConn's frosh trackmen by the same score, 76-59. The freshmen now have a 3-0 record outdoors.

Sprinter Bill Forand was the only double winner for UMass, in the 200 yard dash and the broad jump. He was also second in the 100. Tom Panke ran a consistent 4:32.8 to win the mile and was second in the two mile. The other eight point was Al Richardson with a first in shotput and a second in the hammer.

The other five UMass winners

Girl Watcher's Guide

Presented by Pall Mall Famous Cigarettes

The mover is more of a girl scout than a girl watcher.

LESSON 12- Watching at a beach or pool

When watching at the beach or pool it is not necessary to keep moving. In fact, it is unwise to move at all, unless the watcher actually enjoys swimming. In such cases he should swim.

At the beach it is better to stay in one place, because the mover is more of a girl scout than a girl watcher (see above). He is somewhat like the man who goes to the theater to see girls. The girl watcher goes to a musical and happens to notice the beautiful girls. The scout goes to see the girls and, sometimes, happens to notice the musical. (Whether you're a watcher or a scout, you'll find Pall Mall makes a most pleasant companion.)

Compare all three! Smoke "traveled" through fine tobacco tastes best. See the difference! With Pall Mall, you get that famous length of the finest tobaccos money can buy. Pall Mall's famous length travels and gentles the smoke naturally . . . over, under, around and through Pall Mall's fine, mellow tobaccos. Makes it mild . . . but does not filter out that satisfying flavor!

Pall Mall's natural mildness is so good to your taste!

So smooth, so satisfying, so downright smokeable!

Redmen Rally In Ninth And Tenth To Edge Williams, 2-1

by STEVE HEWEY '63

The fine clutch hitting of Tony Williams, Bill DelVecchio and Frank Pisiewski combined with the stout relief work of junior Rod Corey enabled the University of Massachusetts baseball team to score a come-from-behind 2-1 win over visiting Williams College in a game played here yesterday afternoon.

The Redmen had tailed since the opening inning, 1-0, and although they threatened on several occasions to crack the game open, they had to wait until the bottom of the ninth before Pisiewski singled home Tony Williams with the tying marker. Tony had reached on a single to left field earlier in the inning. The Redmen could not push across the winning run however and the game went into extra innings.

It was the tenth inning that gave the Redmen the margin of victory. Bill DelVecchio led off with an infield hit. John Awdychi sacrificed to second on a bunt. Kenny Clark stepped in and lofted a fly ball into left, DelVecchio tagged up and moved to third. Then came Tony Williams who drilled one to the Williams shortstop. His one hop throw was not in time, however, and DelVecchio raced across the plate with the winning tally.

It was a tough game to lose for the Ephmen pitcher, Bruce Grinnell. Bruce went the whole route for Williams and held the Redmen at bay until the ninth and tenth. He struck out four batters, walked three, and was touched for eight hits. He also hit two batters.

Carl Elmsrom started on the mound for UMass before being relieved in the 8th. Carl set down five men with strikeouts, gave up five free passes and four basehits. Rod Corey, finishing up for the Redmen, pitched three innings. He allowed no runs, one hit, and fanned two. The only other batter to reach base against him was Steve Hyde who was hit in the leg by a pitched ball. Corey was the winner; the victory his first of the season. Grinnell, the loser, now stands at 0-2 for the season. The victory over Williams puts the Redmen slate at eight wins and one loss.

Pinch hitter DAVE KRUKANIS takes a hefty swing at the ball.

On Saturday afternoon the Lorden-coached UMass squad hits the Yankee Conference circuit when it travels to UNH. The Redmen will be going for win number five in YanCon competition. Their only loss was to Rhode Island by a score of 5-4.

This year's squad has shown it can play well under pressure as it has pulled several games out this year by one run. Mike Higgins must be jealous.

Frosh Baseball Club Beats Williams For Fourth Win

Yesterday afternoon the UMass freshmen baseball team kept right on roaring down their one way track, trampling Williams 9-2. Once again they showed the opposition they don't know how to lose.

Although scoring nine runs they collected only eight hits, which proved to be more than enough for our opportunities. George Waller went all the way on the hill for the Redmen, striking out nine and walking five over his nine inning performance.

Jim Neary did more than his share at the plate, pounding out two hits and driving across two runs. Pinch hitter Karl Kamena connected for the only extra base hit in the seventh with a three-bagger.

With their fourth win in as many games under their belts, the frosh will play their next home game Tuesday when they host Holy Cross.

Spring Practice To End With Scrimmage Saturday At 2:30

by DAVE WILLARD '64

The time, 2:30 Saturday afternoon; the place, Lacrosse Field down behind the Cage. With this information under your belts, you are now equipped to attend the long-awaited football scrimmage the Redmen are going to stage.

It will pit the Red team against the White. The Reds will be guided by coaches Schmitt, Gladchuck and assisted by Matt Collins. While the Whites will have at the helm coaches Delaney, Glatz and assistant John Kozaka.

The feature of the day is that it is Dad's Day. There will be a luncheon at noon for the players and their fathers. A very thoughtful gesture by Mr. Fusia and his staff.

The game will be played under game conditions with four officials. The opening kickoff will be eliminated. Both sides will use basic attacks and defenses, with Coach Fusia allowing each coach to spring one offensive and one defensive gimmick.

The coaches have done their share in molding this sophomore studded combine. They have experimented with two practice sessions every afternoon instead of the traditional long one. One group would meet from four to five and the other from five to six. The reasoning behind this was two-fold. It kept the boys away from their books for shorter periods of time and it allowed the younger men to receive more personal attention from their coaches. This method, just one of the new innovations Mr. Fusia instituted here, has proven invaluable.

Although there are only nine seniors on the club, Mr. Fusia is confident that they can form enough of a nucleus to field a representative team this Fall. The coach hopes to have eleven lettermen participating in Saturday's scrimmage. Two senior lettermen, John Kozaka and Matt Collins have been unable to practice so far due to injuries, but Mr. Fusia is keeping his fingers crossed that they will be ready by Fall. Loren Flagg, another letterman, will not be playing Saturday as he has been excused to run in the track meet, but he figures prominently in the team's future plans.

Don't forget, you have a date tomorrow at 2:30, and let's see everyone out there. This is the least we can do for such a dedicated coach and staff who, together with their perservering players are striving to bring us a championship.

Attention, sports fans!

The trans-Atlantic pancake-rolling title has gone back to England. The girls of Liberal, Kansas, made a good run of it in the annual Shrove Tuesday competition, but their best time was nine and one-half seconds slower than the record of their opponents in Olney, England.

The winner of the Liberal end of the race was Mrs. Vicki Campbell, office secretary and mother of two. Her time was one minute, 14 and seven-tenths seconds. The winning time, by 20-year-old Carole Vorley or Olney, was one minute five and two-tenths seconds.

Miss Vorley's victory gave the English town a seven to six edge in the series that began in 1950.

Peace Walkers Visit UM, Amherst Rallies

by JIM LANE '63

Peace walkers, under the sponsorship of the New England Committee For Non-Violent Action, took part in a rally here last Thursday in the Commonwealth Room of the S.U. as part of the nation-wide Turn Toward Peace Movement.

One of three groups taking part in a "Trident Walk", they left Hanover, New Hampshire on Easter Weekend and will arrive at Washington D.C. on June 22.

Other branches of the Walk are heading toward Washington from Nashville, Tennessee and Chicago, Illinois. At Washington they will participate in a non-violent demonstration to present their views.

The group arrived at Amherst where they were met by a group from UMass and the Amherst vicinity who shared their views. Together, they marched to the UMass campus for the rally.

Mike Palter, president of Synthesis, who handled local arrangements, introduced the speakers, who then outlined their goals and purposes.

Penny Young, from Lombard, Illinois, with an extensive background in CORE and CNVA, stated the purpose of the movement as twofold. The first is nonviolent action and the second calls for a program of unilateral disarmament. This, she claimed, is the only moral solution. She explained that she felt that initiating such action would inspire like action on the part of the Soviet Union, adding that even if the Russians did not follow this course, the U.S. should disarm completely.

Peter Giffen, coordinator of the Walk, outlined the program of the "Trident Walk" as concerning total unilateral disarmament in order to eliminate the balance of tension which modern nuclear armaments cause at present. He stated that all can participate in a Turn Toward Peace through non-violent action by combating what he terms "unjust laws." These include taxation for use in defense as well as compulsory military service.

Thursday evening at Amherst College, the rally was followed by talks concerning the Walk. David McReynolds of TTP and Huw Williams of the "Trident Walk" were speakers.

The CNVA also sponsored the San Francisco-to-Moscow Walk for Peace last year.

Mortar Board To Sponsor Program On Grad Study

"Graduate Study: Parnassus in the Market Place" will be discussed by educator Bruce Dearing at the evening session of a day-long program of meetings scheduled at UMass for students interested in graduate work.

Dr. Dearing, Dean of Arts and Sciences at the University of Delaware, will speak on Tuesday, May 8, at 8 p.m. in the S.U. ballroom at UMass. The talk is open to all interested persons.

The special program, entitled "The Who and How of Graduate Study," is sponsored by Mortar Board, senior women's honor society at the University. Purpose of the sessions is to interest qualified students in graduate work, to discuss how to get accepted to graduate schools and to confront problems of financing advanced study.

The day's events will begin with a breakfast meeting for women honor students. Mr. Ethel Beall, Coordinator, Continuing Education Program for Women at Northeastern University, will talk on "A New Type of Education."

Four graduate students from different fields of study will speak on "Who Can Afford Graduate Study" as part of a panel discussion open to the public. This session will begin at 11 a.m.

Burns To Be Main Speaker At Honors Convo Thursday

James MacGregor Burns, author and professor of political science at Williams College, will be the main speaker at the UMass Honors Day Convocation to be held on Thursday, May 10. Prof. Burns will speak on "Beyond the Educated Vision."

Considered the institution's most important event before graduation, the Convocation recognizes all students who have achieved outstanding scholastic records and who have earned membership in academic honor societies.

University President John W. Lederle said that parents of students, alumni, and all other interested persons are invited to attend the event.

Honors Day activities will begin with an academic procession at 10:55 a.m. Convocation exercises will begin at 11 a.m. in the S.U. ballroom.

A graduate of Williams College, Dr. Burns received his Ph.D. from Harvard University. He is the author of "Congress on Trial," "Roosevelt: The Lion and the Fox," and "John Kennedy: A Political Profile." Prof. Burns is also co-author of a widely used textbook, "Government by the People," and is a frequent contributor to national magazines.

Defeated in his bid for a Congressional seat in the 1958 elections, Prof. Burns has been a delegate to the last three Democratic national conventions.

Dr. Burns is a trustee of the Stockbridge School, Stockbridge, Mass., chairman of the Berkshire County Council against Discrimination, a member of the Board of Advisors, Berkshire Community College in Pittsfield, and a former president of the New England Political Science Association.

Prof. Fukuda To Give Talk On Poetry

Professor Rikutaro Fukuda of the Tokyo University of Education will present a lecture entitled "A Japanese View of Modern American Poetry". The lecture, sponsored by the UMass Lecture Committee, will be given tonight at 8 p.m. in Bartlett Auditorium.

Professor Fukuda has published numerous translations of British and American authors, including Allen Tate, Karl Shapiro, John Steinbeck, and Ernest Hemingway. He is the author of a book of literary essays, European Landscapes; a volume of poems; and is co-editor of an anthology of modern Japanese poetry. This year he is visiting professor of English at Syracuse University.

The lecture is open to the public and everyone is urged to attend.

Staebler Delivers Fourth, Final Talk Wednesday In SU

Neil Staebler, Ford Foundation Distinguished Professor of Public Affairs and candidate for Congressman-at-large in Michigan in the November elections, will deliver the fourth and last in his series of talks on The Dynamics of Democracy on Wednesday, May 9, at 4 p.m. in the S.U. The subject of his lecture will be "Democracy and the Prospects for Survival."

Staebler is a Visiting Professor under the Ford Foundation sponsored program on public affairs and practical politics. As such, he is teaching a course at the University this semester in the Government Department curricula.

Staebler is recognized throughout the country as one of the Democratic Party's leading authorities on political party organization.

Currently a member of the Democratic National Committee, since 1955 he has served as chairman of the Democratic National Advisory Committee on Political Organization.

Professors Debate Pros, Cons Of Conservatism

by MARY ROCHE '64

The cardinal principal of conservatism, according to Prof. Eugene Putala, is the truth it places in tradition and the suspicion with which it views human reason. This statement was made last Thursday evening at a forum Conservatism: Pro and Con presented by the Young Republican's Club at 7:30 p.m. in the Middlesex and Nantucket Room of the S.U.

Speaking directly after Putala, for the liberal viewpoint, Prof. Silver stated that todays conservatives are yesterdays liberals in program if not in spirit.

The conservative, Silver said, tends to use the scapegoat theory of history, at one time pointing to the country's leaders, at another big labor or big government. He suggested that what the country needs is new ideas, not a retreat to the old ones vigorously.

Prof. Gordon speaking for the conservative side gave an outline of conservatism in all traditions not just the Western one, conservatism in a broad context. The conservative, said Gordon, desires to conserve systems and traditions of the past in the present and future, always relative to the past cultural patterns of that tradition. The Stalinists are the Russian conservatives.

Prof. Gordon stated that there were many kinds of conservatives reactionaries, ultra-conservatives, conservatives, and moderate conservatives.

Prof. Oppenheim, the closing speaker and a liberal, discussed American conservatism and American Foreign Policy. Oppenheim opened with two major premises that conservatives are after goals that are Utopian and that the methods used can't get to these goals both because the goals are Utopian and because they have consequences which are disastrous.

The conservative goal in foreign policy is not simply to keep the status quo, said Oppenheim, but to turn the clock back to the time when the United States could live by itself, when its security wasn't threatened, back to thirty years ago.

Conservatives now insist that we must beat the Communists—that as Barry Goldwater puts it; "We must not be afraid to use force where is called for." Oppenheim pointed out that at present the risk of defeat in war is just as great as victory. Can you beat the Communists by peace he asked? No, the peoples under communism are not waiting for liberation. America has no choice but to co-exist peacefully.

Two Kinds Of Research

This is the age of specialization. Our educational system is oriented in this direction. By the time a student reaches college and is forced to brand himself with a major, the importance of the concept of specialization has been driven home to the point where he would almost testify to its merits out of religious-like faith.

One of the best reasons we are given for specialization is that the wealth of knowledge amassed by the sundry disciplines of mankind has reached such prodigious proportions that one man can only hope to command a modicum of the ever growing total. Indeed, we are reminded that one man, such as a nuclear physicist or a brain surgeon, can't even hope to keep up with all of the advancements in his own limited field because of the speed with which new discoveries are made. There remains, then, the talk of making some sense out of the wealth of information which is "published."

Now just what is research? Webster defines it as "studious inquiry; usually critical and exhaustive investigation or experimentation having for its aim the revision of accepted conclusions in the light of newly discovered facts." This definition includes the process of reading and organizing the latest offerings in a field for presentation to the world at large in one form or another so that accepted conclusions can be revised in the minds of the lay and professionals, and so that students in universities don't have to "unlearn" a mass of outdated datum once they matriculate into their respective vocations.

This presentation of organized material may be made in the student's thesis, the professional article or book, or in the lecture hall of a university. Let us examine the value of the last of these three products of research.

A really good compilative lecture is often published This should not, however, be used as an argument to prove that all good compilative lecture series should be or are published, just as the fact that good instructors often leave the University of Massachusetts for greener pastures is not a valid argument to prove that all good instructors should or do leave the University. It simply shows the importance and ability of such lectures, in the eyes of some for "disseminating knowledge."

Men engaged in this type of investigation often uncover information which is extremely useful to their experimentalist colleagues. This is done in addition to placing before the student a broad range of ideas within a general field and hopefully tying this field in with other disciplines, thereby giving continuity to the whole educational experience.

The good compilative lecturer puts more effort into the preparation of a lecture so that he can get more material into it and more ideas across through it. A good lecturer is, after all, as much of a theatrical production as any mode of good communication. It is this type of lecturer who often provides the inspiration for a career choice through the use of a presentation which shows the overall significance of the burning question in a particular field, which the experimentalist (who's job it is to keep this kind of interest up once implanted) finds it more difficult to supply because of his specialized view of things.

Further, just because this is a large university we should not lose track of the value of close student-professor relationships. The mark left on a student by a few close relationships with professors is one of the most important things he can get from college. The type of lecturer described above has time for more of these relationships.

Whether or not the contributions cited above are more valuable than those made by the experimentalist, and whether or not it is more valuable for thousands to read a book by a man or to be exposed to him in class, in the course of his career, are both irrational questions. The two things obviously compliment each other, and neither could survive unless the output of the other was provided.

We must realistieally accept the fact that this University can not attract, in large numbers, the few geniuses who can perform both functions at the same time, excellently. There is room, then, for the individual who can excellently supply one or the other of these functions. M.C. '64

"...LET GEORGE DO IT"

"Tout nation a le gouvernement qu'elle mérite," observed Joseph DeMaistre over one hundred years ago. Every country has the government it deserves. If there is any truth to this epigram, and there no doubt is, that truth applies equally as well to the Campus as it does to the Community of Nations. And, on the Campus, this truth goes beyond application to government only. On the Campus this truth applies to every Student supported organization.

Every Student body has the organizations it deserves! The student senators are directly responsible for the functioning of the Student Senate. The Student editors are responsible for the functioning of the Student publications. The Student leaders are responsible for the operation of their respective organizations; and, in the end, all are responsible to the Student body. But what are the responsibilities of the Students?

The Students should expect service from the organizations they support. Since it is the Students that pay the cost of the various organizations this is only logical. But monetary support is not the sole responsibility the Student have towards their organizations.

The University of Massachusetts, the same as any other institution of higher learning, is an institution predicated upon ideas. Ideas are the stock-in-trade of the University. Ideas are also the stock-in-trade of the Student organizations on Campus. Money can, and does, provide the Senate with many of its duties; money does provide the Collegian, the Literary Magazine, and the Ya-Hoo with the wherewithhall to publish ideas. But money does not manufacture ideas.

A large part of the Student body has, for too long now, acted as though the Student organizations on the Campus were in some way akin to the legendary Phoenix. Many Students have acted as 'though the various organizations were self-perpetuating, rising anew, each year, from the ashes of themselves. An attitude of, "Let George do it," has affected the Students' concern with the Campus organizations.

The Students' concern with the finished product, combined with the general unconcern with the manner in which this finished product was produced has led to some very undesirable results. Usually the people responsible for the running of the various Student organizations are the people best qualified for that job. However, these people, like any people, have ideas, prejudices, biases, and personal values. 'Though continuity and non-interference leads, in the end, to professional competence in many cases, it can also lead to staleness. Out-worn, over-used, ,and anachronistic ideas are, at best platitudinous, at worst, dangerous. And unless someone is willing to participate and donate a fresh set of ideas, a new slant, how is one to know when his ideas are out moded or unacceptable?

Student body participation has, in the past, been mainly limited to criticism. It is usually on this fact, and upon the further corollary that Student criticism is almost always ignored that many Students rationalize their refusal to activity participate in many Student organizations.

It is an undeniable fact that the major part of the Students' criticisms are ignored by the leaders of the various Student organizations. There is a very good reason for this.

Senators, Class presidents, editors, and committee chairmen, like any other people, are usually willing to be told where they have failed if they are also told of a possible way of avoiding further failure. In very few instances, on this Campus, has this been the method of criticism. Most criticism has been purely negative. A constant diet of negative criticism has never led to improvement. It has led to hard feelings and ill-will.

In the past the Senate has been accused of being no more than a rubber stamp for South College; the Collegian has been reported as being anti-fraternity; the YaHoo has been accused of sacreligion; the Literary Magazine has been charged with being a collection of esoteric and lascivious nonsense. Whether, or not, there is any validity to these charges is, to a great degree, a moot point. But whether, or not, the critics of these organizations have ever stood for office, written a news article, drawn a cartoon, or attempted a poem is not a moot point. Nor is it to be lightly passed over that the fact remains that many of these critics have never so much as voted in a Student election, informed the Collegian of the planning of a newsworthy function, made a concrete suggestion as to how the Ya-Hoo could improve, or tried to understand what the writer in the Literary Magazine was trying to say.

This non-participation is not intellectual apathy. Students at the University of Massachusetts are as idea concious as any group of students. There are enough "bents", scholastic honor keys, and names on the honors lists to prove that. There is enough animated discussion in the houses, dormitories, and the "Hatch" to smother the bug-a-boo of intellectual aparty. The Students are not apathetic, they are selfish and lazy.

It is one thing to have an idea. It is quite another to use it. It is one thing to berate what in wrong. It is quite another to try to right that wrong. When the Students of the University of Massachusetts see fit to devote some constructive thought, and some constructive action, to the organizations which serve them, then they will be supplying themselves with the excellence they demand. When the Students are willing to share, and to use, their ideas with these organizations, then they will be supplying themselves with the excellence they demand. Someone must help George to do it.

WHAT MAKES HUMANS TICK?

A scientist from the University of Texas has come up with a new theory about the cause of alcoholism. Dr. Roger J. Williams, who has been experimenting with chicks and rats, believes that some people who drink may become alcoholics because their body chemistry is abnormal.

Hundreds of theories have been put forth about the cause of alcoholism. Psychiatrists and psychologists usually describe alcoholism in terms of the patient's basic emotional make-up. Chemists and biologists, on the other hand, often try to relate alcoholism only to cellular needs or addictive patterns.

Increasingly, however, scientists are realizing that alcoholism like other human problems, is complex and may have many causes. Unlike many of his predecessors, Dr. Williams is not trying to attribute all alcoholism to abnormal body chemistry. He simply suggests that chemistry may be a factor.

It used to be that a psychiatrist needed medical training only in order to insude that he would not overlook physical ailments, such as brain tumors. More and more, however, the psychiatrist's speciality—the study of human behavior—is becoming involved with chemistry and biology.

Great forward strides have been made in mental hospitals by introducing drugs which affect body chemistry and change human behavior. As scholars such as Dr. Williams examine man, they are finding that he is a compound of great complexity—understandabzle only when viewed by all branches of science and the humanities. The single theory of the single specialty no longer is enough.

UM Students Attend UConn Conference

The New England Conference of the Women Student Government Association was held May 4, 5, 6 at the University of Connecticut with "Transition vs. Tradition" as the theme.

Discussion groups, a formal business meeting and a panel of Deans and Students considered the future of student government structure, procedure and scope. The relationship of student government to the administration was discussed jointly by the Deans and students.

Dr. Lillian Gilbreth was the guest speaker at a banquet to terminate the conference. Dr. Gilbreth, a noted industrial management engineer received an honorary degree at UMass in 1960.

Attending the conference were the six New England Universities, Bates, Colby and Middlebury. Delegates from UMass were Barbara Viera, new Chief Justice of Women's Judiciary, Anne Griffin, Chairman of Women's Affairs, Delly Mathews, and Judy Addelson, senators. Barbara led a discussion entitled "'Cheating, Plagirism and Student Government" and Anne was a member of the panel of the Deans and students.

Shea And McCarthy Win UMass Bridge Tourney

The first annual UMass Bridge Tournament was held Saturday, April 14, in the afternoon. This event was sponsored by the S.U. and promoted by Frank Higginbotham, James Fitzgerald and Barbara Dubis.

There were twenty-two pairs, or eleven tables even. They were playing for two trophies. First for individual trophies, that is the pair sitting North-South with the highest match-point score and the pair sitting East-West, all four will receive individual appropriate trophies. And, secondly, each pair was permitted to designate a university unit such as a class, a house, a fraternity, a sorority or a club. This was not a prerequisite but most pairs did designate. There can be only one winner in this category. Therefore, it is the unit designated by the pair with the greatest number of match-points of all the pairs designating. There can be a non-designating pair winning a greater number of points (in this game there wasn't).

With eleven tables playing, top is 10 match points. Thirty-three boards were played so the mean or average total score is 165.

The following are the top five with their scores:—

NORTH-SOUTH

1) John A. Shea Jr., and Edwin F. McCarthy 197½
2) Archie Strong and Douglas MacIsaac 191
3) William Hailer and Robert Fletcher 185½
4) Arthur V. Horvitz and Robert Temkin 182
5) Earl Waterman and William Niemi 179½

EAST-WEST

1) Bireshwari P. N. Signh and Al Isreal 188½
2) E. John Saltman and Peter Paskowski 179
3) Ronald Harvey and L. Richard Littlefield 178
4) Jonathan Tuttle and Joseph MacGrath 170½
5) Robert Schwartz and Peter O'Sullivan 167

Obviously therefore Shea and McCarthy are not only the N-S winners but their designate — GREENOUGH DORM — is the unit winner. Singh and Israel are the individual winners E-W and they are to be particularly congratulated since they are not a practiced partnership but played together for this match only.

Frosh Baseball Team Falls To Trinity 10-8 On Errors

Saturday afternoon the freshman baseball team trekked to Connecticut to play Trinity, only to go down to their first defeat of the season, 10-8.

The club continued their hitting spree as they collected twelve to the opposition's nine, but the Redmen defeated themselves by committing eight errors, accounting for seven unearned Trinity runs.

Tom Linneham pitched the first six innings before Jim Ritchie took over in the seventh. Both teams tried to give the ball game away with their porous defenses but Trinity committed only five errors and thus allowed the Redmen to hand them the game.

Looking at the brighter offensive department Rod Norris and Steve Wojnar each collected three hits while Jim Neary followed close behind with two.

Catcher Karl Kamens had a single and double in two times up by the fifth inning, but his luck ran out however in the same inning as he dislocated his thumb in a play at the plate and had to be replaced by John Farley.

The boys hope to get back on the winning trail tomorrow when they host their not too distant neighbors Holy Cross in a three o'clock game.

Massachusetts Edges UNH; Now Has 5-1 YanCon Record

by STEVE HEWEY '63

The University of Massachusetts' Redmen continued their winning ways Saturday afternoon by edging UNH, 2-1, in a Yankee Conference game played at Durham. Southpaw Dick Wilson went all the way for Massachusetts, notching his third victory of the season in four starts. The win over the Wildcats puts the UM record at 10 wins and one loss.

The Redmen were the first to score in the game. In the third inning after UNH hurler Paul LeDuc had set down the first two men to face him, Frank Pisiewski drew a base on balls. LeDuc tried to pick Frank off first base but his throw ended up in right field. Pisiewski hustled on down to second base on the play. A passed ball enabled Pisiewski to reach third and he scored on Bob Hughes' pop single to right field.

UNH knotted the score one inning later when a single by Bill Flint scored Tom Gramatikas who had reached base earlier in the frame on a bunt single. Up until the hit by Gramatikas, Wilson had set down 10 Wildcats in a row.

The game winning run was pushed across in the sixth inning. Frank Pisiewski opened the inning by lacing a single into center field. A sacrifice bunt moved him over to second base and into scoring position. After two Redmen had been retired, Coach Lorden sent Pete Larkin up to the plate to pinch hit for Ken Clark. Pete promptly delivered a single to left to score Pisiewski with the winner.

Centerfielder Bob Hughes had a perfect day at bat, collecting three singles in as many trips to the plate.

Dick Wilson turned in another fine game on the mound for the Redmen. The sophomore southpaw was sharp throughout the whole contest with the possible exception of the fourth inning when the Wildcats loaded the bases on him. He emerged from the inning after giving up only one run.

Wilson gave up only 3 hits to opposing batters. He set down a big total of 12 batters on strikeouts and issued only 4 bases on balls.

BATTING AROUND

The Redmen now stand at 5 and 1 in Conference competition . . . One run ball games are old stuff to the Massachusetts squad; out of six they've been involved with this season, they've captured five . . . UConn domination of YanCon baseball honors seems at an end. The Huskies currently are 2-3-1 in the Conference and close out their season against New Hampshire Saturday . . . The Redmen face a big test Tuesday when they tangle with the Holy Cross Crusaders at Worcester. The twice-beaten Cross squad slammed Brown Univ., 11-4, in its last outing . . . Coach Lorden may give the starting nod to Lew Pia for Tuesday's game . . . A win over the Crusaders will boost the Redmen NE. ratings decidedly.

Snakebeaters Trounce WPI 16-3; Middlebury Here Wed.

by JEFF DAVIDOW '65

A powerful attack on the part of the UMass varsity lacrosse squad all but drove a weak WPI team into the ground on Saturday when the two teams met in Worcester.

The final score of 16-3 is a good indication of the clobbering Worcester Polytech took.

The Redmen got off to a quick start and had put ten goals in the WPI cage before the first two periods, then went on to score six more in the second half. WPI managed to get one goal in the third and two goals in the fourth period for their total of three.

The Redmen's first defense line of "Dutch" Dieterle, Jon Kallio, and Walter Glinski played the last period at the attack positions, and performed well. UMass' second team which played much of the game outscored WPI's first team.

This game saw Bernie Barrett, Don Trembley, and Charlie Glew get their first goals of the season. Between them the Glew brothers, Charlie and Bob, tallied four goals and two assists.

The Redmen are now 8-0 and will be looking for their ninth win of the season when they take on Middlebury College this Wednesday, May 9, here at the University on the lacrosse field.

Football Scrimmage Shows Promise For Next Season

by DAVE WILLARD '64

Saturday's intrasquad football scrimmage was staged before a large crowd and under favorable skies. Both teams gave it their all with the Reds soundly trouneing the White team 26-0.

In this type of a contest the score is actually secondary to the performances of individuals. As was to be expected assignments were missed and plays run awry, but for the most part the boys put on an exciting and encouraging show. The blocking and tackling was especially impressive at times with the sound of leather hitting leather and gaping holes being opened.

Ken Palm scored the first touchdown of the day on a short screen pass from quarterback Jerry Welchel. Paul Brown kicked the extra point to make it 7-0. Minutes later in this same second period the Reds struck again when Phil DeRose went in over left tackle from five yards out. Again Brown kicked the extra point and the score was 14-0. The Reds had obtained possession of the ball when the Whites had fumbled a punt attempt deep in their own territory.

The Reds' third touchdown was scored by Sam Lussier late in the third period but the point after attempt was blocked, to make the score 20-0. The final touchdown of the afternoon was by far the prettiest as Welchel faked a handoff and went back to pass. He spotted Dick Bourdelais all alone in the endzone and lobbed a pass to him for a beautifully executed six points. They tried to run the ball in for a two point conversion but the Whites halted them short of the goal line and the game ended 26-0.

The highlight of the game was the overpowering of the Whites by the Reds. Many of the Red team will be starters next Fall and they showed why. Not only did they put on a good offensive show, but they stopped the White attack almost cold. The White team barely penetrated Red territory all afternoon as Jack Schroeder and Jim Police were virtually stymied in their efforts to generate any kind of an attack. Penalties hurt the White team immeasurably as every time they began to put a sustained attack together, they had fifteen yards stepped off against them.

Dick Lewis, for the White team, made a nice run of thirty yards that was called back. In the last minute of play White quarterback Jack Schroeder looked his best. On a quarterback sneak he ran weaving and reversing through the whole Red line before he was finally brought down by the secondary.

Jerry Welchel's performance at quarterback for the Reds must have been very encouraging for coach Vic Fusia and his assistants, as he called the plays well and carried them out with poise.

All in all this scrimmage could be termed very successful as it allowed the coaches to find out some of the players weak points and what will have to be stressed in practice next Fall. It also gave the fans a taste of what is to come when this bruising and exciting autumn sport rolls around again.

Records Fall As Trackmen Romp Over NU And Tufts

by ABE SHEINKER '62

The UMass track team moved a week closer to the Yankee Conference meet by easily defeating Northeastern and Tufts on Alumni Field Saturday. The Redmen scored in every event to roll up 89 points to N.U.'s 39 and Tufts' 37.

The meet opened with Dick Ward throwing the hammer 167' 5" to defeat N.U.'s Joe Donahue, who did 162' 11". Al Garsys and Jim Reilly placed in the broad jump to give the Redmen a lead that held for the remainder of the afternoon.

In the first track event, Bob Brouillet was pitted against N.U.'s Chico Parillo. Parillo has won at least one race in every Northeastern meet this year and in every meet with UMass in the past few years. He stayed with Brouillet until the last lap, when "Digger" opened a wide lead to win easily and set a new school record, 4:21.4. Ken O'Brien took third for the Redmen. Parillo did not win an event that afternoon.

Ron Young recorded his best time in the past two years, 51.3 seconds, to place fourth in the quarter mile. Joe LaMarre, who has had trouble getting started this spring, ran his best race this year to place third in the half mile in 2:00.2, a second behind the winner. Teammate Gene Colburn was fourth.

Two of New England's best sprinters, Larry Smith of Tufts and UMass' Loren Flagg, had two close contests in the dashes. The judges couldn't find a difference between the pair in the 100, so they ruled it a tie, a very rare finish. Both were timed in 10.1 seconds. Smith came back to edge Flagg in the 220 by only inches as they were neck and neck all the way.

Charlie LaPier came through with a close victory in the 120 yard high hurdles with Joe Cassidy fourth. LaPier clocked a good 15.9 seconds and then placed third in the 220 yard low hurdles.

The Redmen put the victory on ice in the two mile run. Showing why they are New England cross country champions, the UMass distance runners took all four places. Dave Balch won in 9:59.2, with Bob Brouillet just off his shoulder in second, and Bob Avery and Dick Blomstrom third and fourth.

Meanwhile, in the field events, the Redmen were piling up 50 points. Big George Giddings—240 pounds of what it takes to put the shot—tossed the 16-pound ball 47'2" to win and improve his personal best by two and one-half feet. His series included four throws over 44'9" and his previous best was 44'7". Dick Ward improved his best also, taking second at 46'6½'.

Ward tied for first with Charlie LaPier in the high jump at 6 feet, to score a total of 12 points. Joe Cassidy was fourth. Charlie Fohlin got off a good 177'6" throw to win the javelin as discus man. Bud Smith was second at 172' 10½" and Mike Dineen third with his best of 170'2". Smith and Charlie Romeo also placed in the discus.

Jim Lumley wrapped up the meet by setting a school record in the pole vault. This feat was surprising since Lumley was badly bruised in last Thursday's practice session when the fiberglass pole he was using broke in three places and sent him crashing to the ground. He recovered quickly, however, and jumped 12' 4" to win. Maynard Hodgdon and Dave Williams did their best vaulting to tie for second at 11' 6".

FROSH BEAT TUFTS

The UMass freshmen ran their outdoor record to 4-0 by romping over Tutfs, 94-40, in their dual meet.

Distance runner Tom Panke set two frosh records in winning the mile and two mile. Panke went four seconds under his own mile record, clocking 4:28.1 He came back to take 10 seconds off the old two mile mark and did 9:59.5.

Bill Forand won three events for the Redmen. He did 10.3 in the 100, 22.6 in the 220, and won the broad jump. Dave Sadowsky did 12 feet to win the pole vault and Al Richardson threw 43'5¼" to win the shotput. Armand Millette made it four straight wins in the half mile with a time of 2:03.2.

Burt Kline scored 12 points by winning the low hurdles, tying for first in the high jump, and placing second in the high hurdles. Gus Anagnostopoulos and Barry Palmaccio had good distances in the hammer and javelin. Gus won the hammer with 169'1", one of his best throws, and Barry threw the javelin a fine 172'1" to win.

Poisoning Necessary At Colby

Mass poisoning was the order of the day on the Colby College campus. Under biologist Robert E. Foye's direction, Johnson Pond was treated with a poison that kills most gill-breathing creatures.

The object: to get rid of thousands of goldfish so that the acre-and-a-half pond will be habitable for game fish.

Just how the goldfish got into the pond isn't definite. A college spokesman said he suspects students were responsible—dumping their goldfish bowls when they went home.

Sportsmen say gold fish eat the spawn of game fish and the smaller species on which game fish subsist. Gold fish—a species of carp—live on the bottom and keep it so riled up that insufficient sunlight reaches the bottom vegetation on which minnows and other bait fish live.

Once Johnson pond is cleared of goldfish, it will be stocked with game fish. The college envisions the area as an out-of-doors laboratory for biology field work.

World Market Important Outlet To UMass Farmers

The world market continues to be a highly important outlet and source of income for Massachusetts farmers.

According to Prof. George W. Westcott, Extension economist in the College of Agriculture, University of Massachusetts, Bay State farmers supplied the export market with products worth $9.9 million in the 1960-61 fiscal year.

"Foreign markets are giving Massachusetts farmers a much better outlet and income than is possible from the home market alone. We need to continue to keep an eye on events affecting foreign markets because these events have a real dollars and cents meaning to Massachusetts' agriculture."

The USDA study, in appraising the stake of Massachusetts farmers in foreign trade, showed that the state's agricultural exports included the following: fruits (principally apples), $2 million; vegetables, $640 thousand; dairy, $1-⅛ million; poultry, $1 million; livestock and livestock products, $347 thousand. Field crops (exclusive of vegetables, fruits and nuts), contributed another $4-⅛ million to the approximate $9.9 million export total.

On the well known basis that foreign trade is a two-way street, Massachusetts also plays a part in the imports of agricultural products, says Westcott. The Bay State is far ahead in the exchange since its share of agricultural exports is more than 2-½ times its share of competing imports.

Frances Castine (right) has a central role in the Speech Department's production of David L. Wright's play, "A Summer in the Country." She is shown here going over a script with Buffy St. Marie (left), who provides the musical background for the play. Highly experimental both in its writing and staging, it was originally a short story and has been adapted to the stage by Doris Abramson, director. Free tickets are available at the S.U. lobby for the performance which will be Friday, May 11, at 8:15 p.m. in Bowker Auditorium.

Prof. Feldman Discovers New Drugs For Animals

A UMass psychologist has recently discovered that a new class of drugs is effective in treating animals for abnormal behavior caused by fear and conflict.

Dr. Robert S. Feldman, professor of psychology at the University, presented his findings last weekend at a symposium sponsored by the Presbyterian Medical Center of San Francisco. The title of his paper was "Response differences of psychotropic drugs in rats during chronic anxiety states."

For many years Dr. Feldman has been trying to find ways to prevent or alter abnormal behavior patterns of animals that developed after they had been subjected to stress. Recently, he discovered that a class of drugs, known as the benzodiazepines, was very effective in reducing tension and fear that developed in the stressful situation, thus allowing rats in subsequent problems to behave in more normal fashion.

His research has not discovered new cures for human abnormal behavior, but it provides a tool for long-range experimental investigations into the physiological and psychological basis of maladaptive responses.

Dr. Feldman, with his assistant Everett Lewis, reported that the studies led to development of a new screening method to test for tension-reducing properties of newly developed compounds. Aim of this technique is to find drugs that pin-point their effects on reducing fear and tension without causing unwanted side-effects. It may turn out that these studies will hasten selection of new compounds for clinical tests among human patients.

Dr. Feldman, who is working under grants to the University from the U. S. Public Health Service's Department of Mental Health, received his B. S., M. S. and Ph. D. degrees from the University of Michigan.

Prof. Leonard Stops Milk Delivery Because Of Strontium 90 Content

A college history professor and his family yesterday stopped delivery yesterday of whole milk to their home because of "the increase of Strontium 90 content in milk due to the fallout of Soviet atomic tests last Fall."

Dr. David Leonard said the move also was a "moral protest" against the resumption of nuclear testing by the United States.

Peter Wagner, district manager of the milk company said, "This is really silly. People who cancel delivery of milk aren't saving themselves or their families from any heartaches. They only cause problems. We don't let a quart of milk go out of this plant without testing for radio activity."

Dr. Leonard, who said he was a conscientious objector during World War II, is a history professor at the University of Massachusetts and Holyoke Mental Health Center. They have two children, Kathy, 13, and Christopher, 9.

Dr. Leonard said powdered milk, packaged before radio-activity in milk began to rise, will be used by the family.

Educators Discuss Graduate Study

by MARY ROCHE '64 and RUTH KOBS '64

A special program, entitled "The Who and How of Graduate Study", was sponsored by Mortar Board yesterday.

At a breakfast meeting for women honor students, Mrs. Ethel Beall, Coordinator, Continuing Edducation Program for Women at Northeastern University, talked on "A New Type of Education".

Four graduate students from different fields of study spoke on "Who Can Afford Graduate Study" as part of a panel discussion open to the public, at 11 a.m.

"Graduate Study: Parnassus in the Market Place" was discussed by educator Bruce Dearing, Dean of Arts and Sciences at the University of Delaware, at 8 p.m.

MRS. BEALL'S COMMENT'S

In her address, Mrs. Beall emphasized the need for women to go on to graduate study. She cited the increased demand for specialization, the ever growing needs for the economy, and the compressing of major scientific and technological changes into a short period of time which makes in imperitive that women continue their education on the graduate level. "We can no longer afford to take lightly the waste of womanpower", Mrs. Beall stated.

There just aren't enough men to do all the jobs so necessary today, she said. Women can now do administrative and data processing jobs that they wouldn't have been considered for before.

In the field of teaching, scholarships are being given to women coming back into the profession to allow them to earn their degrees and certification. This is of a particular help to mature women with families who might not otherwise be able to go to school.

DEARING ADVISES

"There is a great pressure for prolonged formal education", Dearing said in his talk. The universities need graduate students who are table to discover and communicate knowledge. Graduate education is becoming increasingly important since it is difficult to master any specialty in four short years.

In the past ten years 40 to 50% more people are going to college and these people must get advanced degrees to be distinguished in their fields.

Dupont and General Motors corporation employ the largest numbers of persons holding Ph.D.'s. Therefore, students who wish high-paying jobs should go on to graduate work.

Graduate study enables one to attain fulfillment of his own personal needs and to contribute his knowledge to society and the nation. The graduate student climbs Mount Parnassus, the mythical mountain of knowledge, and offers his knowledge in the marketplace below.

Dr. Werhner Von Braun, Missile Expert, To Speak Here Monday

by KAREN BURGESS

Werhner Von Braun, director of the Development Operations Division, Army Ballistic Missile Agency, Huntsville, Alabama, and developer of the V-2 Rocket, will be the fifth and last Distinguished Visitor to appear under this program this year. He will talk here Monday, May 14, at 8 p.m. in the S.U. Ballroom.

Von Braun was born in Wirsitz, Eastern Germany, and received a B.S. from the Institute of Technology in Zurich, Switzerland in 1931 and from the Institute of Technology in Berlin in 1932. He got his Ph.D. from the University of Berlin in 1934 and has received honorary degrees from the University of Alabama, St. Louis University, and the University of Pittsburgh, as well as a Dr. of Law from the University of Chattanooga.

From 1937 to 1945 he was technical director of the German Rocket Research Center, Peenemuende, where he was responsible for the development of the V-2 Long Range Rocket.

He came to the U.S. in 1945 after Allied victory in Germany. Working with the U.S. Defense Department, he was technical advisor at the White Sands Proving Grounds and project director at Fort Bliss, Texas from 1945 to 1950.

ROTC Spring Review Tonight at Alumni Field

COLONEL MARCHANT

Army and Air Force ROTC units at UMass will participate in the Annual Spring Review tonight on Alumni Field at 6:45 p.m.

The colorful ceremony, open to the public, will be preceded by an exhibition of crack drill teams, the Army ROTC's Bay State Rifles and the Air Force ROTC's state champion Flying Redmen team.

Reviewing officer of the day will be Colonel John C. Marchant, Professor of Air Science at the University, who will be retiring in June. During the ceremonies, changes of station and retirements of the professional military staff will be announced.

A highlight of the ceremonies will be the granting of awards by the Honorary Colonel selected earlier in the year by the combined Army and Air Force ROTC units. This year's Honorary Colonel is Miss Sue Lydon of Waltham.

Flying Club Presents Skydivers Thursday

The UMass Flying Club will sponsor a special coordinated aerial display over the campus tomorrow night at 620 p.m A demonstration of basic flying maneuvres will be conducted by Joe Johnson, UMass engineering graduate, and Prof. "Ace" Harris of the University's Civil Engineering Department. White smoke trailing from the ship will make ground observation easier.

Club president Tom Dodge will direct the team and announce events from the south terrace of the S.U.

A Cessna 182 aircraft will fly in from Turner's Falls at 500 feet. Its occupants, skydivers Richard Fillmore and Ellsworth Getchell, will free-fall over one mile each in an attempt to make a baton pass falling at 135 mph.

After the jumpers drop their yellow wind drift indicators at 2000 feet, the Flying Club ship will swing back from its holding position while the jump ship is climbing to 7,500 feet.

The landing target, an orange and white canopy, will be displayed 50 yards from the south terrace, signaling the flyers to return to their holding orbit.

The jumpers will make their 5500 foot jump from the Cessna 182, opening their parachutes at 2000 feet, while the Flying Club ship circles closely.

The event will commence Flying Club Week, during which any student may sign up for a ride in the Club airplane free of charge. The only requirement is signing of the club's legal waiver.

A desk will be available in the S.U. then and during the following week for signing.

Senate Elections

It's time again for the Student Senate elections. Tonight's Senate meeting is of direct concern to the entire student body because of the importance of the elected positions at stake. The president of the Student Senate, sometimes implied to be the president of the student body, is probably the most important office any student can hold in any Recognized Student Organization.

We hope that every candidate who is running for this office fully realizes the responsibilities involved. Then Senate president may represent the students of the University in the State House in Boston or in the President's office in South College. He must be an effective leader and an organizer. It has been clear at times during this past year, especially during the earlier stages, that the Student Senate has lacked organization.

If students have any preference as to who they would like to see as president of the Student Senate, it is their obligation to contact their respective Senators and indicate their choice.

To the Senators we say: when voting, take into consideration the factors of experience, capabilities, and representative qualities necessary for a position of such on-and-off campus importance.

The Senate meetings are open to the public, and the Collegian urges any students who are terested in their student government to attend this meeting.

Academics Honored

The annual University of Massachusetts Honors Convocation, a recognition by the University and by honor societies of the outstanding achievements in the area of academics, will be held tomorrow at 11:00 a.m. in the Ballroom of the Student Union. All students and faculty are urged to attend.

First of all, the Collegian extends congratulations to all of those connected with the honors program. Both students and faculty who have participated in any of the colloquia or other honors projects have indicated that the experiences they have gleaned from their scholarly searching have been stimulating and invaluable.

At this time the Collegian will allow itself space to "plug" our next issue (Friday's) which will contain a special three page honors section.

The entire program is a credit to the University in that the University takes into account the fact that there are gifted students on campus (despite what some insiders and outsiders think) who need special programs fully to develop their academic curiosity. Such a program is not only necessary for the present, but must receive greater recognition and support in the future if it is to grow with our growing University.

— LETTERS TO THE EDITOR —

To the Editor:

Many thanks are due Wes Honey, for he has finally clarified the general student attitude at UMass. Although we may be "selfish and lazy," we are not apathetic!

During the two and one-half years that I have been here, I have found the Collegian to be very dependable. We get regular coverage of campus activities, sports, etc. The Collegian may also be depended upon to publish frequent editorials and letters berating the campus population for its "apathy."

I would like to make a suggestion to those who are apathy-seekers. Did you ever stop to think that the vast majority of students, who are not very active in extracurricular life, may be spending all their time trying not to flunk out? There are many activities in which we students would like to participate. We are not apathetic! We just have to study longer than some active leaders have to study.

To the Editor:

The student run, "student-representative" radio station has taken it upon its shoulders to crusade for the abolition of what it feels is the "unrepresentative" humor magagine, YAHOO. This opinion was broadcast for a week in the disguise of a responsible editorial which included the following incrediby stupid combination of statements: "Why this happened is not the concern of this editorial. That it should not have is." (They were referring to the inclusion of Ya-hoo in the student tax.) This lack of concern for the "why" before the formation of an opinion seems to be indictive of the policy followed in the preparing of the entire editorial. It appears that no more investigating was done other than the reading of the last couple of Yahoos. To illustrate this point, it is necessary to do no more than point to WMUAs claim that "the Ya-hoo does not represent undergraduate humor on this campus."

This, however, is not what the students feel. The student Senate polled 250 students to find a large majority liked Ya-hoo and thought it earned its keep. The Senate-elected by the students-also passed in favor of Ya-hoo by a large majority. The Collegian published a favorable review of the latest issue. The campus literally grabbed every copy of the New Ya-Hoo available. The staff and submissions for the last issue were the largest yet, and the new staff (of next year) already numbers in the twenties. On what does WMUA base their opinion?

We realize WMUA has been in the editorial- and humor-business only a short time, but this lack of poor judgment seems entirely avoidable. When one small board of "radio common-taters" decides they can judge campus feelings better than the campus can, it is they who should be classified as unrepresentative. Ya-hoo hopes that their fellow mass media will see the error of their ways, that they may begin working together with Ya-hoo and other campus regulars, for the more effective student contact. However, Mr. Editorial Writer, we must once more remind you to keep your bias from distorting the facts. Yours is a far reach, and potent tool on this campus if properly used, but the material recently air by your station is more than in poor taste.

To the Editor:

Some three weeks ago the Collegian published an article on the JET (Junior Executive Training) program which had brought 21 young Europeans from Switzerland, Germany, Holland and Sweden to the University of Massachusetts.

Like all good things, our 6 weeks' stay at the university is coming to an end and, rather sadly, we are preparing to say good-bye to your campus this week-end. Our experience at U of M has been short but pleasant, and though we all have outgrown college age, more than one of us would gladly enroll here for a full course (I wonder if we would qualify!)

Dring the few weeks on campus we have received many signs of friendship, and on behalf of all of us JETs I would like to thank you for so cordially accepting us as your fellow-students. Also, our very special thanks go to the Dean, faculty and staff of the school of Business Administration who not only introduced us to the American way of doing business, but who were more helpful in every respect and spared no effort to make our stay a pleasant and instructive one.

Another few days and our group will be scattered all over the United States, from Boston to San Francisco and from Texas to the Great Lakes, and the weeks we spent at U of M might be just another, soon forgotten episode in our lives, were it not for the friends we made here. And when in a few months most of us will have returned to our old continent, U of M and Amherst will live on in our memories and remind us of the nice folks we met over here and to whom we now say: farewell to all of you, and thank you for your friendship!

UNILATERAL DISARMAMENT? ABSURD!

Are the people of the United States just going to lay down their arms and let any country or group in the world step in and control us? NEVER!!

Educational TV

In a recent bill signed by President Kennedy, the federal government has promised a broader choice of Television programming. The most important part of this bill, however, provides for areas which now can not afford educational TV to receive funds from the government (on a matching basis of one government dollar for every local dollar) which will allow that area to initiate an educational TV program.

Is this what the citizens of our country desire? In the not too far back past the Federal Communications Commission held hearings to determine if present TV programming is in the best interests of the nation. It was brought out at this hearing that although more than three quarters of the people interviewed in a TV programming poll were in favor of more educational TV, less than one-fourth of the people interviewed actually watched educational television with any regularity. In short, educational TV is OK for the general population, but most people would rather watch the Late, Late, Late Show.

Because most people don't watch educational TV, is this a reason to stop its expansion? No, it isn't. The taste of the masses is no criteria to judge what is worthwhile, and what is not.

The original program of the federal government calls for direct grants to the local agencies involved, which would "smack of government control". Under the present matching fund program the responsibility of what would go on the air on such a station would rest soley with the local agencies—where it belongs.

Editorial Comment of the Day:

The worst thing about apathy is that most people are apathetic to it.

Agriculture Dep't Member Plans Retirement In June

Miss Ruth E. Sherburne, instructor in the department of agricultural and food economics at UMass, by her own admission "has probably collected enough statistics to carpet the state in good style" during her more than 40 years as a member of the staff.

This is just one of the many thoughts that come to her mind as she prepares to retire on June 30.

The university had about 1200 students when she became a member of the clerical staff in September 1921—about a sixth of the 7,000 on campus today. The Abbey WAS the women's dorm and hay was being cut on the present lawn area around the pond in June before commencement.

Miss Sherburne was appointed as an Agricultural Experiment Station research assistant in 1926. She has cooperated on departmental projects concerned with land use, taxation and public ownership. Her statistical work appears in a number of publications on which she collaborated.

Miss Sherburne received her B.S. from Simmons College. She has served under four department heads.

Tickets Now Available For Speech Dep't Play

Tickets are still free and available, at the S.U. lobby counter, for the Speech Department's production of David L. Wright's "A Summer in the Country".

According to Miss Doris Abramson of the Speech Department, who is directly the play, this is an "ex-curricular" show. It has grown out of two University courses—her course in oral interpretation and Prof. Larson's course in lighting.

One of the cast members is Mr. Robert Tucker who teachers in the English dept. And takes the Oral Interpretation Course this semester. In the play he is a farmer. His students will be able to tell how successful he is outside the classroom.

This is the third year of experimental theater productions on this campus. Their popularity has grown with each year. This is the first year that music has been especially arranged for the production. Buffy St. Marie has been responsible.

The curtain will rise at 8:15 Friday evening and admission is free.

Holy Cross Stages Rally In Ninth To Down Redmen 3-2

by STEVE HEWEY '63

The one-run ball game, the common denominator of UMass baseball efforts all season long, yesterday found the Redmen on the deficit end of a 3-2 heartbreaking game at Holy Cross. The Crusaders, still undefeated in N.E. College competition, scored the winning tally in the bottom of the final frame to wrap up the madcap affair.

Early UMass Lead

UMass opened the ballgame by grabbing two runs in the top of the first. With one away, Bob Hughes reached on an error. Corky Schmoyer reached on an error by the Crusaders' second baseman. Up stepped Bill DelVecchio and he promply blasted a 395 ft. drive off the center field fence to score Hughes and Schmoyer.

The Crusaders came back their half of the inning to pick up one run. Pederman reached on a bunt single and Jordan walked. Lew Pia's attempted pick-off throw ended up in the right field and Pederman raced on third. Tony Capo's sacrifice fly brought Pederman across with the run.

In the second inning H.C. added the tying run. Al Snyder singled to left; so did Smith. Paul Symeon took a call third. Pederman hit into a fielder's choice and runners were now on first and third with two away. Then the Crusaders worked the double steal to score Snyder.

Lew Pia continued to pitch for the Redmen but from the start it was obvious that it just not Lew's day. He found himself in more trouble in the third and fourth and finally gave way to Carl Elmstrom in the fourth.

At the plate, the UMass bats were also cold. It was not until the eighth inning that UMass could get a threat going. Schmoyer singled to center and advanced on Bill DelVecchio's sacrifice bunt. Forbush reached on an infield roller and Pete Larkin drew a walk to load the bases. That was all. Tony Williams popped to third and Dave Krubonis watched a call third strike go by.

The ninth inning gave the Crusaders their seventh win of the season. Mike Arena lofted a fly ball to left field which Pete Larkin dropped for a two-base-error. Barry Tyne struck out. Pat Gallagher grounded to Schmoyer who misjudged it and runners were now safe on first and third. Al Snyder came up and bounced one to Tony Williams at third. Williams fired home to Dave Krukonis who stepped on the plate for what was thought to be a forced out. The umpire, however, ruled that Krukonis should have tagged the runner and not the plate since there were only two on and no force situation existed at home. Thus, the run counted and the Cross had the win.

Tennis Squad Loses To UConn And URI

by DAVE PODBROS '65

Saturday, May 4, was a beautiful spring day, and at 1:30 p.m., the University of Massachusetts varsity tennis team began a match at the University of Connecticut. Six hours and fifteen minutes later the team completed the match, during which time it had developed into the longest, most interesting, and one of the closest, in the history of both teams. It also ended in a heartbreaking loss for the Redman.

In singles competition, in spot number one, Rodger Twitchell, in sharp contrast to the rest of the afternoon, quickly finished his match, winning 6-1, 6-0. However, in spot two, Tom Simons, went three sets, to lose the first of five losses for the team. Set scores for the Simons match were 2-6, 8-6, 4-6. Following suit, Sam Levy in spot three, replacing Mendel, who was out with a sprained ankle, lost to his UConn opponent, 6-2, 7-5. Fred Murray, in spot number four, brought hope back to UMass for a brief time, when he won his match 6-3, 6-2. This hope was lengthened when Doug Pearsall lasted through one of the three long afternoon matches, to win 6-3, 13-11. Leete, however, in the second long match of the afternoon, lost 14-12, 6-8, 8-6.

The third long match of the afternoon was in the doubles competition. Twitchell and Leete teamed up to play the one and two seeded played from UConn. While they were playing, Pearsall and Levy, lost their doubles 6-3, 6-3, and this combined with the superb win by Simons and Murray 6-4, 6-2, resulted in a tied score, UMass 4 and UConn 4. The winning of the match, therefore, now rested on the shoulders of Leete and Twitchell. Dick Leete, who in his first match had played over fifty games, was tired and had been previously laid up with a score back. Yet, he and Twitchell gave a tremendous effort, only to lose by a fantastic 16-14 score. Exhausted they then lost a heartbreaking second set 6-4.

After an extremely long afternoon, UConn had won 5-4.

The UConn lose was the second for the netman this week. They had lost to Rhode Island May 3 and this match also ended with a 5-1 score.

Trackmen Beat Powerful H.C.; Team Up For YanCon Meets

by ABE SHEINKER '62

The UMass track team established itself as a New England power yesterday, by knocking off Holy Cross, 72-63, at Alumni Field. The Redmen hadn't beaten the Crusader trackmen since the indoor season of 1958 and their last outdoor win over Holy Cross dates back years before that. This victory will undoubtedly make the Redmen a favorite or co-favorite to win the Yankee Conference Championship at Orono this Saturday.

The meet saw top efforts from many members of the team. Bob Brouillet upset some top distance runners by winning both the mile and two mile. His mile time of 4:23.0 is one of his best and his 9:29.8 clocking in the two mile is a new school and field record. Teammate Dave Balch nearly caught H.C.'s Walt Barker in the two mile with a last-minute sprint, but lost by two yards in 9:33, his personal best.

The Holy Cross middle distance runners, who are national champions in the two mile relay, outclassed UMass in the 440 and 880. They took first and second in these races with winning times of 48.9 and 1:54.5.

Loren Flagg won the 100 in 10.1, nosing out the Crusaders' all around runner, Charlie Buchta. Flagg was also third in a close 220.

Charlie LaPier was a 10-point man for the Redmen as he won the high hurdles, took second in the lows, and tied for second in the high jump.

Dick Ward had a good day although he lost his specialty, the hammer throw. H.C.'s Kevin Kilgallen threw 180'2" to win that event, a consistent toss for him. Ward upset teammate George Giddings to win the shotput at 46'11¾", his best ever for the third straight meet, and remained undefeated in the high jump at six feet. His hammer distance was a good 168'9".

The UMass pole vaulters recorded the only sweep of the afternoon when Jim Lumley cleared 12 feet, with Kim Pruyne, Dave Williams, and Maynard Hodgdon all tying for second at 11 feet. Lumley also placed third in the high and low hurdles.

Jim Reilly came up with his first win of the season in the broad jump with 20'10" and Al Garsys placed second. Charlie Fohlin and Bud Smith clinched the meet for Redmen by placing one-two in the javelin after UMass led by a slim two-point margin. Fohlin threw the spear a consistent 176'6" and Smith recorded his best of 175'2½".

Frosh Lose Close One

The UMass freshmen suffered their first loss of the spring, 68½-66½ to the Crusader yearlings.

The Redmen had some tough breaks in this close meet. Burt Kline fell heavily in the hurdles and Gus Anagnostopoulos fouled all his throws in the hammer, costing the team valuable points in these events.

The UMass frosh swept both the mile and two-mile. Al MacPhail took the mile in a good 4:33.5 with Tom Panke second and Bill Young third. Panke, MacPhail, and Bob Ramsey finished in that order in the two mile as Panke lowered his own record to 9:54.6.

Dave Sadowsky finally broke the freshman record in the pole vault, a mark he has often tied. He cleared 12'2¼". The old mark was 12 feet even.

The other UMass winners were Clarence Hill in the 100 at 10.5, Barry Palmaccio in the javelin with a 156'10" toss, and Armand Millette, who tied for first in the half mile at 2:02 to lower his own record.

Kevin O'Brien, the track superstar from Belmont, won the high hurdles, low hurdles, high jump, and broad jump, and took second in the 100 to pace the Crusaders with 23 points.

Don't Knock The Sox

In past years, the Red Sox have been attacked from all sides for their performances both on and off the field. Many of these attacks have no foundation. A great number of these criticisms have been placed on individual players as well as on the Red Sox for being a "lackluster" ballclub. Stars such as Ted Williams and Jackie Jensen and lessers such as Don Buddin and Sam White were booed, heckled, and berated constantly by "sports fans" and writers who could not see their way clear to find the true appreciation of their ability as ballplayers.

Many fans have remembered Ted Williams not for his unquestioned achievements as a ballplayer but for the few brief moments that his frustrations controlled his actions on the field.

Jackie Jensen, after supplying the Red Sox with his most productive seasons, was highly criticized for personal problems which had a great effect on his career. In their criticism they were attacking Jensen more as a family man than as a ballplayer. This had an effect on his decision to depart from baseball.

Don Buddin never seemed to make it to first base with the Red Sox fans; and the constant heckling seemed to be a hampering effect on both his hitting and fielding. In Boston papers this spring, the sports writers, in writing about the improved short-stop Ed Bressoud, have continued to make ill references to Don Buddin.

After the departure of some of their greatest stars, the Red Sox find themselves criticized from most corners of the Boston sports world. They now lack the power and run producers which they formerly had. They now count more on singles and doubles to bring in the runs. Thus they lack the glamorous home-run ball which has become the big attraction of the last couple of years, causing them to be unduly criticized.

Newcomers in the past few years, including Chuck Schilling, Don Schwall, Galen Cisco, Bill Monbouquette, Carl Yastrzemski, and Jim Pagliaroni have brightened the future of the Red Sox by adding both youth and speed to their attack.

People who criticize Mike Higgins for his patience should remember that in dealing with young players, patience is a prime essential in building towards a better future.

Thus the future of the Red Sox cannot be tape-measured by home runs but by a well-molded team, which consists of players who have been patiently bred into fine big leaguers.

Fans, in general, should encourage the Red Sox by cheering them on both at and away from a game, and should try to understand more fully the point of view of the entire Red Sox organization, which is trying to develop a pennant winner.

UMass Snakebeaters Lead New England "B" Division

The Redmen Lacrosse team is playing at home this afternoon at 3:30 against the Middlebury snakebeaters in what promises to be in an interesting clash between the two teams.

With only three games left to play for the varsity lacrosse squad the team's scoring and league statistics have been released.

Leading the team in the individual scoring column is Jim Ellingwood who has proved his worth to the Redmen many times this year. Following him is John "Bumps" Bamberry who among other deeds he has preformed for the squad scored five of his fifteen goals in one game.

Individual Scoring

	G	A	Pts
Ellingwood	16	10	26
Bamberry	15	4	19
Harrington	9	8	17
B. Glew	8	9	17
Ekberg	9	6	15

Barrett	1	2	3
C. Glew	2	0	2
Prior	1	0	1
Trembley	1	0	1
Houde	0	1	1

The Redmen are in a percentage point tie with three other teams for the first place position in the New England Briggs Division. Tied with UMass for the lead in the "B" Division are Amherst, arvard, UNH, and Yale all sporting a 1.000 win percentage. owever, these standings are misleading for two reasons. The first is that while Yale has only won one game in the division while UMass has won six, both teams are tied for first place. What is even more misleading is that only intra-league games are counted in the division's standings. Therefore, two of the Redmen's wins are not counted and seven of UNH's losses are not figured in the tabulation of the league standings. The complete records for the leading teams are presented below.

Briggs Division				All Games

Green Pastures Program Aims At Quality Forage

Forage production, the quality and quantity of feed grown on dairy farms, will be the major consideration in the 1962 Massachusetts Green Pastures Program, says Dr. Martin E. Weeks, professor of agronomy, College of Agriculture, University of Massachusetts.

The program, whose purpose is to encourage a more prosperous and efficient dairy industry through the best use of land and farm resources, is being managed by Dr. Weeks under the direction of a state committee.

Participants will be asked to describe their land use practices and to justify these practices in view of their particular farm circumstances.

On the basis of the reports, visits to the farms and discussions with the farmers, the county committees wil select one to three top dairymen from each district. From these the State Green Pastures Committee will choose "Massachusetts' Most Outstanding Dairyman" to represent the state at the Eastern States Exposition to be held this September in West Springfield.

The Massachusetts committee is affiliated with the Green Pastures Committees in the other New England states. Heading it are Chairman Ralph Dimock of OXFORD, and Treasurer Harry Whiting of LANESBORO.

All Massachusetts dairy and livestock farmers are eligible to participate in the program. Those wishing to obtain applications or more information should contact their country Extension agents.

Cournoyer Elected Senate President

by ANNE MILLER '64

Senator Donald Cournoyer ('63 Fraternities) was elected Student Senate pro tempore President Wednesday night by a thin 15-13 vote over Senator Andy D'Avanzo ('63 Wheeler).

An election which at the first ballot pointed to a D'Avanzo victory, developed into a neck and neck grind as Cournoyer's supporters began to rise and speak.

Nominations brought forth four candidates. Abdul Samma ('63 Greenough) nominated Dick Buck ('64 Married Dorms;) Ann Griffin ('63 At-large) nominated Cournoyer; Bob Brauer ('64 Butterfield) nominated D'Avanzo; Karol Kucinski ('63 Commuter) nominated Mike Hench ('64 Commuter).

It was ruled that unless one candidate received a majority of votes on the first ballot, there would be a run-off for the two leading contenders.

A first ballot gave D'Avanzo 12 and Cournoyer 9; on the run-off Cournoyer won 15 to 13.

Cournoyer Comments

In a later interview Cournoyer made the following statement: "I sincerely feel that the coming year, bringing with it new challenges and new problems, will be met forcibly and efficiently through the wholehearted participation of students, student senators, and the support of the administration. The next year, the Centennial year, will bring a newer, firmer basis for the growth of our student government together with our university.

My basis for running for President of the Student Senate has been my desire to see our Senate raised to a position of esteem, prestige, and honor that a Student Government should have.

A fault must be recognized before it can be corrected, and I feel that the weaknesses of our student government in the past are now recognized and will now be corrected.

May I add that a student government is representative of the students. Therefore, I sincerely hope that our students will take a greater interest in their government. Its success will depend a great deal on the attitude of the student body.

As representative of the student body, I ask for your assistance in the coming year. My tenure in office can only be successful with your support.

Robicheau Unopposed

Senator Betsy Robicheau ('63 At-large) ran unopposed for vice president. Senator Dennis Patenaude ('64 Commuter) was nominated and declined.

Senators Joan Labuzoski ('64 Commuter), Marilyn LeGoff ('63 Johnson), Trudy Mahoney ('64 Adams), and Delores Matthews ('63 Leach) were nominated for secretary.

A second ballot was needed in the secretarial race. The final vote gave Mahoney 9, Matthews 18.

Senator Doris Berry ('64 Hamlin) was unopposed for job of treasurer.

Williams Prof. Urges Creative Thinking At Honors Day Convo

by JOE BRADLEY '64

James MacGregor Burns, professor of political science at Williams College, urged scholars to "explore beyond the educated vision," yesterday at UMass.

Burns spoke before the annual Honors Day convocation which recognizes students of high standing who have been received into honor societies for academic excellence.

Burns said that intellectuals must think hard for "knowledge for the sake of knowledge" in order to bring forth new ideas which practical people can put to use.

Burns described Franklin D. Roosevelt as a practical man who "liked to compare himself to a quarterback calling the plays. Actually it was Herbert Hoover who was a theorist," maintained Burns, because Hoover refused to give up the old economic theories at the beginning of the depression.

Attacks Pragmatism

He attacked the pragmatic attitude which, he said, "two generations of Americans have clung to," believing that experience, especially method and judgment, are the ultimate knowledge.

Burns defended the "intellectual's right to impracticality" saying that the intellectual must have a "fresh, critical, uncomplacent look at the vision beyond education. Real thinking — the kind impractical people indulge in —require time," he added.

Burns said that the scholar is hindered by three problems. 1) his thinking is interrupted by teaching, 2) Group research waters down his theories and hypotheses, 3) scholars must do research for themselves, not in deference to others.

Following Burn's address, Dr. Louis S. Greenbaum, director of the honors program here, presented the candidates for the various UMass honor societies, which are listed on page five in the honors section.

Commencement Plans, Marshals Announced

Seniors graduating from UMass this June will find that Commencement procedures have changed radically from those used in previous years.

They have changed mainly because of the increasing number of students that will be graduating. Al Berman, Chairman of Graduation Day Exercises, explains that if the traditional procedure were used this year, the length of the ceremonies would be staggering.

Also, the usual location of Commencement exercises (the lawn east of the S.U. is now too small to accommodate all the guests expected to witness this year's event.

Senior class officials have been working for months with the faculty Committee on Commencement and Convocations to iron out details for alterations that will be made in the ceremony.

"This year," Berman pointed out, "we will be sacrificing simplicity for speed. In order to quicken the ceremony we have had to make many changes in the traditional processional, seating arrangement, and recessional."

Because these changes will make the whole Commencement procedure more complex, seniors will require more advanced information than ever before.

The Collegian will be providing this information for seniors, in three or four articles beginning in this issue.

IT IS STRONGLY URGED THAT ALL SENIORS WATCH THE COLLEGIAN CAREFULLY AND SAVE ALL RELEVANT ARTICLES FOR FURTHER REFERENCE.

Many seniors have been asking class officers about Commencement invitations, tickets, caps and gowns, etc. Class of 1962 Chairman have assured the Collegian that information concerning these matters will be published shortly.

Elsewhere in this issue is information concerning the distribution of caps and gowns, which will begin next week.

Also announced recently were the Commencement Marshals for the class of 1962. They are as follows:

HONORARY MARSHALS

Bernard Murphy, President, Class of 1962

Allan Berman, Chairman, Graduation Day Exercises

Immediately following the playing of the National Anthem, the awards were presented. These awards are given to outstanding cadets who have shown excellence in a number of different areas.

This year awards were presented to cadets: Peter R. Hefler, Peter P. Gleba, Edward C. Dowdy, Thomas P. Leavitt, Albert J. Obue, Demitrios M. Moschos, David J. Bungay, Paul J. Cassidy, Joseph F. A Hard Choice— A Bright Future

A year ago Tex Tacelli and Andy DAvanzo stepped into what one of last year's Student Senators termed a "power vacumn." Most of the personalities who had made up that year's Senate were graduating and it was generally felt that neither Tacelli nor D'Avanzo were as qualified for the office of Senate President as most of the Senators would have liked them to be. However, they were the only two candidates and rather than selecting the most qualified, it appeared to be the task of the Senate to weed out the least qualified.

This Wednesday night, the situation had almost completely reversed itself. This year's Senate—one which has been subject to much criticism for apathy and inffectiveness—has somehow managed to produce not one, not two, but four fully qualified candidates for the President's chair.

Senator Bob Brauer summed it up perfectly when he said to the Senate, "You can't make a bad decision tonight. They're all qualified. The question is—which is the most qualified," Brauer was right. They couldn't make a bad decision; but they couldn't make an easy one either.

All four candidates felt that this year the Senate had not been as productive as it should have been and vowed that things would be different next year. It was in their approaches to the problem that they varied.

The Senators were really torn between these four; and their supporters gave some of the most moving speeches heard in the Senate in a long while. When one of them, Cournoyer, was finally elected, it was in no way a rejection of the other three. Throughout the debate, it was obvious that each of these men hold the respect of practically the entire Senate and that all four will probably form the nucleus of the leadership of next year's Senate. What is more important than the exceptional qualities of these men is the way in which those who supported them strove for their election.

The Senators were moved to their cause because they all felt the urgent need for an improved, effective, and productive Senate and were determined to chose the leader who could and would bring about that end.

Those who were watching could not but help but be impressed. This is a Senate that has been relatively inactive. It has failed more than once to get the necessary quorum to hold a meeting and many more times just barely made it. The budgets were barely completed in the time specified by the Student Government Constitution and many of its meetings have been described as outright farces. Still, one could not help but get the feeling that out of this Senate may grow one of the most effective Senates this campus has ever had.

The shortcomings of the last years performance can possibly be attributed to two things—inexperience on the parts of the Senators themselves and lack of enough effective leaders. This time Don Cournoyer has at his disposal an experienced Senate and the willing and able hands of Buck, Hench, and D'Avanzo.

'YouPaysYourMoney, You...'

The Arts and Music Committee of the Program Council (SUG Board) has announced that they will be spending approximately $350 of your student tax money in the near future to buy records for the Student Union.

Sign up sheets will be available at the lobby counter for anyone who wishes to make a choice as to what records are purchased.

Since your money is being spent you might as well listen to the recordings you want to hear. In case you want a more direct voice inwhat records are purchased, there will be an open meeting of the selection committee on Tuesday, May 15, in the S.U. Program Office.

The speech of Wernher Von Braun, speaking here Monday at 8 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom under the sponsorship of the Distinguished Visitors Program, will be broadcast over the Educational Radio Network, all down the Eastern Seaboard.

This broadcast will be made possible through the combined facilities and staffs of the University station, WMUA, and the four-college station, WFCR. It will then be relayed to WGBH in Boston and subsequently over the Educational Radio Network in several U.S. cities.

The program will be heard over the following stations: WGBH in Boston, WRVR in New York, WAMC in Albany, WHYY in Philadelphia, WAMU in Washington, D.C.

Stimulation And Reward

In this special Honors issue of the Massachusetts Collegian, members of the student body, faculty and administration review the merits of the Honors Program.

The favorable reaction to the program by President Lederle and Provost Woodside demonstrates the administration's support of the program. The faculty (see below) are in favor, and most important, the students in the program have profited from their experience and look forward to more of the same.

The Collegian strongly supports the concept of a special program for those students at the University who have the ability and the desire to get more out of their college education than what is offered in the everyday classroom activities. We firmly believe that an expansion of this program would be in the bests interests of the University.

For members of the student body who are not familiar with the Honors Program, the Collegian presents a statement by Mr. Arnold Silver of the English Department about the program.

Many university students have a genuine interest in ideas, openmindedness, a willingness to form new outlooks, a desire to integrate their learning and to relate it to their own lives. Many other students —though with equal I.Q. ratings—seek knowledge merely to obtain good grades, or to sound impressive, or to fortify their convictions and prejudices; they will do only enough work to attain these ends. Quite a number of students in the former group are not members of the Honors' program. A few in the latter catgory are members. Since selection is necessarily based largely—though not entirely—on grades, we unfortunately pass over some students who would most profit by the program. We unfortunately admit some (albeit a minority) whose attitude inhibits their intellectual growth. Faculty members are aware of these deficiencies in the selecting techniques and are seeking to remove them, though the method will never be infallible.

ARNOLD SILVER

On the whole, thanks to the intellectually serious majority, and to my faculty colleague, my mind had been stimulated by our discussions. I often find myself meditating for several days on issues raised and comments offered. I have also known the teacher's reward of feeling that some students have grasped an idea more firmly, learned to extract the best ideas from a book without surrendering their critical faculties, been broadened by a new perspective. Although both stimulation and reward come from my regular classes too, the colloquium meetings provide them more frequently because the classes are small and the students, in general, are above average. I earnestly hope that the program expands and prospers.

A Matter Of Being Unmatched

In the department of hot statistics, put down the fact that 12.5 billion matchbooks are burned up in the United States every year. That's 143 books for each adult.

The inevitable comparison: In Russia, the second largest producer, the figure is one book for every two adults. And matchbooks are not given away in Russia as they often are in America.

But interestly enough, in this country criticized for its conspicuous waste, almost nobody throws away a matchbook while there's still a match in it.

A MULTILATERAL VIEW

To the Editor:

What price should we pay for peace? Are we willing to sacrifice in the name of peace the individual freedoms which we now enjoy? These are the questions which came to mind as I watched the CNVA peace marchers walk through campus last week. I don't condemn their right to organize, to march, and to persuade. Indeed, the pressure group, regradless of the form it may take, is a fundamental part of our governmental system. This does not, however, preclude criticism of the program which these peace marchers advocate.

There is no doubt that anyone in his right mind wants peace. But this is where the divergence of opinion begins. The peace marchers say—We want peace regardless of the cost. I say—let's have peace, but let's maintain our American way of life at the same time. Unilateral disarmament conceivably could bring peace—but on Soviet terms. This is the crux of the matter. Palter et al, if they deny this, are naive to say the least. Anyone with even an intuitive feeling for the essentials of Marxism and Leninism realizes that the primary goal of Communism is world domination.

It is unfortunate that the peace marchers have failed to face this issue squarely. Instead, they have presented a much simplified argument, raising it onto a highly emotional and irrational plane. In their most recent campaign to prevent resumption of nuclear tests, they cited those "authorities" who claim that fallout radiation will harm hundreds of thousands of people. These assertions are meaningless. They merely reflect the biases of those who made the statements. The fact is, there is simply no unanimity of opinion regarding the affect of fallout. Dr. Lauriston Taylor, a leading authority on radiation notes that fallout contributes only 2.5% of the total radiation we are exposed to in our daily lives. This simply shows that the debate over fallout has by no means been resolved and hence statements such as "100,000 new born infants will die due to fallout" have no real validity.

Anyone with the least amount of respect for Russian power will appreciate the extent of our defense system. If there is to be disarmament, it must be multilateral and rigidly controlled. If this is impossible, however, all is not lost. There are still constructive proposals which would lessen the danger of war. At the moment, it appears that an accord may be reached which would prohibit spreading nuclear weapons to other countries. The United States is currently launching a program to investigate ways of reducing the liklihood of war by accident.

The most important deterant to war, however, lies in an equal balance of power. The Soviets will always be cautious as long as they respect our military might. If we were to capitulate, though, the Kremlin would not hesitate to issue the ultimatum—surrender or die. In short, appeasement, unilateral disarmament—call it what you will, is no way to peace with freedom. At best, it is the road to peace with slavery.

LIVING PROOF

To the Editor:

On the evening of Tuesday May 8, a small group of residents of Mills House had the pleasure of sharing an informal coffee-hour discussion with Professor Benjamin Ricci of the Department of Physical Education. After Professor Ricci had departed, two significant observations prevailed among those who had attended.

First, this new idea of faculty-student discussion groups (new at least in the men's dormitories) may provide just the broom needed to sweep away a weakness which seems to be a tradition here—namely a general misunderstanding of the true nature and worth of intellectual growth.

The second observation was that Professor Ricci is living proof of the compatibility of teaching, faculty citizenship, and research. In this regard it is often said that the University administration requires too much of a faculty member. But if a man of Porfessor Ricci's stature is the result of the meeting of these requirements, then it may well be worth-while to maintain such high standards, even at the risk of losing an occasional "good teacher" or "good research-at the risk of losing an occasional "good teacher" or "good researcher".

Redmen Netsters Whip Jumbos; Play At Storrs In YanCon Today

by DAVE PODBROS '65

Last Tuesday, the UMass varsity tennis team traveled to Medford to defeat the Tuft's netmen, 6 to 3. The Tutfs squad which had beaten Connecticut, to which UMass had lost, was an extremely tough team for the Redmen to beat. In singles competition, Roger Twitchel found in McNeil, the Tuft's number one man, the best opponent he has played this season. However, Roger came through to win 8-6 6-4. Tom Simons followed suit and won 6-4, 6-0. Pearsall also having a difficult time, in spot four, lost 6-4, 6-4. The tide changed, however, when Mendell won 6-0, 8-6, and Leete in another three set match (this seems to be his specialty) won 6-8, 7-5, 7-5.

The match was clinched in the doubles competition as Twitchell and Leete, and Simons and Murray teamed up to defeat their respective opponents. The third doubles was lost by Mendell and Pearsall 6-4, 6-4.

The team continued their winning spree as they took on and defeated Fairfield University, Wednesday. Twitchel, Simons, Leete, Pearsall, Sherman, and Shully each won their respective singles matches. The only loss of the day was in doubles, as Simons and Murray were defeated in the first doubles 6-4, 6-2. In the second and third doubles, Mendel and Pearsall and Levy and Sherman teamed up to win, bringing the final score to 8 wins, one loss.

The netman's next match is the most important of the season, for it is none other than the Yankee Conference competition in Storrs, Conn., today and tomorrow. Asked as to the team's chances, Coach Kosakowski replied, "We're going down to Storrs with the idea of winning. We've got as good a chance as anybody." The team hasn't lost a competition crown since 1954. Asked as to the individual player's chances, the coach replied, "Anyone who wants to win singles in the Yankee Conference will have to beat Roger Twitchel." Twitche hasn't lost any of his matches so far this season. Fred Murray and Doug Pearsall have improved, and Dick Leete and Tom Mendell have recovered from their injuries. The chances of the varsity netmen are definitely good.

7th Inning Stretch

by BARRY JAYE '65

Matt Zunic deserves a lot of credit for the success of the basketball team that won its first Yankee Conference Championship. Pete Bernard averaged only eight points on the frosh team and then scored over 12 points per game on the varsity. Roger Twitchel averaged 15 points as a freshman and upped it to 17 per game. This is proof of Coach Zunic's excellent coaching for usually a freshman ball player who scores about 15 points per game on the frosh team, lowers his average about 10 per game on the varsity squad.

Mike Higgins thinks The Houston Colts got the best of the deal in the draft because the team picked youngsters and not "name" old-imers. Said Higgins, "Ball players need an incentive and those kids that Paul Richards picked were all fighting for jobs. The ones the Mets picked figured they had it made."

I am always talking about records. Here is one that went unnoticed. On April 29 this year Frank Thomas of the Mets became the second player in Major League history to be hit by a pitch twice in one inning. The only other player to have been hit twice in an inning was Willard Schmidt of the 1959 Reds.

Incidentally Minnie Minoso, now of the Cardinals, holds the American League record for the most years leading the league in hit-by-pitched balls with 10. (He's lucky to still be alive!)

Here's an impossible question for those who think they are baseball experts: What is the lowest batting average ever recorded, exceping those of players who have registered a zero by going hitless in a few appearances at the plate? Answer is George Blaeholder a pitcher with Milwauke,e, made one hit in 61 times at bat in 1938 for a mark of .016.

Ever wonder where the word "fan" came from indicating a sports enthusiast? It was originated by Chris Von der Ahe, owner of the champion St. Louis teams in the 1880's. One day, Chris, in discussing a St. Louis man who never missed a game in that city declared to Sam Crane a celebrated sports writer that "dot feller is a regular FAN-a-tic." Fanatic was too much for the thick accented, genial German sportsman to master all at once, so he weighed heavily on the first syllable — thus "fan."

This Tuesday, the Yankees invade Fenway Park. Watch Bill Skowron. In eight years, he has averaged .365 against the Sox at Fenway. Roger Maris in five years has only hit .240 at the Sox ball park.

I'm still bragging about my picking before 10 witnesses, of Decidedly in the Kentucky Derby. I just looked at the horses and then said Decidedly would win. Can't get over it.

Also, in case you are wondering how Don Buddin is doing. He is back to usual. He is hitting around .150 a Houston.

UMass Trackmen Favored To Win YanCon Title At Orono

by ABE SHEINKER '62

The UMass track team is a slight favorite to win its first Yankee Conference title at the 15th annual championship meet at Orono, Maine, tomorrow. Competition is expected to be very close among 12-time winner Rhode Island, 1960 champion UConn, defender Maine, and the upcoming Redmen. The UMass team, however, has the most individual stars, the best balance it has ever had, and sports a 3-1 season record, including a first ever outdoor win over Holy Cross.

The Black Bears of Maine won last year's meet by 20 points over UConn, but have suffered many losses through graduation and injuries. Nevertheless, they have been winning their dual meets by 20-30 points and will be on their home field. Their big scorer is expected to be flashy Pete MacPhee, who as a sophomore last year won the 220 and 440, setting a meet record of 48.8 seconds in the latter. They also have returning high hurdle champ Baron Hicken and two mile champ Mike Kimball.

Although the Huskies lost to UMass by 17 points in a dual meet, they have enough individual stars to score heavily. Tops among their scorers is Mel Parsons, a 20 plus point man in many of their dual meets. Parsons is capable of winning both hurdles and both dashes, but because there will be trial heats in this meet, it is doubtful whether he'll run all four of these races. He'll be defending his low hurdle title and attempt to improve on his second in the highs.

Rhode Island, always a mystery team in this meet because they do not compete against the other YanCon schools in dual encounters, is also a threat. The Rams will depend upon points in the pole vault, where John Gonsalves and Bob Patton have been consistent at 13'6". They also have potential winners in javelin thrower Bob Marshall, a 200-foot man, and 22-foot broad jumper Pete Sahkinnen.

The mile shapes up to be the best race of the day. Bob Brouillet, who ran a 4:21.5 last Saturday, will represent the Redmen against a field that includes 4:18 miler Mike Kimball of Maine, Bill Perkins of Vermont, winner in 4:21.8 in 1961, and UConn's Deck Kosinski, who has run in the low 4:20's.

Snakebeaters To Play At Amherst, Sat.

The Redmen lacrosse team caught fire in the closing seconds of the first half and went on to score eight goals to defeat the snakebeaters from Middlebury College 8-3.

The game played here at the University on Monday, May 9, started slowly for the UMass team, and it was not until six seconds before the end of the first half that the Redmen's John "Bumps" Bamberry put one by the Middlebury goalie scoring UMass's first tally of the afternoon. Middlebury had previously scored two goals.

UMass started off the second half just as they had ended the first—strong. The snakebeaters held the Middlebury men to one goal for the rest of the game while the Redmen attack provided seven more goals.

Coach Garber and the Redmen lacrosse squad face their biggest challenge when they travel across town to play Amherst College, tomorrow, in UMass' most important game of the season.

The Amherst team should prove to be a rough opponent for the Redmen as both squads have gone undefeated in "B" Division play.

This will be the last chance for most Redmen rooters to see their lacrosse team in action, and Coach Garber and his squad are expecting a large turnout of UMass fans. The directions to the Amherst playing field are these; park at the Amherst Cage on Route 116 and walk down past the Hockey rink and the baseball field.

The Massachusetts COLLEGIAN

Director Of Honors Praises Program

DR. LOUIS GREENBAUM, DIRECTOR OF HONORS

It has been a marvellous and exciting opportunity to be associated with an Honors program which has challenged the talents of so many scholar teachers and students. In the past two years, a far-reaching program of interdisciplinary Honors Colloquia from the freshman through the junior years—a modern educational expression of the Platonic dialogue—has merged a protean array of backgrounds, disciplines, outlooks, and vigorous minds into a unique blend of intellectual synthesis. Our 168 students and 35 teachers have represented 32 departments and all eight colleges and schools of the University. They have made friends with the best books and noblest spirits of all ages, and more immediately on this campus, with human beings of like values and convictions. Colloquia learning encourages the tearing down of sacred bastions of compartmentalized knowledge in order to expose all frontiers of human inquiry and experience to the consciousness of its participants. It permits students and teachers to confront each other as minds to test their ideas, appraising their positions, and examine their values against the conflicting alternatives of human choice. In an age of increasingly specialized and technical preparation on ever smaller areas, it demonstrates the urgency of each intelligence achieving an overview of the germinal ideas of many fields, and their concatenation, to deal sensitively with the responsibilities and decisions incumbent on informed citizenship. And beyond the Honors program, the type of personalized education emphasized there is constantly finding its way into our classes. For more and more of our students, the Colloquium habit of following to ultimate meaning significant individual investigations is proving satisfying and natural.

Faced with landslide enrollments, like all the great public institutions of higher learning in this country, our University is resolutely committed to the task of preserving and improving its quality by providing programs to prepare the academically talented for their future role of leadership in Massachusetts and the nation. Our Honors program to be effective must keep pace with the swelling tides of students eager for education, and our future Honors resources must become ever more available to the needs of students eager to strive for academic excellence. Honors Colloquia will continue to reach vaster audiences of gifted young scholars. Increasing attention must be given to Honors curricula within and among departments together with greater individual freedom for students of distinguished academic credentials. Our University is constantly expanding an already impressive number of Honors opportunities. College entrance after the junior year in high school, liberal programs of credit by examination (a student can earn 30 credits this way), waiver of prerequisites for advanced courses, advanced placement with credit, independent Honors work in the senior year, and enrollment in graduate courses are a few of the privileges open to undergraduates.

The wealth of a University is measured by the superior students and teachers it harbors. And within the University, Honors work is the one facet of academic experience which demands excellence rigorously and insistently everywhere; which proclaims that learning must be demanding if it is to be enriching; and which warrants that students will realize their highest rewards and fullest powers in effort, growth, and goals.

Merrilee Atkins Is Winner Of Two Scholastic Awards

Merrilee Atkins was the center of attraction at yesterday's Honors Convocation, held at 11 a.m. in the ballroom of the S.U. Reason: the personable Miss Atkins was named top scholar of the graduating class of about 800 students.

Daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Howard W. Atkins of South Amherst, Merrilee has been designated Phi Beta Kappa and Phi Kappa Phi scholar, a double honor not usually conferred on one student.

Recipient of numerous honors during her college career, the blonde senior has been given a $2500 scholarship for graduate study in the School of Social Work at Smith College. She will study for a master's degree in psychiatric social work.

A psychology major, Merrilee is completing a senior's honors thesis titled "Color as a Variable in a Picture-Story Test for Young Children: a Projective Technique."

Currently president of Lambda Delta Phi sorority and a member of Mortar Board, Merrilee was a UMass delegate to the 1961 Conference on Educational Philosophies, held at Goddard College. She also represented the UMass student body at the Conference on Goals for Americans held at Brown University last year.

Merrilee was named Phi Kappa Phi Scholar in her freshman and sophomore years, as well as her senior year. A member of Sigma Xi, she was elected to Alpha Lambda Phi in her freshman year. She has been on the University Honors List for all four years.

Outstanding UMass Students Honored At Annual Convocation

Yesterday UMass paid tribute to its outstanding students. The roll call of honor covered all academic fields, and the large number of students reciving honors indicated that UMass is strong, and getting stronger, in its programs for academic achievement.

The Collegian is happy to give recognition not only to the many students honored at the convocation, but also to the outstanding programs and dedicated faculty members helping in this all-important pursuit of excellence.

Among the recipients of high honors awarded recently are those named Woodrow Wilson Fellows: William L. MacDonald, Joseph M. Patten, and Mark F. Taylor; the Phi Kappa Phi National Fellowship Winner: Evelyn Aliferis; National Science Foundation Graduate Fellows: Kenneth D. Johnson, John J. Leary, Thomas W. Stuart II, with honorable mention given to Evelyn Aliferis, Mary I. Allessio, Gordon B. Bailey, and Eugene L. Speck.

Jon Cowen received the National Defense Education Act Fellowship, and Wayne Mucci received the Ford Foundation Research Grant in Sociology.

The Phi Kappa Phi Scholars were named for the four classes: Class of 1962, Merrilee R. Atkins; 1963, Lynn S. Musgrave; 1964, Joan F. Doktor; 1965, Linda M. Jost.

FACULTY COMMENTS

The faculty comments on Colloquia:

"It makes us aware of the gifted students we have on campus: it could result in some progressive changes in the techniques we routinely use in regular courses."—Dr. Wassef Nawar, Assistant Professor, Food Technology.

". . . we have run the gamut from very exciting discussions to very frustrating encounters, where we did no more than prove how difficult human communication can be . . . because our group has been willing to ask questions in fields some of us know very little about, I have had a teaching - learning experience which, alas, is too often absent in American education."—Dr. William F. Woehrlin, Instructor, History Department.

"In the Honors Colloquia there is an opportunity for both student and instructor to develop thoughts and ideas which may take on personal meaning because there is personal interest . . ." —Dr. Sargent Russell, Associate Professor, Agricultural Ec.

"It has been and is an exciting experience to participate as one of the Directors in the Honors Colloquia. To be among students eager to learn and explore the intellectual world and most eager to analyze and question their fundamental assumptions concerning that world is an enduring reward for any teacher, anywhere." — Dr. Himy B. Kirshen, Dean, School of Business Administration.

"It has been refreshing to have some of my encrusted prejudices chipped away by the probing and needling of ten good minds . . ."—Dr. Joe W. Swanson, Assistant Professor, Philosophy Department.

Louis S. Greenbaum
Director of Honors

President, Provost Commend Honors Program

I joined the faculty of the University of Massachusetts in 1936. One of the reasons I was proud to do so was the fact that a strong Senior Honors Program was already in existence. Such programs were far less common in those days than they are in 1962. The presence of an active Senior Honors Program helped to convince me that the University maintained a high regard for academic excellence.

PROVOST WOODSIDE

During the intervening years I have been directly involved in the guidance of a sizable number of significant Senior Honors Research Projects. Many of these have been worthy of publication, but even more significant is the fact that work with Honors students represents the finest kind of teaching to be found on any campus. It also gives the student an opportunity to learn at first hand how extraordinarily difficult it is for anyone to add anything significant to the sum of human knowledge. It thus gives him a healthy respect for scholarship which the more conventional kinds of learning could only rarely give him.

I was especially gratified when the University was able to extend its Honors Program to include Honors Colloquia during the second semester of the freshman year and both semesters of the sophomore and junior years. We are glad that the response from both students and faculty has been enthusiastic.

We are committed to continuing and extending both Senior Honors and the Honors Colloquia. I can say without qualification that the entire program has my enthusiastic support.

James MacGregor Burns, author and professor of political science at Williams College, was this year's speaker at the annual Honors Convocation.

The topic of Burns' speech was "Beyond the Educated Vision." The author was graduated from Williams College, and received his PhD. from Harvard University.

A delegate to the last three Democratic national conventions, Professor Burns was defeated in his bid for a Congressional seat in 1958.

Dr. Burns, a trustee of the Stockbridge School in Stockbridge, Massachusetts, is also chairman of the Berkshire County Council against Discrimination and a former president of the New England Political Science Individual fulfillment—this is, and always should be, the primary goal of any process of education. In a free society such as ours, the opportunities for achieving individual fulfillment should abound.

And surely the resources we create for bringing out the best that is in us constitute the means by which we give high quality and value to our civilization.

PRESIDENT LEDERLE

It is not enough to say, therefore, that we must produce educated talent in order that our society may endure. We must produce more than this — and for aims beyond simple survival. We must have the means not only to build the external structure of civilization, but also to infuse that structure with the spirit of man's most rational aspirations to fulfill himself and his civilization.

As we consider such thoughts in the highly complex and dangerous age in which we live, many of us find it hard to believe that such fulfillment is possible. And yet the truth is that we will survive and prosper only if we strive to make the most of ourselves and of our society.

I am greatly reassured, therefore, when I find that, here on our own campus, we are developing with vigor and dedication a comprehensive program by which students can work toward intellectual strength and maturity. The entire University community can indeed be proud of our Honors Colloquia and the Senior Honors Program. The students and faculty members who make contributions in these programs exemplify in great measure the excellence without which we could not survive as an American institution of higher learning.

I call on all of our students, and all of our faculty members, to give their most energetic and creative support to all such programs, dedicated as they are to the preparation of as many of our students as possible in the high art of being "free," rational and responsible men and women" devoted to the best aims of our society.

Neil Staebler Closes Lecture Series On Optimistic Note For Democracy

by LAURA GOLDMAN

The key to the survival and growth of democracy, said Neil Staebler in a speech Wed. May 9 in the S.U., "is increased citizen participation in the political process." It was the third lecture of a series on "The Dynamics of Democracy."

Mr. Staebler, Visiting Distinguished Professor of Practical Politics in the UMass Government Dept., said that "nobody can dispel by discussion" the danger to democracy of nuclear war. However, the fears that "democracy is weak . . . or easy prey to other systems and powers" can be usefully debated in public in a democracy.

It is the responsibility of democracies to "gather knowledge and spread understanding of the true state of the world." For example, "Except for those countries occupied by Communist military forces, nations are moving toward democratic development."

Coffee Hour To Introduce Art Exhibition

The annual Student Art Show, comprised of work done by UMass students, will open with a coffee hour in Memorial Hall on Sunday, May 13, at 3 p.m. Professor George Cohen of the Art Department at Smith College will judge the works that are submitted by students.

The show will run from May 13 to 28. It will be open on Monday through Saturday until 5 p.m. in Memorial Hall, and on Sundays from 1 to 5 p.m. The public is invited.

At a recent art competition and exhibition held at The Springfield Museum of Fine Arts for students in western New England colleges, a UMass student won first prize in the Watercolor class. Paul J. Serra, an art major, was given the top prize for an untitled abstract watercolor.

Another UMass art major, William Shumway received honorable mention for his oil painting entitled "Old Man".

Cheerleaders Hold Twist In Ballroom

The UMass cheerleaders are sponsoring a dance tonight in the S.U. ballroom from 8-11:30 p.m. Because it is an organization sponsored by the physical education department, its funds are limited, and, at the moment, their financial status is such that it would be impossible to attend the away games next year without extra financial aid.

The dance will feature the newly recognized campus combo—the Twi-liters.

The dance will be informal and the cheerleaders suggest that all wear bermuda shorts or campus sportswear.

TEP To Rebuild; Alumni Contribute

The ground-breaking ceremonies for an extensive new TEP house were held Saturday afternoon.

Taking the first shovel-full was Samuel Fein, Past Grand Consul of TEP National. Also present were Sidney Suntag, present Executive Secretary of TEP National, and Merwin Rubin, Head of the Alumni Building Committee.

According to Barry Weiner, TEP House President, it was the pledge class of '63 that really got things going on the drive for a new house, which had been in a theoretical state since 1940.

Over this past summer, the present house was condemned by the administration. This, according to Weiner, "shocked the alumni into realizing that if they didn't do something there would be no more Tau Pi chapter of TEP."

An Alumni Building Committee was formed which included Rubin, Fein, Irwin Goldblatt, Elliot Allen, and Earl Winer.

Alumni newsletters were stepped up. At an alumni meeting at the Smith House in Boston, several thousand dollars was pledged for the new house. Next in the works was a meeting in Springfield and a New England TEP meeting in Boston. More newsletter and meetings followed.

The Alumni Fund-Raising Committee moved along, picking up speed, until finally the groundbreaking ceremonies were held this past week-end.

The old building will have to be razed in order for the contractor to complete the new house. The old house will be torn down in the latter part of this week. For the remainder of the year, TEP brothers will be living in other houses and in dormitories.

A story will follow later in the Collegian about the architect's plans for the new house.

Soph Exec. Council To Table RSO Constitution

At a meeting of the Sophomore Executive Council last Thursday evening, it was decided that the council's constitution, which it had earlier submitted to the Senate Activities Committee for approval, be tabled and that a new executive council be chosen for the Class of '64 before the end of the present year.

The main problem as stated by Jim Medeiros, newly elected Sophomore class President, was "whether or not there is a necessity of the Executive Council's being an RSO organization when the entire class is an RSO organization."

It was proposed and passed that there is no necessity for an executive council having an RSO constitution but rather that the council will simply operate on a set of principles.

The constitution as it read said that committee chairmen for next year's programs would be taken exclusively from the Executive Council. In tabling the constitution, this condition has been eliminated.

The present Council is a 42 member governing body comprised of representatives from sororities, fraternities, men's and women's dormitorities, Scrolls, Maroon Keys, and commuters of the Class of '64. It is unique among class executive councils in that it is an elective body.

According to Medeiros, the alternative decided on to setting up an elective council is one which will be selected by the class officers. This, he pointed out, is better because "it is very possible that each dorm, fraternity, sorority, will have more than one capable person and in spreading

State Legislature To Provide 30 New Faculty Posts For UMass

UMass, the Commonwealth's largest educational facility, gets the lion's share of 142 new faculty positions authorized for Massachusetts state colleges next fall, with 30 new posts authorized. This will boost the UMass faculty from 1287 to 1317.

The University's increase also permits upgrading the teacher training program to full-fledged department status by providing for hiring a full-time department head. The breakdown at the University will be: five full professors, eight associate professors, nine assistant professors and seven instructors.

The next largest increase will be at Metropolitan Boston Community College which increases by twenty, boosting the faculty from 31 to 51. Lowell Tech will gain 15 new posts.

The 17 Massachusetts state colleges started yesterday on a massive recruitment drive aimed at employing 142 new teachers before a record 22,000 students hit the campuses next fall.

In past years, Massachusetts colleges have waited until July or even August before getting the go-ahead to hire new faculty members. This year, Massachusetts should have the jump on other state in the race for new college teachers.

Most states will still have to wait until late summer because government fiscal years do not star until July 1 and also because state departments are barred from making financial commitments before funds have been appropriated by Legislatures.

The Joint Ways and Means Committee, however, readily concurred this year with arguments advanced by state college administrators and agreed to give state institutions a head start on recruitment.

The $8,845,000 deficiency state budget signed by Governor Volpe last week contained an innocuous clause authorizing the colleges to start recruiting May 1 for 142 new teacher positions next Fall.

There were no funds provided in the deficiency budget for paying the teachers because this is a 1962-63 expense that must be borne from the new state budget for the fiscal year starting July 1.

Senator William D. Fleming (D-Worcester), chairman of the Senate Ways and Means Committee, has predicted that the early recruitment program will give Massachusetts colleges a chance really to compete with private educational institutions for the cream of the crop in teachers.

He noted that in past years state institutions have operated under a handicap because it has been impossible to give prospective teachers a definite commitment before late in the summer.

Under such conditions, top flight instructors often sign contracts with other institutions in spring or early summer rather than sweat out the uncertainty of legislative budget deliberations.

One unique phase of today's recruitment drive is that it marks the birth of the state's newest college — the Upper Connecticut Valley Community College in Greenfield which opens for the first time this Fall.

Up to now the school has been a paper college, but the go-ahead in the deficiency budget will permit the state to hire an eight-man faculty, including a director, one full professor, 2 assistant professors, 2 associate professors, and 2 instructors.

170 Courses To Be Given This Summer

A record number of courses will be offered during this year's UMass summer sessions, it was announced by Dr. Arthur R. Williams, Director.

When the main term opens on June 25, more than 170 courses in 30 different fields will be available to summer session students. The first term will close on July 28; the second will run from July 30 to August 31. In addition to the two main terms, special courses in engineering, forestry, home economics and nursing will be offered at various times during the summer, from June 4 to September 7.

The summer sessions are open to outstanding high school juniors, students graduating from secondary school in June, students enrolled in institutions of higher learning, holders of degrees, and those wishing to take courses as special students. The two colleges, six undergraduate schools and the graduate school are represented in course offerings which range from the introductory to the doctoral level.

Specific information on summer courses and costs is contained in a special summer sessions catalogue available from the Registrar, University of Massachusetts, Amherst.

Senior Class To Hold Picnic At Forest Lake

Great music, great food and great fun: that's the keynote of the senior picnic to be held on Friday, June 8, from 1-6 p.m. at Forest Lake Park.

Seniors planning to take in this highpoint of the Senior Week festivities will have a choice of two menus. Lobsters and clams constitute the seafood dish, while others may enjoy the fried chicken.

Tex and his Coronados, locally prominant rock and roll combo, will provide the music for outdoor dancing.

In addition to the luncheon the park has a large sandy beach, slide, and excellent swimming and diving facilities. Those seniors of a hyper-romantic disposition may rent canoes, while those remaining behind will be able to play badminton, horseshoes and sundry other games.

So, seniors, if you plan to be on campus during Senior Week, don't miss this chance to release all care, worry and frustration—at least until after graduation.

Tickets ($1.75 for lobster; $1.00 for chicken) will be on sale to seniors in the Student Union from May 23 to June 6 from 2-4:30.

DIRECTIONS TO PARK

Take Route 9 east to Route 202 (9 miles). Turn south on 202 to Belchertown (1 mile). Follow Route 181 to Bondsville (5 miles), turn left in the center, and follow signs to Forest Lake Park. After about 2 miles, this road meets another at a drive-in movie theatre. Turn left, and the park is about ¼ of a mile on the right.

An Amherst Fire Department truck in front of the S.U. Saturday. When smoke was spotted in the games areas, the alarm was rung but whether or not there actually was a fire is still a smoky issue.

Federal Aid To Education

The Collegian, being concerned with the Federal Aid-To-Education issue, has asked the Young Republican's Club and the Young Democrat's Club to present their views to the campus on this issue.

The Aid-To-Education Bill will effect all of us in the near future—either as students, faculty, or taxpayers. Reaction to these articles from any member of the University family will be welcomed.

SAY THE DEMOCRATS...

"It is time to realize that we are faced with new frontiers in education. The old system of financing schools from property taxes is no longer suffiicent. The old philosophy of leaving the financing of college education to parents is no longer sufficient."

These words, spoken by President John F. Kennedy early in his campaign, spelled out the new administration policy on federal aid to education. The new program called for increased spending by the national government on the public school systems. The policy has failed to be enacted, and the question naturally arises, "why didn't the bill pass Congress?"

In November, the American people voted for a party which has pledged itself to revamp our educational system; but in our legislature exists a hard core of opposition, vehemently against any alteration of the present relation between the federal government and our schools. The arguments used are carefully designed to appeal both to the emotions and to the pocketbooks of the American people.

Exclaiming that it is unconstitutional to take the control of education away from the states and local authorities, the opposition immediately attracts still ardent states' righters, and the hordes of conservative elements in our country, afraid of government which would deprive them of their special privileges and interests. Increased aid to education would mean increased taxes. Who really wants any more of their pay check given out to the government? Those states with small student populations do not want to support poorer and larger states with a higher percentage of school age children. Finally, the typical, and indeed most vital point made against the new program, is the one which equates federal aid with federal control of education. Appealing to the traditional American fear of big government and intervention into private life, the opposition has found this argument to be the most effective of all in blockading any new legislation.

As convincing as these points may sound, the administration's plan is neither unconstitutional, nor unduly expensive, nor tyrannical. Seeking to preserve the powers of the states over education, the president has devised a method, whereby, funds are given by the federal government to each state, to be administered in whatever field of education most in need. The final decision as to increased salaries, the building of new schools, or the repair of old ones, is left entirely within the power of the states. The states have an added strength—that of bargaining power. If passed, the law would allow local boards of education to compete for the best teachers, the best textbooks, and the best materials for the new buildings.

A look at history reveals the singular fact that federal aid to education is not a new idea, and has never brought a complaint of tyranny. In 1785, with the birth of a new nation, the Northwest Ordinance provided for the building of public institutions for learning by the national government, for our growing population. Similarly, in 1862, with the passage of the Morrill Act, better known as the Land Grant Act, the practice of the government giving land to colleges was established. In neither of these acts, nor in the case of the success of the National Defense Education Act passed in 1958 by a Republican administration, has there been evidence of federal control of education.

The new program will of course increase taxes. However, according to Kennedy's program, aid is to be given to states in proportion to student population. Larger states will receive more aid than smaller ones, and the people in less populated areas will have to pay increased school taxes; a process of equalization in taxation will take place, whereby, small states, and large, pay approximately the same rate to support public schools throughout the country.

A man from Kansas might bitterly complain about supporting school children in New York. It should be pointed out to him that we are, after all, citizens of a nation first, and only secondly of a state. It should be noted also to this bemoaner that in these days, when each American is questioning his country's power and prestige, it is necessary for each citizen to contribute to making our supremacy in the world undoubted. We need people well trained and tutored in every field of scholarship. The old system of state-supported education has been found wanting. New schools, new teachers, new methods are needed—materials which can be obtained only by more money and aid from the federal government.

Sandra Baird '62
Janet Casey '63

SAY THE REPUBLICANS...

Pressure has been growing since the end of WWII for the enactment of a comprehensive federal aid to education measure. But as pressure has grown, the need has steadily diminished. The need originally came from two sources—the deterioration of facilities during the depression and the War, and the increased enrollment wave after the War.

Republicans have often been accused of opposing federal aid to education. However, it was a Republican, Rep. Justin S. Morrill, and a Republican Congress which, during the height of the Civil War, passed the Land Grant Act, to which this and forty-nine other state universities owe their existence. Sen. Robert A. Taft introduced the first comprehensive federal aid to education bill in 1947, but it foundered on the same constitutional issue which blocks the bill today—aid to private and parochial schools. President Eisenhower sponsored a generous education bill in 1957, but it was killed in a Democrat Congress. Under the Eisenhower Administration, bills to provide aid to impacted areas in the vicinity of military installations, and the National Defense Education Act were passed.

So much for the record. For the future, we must ask ourselves what will be the needs, and how we shall meet them. As we pointed out in the last issue of the Prism, the classroom shortage inherited from WWII has all but disappeared. Local communities, with state aid, have built the staggering amount of more than 600,000 classrooms—enough to wipe out the deficit, replace obsolete facilities, and provide for a sustainable rate of growth. In fact, the projected rate of new construction through 1970, with local funds, exceeds even President Kennedy's estimate of future needs. And as a measure of the success of the local system, the number of pupils per classroom has actually declined! All this has been achieved to the embarrassment of those Cassandras who maintained that it would be quite impossible without vast transfusions of aid.

What about teachers' salaries? Here again the need for federal assistance is rapidly disappearing. In the past decade salaries have risen from 50-80%, while general inflation has been held to about 10%. Admittedly, the problem of finding qualified teachers to fill the hundreds of thousands of new classrooms still exists, though to a reduced degree. But here again the problem will be solved by the local school districts with state aid. In Massachusetts the current minimum salary for elementary school teachers is $4200, with many municipalities paying far more. While this level is hardly satisfactory, it represents a rise of 56%, and if the Legislature raises it again this year, as it is expected to do, the rise will be greater than 67%. And it is reasonable to expect similar progress in the future.

There have been some proposals for federal aid to education which frankly disavow any current need, but whose object is the gradual control of the public, private, and parochial educational systems. These proposals (such as federal aid in the purchase of textbooks), currently before Congress, would make education an instrument of national policy through the device of annual subsidies for teachers' salaries. The dangers of this system are manifest. It would subject education to bureaucratic regimentation, a malignancy we have largely avoided in the schools for the past 174 years. As an example, even the relatively benign National Defense Education Act of 1958 contains one provision for a loyalty oath, and another which gives preferential treatment to science students. While only philosophy, English, and history students may object to the latter, all students recognize the former as a brazen insult to their citizenship. In spite of the heroic (?) efforts of President Kennedy, the loyalty oath remains in effect. And any effort by a politically oriented government to shape educational policy is an encroachment on academic freedom. The current proposals assume the truth of the modern fallacy that anything worth having can be bought. Furthermore, subsidies and controls are unavoidably permanent in nature. Even a cursory examination of the morass in agriculture, or the crippling controls on transportation testifies to the harm of control where it is patently unnecessary. Prof. John Kenneth Galbraith has said, in a recent issue of the Atlantic Monthly, "In the United States we have the world's oldest system of universal primary education. We also have the most diverse and imaginative, and, in many respects, most highly developed system of secondary education. American colleges and universities were the first in the world to make higher education a democratic right. Until they did so, universal education had always been the privilege of a minute intellectual, aristocratic, or financial elite." And we have achieved all this without control!

Republicans will support and vote for any proposal which meets a legitimate educational need, such as classroom construction, student loans, and science research grants. But the need must first be shown to exist. Annual federal subsidies for teachers' salaries, and federal assistance in the purchase of textbooks serve no valid purpose, and would lead to the gradual control of a free educational system. Republicans will not and can not support such a betrayal of intellectual liberty.

To the Student Body:

In the past years the students have not been made adequately aware of the fact that they may take an active part in their student government. This may be done by joining a Senate Committee. These include curriculum, budgets, finance, public relations services, activities, and men's and women's affairs.

Every student appointed to a committee is a voting member. This is, therefore, an excellent opportunity to help your government from the inside.

All interested parties are requested to notify their senate representatives or us, the undersigned, giving data as to which committee you would like to join and why. Since all positions will be filled by the end of this week, please act immediately. The number of positions to fill is limited.

Your student government wants your help in performing its services to the campus and to the University. Only through your interest and aid can we operate effectively.

To the Class of '64:

The '64 Executive Council has once again taken on a new face. The new face—which once more levies the task of selection of the class Executive Council upon the class officers—is one which should contribute towards a more practical and effecient organization than has been realized in the past.

The purpose of the Executive Council is not that of the Student Senate whereby elections are necessary to find out who shall speak for the dormitory, for although the student body may find itself divided into separate residences making a Student Senate necessary, the class itself must never consider itself divorced into such separate communities. Such strict representation on an Executive Council would only emphasize this situation.

In addition, it should be realized that each dormitory may have more than one individual extremely capable for Executive Council work. Through elections only one can represent the voice of the class. Surely, we must not needlessly handicap ourselves by permitting only one representative of the class to speak, when several are available.

If we, the class of '64, are to surpass the Junior classes of the past, we must not consider ourselves isolated into separate dormitories, sororities and fraternities, nor should we err in admitting that there is only one capable individual in each respective group. In the end, we must realize that what is substituted for a "democratic" procedure is offset by a compensated gain: measurable only in practicality and efficiency.

James Medeiros
'64 Class President

To the Editor:

Once again the Student Senate has demonstrated its incompetence. It has elected a president with no concrete ideas for improvement, a person whose only apparent qualification for Adelphia was the possibility of his election as president of the Senate. For the office of vice-president, only one person was nominated. This person, though very pretty and charming, can clearly not run a meeting, one of the prime requisites for both a president and vice-president. The Senate has held illegal elections for the offices of secretary and treasurer, since neither office had been vacated, the only reason elections of Senate officers are held in the spring.

Even worse, the person whose obvious qualifications of superior organizational talents and sharp intelligence made him the only sensible choice for the office of vice-president, if not president, was not considered for this position.

Yet, what else could have been expected from a Senate elected by an apathetic student body? The trouble with the Student Senate is that it is too representative. With the vast majority of the students unconcerned with, perhaps even unaware of, the powers and responsibilities their government has, how can one expect anything better from those they have elected?

Faculty Increase . . .

Senator Fleming also noted the faculty for Cape Cod Community College virtually will be doubled under legislative authorization to engage 9 new staff members, boosting the faculty from 11 to 20. Cape Cod now is authorized to hire 3 full professors, 2 assistant professors, one associate professors, and 3 instructors.

The faculty hiring authorizations in some cases will probably mean in-department promotions, with subsequent vacancies to be filled from the ranks of outstanding young men and women graduating from college this Spring.

In other cases, the institutions will seek outstanding teachers from other colleges. There are no legislative restrictions on how the colleges increase their faculties.

Butterfield Dorm Holds Round-Robin Discussion

A project which has been in the works for approximately one month at Butterfield House was launched Wednesday night when Dean of Students William Field and his wife participated in a round-robin discussion with over fifty residents of the dormitory.

Butterfield's next housemother, Mrs. Regina Capella, who will begin her duties next fall upon the retirement of Mrs. Sally Dirks, was also on hand, along with Mrs. Dirks.

Ranging from technical conversation and discussion of the problems of extended enrollment at the University, to local gossip on campus situations, the hour and one half session, proved to be highly informative and enjoyable for everyone concerned.

Marketing Department To Hold Mix

Not since the explosion of the first Atomic Bomb, has an announcement been made that blends the same scholarship and earth-shaking import as the one that the Department of Marketing has made.

On Wednesday, May 16, at 4:30 p.m., the Marketing Department is heralding its "Fun-Filled Fiesta" more commonly dubbed the Marketing Mix. The place where this event will be held is Dr. Hardy's residence: Harkness Rd., Pelham. For those needing rides, be in front of Draper Hall at 4:30 p.m. Admission for this affair is $1.00 per person.

For $1, marketing majors and their guests will be treated to hot dogs cooked on the spot, potato salad, potato chips, pie, and drinks.

In addition to the food, Scholastic Awards to the Outstanding Student majoring in Marketing and the Student having the Best Record in Retailing will be made. A softball game will be played between the Faculty and Students. The Juniors, coached by Bob Hughes, and the Seniors, coached by Bob Foote, will meet in a head-on clash. Potato sack races, sacks supplied by Ken Livingston, will be held with prizes for the winners.

The highlight of the evening will be a Yoga Postures demonstration by Prof. Robert Drewbear. This demonstration will be followed by folk-singing by Ken Goodman and Ed Radding.

Ed Hammond, provisioner to the Marketing Mix, is looking forward to seeing you there, so make your reservations with Elaine at the Business School Library.

Snakebeaters Drop Big Game To Powerful Amherst Squad

by JEFF DAVIDOW '65, Sports Editor

Before a large Amherst College Spring Weekend crowd the University of Massachusetts varsity lacrosse team suffered its first intercollegiate defeat of the season.

The Amherst squad which has gone undefeated in the New England "B" Division play, proved to be too much for the Redmen snakebeaters as Coach Garber's team was badly beaten by a score of 10-5.

The game was a fairly even one up until the half time break at which time the score was knotted up at five all.

Amherst had been the first to score with two goals early in the first period. However, UMass roared back in the same period to score three goals, two by Redmen offensive standout Jim Ellingwood and one by defensemen Paul Majeski who ran the ball up from the Redmen side of the field and proceeded to put one by the Amherst goalie. Amherst struck back less than twenty-five seconds after Majeski's unassisted goal and tallied once again to the end the first period with the score tied three up.

The second quarter went much the same as the first, with the two teams trading goals back and forth and the period ending with the score Amherst five and UMass five. The Redmen scorers in this stanza were Jim Ellingwood, his third and final goal of the afternoon, and Bob Glew assisted in his efforts by Gordie Wallace, who was playing with a novocained broken toe.

It was in the third period that things began to fall apart for the Redmen, and the partisan Amherst crowd was treated to an overpowering victory by their Lord Jeff squad.

Nothing seemed to go right for the Redmen as they were unable to score for the remainder of the game. Amherst, on the other hand, continued its scoring ways, tallying four in the third period and one more in the fourth to send the UMass team to its first defeat of the season by a score of 10-5.

UMass plays its final game of the season this Saturday, May 19, when the squad travels to UNH to play their New Hampshire counterparts.

UMass Track Bid Fails; Maine Wins

by ABE SHEINKER '62

Maine's powerful track squad came through brilliantly in nearly every event to repeat as Yankee Conference Champions on their home field. The Black Bears rolled up 52⅓ points to easily defeat Rhode Island and UMass, who had 37⅓ and 31 5/6 points, respectively. UConn placed fourth with 26½, Vermont scored 10, and New Hampshire, 7.

The Bears won eight of the 15 events with Junior Pete MacPhee dashing to two records in the sprint. However, these two records, his 9.7 seconds in the 100 and 21 flat in the 220, were disallowed because of the trailing winds. He also placed second in the low hurdles. But the top scorer of the meet was Maine's Bill Blood, who won the hammer, shotput, and discus. Although the Bears' ace weightman, Dick Nason, is out with injuries, Coach Ed Styrna managed to ready Blood for the big meet. Styrna's superb coaching of his throwers has made the difference in recent years. Blood's distances were 170' in the hammer, 48'10" in the shot, and 137' in the discus.

The Bears also had three other stars in the meet. Mike Kimball won the mile in 4:18.5 and took second in the two mile in 9:34. Dave Parker, who is as fast as MacPhee, won the 440 and placed third in the 220. Baron Hicken repeated his high hurdles win the Northearners and lowered the record to 14.7 seconds.

Second place Rhode Island also had some superb performances but lacked the depth to win. The Rams were paced by pole vault record-breaker Bob Patton, who won at 13' ¼" and javelin victor Bob Marshall, who threw the spear 2-2'10½". The Rams placed three men in both the pole vault and the javelin.

UConn's Mel Parsons paced his team with 14 points. The Husky sprinter had a record 23.2 seconds in the low hurdles because of the wind.

The Redmen were not up to it this day as most of the team fell below their normal capabilities. The pre-meet favorites failed to place in the discus where the winning distance was a mediocre 137', and took only seconds in the hammer, high jump, and shotput. Their sprinters and javelin throwers were completely outclassed.

The bright spot for the Redmen shone on Ken O'Brien, who won the 880 in the school and conference record time of 1:52.7. This great performance is not far from the world record of 1:45.9. Teammate Joe LaMarre, who has finally found himself, ran 1:58, although failing to place.

The other UMass stars were Bob Brouillet, who won the two mile in 9:33 and placed fourth in the mile; Bob Avery, who slashed 17 seconds off his best time to take fourth in the two mile; Dave Balch, second in the mile; and Charlie LaPier, who tied for third in the high jump at 5'11".

UMass YanCon Baseball Hopes Shattered By UVM

by STEVE HEWEY '63

UMass hopes of grabbing the 1962 Yankee Conference baseball crown were abruptly shattered over the weekend as the high-riding University of Vermont Catamounts came to town and dumped the Redmen, 6-0 and 4-3, to keep their own Yan Con slate unblemished. The visitors pitted their number one and number two hurlers against the Redmen in the Friday and Saturday afternoon games to run their winning streak to ten games.

In Friday's contest, played under ideal weather conditions, Vermont's DeNiccola was the man in charge all the way. In picking up his seventh victory of the season against no loses, he baffled the Redmen with his assortment of curves and sliders. Although Redmen bats found his stuff good for seven hits, they were well spread out and on no occasion was he in trouble. In fact, the only UMass player to get as far as third was Frank Pisiewski by virtue of his leadoff double in the bottom of the first.

The visiting Catamounts came up with seven hits in the game, and they were well timed. In the top of fourth inning Levi Brown walked and Boutilier singled to right field. Shortstop Nick Carmalli stepped in to the next one and doubled to left field scoring Brown. Boutilier and Carmalli were knocked in on Joe Pare's single to center. UMass hurler Dick Wilson got Mike Benway to go down swinging to end any further threat in that inning.

The long ball produced two more Vt. tallies as Bill Dundle picked up his first home run of the season with no one on in the 5th, and, in the 7th Duke Ducatte unloaded a four bagger for his second of the year. Both circuit clouts were liners that went between left and center and rolled all the way out to the pines in deep left center.

Sophomore Dick Wilson started on the mound for the Redmen and was sailing along until Vermont finally nailed him in the fourth for a trio of runs. The young left hander went seven innings, giving up six runs on seven hits, three of which went for extra bases. He walked only one and struck out four. Rod Corey came on to pitch the eighth and ninth innings for UMass. Corey was excellent in relief and retired the remaining six batters, notching a strikeout along the way.

In picking up his seventh win of the season. DeNiccola had the honor of being the only enemy pitcher to hold the Redmen scoreless in a game this season. He went the entire route, allowing seven scattered softies, striking out four, and walking two.

Second Game

On Saturday afternoon, a crowd of shirt-sleeved fans basked in hot sun and watched the Redmen fold in the ninth and go under 4-3.

Going into the top of the ninth frame, UMass held a slim one run edge over Vermont. Then some rather unusual baseball unfolded. Dick Howe led off with a single to right. Nick Carmalli sacrificed him to second base on a bunt. Wayne Vam, no batting, drew a walk to put runners on first and second with no one out.

Maynard Ducatte stepped up and lifted a long fly to DelVecchio in right. Bill settled under it and all but and all but had it tucked away before it popped from his glove. Howe ended up on third on the play and DelVecchio's throw to Corky Schmoyer cut down Van Ham attempting to go to second. Howe came into score on a passed ball that got by Dave Krukonis to tie the score and Ducatte took second.

Levi Brown coaxed a ball on balls off Elmstrom to put runners on first and second with two away. Ducatte got a big jump on Elmstrom and pilfered third. Then Veromnt attempted the doubdle steal. Brown broke for second and Ducatte for home on the pitch to Bob Sheriff. Krukonis feigned a toss to second and fired to Elmstrom in an attempt to draw Ducatte down on the line. It almost worked. Ducatte would have been nailed cold on Elmstrom's throw to the plate but it never came as Elmstrom dropped the ball for a run-scoring error. The run was the margin of victory.

Batting Around

Vermont coach Ralph LaPointe, Catamount mentor for the past 11 years, kept fans informed of the subtle points of the game with his loud varied comments to his players on the field and on the bench. The tobacco-chewing former infielder of the Cards and Phillies didn't sit still for a minute as he paced back and forth in fornt of the Vermont bench, calling motioning to his boys . . . The Redmen go on the road this week in hopes of halting the current losing streak. Tuesday finds them at Springfield College and on Thursday they travel to Medford for a clash with Tufts University.

Von Braun Predicts 10 Years To Moon

by KAREN BURGESS '64

Dr. Werhner Von Braun, the Director of the National Air and Space Administration (NASA) was the final speaker this year on the Distinguished Visitor's Program. The program took place Monday night in the S.U. ballroom.

Dr. Von Braun stated that America will be able to put a man on the moon within the next decade. The estimated cost of this project is $20 million. In answer to skeptics who ask why man has to go to the moon, Von Braun answered that it pays to satisfy one's curiosity. It is because of this searching that many of our present day discoveries have been made.

The by-products of space exploration are in many ways just as important as the goals. The tremendous growth in communications is a prime example of this. The use of satellites for beaming microwaves from one place to another thousands of miles away offers unlimited possibilities.

The use of the Tyros satellite for weather predictions may renovate the whole system of weather forecasting.

Dr. Von Braun stressed the fact that man cannot be replaced by machinery in the space age. Nothing automatic can compare with the human or the human brain in coping with the unexpected. Man's role as an equipment monitor and repairman on a space flight is practically indispensible considering the rate at which equipment breaks down in a flight.

In giving a reason for this all-out effort in space exploration, Von Braun stated "Nothing is stronger than an idea whose time has come."

More Events Planned For Centennial

The UMass Centennial in 1963 will not be a centennial just in name—but in spirit, too. That is, if the Student Centennial Committee has anything to say about it.

The Class of 1963 has proven its awareness of added responsibility and benefits that go along with being a centennial class. So far this year they have had the most financially successful Winter Carnival in the history of the university, have had the highest demand for class rings, and have sold over the quota of class blazers with the "centennial" insignia.

This time they've done even more than they expected. They have collected three hundred dollars, amounting to three one-hundred dollar scholarships, from practically nothing.

Through the co-operation of the Marlboro Company, a contest involving every dormitory and house on campus, was set up. From these sources, 112,000 Marlboro boxes were collected, and the cigarette company paid one fourth of a cent on each box returned.

The fact that the co-operation from all houses was above and beyond any call of duty was enough to convince Centennial Committee Chairman John Gounaris '63 that his class was indeed spirited.

"It was gratifying," said Gounaris, "to see the spirit displayed in the contest. This is the first of many Centennial-sponsored events. By the spirit shown thus far, we can see we must continue in this vein."

A few of the activities which Gounaris referred to, which are being planned for next year, are:

The possibility of a joint program or joint events with Boston College, a private Catholic institution which is also holding its Centennial next year.

A booklet, put out by the Panhellenic and I.F.C. Councils, which will be dedicated to the Centennial, and will describe sorority and fraternity histories with pictures.

A Centennial booklet, now in the publishing stages, of the history of the whole University from the Agricultural College of its

SWAP Conference To Be Held In Fall; Applications Due Friday

The fifth annual Student Workshop on Activities Problems (SWAP) will be held on September 7, 8, and 9, at the Oak 'n Spruce Country Club at South Lee, Mass. This is the weekend just before Fall registration.

Over seventy delegates from UMass organizations attended last year's conference in mid-May. Objectives then were to solve campus problems in various areas, to allow student leaders to mix and meet each other, and to allow the student leaders to meet faculty. The same general format will be followed in September.

All delegates are reminded by the SWAP Planning Committee that they must be able to arrive at UMass, for the conference, no later than Friday morning, September 2, 1962.

The SWAP Planning Committee consists of: Gerry Anderson '64, Chairman; Barbara Cushing '63, Secretary; Andy D'Avanzo '63, Treasurer; Bob Austin '64; Howie Wainstein '63; Lee Wilcox '64; Jim Medeiros '64. Faculty advisors are Dr. Dana Harlow of the Dept. of Recreation and William Burkhardt, Assistant Dean of Men.

Any organization that is planning to send a delegate and cannot obtain the necessary funds before the deadline, should contact Andy D'Avanzo in Wheeler as soon as possible.

Any organization wishing to send a delegate, that has not yet filled out an application form, must leave a note in the SWAP box at RSO immediately. The final deadline has been extended to Friday, May 18, but no more delegates will be accepted after this date. A transfer of funds ($25 per person) should be made concurrently when the names of the delegates are submitted.

Any student or faculty organization may submit topics for discussion at SWAP by leaving them in the SWAP box #305, in the RSO office in the S.U., before May 18. All suggestions are welcome.

Among the topics discussed at last year's SWAP meeting were: the Fine Arts Council, the Student Union, student leadership as expressed in student government, the Centennial Program, crowded dormitories, curriculum, scholastic advisors, a redefinition of the Greek role on campus, student taxing, communications, interdormitory councils. Specific recommendations were made in many areas for the improvement of the University.

Psychiatrist To Discuss Analysis

A psychiatrist who sometimes treats seriously disturbed persons by pretending he is a psychotic himself will speak at UMass on Wednesday, May 16, at 8 p.m.

Dr. John N. Rosen, clinical professor of psychiatry at Temple University Medical Center, will speak on "New Concepts in the Theory and Practice of Direct Psychoanalysis" in Room 61 of Bartlett Hall. His talk is sponsored by the University's Psychology Department and is open to the public without charge.

Dr. Rosen, working without the use of drugs, surgery, or other physical methods, claims full restoration of normal functioning

CAPS 'N' GOWNS

Seniors' caps and gowns are being distributed for A-M this week in Memorial Hall. Hours are 10-12 and 3-5 each day, and 6-8 tonight for Nurses and Practice Teachers. Next week, N-Z will be given out at the same hours.

W.P.E. Green Is New Graduation Location

One of the most important changes taking place in this year's Commencement exercises will be a change of location. The June 10 ceremonies will be held on the green north of the Women's Physical Education Building.

For the last two years Commencement has been held on the lawn east of the Student Union, and for years before that on the big green in front of Goodell Library.

Two Reasons For Change

The change was made for two reasons. First of all, the W.P.E. area is larger and can more readily accommodate the increasing number of spectators. Then, the sun factor has to be considered. At both the Goodell and S.U. sites the chairs and bleachers were always facing west, thus directly into the afternoon sun. In the new area, the chairs will be placed facing south, so that the sun will not be directly in the eyes of either spectators or platform party.

The other big change taking place this year is in the Processional. Instead of marching in one line, students will break up into two lines, thereby halving the time usually necessary for the Processional.

After robing, students will proceed to the formation area which will be immediately to the east of the seating area. Students will line up in four columns. The columns will consist of:

COLUMN ONE (closest to seating area)
School of Education (Jean Havey, Marshal)
School of Home Economics (Alice Edgerton, Marshal)
School of Nursing (Jane Given, Marshal)
School of Phys. Ed. (Joel Lerner, Marshal)

COLUMN TWO (two paces east of #1)
College of Arts and Sciences, B.A. Degrees (Charles Curtis, Marshal)

COLUMN THREE (15 feet east of #2)
Ph.D. Degree Candidates
Masters Degree Candidates
College of A&S, B.S. Degrees (Deborah Read, Marshal)
College of Agriculture (Jeffrey Hall, Marshal)

COLUMN FOUR (2 paces east of #3)
School of Engineering (Fred Karshick, Marshal)
School of Business (Bernard Schultz, Marshal)

IN ADDITION, ALL MEMBERS OF THE COLLEGE OF ARTS AND SCIENCES, B.A. AND B.S. DEGREES, MUST LINE UP IN ALPHABETICAL ORDER.

Watch Guide Signs

There will be many guide signs throughout the formation area to aid students in getting lined up correctly. However, Bernard

Carry A 'Big Stick'

"The silent generation," stated the New York Times, "has found a voice."

All over the United States students are joining the various alphabet soup (YAF to SPAD) groups concerned with political and social issues. Our own campus has seen the formation of Synthesis and Young Americans for Freedom and the rejuvenation of both the Young Republican's Club and the Young Democrat's Club.

The groups run from one extreme to the other, but most of them do have one point in common—they are extreme. Campus Republicans profess that our nation is far too radical, and campus Democrats claim that we are too conservative. Activist groups on the left have gone to the left of President Kennedy's "New Frontier", and those on the right are at least on line with Senator Goldwater and perhaps have even swung right by him.

Looking at this from our own campus, one may reflect on the value of these student movements. First, what can these groups accomplish? They can not seem to topple governments as some foreign universities are capable of doing. (We will only pause here to note that despite our position, be it ahead or behind of Russia in the arms race, our government is not about to topple.)

The students who are members of these groups are at least taking positive stands on the important issues of our day. They are not sitting back and saying "Wha can I do about it?"

Many of these students are not yet old enough to vote in elections, and yet they carry a "big stick." They draw attention to our nation's problems. The headlines they rate in the papers make others think about these problems.

In the fifties our campus was almost lifeless with respect to political activity. The leaders of our nation were pleading for student reaction to issue so that the graduating seniors could come out of school and at least vote intelligently. Who would become the leaders of tomorrow if no one took an interest? Today they do take an interest.

Admittedly, the percentage of students involved in these groups is small. Yet compared with ten years ago a great stride has been taken, and the movement seems to be growing. The student who participates in an organization of this sort may be attacked from many sides, but never for being apathetic.

Synthesis or YAF will never topple the government of our nation (nor do we imply that they desire to do so), but they do represent the kind of positive action which in the long run is good for the nation.

N.C.A.

The Real Issue

Early this week the State Senate defeated, by a 12-10 vote (where were all the other Senators when voting on such an important issue was taking place?) a bill to repeal application of the Blue Laws to Columbus and Veteran's Days.

The Boston Herald estimated that this will cost the state about $50 million in business which will be lost to neighboring states. The rather mundane subject of money is not really too important when one considers the real issue at hand—will we have classes on these days?

Senate President John E. Powers has announced that he will ask the Senate to reconsider the measure. If this is voted Mr. Powers is reported to be seeking the tabling of this bill. But if the situation remains as it is now, the Blue Laws are in effect on the above mentioned holidays, and the University will not hold classes.

If the motion is tabled we don't know what will happen, but it seems certain that some one on the scheduling committee will have a nervous breakdown.

'YOU MAY, GOOD FRIENDS, BE LISTED TOO.'

A recent opinion survey included a question about attitudes on the threat of Communism: is it the greatest problem facing the world today, is the Communist movement gaining strength in the Western world, and is the greatest threat from Communism to America from within the United States itself, or from the so-called Communist block of nations? The survey has not yet been completed, but the fact that such questions as these are considered of importance is indicative of the situation facing us today.

In this country, Communism seems to be suspected as the cause of anything "off beat."Any form of socialist or communal living becomes suspect; this includes teen-age summer work camps, the Israeli kibbutz, the co-op food market, and nudist colonies. And of course everyone distrusts folklore study groups, folk-dancers, folk-singers, pacifists, political scientists, anyone who signs Marx and Engel's Communist Manifesto out at the library, people who wear beards or sandals, integrationists, radicals, liberals, conservatives, labor leaders, people who own Russian wolf hounds or subscribe to U.S.S.R., beat poets, sick comedians, anyone not in favor of resumption of nuclear testing, peace marchers, and people who drink vodka or borscht. Even students who sign up for "Russian 1" are not completely free of suspicion.

Don't think that this is any small issue. The U.S Government Printing Office publishes a 250-page book entitled Guide to Subversive Organizations and Publications, prepared by the House Un-American Activities Committee, and revised just a few months ago. The introduction includes a detailed definition of what the committee considers subversive and what a "Communist front" is and how it operates. The guide includes in its listing some of the most innocuous-sounding organizations imaginable, such as the Cervantes Fraternal Society, the Peace Information Center, the Ohio School of Social Sciences, the Almanac Singers, the National Lawyers' Guild, and Boston's New Theatre Group. Listed publications include Facts for Farmers, Youth Review, World Student News, the Working Woman, and the Anti-Nazi News. As for religious "front organizations," nearly all faiths are represented, from the Jewith Culture Society and the Protestant War Veterans to San Diego's First Unitarian Church and such publications as the Protestant Digest and Orthodox Jewish Life. Naturally, the Ku Klux Klan is included as subversive; however, despite all the recent scandal, the Ivan Birchkov—I mean, the John Birch Society has managed to remain unlisted.

It's almost as though it has become the vogue to accuse people of Communist activities or affiliations . . . particularly when things are beginning to grow dull. But the apalling aspect is the horrible stigma attached to the charge; many Americans would much rather be accused of murder, plagiarism, theft, incest, or even income tax evasion rather than be charged with having Communist affiliations. Consequently, this is becoming the most popular method of slander. Accusations and counter-accusations are hurled back and forth across the pages of our country's leading newspapers. And not far behind, hovering like a flock of vultures or stealthily like a cat ready to pounce, you can always find the House Un-American Activities Committee probing eagerly for more names to add to its list. Well, at least it gives the members something to do to keep themselves busy, and it does keep them off the streets.

Where is this thing going to stop? Almost everyone these days is acting as a self-appointed undercover agent for the F.B.I. . . . or at least a member of the D.A.R. or the American Legion. These vigilantes set out to investigate all "radicals" who might own a Paul Robeson record, subscribe to the New Republic, or mail UNICEF cards. And of course anyone seen wearing long hair or drinking espresso, cappuccino, or cheap beer is being carefully watched—not to mention people who like Russian dressing on their salads!

However someone more ambitious than I has managed to have the last word on this topic. This is the Rev. Thurston N. Davis, editor-in-chief of America, who has summed up the situation very neatly in couplet form:

I sometimes fancy as I spy
That I excel the F.B.I.

Right now I'm making little lists
Of folks I think are Communists.

I have no proof on anyone,
And yet the lists are lots of fun.

All friends of foreign aid, I think,
Must be set down as rather pink.

A little pinker, not far off,
I list, perforce, the college prof,

And pinker yet, the student crowd
That lauds the Bill of Rights out loud.

U.N. supporters, as I've said
Are also ipso facto red;

And redder still, on my red lists,
Are all the integrationists.

Just for good measure, in my labors,
I add a few of my close neighbors.

Thus I rejoice that loyalty
Resides alone in you and me—

Although, before my work is through,
You may, good friend, be listed too.

. . . TURNING OUT MEDIUM-SIZED NOODLES

To the Editor:

The Honors Convocation last week and the subsequent issue of the Collegian were enough to make this departing senior sick. The pause to praise ourselves is hardly justified if one takes a second to open his eyes to the true horror in its entirety. Let's face it—UMass is a dedicated spaghetti factory turning out medium-sized noodles. That the student attitude is non-intellectual is an old theme, but the contribution of the administration has been far from ideal.

The presence on this campus of teachers who allow personality to play a role in the marking system, while deplorable, is a small atrocity beside those who grade on the basis of race and creed. The presently proposed modification of the tenure system is but a slow and half-hearted attempt at quality; its complete abolishment would be the greatest step forward the University could take. Beyond this, a student published annual review of the faculty could accomplish wonders.

Another area where the serious student loses out is in the grading system. If an A means something, why not say so? The professor who doesn't believe there's a student alive good enough to get an A is not balanced off by his opposite, at whom I confess I have trouble getting as irritated, except in the case of the average student.

The present honors program, except for the senior, is a belated effort, begun only by the prodding of the Carnegie Foundation, encompassing not one-tenth of those it should. Representing the closest approach to the tutorial system which can be conceived with our indecent faculty-student ratio (due to get worse next year), it should be available to all who want to venture into the considerations of broad problems and ideas basic to more than one subject or course. However, we are promised progress here; at least there's one ray of light.

The administration's priority system for expenditure of funds is a constant source of wonder. The most recently announced addition to the physical plant is an example of the millions-for-prestige-but-not-one - penny - for - a-new-book attitude. But screams have come from every sector of the campus for at least the four years I've been here bewailing the worst library in the world; I can add nothing.

The new dormitories, a revolution in atmosphere for UMass, promise to be a far more stimulating environment, but we understand they are to be opened to the rich. And, finally, as a last strike against the student here for more than 120 credits, we have next door or across the hall teh major who need not spend more than one night a week from the Drake.

There is a difference between the students with honors and the honors students; there will always be a certain percentage of the former, but of the latter we can never have enough. To the administration I plead, "Please take your finger off the medium-sized noodle button."

Operetta Guild To Present "Guys And Dolls" Next Fall

At its Awards Dinner Dance at the Schine Inn last Friday, the Executive Board of The Operetta Guild announced the name of The Guild's fifteenth anniversary musical production. The University Music Theatre organization will produce Frank Loesser's "Guys and Dolls" next October 11, 12, 13 and 14.

With music and lyrics by Frank Loesser the book was written by Jo Swerling and Abe Burrows.

The campus production staff includes Prof. Doric J. Alviani as musical director and Paul A. Cwiklik, Guild Manager, as stage director. "Guys and Dolls" is the famed Drama Critics' Circle Award Musical based on a story and characters by Damon Runyon.

Miss Sarah Brown is in charge of the Save-a-Soul Mission near Times Square and she holds street-corner meetings in the same vicinity where Nathan Detroit and his cronies (Nicely-Nicely Johnson, Benny South-street, Rusty Charlie, Harry the Horse, Angie the Ox, etc.) hang out.

Nathan is the operator of a floating crap game that at the moment is temporarily homeless because Officer Branigan is waging a campaign on crap games in this neighborhood.

Miss Adelaide, a singer at the Hot Box, is tired of her fourteen year engagement to Nathan and wants him to go legit and marry her.

If Nathan can raise $1000 he can get a place to hold his game and the town is full of anxious crap shooters looking for action. He hits upon an idea.

Sky Masterson is passing through town on his way to Havana and Nathan knows Sky will bet on almost anything. Nathan tricks Sky into a bet whereby Nathan says that he can name a "doll" that will not go to Havana with Sky. Sky is sure of himself, not only with gambling but with women, and takes the bet. Nathan names Miss Sarah!

Auditions for the production will be held in Room 10 of Old Chapel on Wednesday and Thursday afternoons, May 16 and 17 from 2 to 4 p.m. and again on Thursday evening from 7 to 9 p.m. Actors, singers, dancers as well as technical crews should register at this time. All roles and committee designations will be made before the end of the semester.

CRAM COURSE NO. 5: SHAKESPEARE

Continuing our series of pre-final exam cram courses, today we take up the works of William Shakespeare (or "The Bard of Avon" as he is jocularly called).

First let us examine the persistent theory that Shakespeare (or "The Pearl of the Antilles" as he is affectionately referred to) is not the real author of his plays. Advocates of this theory insist that the plays are so full of classical allusions and learned references that they couldn't possibly have been written by the son of an illiterate country butcher.

To which I reply, "Faugh!" Was not the great Spinoza's father a humble woodcutter? Was not the immortal Isaac Newton's father a simple second baseman? (The elder Newton, incidentally, is one of history's truly pathetic figures. He was, by all accounts, the greatest second baseman of his time, but baseball, alas, had not yet been invented.) It used to break young Isaac's heart to see his father get up every morning, put on uniform, spikes, glove, and cap, and stand alertly behind second base, bent forward, eyes narrowed, waiting, waiting, waiting. That's all—waiting. Isaac loyally sat in the bleachers and yelled, "Good show, Dad!" and stuff like that, but everyone else in town used to snigger and pelt the Newtons with overripe fruit—figs for the elder Newton, apples for the younger. Thus, as we all know, the famous occasion came about when Isaac Newton, struck in the head with an apple, leapt to his feet, shouted, "Europa!" and announced the third law of motion: "For every action there is an opposite and equal reaction!"

(How profoundly true these simple words are! Take, for example, Marlboro Cigarettes. Light one. That's the action. Now what is the reaction? Pleasure, delight, contentment, cheer, and comfort! And why such a happy reaction? Because you have started with a happy cigarette—a felicitous blend of jolly tobaccos, a good-natured filter, a rollicking flip-top box, a merry soft pack. As Newton often said, "You begin with better makin's, you end with better smokin's." Small wonder they called him "The Swedish Nightingale!").

But I digress. Back to Shakespeare (or "The Gem of the Ocean" as he was ribaldly appelated).

Shakespeare's most important play is, of course, Hamlet (or Macbeth, as it is sometimes called). This play tells in living color the story of Hamlet, Prince of Denmark, who one night sees a ghost upon the battlements. (Possibly it is a goat he sees: I have a first folio edition that is frankly not too legible.) Anyhow, Hamlet is so upset by seeing the ghost (or goat) that he stabs Polonius and Bare Bodkin. He is thereupon banished to a leather factory by the King, who cries, "Get thee to a tannery!" Thereupon Ophelia refuses her food until Laertes shouts, "Get thee to a beanery!" Ophelia is so miffed that she chases her little dog out of the room, crying, "Out, out damned Spot!" She is fined fifty shillings for swearing, but Portia, in an eloquent plea, gets the sentence commuted to life imprisonment. Thereupon King Lear and Queen Mab proclaim a festival—complete with amateur theatricals, kissing games, and a pie-eating contest. Everyone has a perfectly splendid time till Banquo's ghost (or goat) shows up. This so unhinges Richard III that he drowns his cousin, Butt Malmsey. This leads to a lively discussion during which everyone is killed. The little dog Spot returns to utter the immortal curtain lines:

Alack, the play forsooth was sad and sobby,
But be of cheer—there's Marlboros in the lobby!

As the slings and arrows of outrageous finals loom closer, perchance the makers of Marlboro are not untoward to offer this friendly suggestion: Get thee to a library!

Pops Concert Presented By Concert Band

Favored by clear skies and warm temperatures, the sixty piece UMass Concert Band presented its annual Spring Pops Concert Sunday evening under the direction of Prof. Joseph Contino, on the South Terrace of the S.U.

Always one of the band's most popular performances, this year's concert featured light classical selections as Von Suppe's Light Cavalry Overture, popular highlights from George Gershwin's Porgy and Bess, and John Philip Sousa's traditional Stars and Stripe Forever. Student conductor Daniel Roseman '63 directed the band in Walter's American Folk Suite and Five Ostinati, composed by John Maggs 63.

The clarinet section of the band was featured in Confrey's Dizzy Fingers, while trumpeters Richard Kmon '64, Esther Eisenberg '65, and Dennis Morrissey '64 formed a trio to play Leroy Anderson's Bugler's Holiday. The Official West Point March, by Lt. Philip Egner, and Johann Strauss' march Radetzky added a martial air to the concert.

Sunday's performance marked the final presentation of the Concert Band for this semester and concluded Professor Contino's twelfth year as head of University Bands.

Stockbridge Senior Wins First Place In Speech Contest

"Dairy farmers always had to have vision—not based on the hard times they were going through—but the vision that made them look and plan ahead despite their inability to see the future."

This was the gist of a talk won John W. Brown first place in the Nathaniel I. Bowditch Speaking Contest for agricultural students last Wednesday at UMass.

A Stockbridge School senior in animal science, Brown traced the history of dairymen from the Civil War and through this country's depressions to win a $25 award for his "Faith in the Future" speech.

Second place in the contest and $15 went to Raymond Woodis for his talk on "Are We Wasting Our Money in Foreign Aid?"

Redmen Baseball Squad Edges Springfield, 2-1

by STEVE HEWEY '63

The University of Massachusetts, led by the 17 strike-out performance of Carl Elmstrom, edged Springfield College, 2-1, Tuesday afternoon in a non-conference class at the Maroon's diamond. The win put an end to the three game losing streak compiled by the Redmen in the past week of play.

Again as in past contests the UMass nine did not produce an abundance of hits. Springfield limited the Redmen to only five safeties in Tuesday's contest but they were not wasted by the Redmen.

Springfield was the first to score, combining a walk given up by Elmstrom, a sacrifice, and a single to push across the first run of the game in the third inning.

The lead was of short duration, however, as the Earl Lorden coached UM squad took advantage of a pair of errors by the Springfield shortstop in the fourth frame to go ahead to stay, 2-1.

Captain Frank Pisiewski continued to spark the Massachusetts nine as he went two-for-four in the Springfield game. Rounding out the remaining hitters hitters were catcher Ted Osetek, leftfielder Kenny Clark, and pitcher Carl Elmstrom. Elmstrom's hit was a two-bagger.

Elmstrom's strike-out barrage of seventeen is a game high for any UMass hurler this season. He ran into some difficulty in the bottom of the ninth inning and Rod Corey was called in to preserve the victory.

Thursday finds the Redmen gunning for victory number twelve of the season when they take the field against Tufts University at Medford.

ATTENTION: CLASS OF '65

Let's keep up our good record as the most active class on campus. Attend the class meeting tomorrow, May 17, in the Student Union Ballroom at 11:00 o'clock.

On the agenda will be:

1. Sophomore Executive Council
2. Soph-Frosh night
3. Sophomore banquet
4. Ratification of the class constitution.

Kosakowski's Netsters Capture Yankee Conference Tennis Title

by DAVE PODBROS '65

A greatly improved UMass varsity tennis squad overtook favored Rhode Island to win the Yankee Conference title, at Storrs, Conn., May 11 and 12. In a tremendous team effort, sparked by key wins by Doug Pearsall and Fred Murray, the team ended with a total of 22 points, seven ahead of second place Rhode Island.

In singles play, Rodger Twitchell won the first spot, becoming not only a record holder in basketball, but also number one in the Yankee Conference in tennis. Tom Simons, who played top tennis throughout the tournament, defeated his opponent, from UConn, to win the number two honors. Simons had lost to his UConn opponent when UMass had a match with Connecticut during the season. This time, however, he defeated him 6-3, 6-4.

Along with Twitchell and Simons, Tom Mendel and Dick Leete, also went "All the way", in their respective positions. Mendel won spot number five defeating Gray of Rhode Island, 6-3, 7-5, and Leete, playing tennis which showed a marked improvement, defeated his UConn opponent, 8-10, 6-2, 6-2. Leete, like Simons, had lost to his opponent when UMass played Connecticut during the season.

It was in the doubles that UMass experienced its only heartbreak of the conference. Twitchell and Leete teamed up to play first doubles and lost this match, in three sets, to Rhode Island. However, the loss was somewhat overshadowed by wins in the second and third doubles. Simons and Murray, in number two doubles, won a three set match, 3-6, 6-3, 6-4. And Mendel and Pearsall, in number three doubles, after being defeated 1-6 in the first set, by a University of Maine doubles team, returned to win the next two sets with a brilliant 6-3, 6-1 score. By the time the loss of the first doubles was recorded, Coach Kosakowskis netmen had already won the Yankee Conference title for the seventh year since 1954.

The next match for the squad is at Springfield College, May 16, at 4:00 p.m. The freshmen have a match at 3:00 p.m.

H.S. Football Clinic

Head Football Coach Vic Fusia has announced that the first annual UMass football coaching clinic will be held on May 27th on the State University campus.

"Although this clinic has been planned primarily for Western Massachusetts high school coaches all sessions are open to the general public and anyone else who wants to attend," Coach Fusia stated.

"Our emphasis will be on good fundamental football and there will be several field demonstrations as well as movies and lecture periods conducted primarily by the Massachusetts staff," the Redmen head mentor concluded.

Expansion In Baseball

In 1961, the Major Leagues were forced into expansion by both the now defunct Continental League and by its own desire to gain back some of its lost prominence as America's National Pastime.

Expansion grew out of Branch Rickey's Continental League, which had a primary goal of bringing another major league team to New York. Although the league never got off the ground, it caused both circuits to expand. New American League teams were placed in Washington and Los Angeles, while the National League set up in Houston and New York.

There are many more unfamiliar names in baseball today. Many of these players would not have big league jobs were it not for the expansion. The folks with these new franchises had to put forth more than $2 million for the right to draw from the players' pool, set up by the established clubs. The American League let players go for $75,000 while the National League raised the price to $125,000 for premium ball players.

It is obvious that the entire league was weakened to some degree, with the emphasis placed on depleted pitching staffs. This lack of good pitching and the extended 162 game schedule caused the big argument over Roger Maris' 61 home runs.

It seems as though people have been too concerned over whether the placing of the "asterisk" on Maris' record by Commissioner Ford Frick was the right or wrong thing to do.

This should not be one of the primary concerns of baseball fans. With the ever-present expansion program, it is important that the league become better balanced. Although the calibre of baseball cannot be improved or even remain the same with expansion and greater distribution of talent, it is very possible that the league will become more balanced.

What is one team's loss in a player's pool is another team's gain. Good players come and go. With more ballplayers, though of lesser ability, reshuffling of farm systems, an increase in college players, and more restricted signing rules, the major leagues within 10 years should have a greater balance from top to bottom.

Expansion has not stopped. Most experts feel that within the next 5 years there will be 24 teams, and that eventually there will be 3 or 4 divisions.

Baseball has come a long way since 1903. It had gone through relatively few changes until the 1950's when teams began moving to different cities. Now at the beginning of the 1960's, baseball has spread from coast to coast. It will eventually encompass many more sections of the United States and thus, will have a more legitimate claim to be called—America's National Pastime.

Golf Team Now 6-4; Meets Trinity Today

by AL COHEN '63

This year's edition of Varsity Golf Team under the direction of Coach Chester Gladchuk has compiled a creditable 6-4 record. Spearheaded by the fine play of Captain Barry Schmoyer, the only senior on the squad, the Redmen teed off with an opening victory over Lowell Tech.

After dropping a match to New Hampshire, Coach Gladchuk's charges came back with wins over Vermont and A.I.C. They then fell before W.P.I., Connecticut, and Rhode Island. A trip to the New Englands proved futile, with none of the Redmen qualifying for the final match play. R.P.I., Springfield, and Amherst have since been added to the list of Redmen victims.

Backing up Captain Schmoyer are five steadily improving juniors. They are Charles Noble, Tom Kinne, Tom Foley, Harry Morrisey, and Tom Nevhils. Two sophomores, Bill O'Donnell and Jack Mahoney, show promise for big years next spring.

Monday's match with Brandeis having been rained out, the linksmen now look forward to their season's windup against Trinity College. This is an away game and will be played today, May 16th.

New Twist In Fort Lauderdale Gets Approval From Officials

In the wake of the spring visitation of 30,000 college students, Fort Lauderdale tallied the box score and confirmed what it already knew—that a new "twist" served to make the 1962 migration here a happy occasion for all.

Municipal officials and civic leaders, jubilant that the orderly conduct of undergraduates was something to write home about this spring, credit the student response to planned entertainment and recreation for reversing the pattern of consternation which developed a year ago.

"Our young visitors and our public spirited citizens deserve equal plaudits for the new vacation script," declared Mayor Edmund R. Burry. "It was an unqualified success."

A volunteer organization of 350 community leaders, supported by the municipal administration, came up with the program that met with the favor of the students at night as well as during the daylight hours.

The big hit was dancing the "twist" in a special beach area restricted to collegians only. Live music was furnished from the $11,400 entertainment fund appropriated by the city and administered by a civic committee headed by Dr. Clem E. Bininger, Presbyterian minister. The dancing attracted thousands nightly.

By day the students engaged in tugs o' war, volley ball, swimming races and other competitive events offered by the city recreation department. Winners received merchandise prizes. This phase of the program was so successful there was a constant clamor for continued contests.

In order to participate in the day and night activities, collegians were registered at "hello" booths manned by community volunteers, nearly 20,000 students and residents alike. Continuation of the program next spring is a foregone conclusion.

Peace Corps Shows Results After A Year Of Success

A year after its inception, the United States Peace Corps has almost 600 volunteers working overseas, with another 200 training at home and some 18,000 applications on file.

It has not had the unqualified success that some predicted for it, but neither has it been the catastrophic failure that others feared it would be. Rather, it has established itself as an effective force for international good will.

Most closely watched of all Peace Corps programs is the community-development project in Colombia. Unlike other Corpsmen who are basically teachers, Colombia's 62 PC'ers are pioneers who work at chores that range from building roads to teaching sanitation to people who have never seen a flush toilet.

Aided by the support of President Alberto Lleras Camargo and of the powerful Roman Catholic Church, Colombia's Corpsmen have earned the trust of the people they work with despite Communist charges that they are preparing the country for sale to the United States.

But if the Corpsmen have proven themselves abroad, they are still controversial here at home. Opposite views are epitomized by University of Chicago historian Daniel Boorstein, who characterizes the Corps as another "demonstration "of both American naivete and arrogance," and by New York University psychologist Morris Stein, who says: "These kids represent something many of us thought had disappeared from America—the old frontier spirit."

PC Director Sargent Shriver readily admits that mistakes have been made, but argues: "The fact is that the project works and the job is being done."

Final Senate Meeting Will Be Held Tonight

The Student Senate meets tonight for the final time this year, 1961-62. Presiding will be the new Senate pro tempore President, Donald Cournoyer.

On the agenda is S30: Whereas student government today does not have adequate communication with the student body, and

Whereas all matters handled by the student government cannot be reported to the student body by the present communications media, and

Whereas it is of the utmost importance that the student body have an accurate and comprehensive account available to it of all student government affairs and actions so as to establish a closer understanding of the operations of student government and of the Acts and Resolves affecting the student body,

It is urged by the Senate that students make an effort to attend this last meeting, at 7 p.m. tonight in the Council Chambers.

"Dollars For Scholars" Helps Put Students Through College

A rapidly-spreading idea to raise "dollars for scholars" is offering American communities a new approach to the problem of providing scholarships for deserving students. More than 100 towns and cities are using "homegrown" scholarships to help bright needy students gain a foothold in college.

"Dollars for Scholars"—more formally known as the Citizens' Scholarship Foundation of America—is the brainchild of Dr. Irving A. Fradkin, a Fall River, Mass. optometrist. Concerned because lack of finances was keeping many bright youngsters out of college, Dr. Fradkin in 1958 convinced skeptical Fall River leaders to launch a community scholarship drive.

Contributions came from sales of one-dollar "membership" from religious, civic and business groups, from working men and students. Some $4500 was collected and awarded to 24 outstanding high school seniors.

Typical Citizens' Scholarship Foundation grants are small, usually around $250 a year. They are designed to help a youngster get established rather than to pay his way.

The success of the Fall River program has spread to other communities in a way that delights Dr. Fradkin. He estimates that by next June there will be more than 100 CSF chapters in 30 states, awarding 1500 scholarships with a total value of $750,000. All CSF scholarships are no strings-attached gifts, although recipients are encouraged to repay the funds if and when they can.

As education costs continue to soar and as a college education is more and more the key to a rewarding career, the CSF idea offers every community an exciting opportunity to increase its stake in its own future and that of its young people. As Dr. Fradkin puts it:

"It's the communities themselves that stand to gain the most. Year after year, they will be enriched by the return of young men and women they've helped through college."

Blood Money

A sophomore couple at Southern Methodist University had been dating steadily. They had Coke dates, coffee dates, even hamburger dates, but nothing more elaborate because the young man was on a limited budget. Then one day the girl happily reported to her mother, "He's taking me out to dinner tonight—he sold a pint of blood today for $20."

J. D.'s CORNER

Some people have apparently become confused as to the type of column I'm writing. I can't quite classify it, but it was never intended to be an "Ann Landers" or "Dear Abby" advice column. Nonetheless, I have an accumulation of letters written by readers with problems, and so today I'm going to do my best to reply to a few of them:

Dear Uncertain:

Of course there's no reason why you should not date your ethics professor. Your academic and social worlds are two entirely different spheres: outside of the classroom, there is no reason to maintain your academic relation. Thirty years is really not such a great difference in ages, and if his wife ever found out, I'm sure she would be perfectly understanding. However, I do think you would be wise to conceal your dates with him from your roommate, whom, you have said, is his daughter.

J.D.

Dear Bob:

If that was meant to be a proposition, forget it!

J.D.

Dear Disgusted:

There's a very simple solution to your problem. No one should have to tolerate B. O. from a filthy grub of a roommate. One evening simply spread the rumor that she has become pinned. Out of sheer jealousy, when she returns to the dorm, all of the girls on your corridor will drag her, kicking and screaming, into the bathroom and throw her into the shower.

Repeat as often as necessary.

Murphy, President of the Class of 1962, warns that even with signs the lining up procedure will be highly complicated.

It is, therefore, highly necessary that all prospective graduates co-operate by making themselves aware of what they are required to do during the Processional.

"Newly-tapped Adelphians and Maroon Keys will be supervising the formation," comments Murphy, "and I sincerely hope that seniors give them the assistance and co-operation necessary for efficient movement of the Processional. They can do this by making sure they know exactly where they're supposed to be lining up and by arriving at the formation area on time."

IS YODA CLUTCH HERE?

Soon We'll Be Able To Telephone Alone

by DIANA D'INDIA '64

Phone troubles? Have you recently waited, and waited, and waited . . . for a telephone call, or for the use of a telephone?

According to Student Senator Dennis Patnaude, Chairman of the Senate Public Relations Committee, "Students can look forward to a greatly improved communications system next year."

Students will be able to make on-campus calls next year free of charge. A suggestion for the installation of no-pay extension telephones in the dormitories was made by Dean of Students, Dr. Field, said Patnaude.

During the summer a minimun of two extension telephones will be installed in each dormitory. These phones will not be connected to an outside line. They will be used only for inter-dorm calls. A total of 56 phones will be installed. The preesnt dormitory pay-phones will remain for off-campus calls.

Dr. Field suggested the use of funds from the Student Tax to cover the cots of the additional phone service if the UMass budget will not allow for the expense, said Patnaude.

The UMass budget does not contain the new expense, since it had already been sent to Boston when the proposal for additional phones was accepted. Future budgets will include the additional phone expense.

If one call a day is made on each phone, the students will save over $1400, estimated Patnaude. The Telephone Company will charge $2.25 per month for each extension phone.

The extension phones will be installed in booths or shields to insure a measure of privacy.

A dormitory desiring to obtain still more phones may do so through the Student Senate.

Another new feature coming to UMass next year is private phone service. All future dormitories will contain wiring to provide for a phone in each room. Two men's dormitories currently under constructoin will have this feature. Already constructed dormitories will not be provided with individual phone service because of the

Mass. House Passes University Autonomy Bill By Vote Of 54-23

by ANN MILLER '61

Fiscal Autonomy for UMass passed the House yesterday by voice vote of 54-23.

In effect, the bill gives the University a lump sum budget each year and unlike other agencies would be free to use the funds as it sees fit. There also would be no restrictions on transfer of funds between susbidiary accounts. The House passed the bill after attempts to kill it, amend it, and pospone it failed.

The House ways and means committee reported favorably Tuesday on the autonomy bills for UMass (H 3350) and for Lowell Technologicai Institute (S726)

Speaker of the House John F. Thompson of Ludlow issued the following statement about the bill on Wednesday:

"I am pleased that the House Committee on Ways and Means without dissent has reported favorably on H3350, the UMass fiscal autonomy bill

"In my judgment, the passage of this measure which is before the House for action tomorrow will represent a milestone in the historical evolution of the University of Massachusetts in its relationship with state government. The grant of greater self-management powers to the trustees of the University which is embodied in the proposal will enable the University of Massachusetts to assert the fullest measure of leadership in expanding educational opportunities for our young people and in effectuating the wisest possible expenditure of public funds.

"As one who has been a stalwart supporter of greater fiscal autonomy for the University, I once again pledge my every effort to secure the passage of this badly-needed legislation."

The bill should be before the Senate by early next week. At an hour-long caucus of Senate Democrats Wednesday, the bill was approved.

Senate President John E. Powers reported an enthusiastic caucus response to the university measure, commenting it might be the forerunner of similar financial latitude for other educational institutions and hospitals.

Trustees currently are prohibited from using any fiscal discretion. The bill specifies that trustees must account for their spending at the end of each fiscal year.

Seniors Plan Class Night Festivities

Class Night, the last official meeting of the Class of 1962 as undergraduates, will be held behind the Women's Physical Education Building in the area set up for commencement exercises. The program will begin at 7 p.m. on Saturday, June 9, the night before graduation.

Highlights of the evening will be the presentation of the class gift to the University, the traditional planting of the ivy, the passing of the mantle from the Senior Class President to the Junior Class President, the Spirit of the University Address, to be given by Carol Veno, and the commerical reflections of the Hatchet and Peace Pipe Orations. This year Gail Ritchie and Ed Rodreguez have promised some "clever" humor.

It is important that all Seniors attend in order to receive instructions on the new procedures for graduation to be followed the next day.

After the program there will be a final class get-together at the Belchertown Town House. The free tickets for this event will be distributed only at Class Night.

This will be the last occasion for the Class of 62 to be together as a group. The program is designed to make the Seniors' last night as undergraduates a memorable one.

Further Instructions For Seniors Given

(This is the third in a series of articles concerning Commencement procedures.)

After all four lines have been properly formed, the Processional will begin, with the platform party and faculty marching through the wide aisle separating lines two and three. The Platform group will march in front of the faculty and continue down the East aisle of the seating area.

The faculty will be marching in two groups. The first group (directly behind the platform party) will be composed of the faculties of the Depts. of Education, Home Economics, Nursing and Physical Education, plus the B.A. faculty members in the College of Arts and Sciences. The second group will contain the B.S. faculty of the College of Arts and Sciences, plus the faculties of the Graduate School, the College of Agriculture, and the Schools of Engineering and Business.

Students Follow Their Faculty

After the platform party and faculty have marched past the student lines, the Class Marshalls will signal the students to begin moving. At that point, Line 1 and 2 will follow the first faculty group down the East aisle of the seating area, and Line 3 and 4 will follow the second faculty group down the West aisle.

The entire movement will be supervised by the Class Marshalls, School Marshalls, and 1963 Adelphians and Maroon Keys. Seniors are urged to watch these people for cues as to when to begin marching, and how to be seated once they have reached the seating area.

Degree Ceremony Is Separate

After the Commencement Address, President Lederle will confer degrees upon the stricts from the various Schools and Colleges, the Masters candidates, Ph.D. candidates, and, finally, upon those receiving honorary degrees.

The the various schools led by their Deans and faculties, will march to the places designated for them to receive their degrees. The students from the College of Arts and Sciences, B.A. and B.S. degrees, will remain in their seats.

Places where degree ceremonies will be held are as follows:

College of Arts and Sciences— Remain at W.P.E. Green

HURDLE NUMBER ONE — NOW ON TO THE SENATE

Congratulations and thanks are in order for the Commonwealth's House of Representatives for their action in passing the UMass Fiscal Autonomy Bill (H. 3350).

Congratulations are due to the parties, both Democratic and Republican, for refusing to make a partisan issue of this vital piece of legislation. Although the Democratic majority was expected to stand up for the bill, Republican minority leadership could have caused a delay in passage of the bill if their choice had been to make an issue of the measure. However, Republican leadership wisely backed UMass Fiscal Autonomy for the good of Massachusetts education.

Thanks are due to the House Ways and Means Committee, the 54 legislators who stood up for Fiscal Autonomy, and of course to Senator Maurice Donahue's Recess Committee which first recommended the bill.

By this action the General Court has recognized the importance of this legislation as well as the far-reaching effects this precedent setting bill will have on other Massachusetts institutions, including hospitals and other state supported colleges.

The bill now faces the Senate Ways and Means Committee, and pending its successful passage will go on to the Senate. We sincerely hope that in the next edition of the Collegian we can congratulate and thank those Senators who will stand up to be counted for the Fiscal Autonomy bill and higher education in Massachusetts.

Time For An Evaluation

Statistics show that during final examination periods, American colleges and universities list a record number of student mental breakdowns. Shockingly enough, statistics also list the number two cause of death among students as suicide—second only to automobile accidents. These facts dramatize the disturbing truth that a great many American students today seem unable to cope with the emotional responsibilities of college life.

The article in which these facts appeared gave a general explanation on an economic basis: the country's prosperity has given parents the opportunity to supply the material needs of their children; having experienced war and economic depression, parents attempt to protect their children as long and as much as possible. The result is that students have not needed to face responsibility; many have never lived away from home when they first enter college. And even then such things as political responsibility and economic demands are relatively few.

The universities and colleges themselves do little to abet the formation of responsible individuals. Students are told where they must live and board, what courses they must take, and — in some disastrous cases — whether or not they may even participate in extra-curricular activities. With girls, the situation is even more protective; a girl is further sheltered by a mother-hen attitude which decrees when she must return to his residence at night, which nights she may have as "late nights," and even where she may go on week-ends without special permission (home or to another student's home.)

In the light of these facts, it is not surprising that most college students today find themselves with limited experience in making emotional decisions. And college makes demands which are beyond the emotional scope of many of them—particularly when finals season rolls around.

The University's mental health service is swamped with such disturbed individuals, and many others go untreated for lack of sufficient time and personnel, or through their inability to recognize that an emotional problem exists. It is these students who are most susceptible to nervous breakdowns as finals come into view.

Final are approaching, and the pressure is building up. Term papers are due, and the tension is mounting. Every passing day brings stronger emotional demands, with which some students will be unable to cope.

Now is the time for a personal evaluation. Emotional maturity can be just as important (if not more imporant) than any amount of studying can be in a students performance during finals.

Massachusetts, World Tutor

Four thousand foreign students are studying at Massachusetts colleges and universities. Four thousand are training here for the leadership in far lands that will spell a better understanding throughout the world of our kind of an open society.

No opportunity to give them a clearer insight into our ways and ideals should be missed.

The Legislature seems by inadvertence, to be in danger of missing one opportunity. A bill to provide a state invitation annually to our foreign students to attend official ceremonies at the State House and at the Courts on or about United Nations Day was sent to a general study last Tuesday.

It should be retrieved today.

It requires no appropriation, but simply adds the Commonwealth to the list of private organizations like the International Student Association which will share the hosting.

World responsibilities lie in the Legislature, too.

LETTERS TO

Editor's note:

Following is a letter from Senator Philip A. Graham, a member of the special study commission established to report on the feasability of autonomy for the University of Massachusetts.

To the Editor:

The Autonomy Bill will give complete autonomy to the University over its financial affairs. I wholeheartly agree with the contention that the University, through its Trustees, should be held responsible for its educational standards; and in order to accomplish this, must have complete control over the budget affecting the academic staff.

In this bill, however, the University also asks for freedom of budgetary matters concerning administrative affairs. As the University is supported in part by funds derived from the taxpayers, I feel that the Legislature should insist on the same adminisrative controls as are required from other state departments—with the one exception of matters pertaining to the academic standard of the University.

The state laws require that all state agencies submit a budget a year in advance, which is broken down into various subsidiary accounts. If during the fiscal year that these expenditures are available, transfers of surpluses in any account can only be made with the approval and consent of the Budget Commission. This had resulted in the state saving millions of dollars annually.

I am personally very proud of our State University and feel that its administrator and faculty are providing the Commonwealth with a State University of which we can all be proud.

Very truly yours,
Philip A. Graham, Senator
3rd Essex District

Editor's note: During the last two weeks five Men's dormitories (Butterfield, Mills, Brooks, Greenough, and Hills North) have invited members of the faculty and administration to speak informally to residents of the dorms. These "Bull sessions" are an important part of any student's college life, and it is hoped that this year's experimntal program (at least experimental in the men's dormitories) will continue on a regular basis next year. The Collegian views this program as an excellent method for keeping students from feeling that they are lost in a rapidly expanding University.

To the Editor:

"The price of liberty is eternal vigilance." These words spoken by Dr. Philip Lyle Gamble, Professor of Economics and Head of the Department, climaxed a highly informative and productive discussion at Brooks House on Tuesday evening. Dr. Gamble, a noted economist and articulate observer of local, national, and world affairs, comprehensively analyzed and surveyed such topics as graft in Massachusetts' politics, foreign aid, corruption in the Department of Agriculture, price-fixing, the steel crisis, and conditions in world trouble spots such as Berlin and Laos. The discussion and tea proved to be the highlight of Brooks House activities and served to impress upon the participants the multitudinous array of practical knowledge and first-hand information in varying fields possessed by a professor who is uniquely outstanding in his own field—that of economics. We extend to Dr. Gamble our thanks and deep appreciatio for a most enlightening and illuminating survey of international and local social, economical, and governmental complexities.

To the Editor:

On Thursday evening, last week, it was my distinct pleasure, along with fourteen other interested residents and counselors of Hills North dormitory, to meet and chat with Dr. and Mrs. I. Moyer Hunsberger. This informal gathering was made possible by the graciousness of Mrs. Bella H. Pierce, Head of Residence at Hills North, who not only arranged the meeting, but also acted as hostess. Dean Hunsberger, readily answered any and all questions. Among the topics for discussion, was the need for closer student-faculty relations.

The accelerated growth of the University is no reason for students to be reduced to mere numbers on registration cards. Mrs. Pierce has set a precedent, at least at Hills North, and it is hoped that the meeting of students and faculty on an informal basis will continue in dormitories throughout the campus.

THE EDITOR

THE SENIOR SURPLUS

To the Editor:

This spring the budget of the Class of 1962 reached a figure of almost $9,000. Of this sum, $3,000 now have been spent in connection with a 25th Anniversary fund for the Class of 1962, while $2,500 are set aside for a class gift. Most of the remaider of this large amount of money will be spent on activities connected with Senior Week. Thus, the class officers have appropriated $1,600 for a dinner dance, $850 for a picnic, $900 for programs, and diverse sums for items such as publicity, Class Night, tickets, etc., etc. The senior dance and picnic are expected to produce a certain amount of income which will be charged against the cost of these events.

As you know, the funds which a class has in its treasury originate both from the tax which each member of the class plays and from profits derived from class activities such as the Winter Carnival. Apparently, with the increased enrollment in the University, class officers and the relatively few persons interesed in class activities are going to have even greater sums to spend in the last few months of their University career.

As a result of my experience as advisor to the Class of 1962 for the past four years, I think I am justified in raising the question as to whether it is not now the time to reconsider the entire issue of class funds. Personally, I question the need of large class gifts and of the very heavy expenses incurred in connection with Senior Week activities. I think, too, that there should be a de-emphasis on the profit motive in planning for class activiies such as the Winter Carnival. Finally, I very much doubt that it is necessary to build up so large a sum as $9,000 in a class treasury. Could not the class tax per student be cut? Might it not also be possible that activities such as the Winer Carnival could be made less expensive for those who purchase tickets by using class funds to underwrite a greater part of the expenses incurred in the activity? If funds are available, could not class-restricted activities be spread over a longer period of time rather than spending such a great amount on Senior Week funcion? Might not the class treasury be used, if it comes to be as big as the treasury has been this year, in paying for items such as an initial gift to the Alumni Association, an item which this year was supplied as a result of a special tax on members of the graduating class?

The Trees In The Forest

The Road to Utopia is a long detour ending in a series of dead ends. Utopia is the community of perfections. That is why, in the end, no roads lead there.

Because man is what he is—because he is frail and full of foibles, limited physically and intellectually—because he is finite, he can never attain perfection. And, since imperfect man is the author of all of the institutions he lives with, and under, they will never be perfect. Man cannot attain perfection. This is his lot. He must realise it. He must not, however, succumb to inaction because he does realise it.

Education should display man's inability to find Utopia. Education is not vitiated by this. If education should lead to perfection, once perfection was attained here would be no further need for education. This is the case with all mere means to an end.

Failure befalls education when the unapproachable Ultimate is discarded in favour of the merely difficult immediate. When the immediate is subjected to scholarship there are immediate results. Unfortunately these results are not related to the whole which they compromise. In the forest of Knowledge there is no shame in seeing only the trees. There is shame when, for reasons of facility, the educator convinces the Student that the three is the forest.

Science and technology, and the Humanities have contributed so much that is now to the body of knowledge, that it is impossible that one person could know all, or even a large part, of the totality of what is known. Because of this, education must be selective. Since all cannot be taught to all, some must be taught. That some is what specialization is made of. Specialization may, as the Humanities preach, be unfortunate. But, it certainly is not wrong in itself. The failure of education is not in specialization. The failure is in failing to teach the interrelationship of all knowledge. Such stupidity in an age of specialization can only lead to the specialization of stupidity.

The University has been described, until the description has become, unfortunately, a platitude. as a place where people are to be taught to think. Have they? The loudest complaint about Students is that they do not know how to think. To a very large extent they do not. The normal Student approximates constructive thought in his area of specialiation. But, because he has never been told that his speciality is only a part of the large whole of human knowledge, he often cannot think outside of his specialty. Is this the fault of the Student?

Unless the Student is supplied with the rudimentary facts of a large number of subjects he will never be able to come to any educated conclusion about anything concerning them. If a Student is so compartmentalied in his learning that he knows only the facts of his specialty, he will think only in that specialty. Man cannot think about what he does not even know exists. Is this the fault of the Student?

The constructive thinker is unlike any other constructive thinker. The thinker is an individual in every sense. If at graduation, the graduates of this University are more like than unlike the University has failed. If the Students at this, or any University, are capable of becoming management trainees, but incapable of questioning the reason for their own existance, the University, any University, has failed. Not the Students.

There is no easy way to teach people to think. With the current land-slide of people rushing to fill every vacant corner on every Campus across the country the job will get no easier. But it must be done or there will be no reason for education unless it is to be the awarding of licenses to practice some trade or professiion.

Before any thought of what might be done to improve education is gone into, it must be decided what education is for. If it is to train people to be efficient specialist all that would be needed would be further compartmentalization. If the reason of education is to educate, and fortunately most people adhere to this reason, the task becomes more difficult.

Much of the reason for the suffering of education lies with the public. Education is no longer a gentlemanly affair. No longer the private preserve of the moneyed classes it cannot be persued for its own sake; education must produce. Distorted democracy has also, in the hands of the public, wreaked havoc with education. No longer can there be such a thing as an "Intellectual Elite". Snobbishness, of any sort, has no place in the education for the masses scheme of things. But education for the masses, stripped of the saving graces of education for its own sake and intellect over motor proficiency, can easily degenerate into mass education. The diploma factory.

Mass education will last sol ong as Students are taught so they can do "things". True education for the masses can begin only when education bucks the system. Because the system calls for proficiency first and education second is no reason that the University should comply with this demand. Honours Colloquia and distributive requirements are a break with the system. Neither offers training in things. Each offers a way for the Student to explore the store of knowledge. The last chance many Students will get. But these are only part of the answer.

The University has a responsibility in supplying the Students with an education, whether they want one or not. In fulfilling this obligation the University must realize the necessity for specialization and the necessity for education. The engineer must know Ohm's Law to be an electrical engineer; but when does Ohm's Law, or Boyle's, take precedence over the Ten Commandments. The nuclear physisist must be acquainted with Einstein as a physisist, but has he heard of him as a critic? The psychologist must know of Jung, and Freud; but would he be less educated for having read Lear?

There are no easy solutions to the problem. Because there are no easy solutions no-one can be taken to task for having failed to find a remedy. No one can know everything. No cirriculum can teach every-thing. Because education does not stop at college; but because college does mold our educational processes for the rest of our lives we must be concerned.

Because the Road to Utopia is a detour we must not avoid it. 'Though it does not lead to perfection it does go farther than a dead end. —Wes Honey

Education For Automation

The twenty-first American Assembly brought together seventy citizens, many of them distinguished and of differing political and economic views, to consider the challenge and the promise of automation and technological change. Inevitably their opinions often varied sharply, but there was one point on which all found an enthusiastic rallying point: Education is both the root of technological change and the basis for successful adaption to the problems it presents.

We must become a more versatile people, with more skills and broader understanding of our place in a fast-changing world. The key to process was well described by the assembly as "a new national attitude, in which education is universally prized and innovation universally welcomed." A vast expansion in our facilities for scientific, technical and professional education will, of course, be a necessary part of our preparation for speedier technological change. But the foundation of all headway in this regard will have to be a basic strengthening in the quality and availability of elementary and secondary school systems.

Educational television and other appliactions of technology to education, plus better schools and better paid teaching staffs, can help give all Americans a better grounding in the fundamental skills of reading and mathematics and thus enhance their adaptability to an age in which jobs for the unskilled and unlettered will become increasingly scarce. The teacher will be an important as the engineer in pointing the way toward tomorrow.

Florida Exchange Students Compare Studies, Campus

by LAURA GOLDMAN '63

On campus this semester from Florida State University are Jerilynn Connors, Judy Finney, and Nancy Frazier—who are participating in a new exchange program between the Schools of Education of FSU and UMass.

The girls are taking courses during their semester stay here which will fulfill the requirements of their home school. Although the courses are about the same at the two Universities, they have found that "This school really believes in having students write papers—22 to be exact!"

Perhaps that has something to do with the attitudes of students here to take studying seriously. The three exchange students feel that Southern students take studies more in stride than we at UMass.

On their first day here, Jeri, Nancy, and Judy were disappointed by the absence of snow, but not for long, since snow began to fall that night. The delighted Southern belles, lost on a strange campus, stepped gingerly when they backtracked from the icy WPE field mistaking it for campus pond.

But soon the girls felt at home at UMass. They appreciated a rendition of "Dixie" especially sung for them, but they chorus "We're not sorry that the North won!" They find Northerners more conscious of ancestry: "Southerners are southerners first and foremost!"

Asked to compare the Greek systems of UMass and FSU, the exchange students from Florida feel that the smaller number of fraternities and sororities at UMass widens the gap between Greeks and independents and is

Home Economics Dept. To Offer Modernized Program Next Fall

Top careers in more than 60 professional fields are targets for students enrolling in a modernized home economics program starting at UMass in September.

Dr. Marion Niederpruem, newly appointed Dean of the School of Home Economics, announced that the revised program will give students preparation for professional work as well as solid background in the arts and sciences.

"Any survey of career opportunities today shows that thousands of important jobs for women go begging because there is a scarcity of well-trained and well-educated home economists to fill them," Dean Niederpruem said.

The energetic University administrator, herself a recognized authority in home economics who served as a top-flight business consultant and executive, declared that the new curriculum "will unlock doors hitherto closed to many Massachusetts young people because of the lack of an all-out program to provide the training needed for work in this vital and expanding field."

The revised course of study, approved recently by the University's Board of Trustees, is set up to serve three broad areas having greatest potential for professional advancement among women: Food and Nutrition; Textiles, Clothing and Related Arts; and Home Economics Education.

Course content will be based on intensive study in professional home economics as well as in the physical and biological sciences, social sciences, arts and humanities. The integrated resources of the research, extension and resident staffs of the School of Home Economics will be available to the undergraduate program, with consulting specialists to be called in for adjunct instruction whenever necessary.

The University dean pointed out that the fields of fashion, dietetic and institutional administration, and home economics secondary education demand a "new professionalism from women who want rewarding jobs in these nationally important occupations."

Thus, the revised program does not restrict students to narrow specialization. The full program, according to Dr. Niederpruem, provides enough flexibility for students to get "core" preparation in the various areas of home economics as well as in many allied areas.

"In this way, the home economists' basic aptitudes can fan out into a variety of fields," Dr. Niederpruem explained. "They can take positions in schools and colleges, in extension programs, business organizations of many kinds all over the world, community and government organizations and agencies, newspapers, magazines, radio and television.

"Representative types of activities that our program will serve include research, writing dietetics, extension work, nursery school education, interior decoration, fashion merchandising, food consulting, food service management, and product development."

Drafting of plans for the new curriculum was aided by various professional organizations and groups, including the National Home Economics Association and the National Retail Merchants Association. Consultants included directors of secondary and nursery schools, leaders in the food service fields, deans of home economics in other Land-Grant universities, and executives in the food, textile, and clothing industries.

a detriment that should be remedied. They have believed FSU Greeks are more service-minded.

The girls like the more informal dress at UMass but wonder how appropriate bermuda shorts are for attending a Ballet Concert. They were surprised by the formality, however, of students who don't dare converse unless formally introduced.

In general, the girls find less school spirit and tradition at UMass. Perhaps this is due to competition with private institutions. The situation is different in Florida where FSU is most often compared with another and similar state university. They note that a tradition of pride in UMass for what it is — a fine state university — ought to be fostered by the students.

Mich. State May Revise "O" Policy

The grading system at Michigan State University needs a complete overhaul, according to Dean of University College John H. Winburne. "There are two forces at work here," he said, "a flexible grading curve and an inflexible five point letter scale."

Dean Winburne said that in 1957 the average grade point was two point four. The average grade point fell to two point one after Sputnik 1 which meant that the student who received a two point in '57 received a one point seven grade point in '58 for the same effort and amount of learning.

He also said there was a policy here which allows a student to graduate with no less than a two point yet allows the D grade as a passing mark. Dean Winburne declared that this system allows you to pass your course and then prohibits you from graduating. If the administration were to be consistent, he said, "we would graduate a student with a D grade."

The administration could completely eliminate the D grade and require the instructors to "define what they mean by 'passing'," Dean Winburne said. He felt that the instructor should set a standard for a student's work and inform the student of what is expected of him.

He commented on certain courses which have a high drop-out rate. "These are not high standards, this is just being tough. A Chimpanzee can give 50 per cent F's."

UMass Baseball Club Falls To Jumbos; UNH Here Sat.

by JEFF DAVIDOW '65, Sports Editor

The Redmen baseball team traveled to Tufts College in Medford yesterday and at the end of the game found themselves on the short end of a 7-5 score.

UMass was the first to score when Frank Pisiewski opened the game with a single to right field, and then scored on a mighty triple to center-field off the bat of Ed Forbush.

The Redmen made it 2-0 in the second inning when Kenny Clark reached first to a single. Tony Williams got a free pass to the first sack when interference was called on the Tuft's catcher. Redmen catcher, Dave Krukonis, then whiffed, and on a pick-off attempt the Jumbo catcher threw the ball into right field and Clark made it all the way home from second base.

UMass' pitcher lefty Dick Wilson fanned five Tufts men in the first three innings and at the end of four was pitching a one-hitter.

However, in the fifth Dick ran into trouble. After walking one man and issuing a single to another, the Tufts' power hitter Vandy French stepped to the plate and laced a three run homer giving the men from Medford a 3-2 lead.

The Redmen scored in the sixth, when with one out Bob Hughes beat out an infield hit and moved to second base on a wild throw. Kenny Clark followed Hughes at the plate and hit his second single of the afternoon, moving Hughes to third. Tony Williams sacrificed to left field to bring in Hughes, tying the score at three all.

Rod Corey took over on the mound for the Redmen in the top of the seventh and immediately ran into prolbems. Vandy French, the sluger who had belted the three-run homer beat out an infield hit and then stole second. The Jumbos Joe Pelzar then sent a grounder to shortstop Frank Pisiewski. Frank made the throw to third trying to cut down French who was racing to the bag. The ball deflected off French and rolled into foul territory thus enabling him to score. Tuftsman Joe Peckham doubled to center scoring Pelzar, making the score Tufts five and UMass three.

Tufts scored again in the bottom of the eighth inning when Appleton walked. Gillepsie in an attempt to sacrifice his teammate over to second bunted. Pitcher Rod Corey picked the ball up but fired wildly to first putting runners on second and third. Corey managed to get the next two Tuftsmen out but found his opposing picher more troublesome. The Jumbo's pitcher, Jerry Loeb, laced a single to left scoring two runs. These tallies later proved to be the difference that gave Tufts the win.

In the top of the ninth the Redmen battery, Dave Krukonis and Rod Corey, both walked. They then scored on a two-out double by Pete Larkin to right center field. Bill DelVecchio then flied out to end the Redmen rally, and to end the game with Tufts the victors by a score of seven to three. Scoring by innings:

UMass ... 110 001 002—5 7 3
Tufts .... 000 030 22x—7 7 4

The Redmen are at home this Saturday when they play the University of New Hampshire in a Yankee Conference clash.

Redmen And Brave Netsters Lose To Springfield Squads

by DAVE PODBROS '65 and BILL LANDIS '65

Last Wednesday, May 16, the UMass varsity tennis team lost a close match to Springfield College. Playing without number one man, Roger Twitchell, the netmen could not overcome the overwhelming odds put up by Springfield.

Tom Simons played spot number one, and in a three set match, lost 2-6, 8-6, 6-4 Dick Leete, playing spot two, did a very creditable job, winning easily 6-0, 6-4.

Tom Mendell, in spot three disappointingly lost 6-0, 6-0, and Fred Murray, adding heartbreak to disappointment, lost a tough three setter, 4-6, 6-3, 1-6. Things, however, began to look better as Doug Pearsall and Everett Sherman, won in the fifth and sixth spot positions. Pearsall went three sets 5-7, 8-6, 6-2, and Sherman did the same, ending with a 4-6, 6-4, 6-2 score.

The team score now stood 3-3, and it was entirely up to the doubles to decide the match. Again the absence of Roger Twitchell was apparent as Leete and Shuhle played number one doules and lost, 2-6, 3-6. However, Simons and Murray won number two doubles 7-5, 6-1, but to no avail, as Pearsall and Mendell lost the third doubles 4-6, 5-7, resulting in the final score, Springfield 5, UMass 4.

The netmen host Holy Cross today, at 2:30 p.m. in what should turn out to be a very exciting match.

Like their varsity counterparts, Coach Kosakowski's freshmen tennis squad traveled to Springfield College last Wednesday, and disappointingly lost to the Maroon frosh by the identical score, 5-4 that had been the outcome of the varsity match.

UMass' Bob Neil was defeated by his opponent 3-6, 3-6, as was Jim Carruth, 2-6, 3-6, and Pat Crotty, 1-6, 0-6 But Steve Riemer, Bill Landis, and Dick Strecker triumphed in their matches and evened the singles competition at three wins for each club. Riemer, playing perhaps his finest match all season, was superb in overcoming his opponent in three sets, 9-7, 4-6, 7-5. Landis, winning 6-1 and 6-3, and Strecker, winning 6-3, 6-3 had relatively little difficulty in defeating their Maroon opponents.

Yet Springfield recovered to win two of the three doubles matches and, consequently, the meet.

This was a profitable season for developing talent for next year's varsity. The six boys above and Henry Ottson, Mike Rose, Steve Johnson, Bill Martin, Bob Smith, and Bob Hugo will definitely strengthen the UMass varsity and will try, in 1963, to bring the University its eighth consecutive Yankee Conference Championship.

Ellingwood, Glew, Coach Kosakowski Receive Ice Honors

Coach Steve Kosakowski's disappointment over the losses his tennis teams suffered at the hands of Springfield College was no doubt lessened when he learned that Co-Capt. Jim Ellingwood, sophomore star Charlie Glew and himself have received honors on the various All East and All New England Hockey teams which were announced this week.

Ellingwood, who set a new season point total this winter, was named to the All East Small College second team. He also finished in a tie with John Kennedy of Norwich as the Most Improved Player in the East. Glew was cited as one of the three most outstanding sophomores in the East, along with Elwyn Duchrow and David Sveden both of Colby.

Jim and Charlie, who played together on the Redmen first line, received Honorable Mention on the All East Combined Major and Small College team. Glew established a new goal-scoring record for the Redmen last winter.

Ellinwood's 16 goals and 25 assists for 41 points placed him 25th in the Eastern socring race, Charlie Glew's 24 goals and nine assists for 33 points placed him 47th, senior Bob Glew notched 11 goals and 14 assists to place 82nd and Charlie Donovan's 12 goals and nine assists placed him 99th.

In the balloting for the Clark Hodder Award for the New England Coach of the Year, Steve Kosakowski received Honorable Mention for guiding the Redmen to an 8-10 season with an undermanned squad. It was the most wins for a Redmen hockey team since the 1930-31 team won nine games. The Redmen 2-1 upset of Bowdoin was one of the highlights of Eastern hockey.

PanHel Council Announces Officers And Activities For Coming Year

The Panhellenic Council at the University of Massachusetts is a member of the National Panhellenic Conference whose objective is, "To maintain on a high plane fraternity life and inter-fraternity relationships; to cooperate with college authorities in their effort to maintain high social and scholastic standards throughout the whole college, and to be a forum for the discussion of questions of interest to the college and fraternity world." With these objectives in view, the new council has begun its projects for the school year of 1962-1963.

The new officers are: President-Barbara Lavalette, Vice-President-Betty Nurmi, Secretary-Janice Reimer, Treasurer-Jeanne Mullaney, Publicity Chairman-Barbara Farrell, and Co-Rush Chairmen-Carol Madison and Judy Addelson.

Mrs. Page, a representative of National Panhellentic Conference visited the campus from April 15 through the 17th. During her visit, a workshop for all sorority women was held. The results of this workshop are being compiled and the suggestions will be reviewed by the Council in the fall. This workshop rounded out the joint activities of Panhellenic Council and the I.F.C. which were held the previous week, Greek Week.

Panhel Accomplishments

Through the Council working with Mrs. Sheldon of Amherst, a canvasing of the town for the Cancer Drive took place. Three girls from each sorority participated in this philanthropic venture on April 25th. The Council also joined with A.P.O. to help in obtaining "Books for Asia" during its drive. Books were collected in each sorority house and given to A.P.O. to be sent to Asia and used by new universities.

Plans for Panhellenic and I.F.C. to become a part of United Nations Week next year are underway. The profits from this venture are to go to UNESCO. The Panhellenic Council and I.F.C. plan a joint project during the week of October 21-28 to raise money.

One-hundred dollars from the treasury has been given to Mr. Kamys of the Art Department for mailing costs of a project to solicit funds for an art collection here at UMass. The council plans to sponsor a project next year to raise funds to go toward buying drawings for this collection. This activity will have long range effects in that the collection, once started, will grow.

Plans For New Sorority

A Panhellenic endorsement of concurrent localization and colonization techniques for the beginnings of new sororities on this campus has been sent to the administration. Recognizing a real need for more sororities on this campus, the Executive Board of the Council met with girls of the proposed new sorority, Iota Gamma Upsilon, to advise them on certain procedures concerning localization.

Specific dates for next year's sorority activities have been set. Committee Co-Chairmen for Greek Week have been elected. They are to work along with their counterparts in I.F.C. to plan a more profitable and unified week.

Arising out of the successful trial of a Pledge Board, on which each sorority had one of its pledges participate, came tentative plans for a Junior Panhellenic Council. This council would work toward intersorority spirit and would complement the Senior Council in carrying out the philanthropic work within each sorority. The actual function and formation of this council will be reviewed in the fall.

HOWARD FRISCH, Collegian Business Manager

Howie Frisch Cited By Collegian Staff

In dedicating this final issue of the 1961-62 Collegian to Howard Frisch, we of the staff are recognizing his contributions and dedication to the paper. As a freshman and sophomore, Howie worked on the advertising staff, moving up to Advertising Manager in his junior year and to Business Manager and member of the Publishing Board as a senior.

Through his efforts as business manager, a closer tie has resulted among the merchants of Amherst and the Collegian, which has manifested itself in much more local advertising. Also, Howie has instituted a new bookkeeping system to clarify the financial aspects of the organization.

An accounting major from Lynn, Howie has shown outstanding achievement outside of the Collegian also. He has been on the Dean's List in his junior and senior years, and ranks high scholastically in his class.

He has been treasurer of his fraternity, Alpha Epsilon Pi, and of the Accounting Association. He was a member of the Campus Chest Committee this year.

In recognition of his campus contributions, he was recently tapped into Adelphia.

Through Howie's efforts, the business staff of the Collegian has been able to operate on a more efficient system and his contributions will be of value to the Collegian for many years to come. The University, and particularly the Collegian, can indeed be proud of Howie's accomplishments, and it is in sincere appreciation that we dedicate this Collegian to Howard Frisch, and wish him the best of luck in all his future endeavors.

FINE ARTS COUNCIL ANNOUNCES CENTENNIAL CONCERT PROGRAMS

An extended program of appearances by celebrities and chamber groups has been announced by the new UMass Fine Arts Council, in cooperation with the Concert Association, for the 1962-63 Centennial year as part of its total program of music, arts and drama.

Leading the parade of celebrities will be Arthur Fiedler, who will appear with the New Haven Symphony Orchestra on Oct. 21. Other major performers will include George London, baritone, who will appear on March 6, 1963, and the Hague Philharmonic, under William van Otterloo, on May 16, 1963. Another celebrity group, to be announced, will appear in April, 1963.

The Council was established last fall to coordinate activities of the Concert Association, University Bands, Art Club, Fine Arts Festival and other student groups interested in the arts.

The Fine Arts Council was appointed by the President of the Student Senate and the President of the University in cooperation with the Dean of Students. Dr. John Harris, Head of the Department of Government, was appointed Chairman of the Council by the Presidents of the Student Senate and the University. Faculty members from the fields of drama, art and music are represented on the Council.

The Chamber Series program will open with a performance by the New England Woodwind Quintet on Nov. 27, 1962. The quintet features flute, oboe, clarinet, bassoon and French horn.

On Dec. 17, 1962, the Beaux Arts Trio, piano, violin and violincello, will present music from the past as well as contemporary compositions written for this combination of instruments.

The popular conductor, Fritz Mahler, will bring his Hartford Symphony Chamber Orchestra to the University on Jan. 9, 1963 in a return engagement. Rounding out the Chamber series will be a presentation by the Paganini String Quartet on Feb. 14, 1963.

Tickets for the entire series may be purchased at a reduced rate by writing to the Activities Office of the Student Union at the University.

Concert Association officers for the coming year, 1962-63, have been recently announced. Manager is Raija Nuppola; Assistant Manager, Langdon Lombard; Secretary, Ann Mullen; Treasurer, Lyyli Lusher; Public Relations, Joyce Blum; Publicity, Don Ciasco; Publicity Assistant, Harrison Smiley; Programs, Steve Bowman; Programs Assistant, Dianne Dixon; Centennial Representative, Evelyn Ruthel.

Save Texts For Sept. Exchange

Next fall, Alpha Phi Omega (APO) in conjunction with the Woman's Service Organization (WSO) will again supervise a book exchange for the convenience of the UMass student population.

The exchange allows the student to name his own price, and sells the books for him without increasing the cost; thus enabling other students to buy them.

Next year the exchange will run from September 11 to September 19. On September 11, Registration Day, books will be received. On September 12 through September 18, books will be received and sold. On September 18 and 19, all unsold books will be claimed.

The New England Drill Team champions, the Flying Redmen, will appear on Springfield television channel 22 at 7:15 Tuesday, May 22. The Redmen are under the command of Cadet Lt. Col. Archie Babaian. The TV show is the "New England Highlights". The Redmen will be interviewed for 6 minutes and then will perform the same trick drill that won for them the title of Area A champions.

Church and State

It has been a long time since the subject of separation of church and state has been discussed on campus, but now the time seems appropriate.

Governor Volpe announced last month that his choice for a University of Massachusetts trusteeship is the Most Rev. Christopher J. Weldon. We do not intend in any way to indicate that Bishop Weldon, or any member of the clergy of any faith would not make an excellent trustee.

What we do question is the principle of appointing a leader of a religious faith to such a post. There are bound to be some conflicts. What would happen if such a man did not agree with the philosophy courses for example, taught on campus? If he says nothing than he is not being fair to himself. If he takes any action then he may not be fair to the University.

Of course the question may arise as to whether or not it is fit for any person who holds a high ranking post in any field, labor for example, to hold such a post. We think that religious leaders must be classified in a separate category. Their obligations are different from those of others. One might question if such a man's ideologies lend themselves to the obligations of a trustee of a state operated and state supported university.

We think that the question of separation of church and state is not the real issue at hand. This appointment can not, in any sense, be misconstrued as an effort to reunite the two swords. At the University of Massachusetts the secular sword always has and always will remain above the swords of religion.

With the prospect of autonomy looming ever brighter in the future it is essential that those appointed to trusteeships be the right people for the job. Under the proposed system, a lump sum of money would be granted to the University, and then the responsibility of this money would lie in the hands of the trustees.

We stand against the principle of appointing religious leaders to such positions. There is too great a chance that conflicts which would be injurious to the campus and to the individual concerned would occur. This is no time to take such a chance.

The NEW Index

Did you notice as you flipped through the 1962 Index looking for your picture that your eye was caught, your attention held, and you put off looking for your picture?

Ed Rodriguez and company have brought a new-look yearbook to UMass by employing daring (by past Index standards) layout schemes and vigorous copy that tells a story. By the introduction of a few journalistic devices, such as headlines, large size type at the beginning of captions and text, the Index has become a more readable book containing the historical information, which is the reason for a yearbook's being, in a style which will remain fresh for years.

Especially notable is "A Pictorial History of the University of Massachusetts" located in the front of the book. This is a nostalgic review of the University's 99 year past including the pioneer class of '71 and old photos of even older buildings and scenes.

Taking advantage of a fine UMass basketball season, the Index sports department played it to the hilt with fine shots of coach Matt Zunic, plenty of action-on-the-floor phoos, and sparkling text that really tells the exciting tale.

As with any attempt to break away from the old, new problems and mistakes pop up. Inconsistencies race through Index pages, so much that you wonder if you're reading the same book throughout. The usual misspelling of names and other recurring bugaboos will be found, but in a book of this size, it's almost excusable. The answer to this problem of course, is more careful editing.

One thing is sure, the 1962 Index will set the style for future editions—a style not new in the yearbook field, but a style new for Index and UMass.

To the Student Body:

Concerning the recent Senate elections, we would like to make it known that Andy D'Avanzo was drafted for the nomination of president. Senator D'Avanzo did no campaigning and did not make the actual decision to accept the draft until the night of the elections.

Although Andy D'Avanzo was not elected, he will always be remembered for the devoted service he has rendered to the Senate and to the Student Body as a whole. We need more like him at this school.

LETTERS TO

To the Editor:

A while ago, Governor Volpe announced the appointment to the Board of Trustees of the University of Massachusetts, the Catholic Bishop of Springfield, Most Rev. Christopher J. Weldon, D.D. Bishop Weldon, said the Boston Globe, "is the first of his rank of any faith to be named to the board."

However, with all due respect and high regard for the personnal qualities of the Bishop, his appointment should be thought over carefully. Here is found the start of a precident of appointing clergymen to the policy approving board of a state institution, a denial in a limited form of the Constitution doctrine of separation of church and state. Moreover, this is especially unfavorable in an institution of higher learning as such where ideas and ideologies both good and bad to our concepts are expected to be taught and discussed so as to enlighten the student body.

With members of the clergy on the Board of Trustees, be they Catholic, Protestant, or Jewish, some controversial educational endeavors, practices, and persons are certain to be stifled from our campus thereby denying a free flow of ideas. A man so religious so as to become a priest, a minister, or a rabbi cannot and should not be expected to deter from basic teachings and orders of the clergy of his respective religion, no matter in what capacity or position he serves in.

Therefore, in a college, especially one publicly supported and attended as is the University, the clergy should have no part in its policy formulation. Those that want the clergy aspect in college administration need only to apply to one of the many religiously endowed and run institutions that we have in the United States. Surely there are enough competent and deserving laymen in the Commonwealth that could have and should have been appointed by the Governor.

To the Editor:

For the last three and one half years. Mrs. Sally Dirks has been the housemother of Butterfield Dormitory, and during that time Butterfield has become known on campus as the virtual leader of men's residences. These concurrent facts have not been coincidental, and the men of Butterfield made their knowledge and appreciation of Mrs. Dirks' abundant love and guidance known to their housemother, and to the campus-at-large, when they honored her at a testimonial banquet in the Student Union Ballroom, Saturday evening.

Butterfield President, Al Berman, bestows token of affection upon Housemother, Mrs. Pearl Dirks.

The event, attended by over sixty residents of Butterfield and their dates, members of the faculty, including President and Mrs. Lederle, Dean of Students William Field and his wife, Mr. and Mrs. William Burkhardt and Dean of Men Robert Hopkins and his guests, along with several alumni of the University and of Butterfield, and Mrs. Dirks' son and wife, was only a token of the gratitude of "her men" for all she has done for them and for Butterfield.

The warm and fruitful atmosphere which has pervaded Butterfield dorm for the last three years may be attributed almost wholly to Mrs. Dirks' influence, and the residents of Butterfield are confident that Saturday's festivities, which included a picnic at Mrs. Dirks' Montague home and a dance at Butterfield after the banquet, reflect the image Butterfield has created.

Butterfield honors its retiring housemother, and sends its sincere love, thanks and best wishes to her; We regret that we cannot express in words what we truly feel towards her, but we are sure that Mrs. Dirks needs no word from the men she loves.

To the Editor:

SHOULD A STUDENT BE FORCED TO FAIL A LIBERAL ARTS COURSE BECAUSE OF THE FACT THAT HE IS AN ENGINEER?????

This is what it is coming to in my case. My schedule is arranged so that at one period I have an engineering class at the Engineering Building and the next hour I have an English class at Bartlett Hall.

The distance between the two buildings is so great that I am forced, on many occasions, to enter English late. This is especially true when I have an exam in the Engineering Building or am kept later than ten of.

My English teacher feels that I am disturbing her class when I enter late, so I am forced to take a cut. I cannot afford to fail English!!!!! I appreciate her position and do not place any blame in the matter on her.

Rather, I feel that the administration, and even more so the scheduling office should be held responsible. Why can't we be allowed 15 minutes before classes? Or, better still why not hold special classes in required liberal arts courses for Engineering students only? They do this in Technical writing, which is a course under the English Department's supervision.

Whatever they do about this does not matter to me as long as myself and other Engineers do not have to fail required courses outside of our majors because of a long walk.

THE EDITOR

To the Editor:

Last Wednesday night the Student Senate held their last meeting of the school year ('61--'62). This was the night when the new pro tempore officers took over their duties. This also was the night when ten constitutions were coming up for approval, three important bills were to be discussed, and many committee reports to be approved. But what were the results of this important and last meeting of our Student Senate?

The result was that the meeting was illegal or should be declared illegal. But why was this meeting of our student government illegal? Because there were not enough of our elected representatives present to conduct the business at hand—in short there was no quorum.

Many of the Senators who had been just elected or reelected to the position of Senator-at-Large were not present. To start the meeting a Senator, with many more than the allowed unexcused absences, had to be suspended and after the quorum was reached this way two Senators left before the minutes of the last meeting were read, causing the Senate to be without a quorum again.

These actions of the senate are unexcusable, but do not condemn the Senators who were present. These are the ones who are trying to keep our Student Government running properly. It was the Senators who were not present, who did not have the energy nor interest to let the Senate know why they HAD to be absent. This was not an example of the loudly cried "apathy" of our University but an example of down right disrespect for our Student Government and a disregard for the responsibilities they have to the people who have elected them.

As we close this school year remember what has happened to our Student Government and that in the fall we are to elect new Senators. Pick your representatives more carefully or you will duplicate the sloppy actions of this year's Senate.

TILL WE MEET AGAIN

This is the final column of my eighth year of writing for the makers of Marlboro Cigarettes, and this year, as in every preceding year, when I come to the last column of the season, I come to a problem.

My contract with the makers of Marlboro calls for me to write a humor column and, truly, I do the best I can—all things considered, I am not, I should explain, a jolly man by nature. Why should I be? First of all, I am shorter than everybody. Second, there are moths in my cashmere jacket. Third, I work in television.

All the same, when it comes time to write this column, I light a good Marlboro Cigarette, put aside my trauma, and try with all the strength in my tiny body to make some jokes. Sometimes it works better than others, but on the last column of the year, it just flatly doesn't work at all.

Even in the very beginning this was true—and that, you will recall, was eight years ago when I was relatively young and strong and had not yet developed that nasty knock in my transmission. Well do I remember sitting down to write the final column of my first year. Day followed barren day, and not a yock, not a boff, not a zinger did I produce. I was about to give up humor and take a job selling mechanical dogs when all of a sudden, in a blinding flash, I realized why I couldn't think of any jokes!

I leapt up from my typewriter and ran as fast as my little fat legs would carry me to the makers of Marlboro Cigarettes, and I tugged my forelock, and I said, "Sirs, I am well aware that you have engaged me to write a humor column, but today, as I approach the final column of the season, I am far too misty to be funny, for the final column of the season is, after all, a leave-taking, and when I think of saying goodbye to my audience—the swellest audience any columnist ever had—the college students of America—wonderful human beings, every man and woman of them—wise but kindly—astute but compassionate—perspicacious but forbearing—when, sirs, I think of saying goodbye to such an audience, I am too shook up even to consider levity, and so I ask you, sirs, to let me, in the final column of the year, forego humor and instead write a simple, dignified, straightforward farewell."

Then I took out my bandanna, wiped my eyes, ears, nose, and throat and waited for a reply from the makers of Marlboro.

They sat around the polished board room table, the makers, their handsome brows knit in concentration, puffing thoughtfully on the Marlboros in their tattooed hands. At length they spoke. "Yes," they said simply.

I never doubted they would say yes. People who make a cigarette as good as Marlboro must themselves be good. People who lavish such care on blending tobaccos so mild and flavorful, on devising a filter so clean and white, on boxing a flip-top box so flip-top, on packing a soft pack so soft—people like that are one hundred percent with me!

And so from that day forward, the final column of the year—including the one you are, I devoutly hope, now reading—makes no attempt to be funny, but is instead a simple thank you and au revoir.

Thank you and au revoir, makers of Marlboro. The memory of our eight years together will remain ever fresh in my heart, and I would like to state for all the world to hear that if you want me back again next year, I shall expect a substantial raise in salary.

Thank you and au revoir, college students of America. May good luck attend all your ventures. Stay well. Stay happy. Stay loose.

The Ten Most Outstanding

Merrilee Atkins

Merrilee Atkins, top scholar of the Class of 1962, has also demonstrated leadership ability as president of Lambda Delta Phi sorority and a member of Mortar Board.

As both Phi Beta Kappa and Phi Kappa Phi scholar, Merrilee is a member of Sigma Xi, was elected to Alpha Lambda Phi in her freshman year, and has been on the Honors List for four years.

Allan Berman

A list of Al Berman's many activities would be too long to include here, but there is no doubt he is one of the most outstanding seniors. As Editor-in-Chief of the Collegian and President of Butterfield House, Al has given unselfishly of his time and talents. His efforts towards this year's graduation day program are typical of the contributions that Al has made to the senior class and to the University.

Man of the Year

Bernard Murphy

As President of the Senior Class, Bernie Murphy has displayed the leadership and example necessary to produce one of the University's most outstanding classes. As a member of Adelphia and Revelers, this personable red-head once again exerted the hard-working talents and sense for organization that made him the outstanding man in the Class of 1962.

Bernard Murphy — Outstanding Leadership

Carol Veno

As Chief Justice of Women's Judiciary, Carol has been a valuable and respected member of her class. But this is only one of the many activities to which she has contributed her time and ability. These include Scrolls, Mortar Board, President of KKG, Alpha Lambda Delta, and Campus Varieties.

Ed Rodriguez

As will be apparent today as students pick up their annual Indexes, Ed Rodriguez has done an excellent job as executive of the organization. In recognition of the dedicated service he has performed for the senior class and for the whole campus, we hail Ed as an outstanding leader and a man of ideas and organizational ability.

Members of the Class of 1962

Paul Cassidy

Quiet and unassuming, Paul has distinguished himself as a member of the Distinguished Visitors Program, treasurer of QTV and the Fraternity Managers' Association, and a member of Adelphia. He has also shown leadership in the military world as Cadet Colonel of AFROTC.

Wesley Honey

This jack-of-all-trades and master of ALL—Wes Honey—is best remembered for the sophisticated and clever sense of humor he gave to Ya-Hoo as an Editor-in-Chief. His Campus Varieties production of "The Infernal Triangle" was a masterpiece of fiction while Adelphia profited immeasurably by Wes' famous ability to see clear to every issue.

Woman of the Year

Linda Achenbach

As distinguished vice-president of the Student Senate, Linda Achenbach has added more laurels to her impressive UMass record. Chairman of the Distinguished Visitors Program, she helped bring many outstanding and well-known personalities to campus. She was also responsible for the Fine Arts Festival as President of Mortar Board.

Linda Achenbach — Dedicated Service

Buffy St. Marie

Those of us who have heard Buffy St. Marie sing will agree that she is one of the outstanding members of the senior class. She has been a prominent entertainer in folk festivals held here as well as singing in various coffee houses in the Springfield area. Buffy, a philosophy major, is also secretary of the Pioneer Valley Folklore Society.

Francis Lovejoy

As president of Adelphia, Fran has distinguished himself as an outstanding leader. A man whose talents lay in many fields, Fran organized and leads the Statesmen. He also organized the Musigals and still does many of their musical arrangements. A former Reveler, Fran certainly has shown that he has the spirit and the leadership to make him one of the oustanding members of the class of 1962.

Varsity Redmen Down UNH Wildcats 4-3

by STEVE HEWEY '63

The University of Massachusetts baseball squad toyed with a game UNH squad Saturday afternoon and then struck for two runs in the bottom of the seventh inning to edge the Wildcats, 4-3. Thunderclouds loomed overhead at Alumni Field just as the game got underway but there was thunder on the diamond also as the Redmen bats found UNH hurling good for 12 hits including a home run by second baseman Corky Schmoyer.

Frank Pisiewski led off for the Redmen in the bottom of the first and greeted Carl LeDuc's third pitch of the game with a line double down the left field line. After Ed Forbush went out, pitcher to first, Bob "Wheaties" Hughes tripled to left to bring Pisiewski home. UMass added one more in the fourth to make it 2-0 on a blast to center field by Corky Schmoyer. The 325-ft. clout left his bat and sailed over the heads of the left and center fielders, and rolled out to the track.

UNH picked up three runs in the fifth inning, capitalizing on the wildness of UM starter Lew Pia. Lew gave up free passes to the first two batters he faced in the inning. He retired Bruce Misiaszceh on a sacrifice bunt and the runners moved up to second and third. With leadoff batter Jim Twombly up, UM catcher Ted Osetek let a pitch get by him and the first UM runner crossed the plate. Pia lost Twombly on balls but got Tom Gromatikas on a call third. After he got behind in the count to Pete Merrill, Coach Earl Lorden called in Carl Elmstrom to put out the fire.

Elmstrom walked Merrill to force in a run and shortstop Frank Pisiewski's throw to first trying to out down Bill Flint pulled Ed Forbush off the bag and the third Wildcat run came across. Elmstrom got Dan Serilka to tap one back to him to end the inning.

UMass grabbed two runs in the seventh inning to tie it up and go ahead to stay. The game-winning hit was a single to left by Ken Clark.

Pisiewski drew a base on balls to start it off after Elmstrom flied to right. Forbush singled Pisiewski over to second. A passed ball by UNH backstop Bill Flint allowed both runners to move up. Bob Hughes drew a free ride to load the bases. A sacrifice fly to right scored Pisiewski with the tying run. Then up came Clark to drive in Forbush with the winner.

Five Redmen each collected two hits in the contest to indicate that it was a team effort and not a one or two man show. Corky Schmoyer went 2 to 2, including his circuit clout in the fourth. Frank Pisiewski and Bob Hughes both hit 2 for 3; Ed Forbush and Tony Williams were 2 for 4 for the afternoon. Ken Clark and Pete Larkin each had one to round out the hit totals.

UNH hurler Carl LeDuc went all the way and suffered his second loss of the season against the Redmen. LeDuc gave up four runs, twelve hits, struck out two and issued two bases on balls.

Batting Around

A tip of the hat goes out to UNH baseball coach Hank Swasey. The "Old Sage"—as he's known around New England baseball circles—closes out his last season at UNH after 41 years . . . The Redmen round out their 1962 diamond schedule with a game today with Rhode Island at home and a home tilt with Amherst on June 9.

Kosakowski Builds Strong Tennis Team

by DAVE PODBROS '65

With only one returning letterman, Captain Tom Simons, the varsity tennis team was not expected to do much this year.

Captain Simons, a junior, who had played spot number five all last season, had to be moved up to the number two spot, where he played excellent tennis, winning the majority of his matches plus his spot in the Yankee Conference. A great deal of credit for the success of this year is due also to Rodger Twitchell. Twitchell proved to be the best number one player in the Yankee Conference, and in the mind of Coach Kosakowski, he is the best player he has had play for him in fifteen years.

Another find this season was Fred Murray. Winless as a freshman, Murray worked his way into a steady number three man. The number four man, Tom Mendel, was also tough to beat all season, and contributed his part to the success of the team. In spots number five and six, Doug Pearsall and Dik Leete, turned out to be a couple of steady winners. And even the subs, Sam Levy, Eric Schuhle, and Everett Sherman, the backbone of any team, were unexpected assets to the netmen.

The team's unexpected success proved a theory held by many coaches. As long as you keep the ball in play, and you have the guts and the desire to win, you can beat players better than yourself.

It was these qualifications that this team had. With a desire to win and with the ball kept in play, the UMass varsity tennis team won the Yankee Conference title producing from this feat four singles champions and two doubles team champions.

The freshmen tennis squad, like the varsity, was impressive and Coach Kosakowski can look forward to another good season next year and possibly another conference title to his credit.

Dick Ward Stars In N.E. Collegiate Meet

by ABE SHEINKER '62

Dick Ward, UMass' best all-around track star, led the Redmen to a fifth place tie at the New England Intercollegiate Championships Saturday. A trio of UMass stars scored 15 points to tie Central Conn. and trail co-champs B.U. and B.C., 3rd place Holy Cross, and 4th place U.R.I.

Ward, who was the team's highest scorer during the past indoor-outdoor season, added 10 more points to his total with the best day of his career. The rangy junior upped his school record in the hammer throw by three feet with a 173'5" toss. This placed him second, ahead of H.C.'s Kevin Kilgallen and Maine's Bill Blood, to whom he had lost earlier this spring.

Ward then came up with two more personal bests in the afternoon. He tossed the 16-pound shot 48'6" to place fourth and miss the UMass record by only four inches. His other superb effort was in the high jump where he finished second to B.U.'s John Thomas with a 6'4" leap.

Not to be outdone, sophomore distance ace Bob Brouillet lowered the UMass standard in the two mile by 14 seconds. Brouillet was just nipped at the finish by Central Connecticut's Jim Keefe, but was clocked in 9:15.7. Keefe's winning time was 9:13.0. Loren Flagg was the other UMass scorer with a fifth in the 100 yard dash.

Season Wrapup

The UMass runners and field men had a good outdoor season, ending with a 4-1 record.

Besides all-around athlete Dick Ward, the Redmen were sparked by the record-breaking performances of half miler Ken O'Brien, distance men Bob Brouillet and Dave Balch, and pole vaulter Jim Lumley. Needless to say, the tremendous depth of the Redmen—stars too numerous to mention—was greatly responsible for the banner track.

Frosh Baseball Club Winds Up Successful 6-4 Season

by DAVE WILLARD '64

The Freshmen baseball team has completed its season with a 6-4 record. After surging to a 4-0 record, the Bergquistmen ran into trouble managing to capture only two of their last six contests.

It all started when they handed the boys from Trinity a game by committing eight errors. The next game with Holy Cross saw the Redmen blanked for the first and only time. The final score was 7-0 as UMass never threatened.

The next game proved to be a much different story however as they outclassed their AIC neighbors from Springfield by a 5-1 score, with Tom Linnehan going the route almost effortlessly.

The following contest proved to be their last win for the season and by far the sweetest, as they beat perennial rival Connecticut 5-4 in ten innings. Very fittingly, hitting star Wojnar won the game with a tremendous triple in the tenth. Jim Ritchie pitched the first eight innings and the varsatile Wojnar finished up.

This was to be their last time to rejoice however as they lost decisions to Springfield, whom they had swamped earlier in the season and to Worcester Academy who was undefeated.

Looking at the brighter side of the picture, one thing stands out above all, that Steve Wojnar is definitely an "outstanding prospect" in the words of coach Dick Bergquist, who is not given to idle praise. Winding up the season with a .475 average (19 for 40), Steve hit the ball solidly almost every time up. His collection includes three doubles, three triples and eleven RBI's. This boy is an almost "can't miss" prospect.

There were others, to be sure, who contributed to the team's total performance. Norris, Neary, Ritchie, Linnehan, Palmieri, and Caisse right on down through the whole team showed the hustle and spirit that every coach looks for and they are to be commended for it.

SNAKEBEATERS WIN MOST EVER

Coach Garber's varsity Snakebeaters dropped their final game of the season to UNH, by a score of 8-7, thus winding up with a record of nine wins and two losses. This was the most wins ever recorded by a UMass lacrosse team.

The game was a tough one for the Redmen to lose. The UMass squad played good ball in the first two periods, leading at the half 5-2, but in the second half the Wildcats started to hit, tallying five in the third period.

UMass' Outstanding Athletes And Coaches Of 1962

John "Bumps" Bamberry Makes Great Comeback

Although a knee injury in his sophomore year seriously threatened John Bamberry's football career, the rugged ex-marine came back with a bounce in his junior year to boot 23 out of 24 points, becoming one of the East's top place kickers, and received the Boston Tobacco Table "Unsung Hero" Award. This year, John was the team's third highest scorer with 28 points, hitting on 13 of 16 extra point trys, and connecting on five of ten field goal attempts. In his two varsity years, "Bumps" made 36 of 40 extra point boots. Aside from his grid skill, John has been an excellent lacrosse man, playing as co-captain in his starting attack position on Coach Garber's snakebeater squad. John Bamberry—quite a man.

Coaches Of The Year

MATT ZUNIC

Ever since Matt Zunic came to the UMass campus in 1959 to coach the Redmen basketball team, the University's squads have steadily progressed, until, this year, they ran off with their first Yankee Conference hoop title, going down in defeat only to a fine ballclub in the NCAA playoffs.

Talking to some UMass students after the NCAA playoff game this year, Zunic displayed the determination which has brought his teams so far. "We'll be back". Knowing his ability and concern for his players as we do, this simple statement should be all a UMass basketball fan needs.

Jim Ellingwood — Handy Man With The Stick

Whether Jim Ellingwood is holding a hockey stick or a lacrosse stick you can be sure he is doing a great job for UMass. As Co-Captain of this winter's hockey squad Jim set a new point-total mark of 41 points, on 16 goals and 25 assists. For his excellent work on the ice he has recently a number of honors, among them being named to the All East Small College second team, finishing in a tie for first place as the Most Improved Hockey Player In The East, and receiving Honorable Mention on the All East Combined Major and Small College team. Jim's performance on the lacrosse field has been no less impressive as he has sparked the Snakebeaters this season, enabling them to win more games than ever before in UMass Lacrosse history.

John McCormick To Play For AFL's Vikings

John McCormick has piled up Yankee Conference and ECAC honors throughout his three-year stint as quarterback of the Redmen football squad. John tried quarterbacking for the first time under Charlie O'Rourke, greatly improved under Chuck Studley, and reached his peak under Vic Fusia last fall. Mac has connected on almost fifty percent of his passes, hitting for 50 out of 107 in his senior year, and rolling up 1860 yards and 17 touchdowns in three years. John's punting ability has aided him in being a top scorer for Redmen grid teams, and hopes are high at UMass that he will do well with the Vikings of the AFL.

STEVE KOSAKOWSKI

Congenial "Kos" surprised everyone this year by taking the Yankee Conference Tennis Title. Working with one of the thinnest squads in years, he coached and coaxed them to another in a series of Yankee Crowns.

In addition, his hockey squad set a UMass club record for victories with eight.

Thus this year must have been one of the most satisfying for this dedicated coach, who is now in his seventeenth year serving the University.

Ed Forbush — Moral Booster For Three Squads

Always ready with a quick smile, a good joke and fast play, Ed Forbush deserves to be recognized as one of the outstanding graduating athletes. Ed has played on three varsity squads, and can usually be seen taking a throw at first base, charging in on the opposition's quarterback from his end position on the Redmen line, or trying to keep the puck out of UMass territory in his duties as defenseman on the hockey squad. On whatever team Ed has played he has displayed his talents and has served as a general moral booster—keeping himself and his teammates in good spirits so that they could best represent the University.

We realize, however, that other senior athletes, and other coaches deserve our greatest praise. Suffice it to say that we, the Collegian Sports Staff, greatly appreciate the contributions of our athletes and coaches to this university.
